e done by the Mission if employers would nly consider that they are responsible not only or the lives and bodies of their employés, but lso for their souls. One 'bus proprietor had rovided a shed wherein his men may take heir meals—a very considerate example, well orthy of imitation by other masters.

Very Rev. Dr. Lefroy, Dean of Norwich, said hat ordained servants of Christ are drawn off rom their work, in a hundred directions, by the ay in which religion is being made to cover he whole field of human life; and it is a point n favour of this Mission that nine-tenths of he social efforts engaged in by the Church of od might be done by laymen. Indeed, half he difficulties of the day would be relieved if lergy and ministers were more welded together ith the laity. The parochial system could ot possibly meet the need of the cosmopolitan lements that go to make up the sphere of a Iission, which in this great city, is doing a ork which is as grand in patriotism as in iety.

One of the missionaries, Mr. H. Giles, who as worked in Stratford for thirteen years, ave lively testimony as to how the Gospel eets every need of modern life among the oor. Rev. Thos. Champness, of Rochdale, poke of the report as a continuation of the cts of the Apostles; and Mr. R. I. Tchertkoff old the story of his conversion through the nfluence of Russian Stundists, and of his work or Christ among the Jews in Bow and West lam.

Sunday School Union.

MANY supporters and friends of the Sunday School Union gathered at Exeter Hall on Thursday last week, to celebrate the 97th Anniversary of the nion. The Chairman of the Council, Mr. F. . Belsey, in his report, showed that the past ear has been one of progress. 463 new chools have joined the Union; there are now ,077 teachers and 63,986 scholars. 47,038 cholars entered this year for the Scripture xamination. A new development has been he formation of the Sunday School Teachers' raining College, for the promotion of ystematic study, and the better equipment of unday School teachers.

Owing to the absence of the President, Mr. lbert Spicer, M.P., through temporary illness, Ir. J. Duckworth, M.P., took the chair. He rged the necessity for teachers to throw emselves heart and soul into their work, aking it more efficient, more thorough, and, herefore, more successful.

Rev. J. D. Jones, M.A., of Bournemouth, in n interesting address, maintained that the reat discovery of the nineteenth century was he discovery of the little child. We might y this was no discovery, as the child had ways been with us; but electricity was with s many a long year before we were aroused to s importance. It is only in this century that en have become aware of the immense possi- lities of good that are e are beginning to take care of the little ild nationally; we are trying to give him an ducation which shall equip him for life; we e spending millions of money to accomplish is; a whole department of the Government devoting its attention towards it, and money ed for this purpose is the wisest and most ofitable expenditure possible. Then we are ring for the little child religiously, realizing at in youth a child is more easily turned to od than when its heart becomes hardened ith the growth of years.

The Sunday school was started, first, out of ty; but now it is carried on because it is alized that there is no more important work an the training of children in the way of life. we want orderly citizens, we must begin by sciplining the children; if we want a sober ngland, we must instil temperance principles the lives of the children; if this world is to won for Jesus Christ, we must begin with the tle ones. The great fight, by which the ngdoms of this world are to become the ngdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ, is going to be fought in the nursery, in the home, in the Sunday school. Then, too, the parents may often be reached through the children, for when we place our hands on a child's head, we are placing it on a mother's heart. The aim of Sunday school teaching is, primarily, not to interest, not to amuse, but to win scholars for Christ, to make them strong in God, and towards this goal we must ever strive, until the whole wide world be bound by golden chains about the feet of God.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, in an eloquent address, answered the question, "What should be the ideal before a Sunday school teacher?" In brief, it is to make of his scholar a man "perfect in Christ Jesus." The evangelist and the minister have often to deal with men and women who are irretrievably ruined for this world, to say nothing of the future life. But in the children we have the spring-time of life, a tangled mass of infinite possibilities for the teacher to work upon. The Christian Church to-day is in sympathy with life and culture, with intelligence and knowledge, with bodily education, with public service. It does not separate the sacred from the secular, but it strives that all shall be done to the glory of God, whether directly or indirectly. The Christian man, as we understand him, is the very highest type of man—a man enlightened, a man upright, public-spirited, whole-hearted in Christ Jesus.—Mr. Gibbon urged that the one weapon the Sunday school teacher should wield is the Bible, and the whole of it. There is absolutely nothing like it, for there is everything in it.

Let the teacher see that he secures the attention of his scholars, or they will little benefit, for if the attention be not gained, the memory of the lesson will be lost. The object of the Sunday school teacher is to stimulate a craving for knowledge in the child, a craving for high and holy things, and, surely, his Bible, he should be able to make it so real that the child should long to seek for himself the treasures it contains. All our need can be supplied from this Book of books. It contains the grandeur of the mountain, the solitude of the forest, the hum of the busy street, the roar of the measureless ocean, the serenity of peace, the throb and the turmoil of war. God has ordained that the Book shall contain all these things, so that it may be bound to our affection from the dawn of our life to its close. Some people argue that the Bible is not historically true as to the past; but that does not concern us, for we know that it is true of to-day, true of the throbbing life around us. The closer we bring the Book to life the clearer we see its truth, and it is this trueness to life that we have to impress on our scholars; then we shall reap a great ingathering of souls.

IF A TEACHER UNDERSTANDS

The meeting was brought to a close by a few words from Mr. Lloyd George, M.P.

The Letter Mission continues its useful and kindly service, with many tokens of blessing. After many years, in some cases, the seed silently sown has yielded fruit to the glory of God, and the hearts of the writers of the messages are often encouraged by cheering results of their labours. The Pastors' College.

A HEARTY reception was accorded the friends of the Pastors' College on Wednesday evening on the occasion of the annual meeting of subscribers. During the forty-four years the College has been established, no fewer than 1,000 men, exclusive of those at present studying, have been received for training. Of this number, 775 are now engaged in Christian service as pastors, missionaries, evangelists, &c.

The past year has been marked by steady progress at the College. In the words of the president (Pastor Thomas Spurgeon), "Within and without, peace has reigned—not the peace of the cemetery, but such peace as befits a seminary—the rather than that of the sleep of death. The College is a seed-plot on which there has been expended no little faithful toil.

The gathering of Wednesday evinced evidence of the hearty interest with which the work of the College is followed. The chair was occupied by Mr. G. H. Dean, who expressed his delight in advocating the interests of the institution. He spoke in appreciative terms of the results of the students' training, which had come under his notice from time to time. It had been his joy to witness what useful pioneers the young men had proved. Their exertions had been used of God to the building up of churches.

The President, after alluding to the loss the institution had sustained in the death of the treasurer, Mr. T. H. Olney, went on to say that the Pastors' College Missionary Association supplies and also workers in the Colonies. Mr. Spurgeon referred to the encouraging reports of the work in foreign fields. A prosperous station at Sousse, Tunisia, is under the care of Dr. T. G. Churcher; while Mr. R. F. Elder, after fruitful meetings in Melbourne and Tasmania, has proceeded to Argentina.

Mr. T. A. Denny spoke of happy associations with the founder of the institution, and, after referring to the lamentable destruction of the Tabernacle, expressed the fervent belief that, in connection with the new building, there were bright days in store.

Pasteur Saillens, St. Etienne, Paris, a representative of French Baptists, in the course of a spirited address, warmly acknowledged how great was the debt of gratitude they owed to the Pastors' College. "We glory in coming to London to be trained as pastors. We come here not because you are English, but because you are Christians." Typical instances of conversion of young men from Roman Catholicism were related, and was given of the students from Paris in their labours as pastors or assistants. A young clerk who devotes his evenings to the preaching of the Gospel as well as on the Sabbath, and contributes £25 per year of his earnings to the church, has now felt it his duty to devote himself entirely to the service of the Gospel.

Glimpses of home work in connection with the ministry of the Pastors' College were presented by Mr. D. Russell Smith, the student-pastor at West Hendon. A mission was commenced here some sixteen years ago in connection with the Baptist Church, Finchley Lane, Hendon. In 1898 a separate church was formed, and is now under his charge.

Mr. W. D. Ross had encouraging information to give of the church at Foots Cray, of which he is the student-pastor. Real spiritual progress had been made, and the numbers attending the services had been doubled.

In a few remarks relative to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Pastor Thos. Spurgeon announced that it had been decided to open the building absolutely free of debt. To accomplish this nearly £4,000 is still required. The inaugural services are to be held on September 19, 20, and 21.

Evangelizing the Slums.

Rev. JAMES FLANAGAN.

AMONG the home missionary movements of the Metropolis, the South-East London Mission of the Primitive Methodist body has attracted a large measure of attention by reason of its important developments and the evangelistic fervency of its ministry.

The transformation which, by Divine blessing, is being effected in a

is a cause for deep thanksgiving. Nine years ago Rev. James Flanagan took charge of the work at Trinity Street Chapel. He found a struggling cause, maintained with difficulty in dreary and unsuitable premises, and ignored by the swarming population around. The district was noted as a peculiarly evil sample of the London slum, an abode, not only of the honest poor, but of large numbers of the morally lapsed. Drunkenness prevailed to a lamentable extent. Some temperance workers, who placed fifteen public-houses under observation on a particular Sunday, reported that 16,470 persons, of whom 3,852 were children, were seen to enter.

The task which faced Mr. Flanagan of building up a potent missionary church was, therefore, a difficult one. As fast as men were converted and lifted into improved circumstances they, not unnaturally, sought out a home in some more desirable neighbourhood, and it became a question with those who remained whether the chapel would not have to be closed. It was decided therefore to erect a home for the cause, which would prove an unfailing source of attraction to the people, and a centre of powerful spiritual activity.

That aim has been fulfilled. Such a centre is found in the splendid St. George's Hall, which is now the home of the mission. The story of its erection is a fascinating record. The ground on which the building stands was, but three years since, partially occupied by a well-known public-house; but where strong drink was vended the praises of God resound, and the is heard. At Mr. Flanagan's first Sunday evening service in the old Trinity Chapel, the congregation numbered but thirty-seven. At St. George's Hall, the spacious building is regularly filled with a typical audience of work-a-day people and the poor. There is no gulf between the masses and the sanctuary, and the attraction is evidently the preaching of the Gospel with earnestness and force. The principles on which the Mission is conducted are those of sterling, old-fashioned Methodism. Anything that does not tend to the conversion of men is regarded as superfluous and obstructive. The services are characterized by directness and simplicity, and it is interesting to note how the converts become animated with a desire to carry the Gospel message to their fellows.

True to the associations of the Connexion, open-air work remains a chief feature of the Mission, and in this branch a good brass band renders valuable service. One of the most interesting sights that can be witnessed in South London is an open-air gathering in the familiar spot known as Queen's Buildings. Five or six hundred people gather and listen attentively; windows, balconies, and doors are thronged as the Word of Life is proclaimed in homely but vigorous terms.

In such ways, and by means of lodging-house bands and house-to-house visitation, the very poor are reached. It would be difficult to point to a district in which more lodging-houses of the cheapest kind are to be found, or in which there is a greater need for patient and large-hearted workers of the sort which St. George's Hall produces. Here are deep and swirling waters indeed, but many pearls have been found in them. A sample case of conversion is that of a man who was a terror to the district. He had besides robbing them. He may be said to have been born a thief, and certainly he was trained as such. Out of a life of forty-six years, he had spent twenty-six inside a gaol. By the spirit of love and kindly help, he was won to better thoughts and ways, and finally led to Jesus. For two years he has been manager of a coffee-bar. He is now a mission-hall worker, has married a godly wife, and has been the means of rescuing many more of his own class.

Mr. Flanagan's personal story is worthy of note. "I was not," he says, "trained in the usual way for the ministry. I received my training in the hard school of experience. My early life was one of hardship. My father was a Romanist, but my mother a Protestant. It was when a scholar at the Primitive Methodist Sunday School at Mansfield, Notts, that I learned a verse which, fifteen years after, led me into peace."

Called into evangelistic work by Melton Mowbray circuit, Mr. Flanagan commenced his career by singing alone, one winter's night, in the street of a Leicestershire village. While he was engaged at Melton many were spiritually awakened. After further service in the provinces, particularly at Nottingham, where large congregations were gathered in the Albert Hall, and a revival broke out, Mr. Flanagan came to London. His efforts in connection with the building of St. George's Hall have received wide recognition. The large sum of £12,000 had to be raised, and the home of the Mission was in one of the poorest parishes in the kingdom where out of a population of 40,000 persons,

From photograph by Mr. J. Crossland, 88, Westgate, Burnley.

80 PER CENT. WERE DESTITUTE.

The Corporation of the City of London donated a hundred guineas to the funds, and gifts in cash and kind were received from many parts of the world, with the result that at the opening services, which were held a few months since, Mr. Flanagan was able to announce that the buildings were free from debt.

It is satisfactory to observe that, while a superb sanctuary has been founded, the spirit of the Mission is no whit lessened in simple and whole-hearted desire to lead sinners to Christ. The undertaking grows in usefulness, and in the labour of leadership and supervision Mr. Flanagan will have the prayers and cordial wishes of all who sympathize with good work.

Points and Outlines.

SYMPATHY v. CRITICISM.

MY rule is never to criticize Christian workers. I take it for granted that each man is doing the best he can. I believe that one tear of sympathy is worth an ocean full of abstract discussion. Dr. Talmage.

TREASURED TEARS.

(Psa. lvi. 8.)

Why should God treasure our tears? (1) As a token of prayers to be answered. Tears and prayers are closely connected. "Strong crying and tears" accompanied the "prayers and supplications" of Christ in the days of his flesh. (2) In token of wrongs to be avenged. The tears of martyrs, thus treasured up, plead like the blood of Abel. With the tears of the oppressed, which He has in his bottle, God fills the vials of his wrath, and pours them out upon oppressors and tyrants.

In the Father's house there will be no sorrow nor crying. God's own hand will wipe away all tears, and we shall so completely forget our earthly sorrows as to require assurance that we have ever wept. This may be another reason for our tears being put into God's bottle. J. F. E.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

(Titus ii. 13.)

I. Note the Great Object of the Christian Hope: "The appearing of the glory of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

II. Note the Christian Anticipation of the Appearing: "Looking for that blessed hope."

The hope is blessed—(1) When the heart loves Him who is to come; (2) because of the power of the assurance which we all may have, that that coming can bring no harm to us; (3) because, in contradistinction to all earthly objects of hope, it is certain.

Consider how large a space in the Christian life this hope ought to fill! It is, as the text shows us, as much a part of Christian duty to cultivate it as it is to "live soberly, righteously, and godly." Nay more, it seems that just as "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts" was the means by which the "sober righteous and godly" life should be maintained, so that life is not to be reached except through the cherishing of this bright hope. Where shall we find a stronger bridle for our passions and lusts than in that thought—"The Lord cometh"?

Lastly, note the Teaching and Correction which strengthens the Hope. The more we keep ourselves under the influences of that mighty salvation that is in Jesus Christ, and let them chasten and correct us and submit our inflamed eyes to their healing pains the more clearly will they be able to see "the land that is afar off."

If we would live in the buoyant hope of the manifestation of the glory, let us docilely, prayerfully, penitently, patiently, submit ourselves to the discipline of the grace. Dr. Maclaren.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

IT is with deepest sorrow that we announce the home-call of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., for some years pastor of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting Hill. For a week or more the news of his illness had inspired grave fears as to his recovery, and the saddening news of his decease on Thursday morning last was not altogether a surprise. Mr. Macgregor had been of late preaching with much vigour and intensity. His words to the unsaved, and his appeals for consecrated devotion on the part of Christian people, had been characterized by such earnestness that he was deemed by his friends to be endued with greater bodily strength, mental power, and spiritual purpose than ever before.

A Gospel mission in Aberdeen, addresses to Christian Endeavourers in London, and a Conference in Sunderland, bore witness to his recent labours in the Church at large. On April 20, however, he was prostrated with meningitis. With varying fluctuations the malady pursued its course until the morning of May 3, when Mr. Macgregor "fell asleep" in Jesus. During his brief illness members of his flock had gathered daily, and with "strong crying and tears" presented their deep need and heartfelt distress before the throne of grace, pleading that the beloved pastor might be spared to his flock. The Divine Will, however, decreed it otherwise, and the faithful labourer was promoted to the higher service.

Mr. Macgregor's earthly life measured only thirty-five years, but into a ministry of twelve years he crowded manifold activities. He witnessed for Christ with a passionate devotion, aiming at the conversion of sinners and the upbuilding of believers, in a wide and ever-extending sphere; and was privileged to accomplish more in a dozen years than many men of name and fame are permitted to compass in a lengthened career. At Keswick and other conferences he will be sorely missed; and students in England and America will mourn his loss; but the void will be most keenly felt by the flock to which he had so endeared himself by a loving ministry, by his faithfulness to the Word of God, and his constant care for their spiritual welfare.

In presenting some particulars of the departed minister, we cannot do better than follow a sketch contributed to Northfield Echoes two years ago by his strongly-attached friend, Mr. James. E. Mathieson:—

George H. C. Macgregor came of a family which has furnished its quota to the ranks of the Christian ministry—men who, week by week, were accustomed to the arduous duty of preaching in two languages, Gaelic and English. His father, Rev. Malcolm Macgregor, was for years an honoured pastor at Ferintosh, in the county of Cromarty; and his uncle, Rev. Duncan Macgregor, was beloved by congregations in Dundee and Glasgow, and has given to the Free Church two sons.

After a distinguished career at the University of Edinburgh, and in the New College of Divinity in that city, George Macgregor was called to a charge in Aberdeen. This was in the year 1888, before he had completed his studies. Here for six or seven years he gathered his first experiences of pastoral work, and was owned of God as a winner of souls, and a succourer of many in spiritual upbuilding. His first visit to the Keswick Convention was made in 1889, where he enjoyed a personal experience similar to that of many believing and receptive souls who have visited that sacred spot. Here he came into a closer walk with God, with a simple and unhesitating yielding to his holy will.

In 1891 Mr. Macgregor was invited to the Keswick platform, to add his testimony to that of the group of teachers, who, there and elsewhere, proclaim truths, which belong to the whole Church of God, but are not always urged with the persistence and emphasis their importance demands.

Mr. Macgregor was anything but superficial in his teaching, but a thoroughly trained theologian, and master of the lore upon which candidates for the ministry are fed in Scotland. He was full of a burning zeal for the conversion of sinners, and presented the Gospel in all its fulness with a heart-stirring solemnity, and with that note of awful warning which leaves the sinner without excuse. He had a fierce discontent with the disposition which is satisfied with that low level of Christian living which condones conformity to the world, to the enfeeblement of the soul. In the early days of his ministry a prominent member of his congregation objected to the uncompromising character of his sermons, remarking that more comfortable preaching would be expected in future. He was soon given to understand, however, with all courtesy, that the messengers of the Lord did not receive their instructions from man.

While Mr. Macgregor was often in much request outside his own church, and beyond his own denomination, no pastor was more diligent and faithful in meeting every claim upon his time and resources in feeding the flock entrusted to his care. In answer to calls from the Young Men's Christian Association, he has undertaken many important meetings from time to time, and, as a young man speaking to young men, God has granted him much favour in reaching their hearts, by his direct and earnest Gospel appeal and timely warning. With well-modulated voice, a persuasive and authoritative manner, it was difficult to escape his influence; especially when it was realised that he was a man of much resource, and endowed with considerable reserve of strength; and that, with all his cordiality of bearing, he did not lower the dignity of his calling with undue familiarity.

His privileged and intimate friends will long cherish the pleasant memory of the combination of a merry heart and wise head, coupled with a storehouse of interesting experiences gathered in a ministry of only twelve years' duration, but abounding with those elements which gladden a pastor's heart, and deepen his acquaintance with the intricacies of human nature.

The question of foreign missions was one which occupied much of his time and thought. He contemplated for the Presbyterian Church in England an important advance, by seeking to awaken in congregations a deeper sense of their responsibilities during the "little while" that remained for the Church on earth to bear witness to her crucified, risen, ascended, and returning Lord. The desire became more intense after settling in London, and from his own congregation, the contributions last year for Jewish and foreign missions amounted to £700.

As an author Mr. Macgregor has contributed several helpful books to the literature on Christian living. Some of these—"A Holy Life, and How to Live it," "So Great Salvation," "Praying in the Holy Ghost," "The Aspirations of a Christian," "Gospel Glimpses," and "The Comforting Christ"—clearly exemplify his firm adhesion to the great deeper truths of "God manifest in the flesh"—the redemptive work of our Lord in his life and in his death; his mediation for his Church and for our sin-stricken race at the right hand of the Father in heaven, and his coming again to gather his saints together unto Himself, and to usher in the blessed reign of peace and righteousness.

Keswick Convention.
July 23 to 28, 1900.

AS many missionaries to the heathen desire to attend the Keswick Convention this year, a Special Fund is needed to assist them in their expenses. Contributions towards this important object will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Albert A. Head, "Keswick Convention," Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W., if sent after May 14. An early response to this appeal is requested, so as to give time for the needful arrangements.

Missionaries desiring assistance will oblige by writing, enclosing a stamped envelope with full address, to Mrs. Albert A. Head, at the address given above, not before May 14. The fund raised is to aid missionaries to the heathen only. Others desiring to attend can write to Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick, who will give information as to accommodation.

Meals can be obtained at the refreshment rooms, at reasonable rates; but in neither case at the cost of the fund before-named.

For the Trustees of the Keswick Convention,
Robert Wilson.

Broughton Grange, Cockermouth.

Note.—For special train arrangements from London and the South of England to Keswick, on Friday, July 20, with return, apply to Mr. J. T. Budd, Ambleside, New Barnet, Herts, enclosing a stamped and directed envelope.

Lancing-on-Sea Homes of Rest.—At these useful institutions there are vacancies for both men, women, and children, including mothers and infants, for whom a separate Home is provided. Workers among the poor may nominate persons at reduced rates for the next few weeks, upon application to the secretary, Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

Other Lands.

From North Carolina.

SCEPTICISM having been expressed as to the real fruits of revival services, especially among the emotional Negroes, we were glad of the opportunity to revisit two of the places where, a year ago, we had held short missions with Mr. Wintle, then our travelling companion. On our way to the old tracks we decided to stop a day at which is one of the Normal Schools of the American Missionary Association. At the station we were met by the Principal, Miss Cathcart, a fragile-looking little woman. "We have a drive of four miles before us," she said, as we stepped into her buggy, "and many ups and downs, for our roads are not like yours." No, indeed! Happily for the prettiest of the Southern States, North Carolina excels in something better than bad roads. Her fertile soil grows almost all the products of the sister States, in more or less quantity. For the lover of scenery, there is the beautiful "Land of the Sky," with Asheville as its centre.

After travelling for some time over monotonous plains, one greets with delight the first outline of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Now we are driving towards a range of hills, and Miss Cathcart points in the direction where, hidden among the pines, lies the school, nestling at the foot of Crowder Mountain. At this moment two of the wheels drop into a deep hole, and we nearly touch the ground. "Never mind," says our driver, cheerfully—"I have been driving here for eleven years and never upset anybody."

At last we reach our destination, and a beautiful view opens before us. Lincoln Academy consists of three frame-buildings, which are connected together, and show their growth by their irregularities. The first two who greet us, besides Miss Newton—an intimate friend and co-worker of Miss Cathcart—are girls who had been converted at the Hillsboro' meetings last year.

"THEY HOLD ON WELL,"

says our hostess, as we enter her sitting-room, which is her office, reception and class-room. Through the open door we look into a sick-room, where a beloved sister lies waiting for the call home. By the time these lines are written she is already with Jesus, whom she loved.

Miss Cathcart, we learn, is not only the principal, secretary, book-keeper, teacher, nurse, but also the minister and mother of a family numbering over 100. The whole staff, including herself and the matron, Miss Coy, consists of seven teachers. With the day-pupils there is an attendance of about 200 scholars. The school fee is 4.50dols. per month. How she manages to give a growing generation abundance to eat, and at the same time to make both ends meet, is a puzzle; but with the help of consecrated co-workers she does it.

Quaint-looking furniture strikes our eyes. Cupboards, desks, sofas, all home-made by scholars, and serving their purpose. "Who teaches them?" we ask. "I do," is the quiet reply.

On the following day we walk around the premises, and a neat little frame structure is shown to us as the new laundry, which has been erected by the boys, under their principal's supervision. Farther on, a plot of garden land is being prepared for planting vegetables. "Who is the teacher?" "Only I." And, as if afraid to appear egotistic, she adds, quickly: "Not that I know much about it myself."

The more we see, the more we recognise the resources of one, weak in herself, but strong through Him in whom she trusts. To teach the young to make much out of little, to use up the fragments, to convert a box or a barrel into an article of use and even comfort, is just the training which the poor need. Every housewife will agree with me that it requires genius, coupled with patience, to keep order without cupboards. This is accomplished in the dormitories at King's Mountain. Until recently every drop of water had to be carried by scholars from a mile's distance; now it comes in pipes from the mountain, and is

REJOICED OVER AS A LUXURY.

Miss Cathcart, like all zealous workers, has her dreams and ambitions. One of them is at the point of being realized. It is a humble cottage hospital which the boys are to erect. Another is that the frame school-houses may be replaced by solid brick buildings, and that she may be enabled to provide more comfort for her helpers. Their accommodations are small, their life monotonous, and their duties strenuous; but as the work is done for the Lord, discomforts are not taken account of by those offering their service.

One story told me about this lady I would not like to withhold. An orphan boy was taken dangerously ill. His uncle, a hard-hearted man, carried the lad some distance and left him on the step of a poor widow's hut. She heard the moaning and took the boy in. On the following day she ran to tell Miss Cathcart. "What shall I do? I am willing to nurse the boy, but I am poor myself." Miss Cathcart promised to bear the expense. The boy having soon died, she set to work, and with the assistance of her scholars, prepared a coffin and performed the funeral ceremony. Dr. Curtis, of Raleigh, who is connected with the A.M.A., says that hardly ever a scholar leaves the institution without being thoroughly given up to Christ. The place has been made the means of

PURIFYING THE WHOLE DISTRICT ROUND.

From King's Mountain we went to Hillsboro' to spend Sunday with our friends there. Misses Bechan and Curtis, missionary teachers under the A.M.A., are preparing scholars for the higher grade schools of King's Mountain, Greensboro', and Hampton. Like Miss Cathcart they are working short-handed and under disadvantages.

At the Christian Endeavour meeting, eighteen young people, bright lads and girls, testified that they were some of the fruit of our last year's visit. Aunt Charity, in her big black hood, was also there, bent with age, leaning upon her staff. She is uncertain as to the number of her years, but sure of wearing the seal of the Father's Name upon her forehead, by which she will be recognised should the King come before she is taken. I gave her Mr. Wintle's love. "Give him mine too, and tell him that I am pressing towards the mark of the high calling. I am waiting for the big ship. Oh, it will be a trip!" Dear old body! Would she not jump for joy if she could!

There was a united meeting at the Methodist Chapel in the morning and in the Baptist Chapel in the evening. This was crowded and solemn, and a prolonged shaking of hands closed it. Among others, we met a six-foot middle-aged schoolmaster, brought under conviction of sin at last year's services. He found peace after we left, and is now a rejoicing Christian.

On Monday we left for Raleigh, where an informal evening meeting had been arranged at the Congregational Church. It did not excel so much in numbers as in the quality of the attendance; most of whom were leading Christian workers, such as Rev. Jennings, the pastor, and Dr. Curtis, his predecessor; Professors Vincent and Johnson, of Shaw University, the latter the author of two interesting books—"The History of the American Negro" and "The History of the Negro Soldier." It cheered our hearts to hear them, and several ladies engaged in the work among the young testify to the permanent good done by the mission services. Mr. Wintle was, of course, lovingly remembered, and his excellent work in Monmouthshire earnestly prayed for. It was near eleven o'clock when we separated. After attending morning prayer next day at Shaw University, we continued our journey to Hampton Schools, Virginia.

Notes from New York.

I VISITED the Missionary Exhibition opened in connection with the Œcumenical Conference yesterday afternoon, and saw several objects of some little interest. As a whole the exhibition suggests the idea that it was an after-thought—a very excellent one, too—and that lack of time alone prevented the gathering together of a much finer concrete presentation of the picturesque and historical associations of missionary life and work. It is to be hoped that the suggestion of making the exhibition one of the permanent features of our city may be carried out, for here is, at any rate, a capital nucleus for a valuable collection. The principal sections were allotted to China, Japan, Mexico, Haiti and Cuba, Oceania, Siam, and North American Indian objects on one floor; and upstairs were represented Burmah (with a handsome "house"), Assam, India, Ceylon, Turkey, Persia, Egypt, Syria, with Liberia and other parts of Africa.

The African exhibits included several whips of hippopotamus hide, used in the slave trade; two long poles of heavy wood, with crotches at the end, used as yokes for captured slaves; and chains and shackles for the same unlucky people. Here was also a conical tin can, perhaps 4in. in diameter at the base, 18in. high, and 2in. in diameter at the top. In the days when "Chinese" Gordon was in the Soudan the slave-traders used to smuggle gunpowder into the country in these tins, which were supposed to contain sugar. The particular can on exhibition has a label on it, bearing the name of the exhibitor, and a few words in the nature of an explanatory note, written in the handwriting of the Mystic of Khartoum himself.

Among the objects of interest from Mexico are the large French Bible, dated Paris, 1841, used at the first Protestant service ever held in that country, and a witch-doll. This last, at first sight, looks like a small roll of rags, six inches long and half or three-quarters of an inch through, with several bent pins run into it in different places. A note attached says that when Mexican witches wish to injure anybody, they make these "witch-dolls," run pins or maguey-thorns through them, and put them where they are likely to fulfil the purposes of their creators. It is added that they are difficult to obtain by those who do want them, and that this specimen was acquired through the aid of the chief of police of the city of Mexico, at a cost of three days of time and no less than 20dols. in money. In the Japanese section are several boards bearing proclamations forbidding the exercise and preaching of Christianity in that empire—one of these setting forth the famous prohibitive imperial edict of 1682.

The Church Temperance Society is going to place a new ice-water fountain in State Street, where 100,000 seamen are paid off every year. An interesting point is that it is to be erected there by request of the United States Shipping Commissioners.

The Anti-Saloon League is getting ready for the inauguration of a vigorous campaign. One important thing accomplished by the League has been to increase the difficulties of saloon-keepers to get bondsmen. It has got all the surety companies to enter into an agreement not to furnish bonds to any saloon-keepers outside Greater New York, to inquire carefully into the character of applicants within the city, and to demand an increased fee for the bond if it is furnished. About May 1 the League expects to arrest many saloon men for selling liquor after they have applied for a licence, but before they have filed their bonds.

A Talk with Count Katsu-Awa.

By Rev. GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

As there have been some inquiries concerning my visit to the late veteran Japanese statesman, Count Katsu-Awa, I herein give the story of that interview.

Professor E. W. Clark had given me an introduction, and also apprised Count Katsu of my wish to call on him. While in Tokyo I received a very courteous letter, appointing an hour for the visit. With my interpreter, a native pastor, I arrived at the statesman's residence at Akasuka. In response to a ring at the door-bell, a maid appeared, who knelt before us. Having taken our cards, she reappeared and invited us within. Removing our shoes, we walked through the hall into a large room, floored with the usual rice mats, but bare of furniture. Thence we proceeded into the reception-room for foreigners. A long table stretched across this apartment, on which was the usual fire-box and a glass vessel of cigarettes.

Soon the screen doors parted, and a venerable, healthy-looking man entered. Count Katsu-Awa, who was then in his seventy-seventh year, was an old-time Japanese statesman, soldier, and patriot. He was the chief actor in the reform government which deposed the Shogun and established the Mikado in power. He was also First Minister of the new navy, and a member of the Privy Council; in religion he was a Buddhist.

Japan's heedlessness of religion.

After a brief introduction, Count Katsu extended his hand and bade me welcome. He then motioned to my chair, the seat of honour; my interpreter sat beside me. At first, conversation was general concerning Japan, her political and social conditions, with some allusions to England and America. The experienced statesman was pessimistic regarding his own country. He saw no great and good men appearing, capable to steer the ship of state through the perilous waters of readjustment. He feared impatience and impulsiveness on the part of Government leaders.

Having introduced the subject of Christianity, he spoke favourably of its purpose and high ideals. He regretted the policy of pushing its claims unwisely, before the nation could give the subject proper attention. He said that the political condition of his country absorbed the thought of leading men, who gave no time to the proper consideration of religious subjects. He acknowledged the unwisdom of this procrastination, but thought that, during the formation period of a nation, legislation and material interests were always uppermost in the minds of her people. He discriminated between good and bad Christians, and inquired the cause. While I noted the distinction between Christianity as a religious system and Christ as a life-giving Saviour, he manifested great interest. He acknowledged the superior ethics of the Christian religion, but asserted that true Buddhism was also morally elevating.

Praying with the Count.

When I had narrated my experience of conversion from nominal to real Christianity, I explained the source of power for life and godliness through the indwelling Christ and the ministry of the Holy Spirit. To the consideration of the governing motive of love and privilege, not fear and duty, he gave very serious attention. I then urged his own acceptance of Christ, at which he nodded and smiled. My proposal to pray with him met with prompt acquiescence. He knelt beside us, while Mr. Ukai interpreted my prayer. Oh, how my soul yearned for this benevolent and influential statesman! While in supplication, I realized that God was near, especially as I heard from the Count's lips undertones of response.

After prayer, he voiced his thanks, with moist eyes and affecting tenderness, in expressive Japanese. Then calling for card and brush he wrote a poem, which he handed me. Its substance in English was, "I promise the American teacher to follow the truth so far as it is made known to me."

The Count expressed regret that no leader of the people like Gladstone had yet appeared in Japan. I inquired, "Can a heathen nation produce a Gladstone?" His reply was a deliberate and decided "No." To those acquainted with the intense nationalism of the Japanese, and the glowing patriotism of the man, this admission was a great surrender to Christ. He freely owned the superiority of those nations whose leaders were imbued with the spirit of Christianity.

In earlier days Count Katsu opposed religious intolerancy, and for thirty years he advocated openly freedom of conscience. When reverting to his hair-breadth escapes from assassins, occasions when his body was punctured with bullets, I asked for his explanation of protection. The reply was unexpected; it was given, too, with a beaming smile: "I now believe it was your Jesus guarded me."

Three months after this interview Count Katsu-Awa was stricken with apoplexy. He had been much on my heart, and I had frequently requested prayer for him. He was a guileless Nathanael, and an inquiring Cornelius. For his sake, I love Japan more deeply, and hope to return in the future for another evangelistic campaign among her interesting but Christless people.

The Gospel in Mexico.

WRITING from Orizaba, Mr. Eglon Harris speaks in hopeful terms of Gospel progress in Mexico. The funds for the extra press and new type have been supplied, the £100 subscribed enabling the workers to shape their plans for the extension of the printing office, and the publication of an additional paper for young converts is contemplated. Besides the publication of 27,000 copies per month of El Sembrador, some 40,000 or 50,000 other tracts are circulated, as well as a large number of Gospels, Testaments, and Bibles.

Mr. G. W. Ray, who has laboured for a number of years in unevangelized parts of Spanish-America, during his recent travels found priests in abundance, but unparalleled ignorance everywhere. He states that the mass of people have not the slightest notion of true piety, and that the truth is seldom spoken. The priest is satisfied with nothing less than the most complete submission of the mind and body of his flock.

Mr. Ray gives particulars of the trying circumstances in which mission work is carried on. "The true priest is well aware that the Protestant brings God's Word and liberty, and the true labourer for Christ finds him an inveterate foe. The village cura is a dangerous enemy to the Christian, and many times he has insulted me to my face and defamed me through the Press, and made me an outcast and by-word to the superstitious villagers. I have been stoned, hurled to the ground, and have had dogs set on me. The police look expectantly on, eager to see me retaliate; and, on one occasion, I was quickly escorted to the station for snatching a bottle from the hand of a boy who was in the act of throwing it at my head."

Mr. Ray has also many stories to tell of God's grace and salvation bestowed on inquirers even in these places where Satan would seem to reign supreme.

Periodical letters regarding the work may be had from Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester.

Evangelization in Tuscany.

SIX hours from Florence, and about the same from Rome, on a spur of the Apennines, stands the ancient and picturesque town of San Sepolcro. It is surrounded by high walls from which you can see the Tiber, and contains many churches and monasteries, boasting a bishop and fifty priests.

Nearly a year ago two English ladies, hearing there had been no evangelical work attempted in this part of Tuscany, determined to go there with an evangelist, and if possible to start evangelistic work. They had at first to put up with much opposition from the priests, who denounced them publicly, and tried to force the people to boycott them; but gradually they gained the confidence of the more liberal; and now there is a large hall and an earnest evangelist who holds two meetings a week. These gatherings are very well attended, and several of the men wish to become evangelicals.

Owing to unforeseen circumstances, the lady at the head of this work is obliged shortly to resign, and she is very anxious to hear of an earnest Christian lady to take her place. All expenses in connection with hall and evangelist are provided for. Living is moderate, and the air healthy and bracing. Letters may be addressed to Miss Hore, 3, Nunnery Lane, York.

Persecution in Bohemia.

GOSPEL workers in Bohemia are being much encouraged by blessing attending the reading and expounding of the Scriptures in cottage meetings and other informal gatherings. Writing from a small country town, an esteemed missionary friend tells of painful persecution suffered at the hands of Roman Catholics. The writer narrates unwarranted interference on the part of the police, at the instigation (as is pretty well understood) of the ecclesiastical authorities.

Lately this young worker, under charges of lacking proper papers, and of being an agent of some secret society, was taken to the police office and detained until the next afternoon. Had he been treated as the law of the land seems to direct, he could at once have furnished evidence regarding himself, and so have been allowed to return home by the evening train.

We give no names of persons or of places, though dismissal might be thought merited by those who would lend themselves to such proceedings. Suffice it to remark that it is not to the credit of a great empire like that of Austria that acts of such petty persecution should be so easily perpetrated. M. J.

Progress in South America.

IN a letter to Mr. H. S. Ridings (31, Carson Road, West Dulwich, S.E.), Mr. Weiss, of Victoria (Chili), says:—

"We have one station in the Province of Valdivia with its 65,000 inhabitants; also our out-station visited from time to time. Then there is the Province of Llanquihue, in which are several towns with a total population of 80,000. A few colporteurs have passed through, and Brother Dawson and I held meetings last year, and found some ready to hear the Gospel. With Osorno as a centre, we could reach many places, but have not the means.

"When we came here we had a debt of 200 dols., but we were able to clear it off within the year. The Lord has laid it on the heart of a brother to buy us a humble home in Victoria, and has, besides, given us a printing press and type, with which we are now producing thousands of tracts and papers, and have already seen fruit through their distribution Three of our brethren were put in jail for Christ's sake, but they preached the Gospel there. Most of my helpers are English and German Christians, who have been a long time in the country and know the language and customs. They are thoroughly consecrated, and shun no self-denial. We are supporting one Chileno and two Germans; the rest work during the week and preach on the Lord's Day."

Anglo-Chinese College, Foochow.

CHINAMEN who can speak English are not very rare in Foochow, but if, meeting an English-speaking Foochow man, one asks him where he has learned our language, his answer is nearly certain to be: "At Mr. Smyth's Anglo-Chinese College," or at another college in the city.

I heard this college mentioned so frequently that my curiosity was aroused, and I was much pleased when asked to go to see it. We stopped at Mrs. Smyth's house on the way, for it is in the same compound, and, when the bell began, Mrs. Smyth walked with us down the wide path, past the tennis lawns, to the large house, which I had thought was the only building of the College. I was greatly astonished when I heard that here were only class-rooms, and that in two other big houses behind were dormitories, dining-rooms, and more class-rooms.

Standing in the verandah we watch through the open French window the roll-call of the boys. They sat row beyond row, almost every boy clad in the usual blue cotton, and, being scholars, their coats were long enough to reach their ankles, for the long coat is the badge of in China. Each boy in turn said his number in English, and absentees were noted in the register by Mr. Smyth, as he stood at a table facing the boys. To keep a list of the Chinese names of all the boys would be a very tiresome business, and so this expedient is adopted instead. I cannot say that the numbers were all pronounced exactly as an Englishman would pronounce, but considering that the sounds of R, of F, and of Th are absent from this dialect, and that these sounds are therefore quite new to the boys, they spoke wonderfully well. They could not manage the final "y" very well, it was generally "twentee," "thirtee," &c.

Each class went off to a different room. We followed one class upstairs, in company with the lady who was to teach it, Miss Bosworth. There were between twenty and thirty boys, varying a good deal in size and age. Some I should judge to be over twenty, and probably not a few were husbands and fathers. The boy whom I know best at the Anglo-Chinese College is twenty-two, and he has a wife and two daughters, the eldest child being nearly three years old. I learnt that all the boys spend half the day at English lessons, and half in studying the Chinese classics with native teachers. The classes which do English in the morning do Chinese in the afternoon, and vice versâ. There are altogether twelve teachers. Five of these are American missionaries, three are Chinese who teach English subjects, and four are Chinese who teach Chinese books.

I was taken afterwards to see the dining-room, a large room divided by two rows of pillars. There were a number of tables, and near each a paper was pasted up, with the names of the boys who sat at it, the name of the head boy, who is of the rest, being at the top. On tables at the end were piles of bowls, and stacks of chop-sticks. The Americans have nothing to do with the food arrangements; the cooks provide the food, and sell it to the boys. We passed through the kitchen, where several men were busy, and went on to see the bathrooms, a row of wooden cubicles with a big bath in each. Every boy has to take a bath once a week, which is a wonderful thing for the Chinese, who are not devotees of the tub by any means. If the face and hands are wiped with a cloth wrung out in hot water, that is the most that can be expected!

I was told that there are 273 boys in the school, of whom seventy-four are day boys, and the rest boarders. Not all belong to Foochow; some are Cantonese and Amoy, but not very many. Miss Bosworth said that these boys soon picked up the Foochow dialect, and that some of the Amoy boys were among the cleverest of their pupils.

We afterwards went upstairs, but we did not succeed in seeing the dormitories, as, with true Chinese caution, every boy had securely locked his door with a native lock, and taken away the key. I heard that in each room three boys slept; they have, I suppose, the usual hard rattan beds, and each his "mieng puoi" or quilt. These quilts are made of blue calico, or of gay flowered print, and stuffed with the coarse native cotton wool. In summer this cotton wool is taken out, and the cover is used without it. Their pillows are of wood, very like a small log of wood painted red and varnished.

Breakfast is at seven in the morning, dinner at twelve, and supper at five. If they are hungry in the evening they have cake in their own rooms; and they surely must get hungry again between five and ten if they are at all like English boys. I saw quite enough to be convinced of the great importance of this work. The fact that one of the new buildings of the College was erected by

of the Chinese themselves, is a proof of how highly the institution is valued by them. And if, as many seem to think, the present Government of China is already beginning to totter to its fall, it is very probable that, in changes which must take place, the men of Western education will come to the fore, and in such a case, who can estimate the value of the work which this College has done, and is now doing?

Opinions may differ as to the amount of time which it is right for a missionary to give to secular teaching, but I believe it to be a fact, that all who have taken the eight years' course, and have graduated, have become Christians. How great a proportion become evangelists among their heathen fellow-countrymen I do not know; but if they do not all undertake the work which missionaries naturally think the highest and most important, it is certain that those who take the full course generally leave the College well educated and Christian men, with minds to a great extent freed from the prejudices and superstitions which are the bar to all progress in China.

Methodism in Haiti.

IN a review of Wesleyan Methodist work in Haiti, Rev. Westmore S. Smith writes from Bird College, Port-au-Prince:—"We have just held our Synod in Port-au-Prince, and, according to Methodist phraseology, we have had a good time. Though few in number—only seven missionaries for an island as large as Ireland—we were enabled to kindle some enthusiasm. Our Synod is looked forward to with pleasure by our people, who call it 'La Réunion Missionnaire,' because, during the sittings, we hold our annual missionary meeting. This was held on Monday evening, February 12. Our chairman was M. Paul Lochard, editor of the Government official paper. The chapel was filled to overflowing, a large number being obliged to stand outside in the fine grounds surrounding the building. Our evangelist, from Petit Goave, a land surveyor, whose work is honorary, told of the conversion of a Voodoo priest, who has commenced to preach the gospel. There are many places in the island where the people are given up to the superstitions of Voodooism and Romanism.

"The principal feature of our Synod this year was the inauguration of our new school-house in connection with Bird College. The building, which consists of a central school with two class rooms, music room, and dormitory, is a gift to the Mission from our esteemed chairman, Rev. T. R. Picot. Besides making this substantial contribution, Mr. Picot has lifted the burden of debt from the different stations, helped forward the building of mission houses and chapels, and filled the hearts of his brethren with gratitude and praise. He has further made himself responsible for the salaries of two more workers, if the committee will only send them out. The inauguration of the new school-house took place on February 16. The influence of the institution is everywhere felt. We need a French-speaking Christian lady as resident teacher to undertake this important branch of missionary work, viz., the training of the future women and mothers of Haiti."

The Milan Orphanage.

THE Alveare Protestant Orphanage at Milan, is not perhaps so widely known as many of the features and attractions of the city in which it is situated. In the course of a recent letter, the superintendent (Miss Jane Cox) writes: "The Milanese are not so brilliant or clever as the more Southern Italians, but with some marked exceptions they are more persevering, industrious, and self-reliant than the Southerners. Our Protestant institutions are, of course, much disliked by the people in general, though some who are liberal appreciate our efforts to assist the destitute.

"I have in my Orphanage several children whose relations were anxious that their little ones should be brought up as 'evangelici.' Though they were Roman Catholics in name, they have since become Protestants, and, what is more important, Christians. God is blessing our children also; many of them have become soldiers of Christ. At their own weekly prayer meeting, it is touching to hear even the little ones plead for power against their besetting sins. The children understand that they must carry the banner of Christ to their school; consequently, though at first they were despised by their teachers because of their being Protestants, now they are respected and praised.

"Since we have opened a small mission hall near the orphanage, we have frequently been stoned and insulted. The Gospel is faithfully preached by a young pastor, and his teaching has been a blessing to many souls." Correspondence may be addressed to Miss Jane Cox, Alveare, 25, via Correggio fuori Porta Magenta, Milan; or Miss Maud Selwyn, 25, Bennett Park, Blackheath, S.E.

Zenana Medical College.

I AM anxious to make more widely known a useful institution, the Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's Road, S.W. It has a representative committee; and the institution is strictly undenominational, but thoroughly evangelical. Its object is to train ladies to be Christian missionaries, and at the same time to give them a knowledge of medicine, surgery, midwifery, &c. More than 200 students have been trained, and their labours have been blessed in many lands, not only to the natives, but also to the wives and families of missionaries and others, when no other medical help was at hand.

Through the kindness of some Irish friends, the committee can accept five partially free pupils, and are willing to receive four or five of the widows or orphans of those Irish officers who have fallen in the war; they must pledge themselves to mission work abroad. The course of study occupies two years of three terms each, and the full fees are fifty guineas a year. The hon. secretary at the College will supply further information.

The Sabbath in India.—Christian people who are by no means fanatical in their views of Lord's Day observance have witnessed the Viceroy's laxity in this respect with sorrowful concern. None would be more willing to make allowance in case of real emergency for travel on Sunday than we; but in the present instance no emergency exists. We can assure his Excellency that a disregard for the Lord's Day will not by any means commend his administration to the favourable judgment of the natives of this country, any more than it is likely to increase the confidence of Europeans in his statesmanship.—Indian Witness.

On the Amazons.—Mr. W. Roger Jones, of the Missionary Pence Association, writes to us:—"Every month of delay in providing Mr. George R. Witte with the indispensable boat increases the difficulties of establishing an industrial mission near Manaos. The Roman Catholic prelates are importing hundreds of Spanish priests from the Philippines, and are sending them forward to the hitherto unentered interior States. The cost of the boat, with freight and duty, is estimated at £300. Subscriptions and promises to hand amount to £82 10s. Communications may be sent to the office of The Christian."

A Hero of Ladysmith.

THE news of the serious illness of our missionary, Ion Herbert Smyth, necessitated a hurried journey to Ladysmith, followed by eight days of constant watching by his side. On March 15, soon after the relief of Ladysmith, our brother passed away in one of the military hospitals in that town. For nearly three years he had been the faithful and devoted missionary of the South Africa General Mission to the soldiers stationed in Natal. Before the outbreak of hostilities, he left the Soldiers' Home in Maritzburg and moved to Ladysmith, so as to be near the possible scene of fighting, as well as to work amongst the men in that large garrison.

Before the siege commenced he might have left, but chose to stay with his great friend, Mr. James Taylor, in spite of the danger from shell and sickness. They were able to do a splendid work together until he was laid low with enteric fever on December 28; dysentery followed, and a relapse hastened the end. The last words he was able to utter were: "Jesus, I am ready!" The Mission has lost a valuable worker and the soldiers a true friend.

We had already visited Colenso, being one of the first civilians to enter the deserted and partially destroyed village. Then, all around were desolation and destruction; fighting was going on just outside, where the 66th Battery were shelling the Boer trenches from the middle of the village.

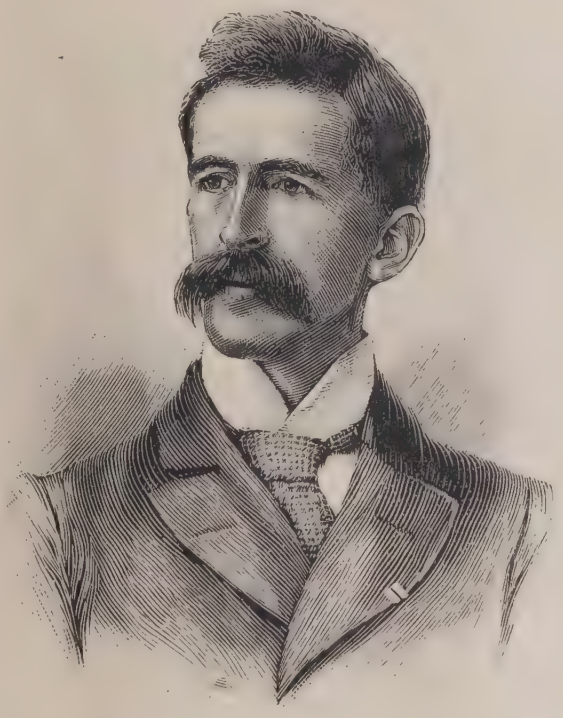
Now all was bustle and activity, hundreds of transport waggons were getting ready for loads for the starved and newly relieved Ladysmith troops and civilians, while all round our troops were encamped on the various hills recently occupied by the Boers. Many of the relieved from Ladysmith were passing through. Most were reduced to skin and bone, with hungry looks and marks of the severe strain when, day after day, Long Tom sent his missiles of death into the besieged town. Some looked so tired and weary, but through it all could be seen the joy of relief on their faces. We moved amongst them, chatting and giving words of comfort. In every case we found a subdued spirit and a ready response. Seed was sown, and eternity will show the results. Strolling over the temporary wooden footbridge erected by the side of the wrecked railway bridge, we saw the first material train, and heard it was returning to Ladysmith shortly, so we gladly joined it. Owing to broken culverts and temporary wooden structures our progress was very slow, but this gave us a wonderful opportunity of seeing the various battlefields through which we passed, and enabled us to form some idea of the awfulness of war.

The hills on either side had been the scenes of the fiercest fights of the previous week. Broken down waggons, an ambulance cart damaged by a shell, two overturned traps, broken and empty cases, biscuit tin boxes, some even with biscuits in, told us how our advance had driven our enemies before us, while the well-made trenches betrayed the fact that European engineers had been in the Boer ranks. Sir Redvers Buller and our brave men had accomplished a herculean task, and had given to the world a grand display of British pluck and endurance.

Trees burnt with Lyddite explosives, and large holes caused by exploded shells, were to be seen on all sides. Hundreds of empty cartridges along the railway banks showed us where our men had poured in their deadly fire from their Lee-Metfords. Empty and exploded shells were scattered about. Boulders were marked where the bullets had struck them, while the corrugated iron buildings were riddled with shot and shell.

The stench from scores of dead horses was unbearable, mingled as it was with the hundreds of dead Boers, whose bodies were buried under a thin covering of earth. The newly-made mounds marked the resting-places of many of our brave officers and men. A rough wooden cross, made out of broken packing-cases, could be seen at the head of most. Two large mounds covered many of our Irish soldiers, who had suffered so much in the recent fights. The battle's din had scared away the birds, and all was silent except the caw of the unclean crow or the cry of the vulture.

Passing on through Pieters, a hill on which a very stubborn fight occurred, we came to a Boer encampment, which had been hurriedly left. Above us, on the hill-tops, were to be seen the deserted Boer batteries, which commanded distant Ladysmith. Steaming slowly on, we came to the neutral camp at N'Domba, or Intomba. This had been used principally for the sick and wounded, and at that time 1,500 were in the canvas hospitals. A graveyard, with 600 fresh graves, told a tale of death. On one day alone twenty-five had died in that camp. Now many were in a critical condition, while the convalescents who could crawl about were ghastly to look at. Here, in the midst of pestilence and death, our brave doctors and nurses sought to help the sick and dying, while our ministers and missionaries ministered to their spiritual needs, some laying down their lives in their noble work.



THE LATE MR. ION HERBERT SMYTH.

Ladysmith was reached. All around marks of the bombardment could be seen. Man and beast alike had suffered, and their thin, emaciated condition was sad to behold. Horses had been turned adrift to seek a mouthful of herbage, and often were glad to gnaw a bit of board, seeking to relieve the cravings of hunger.

We were the next day by the bedside of our sick missionary, Mr. Smyth, and sought to minister to him until the Lord called him home on March 15.

As the churches had been requisitioned for hospitals, services were held on the verandahs and under trees. We had a very blessed time with our Wesleyan brethren, preaching twice on Sunday. Both the Wesleyan and Congregational ministers had remained all through the siege, working for the Master, caring for the dying and burying the dead. Many thank God for raising up these brethren, and the names of Cawood and Thomson, with his assistant Tapp, will long be remembered.*

The town was full of sickness and fever germs, and all visitors were sent away unless detained by urgent claims, when passes for a limited time were granted. Such scenes only help to bring out the fearfulness of war and cause the hearts of God's children to yearn for the coming of the Prince of Peace.

At the Gates of the Paris Exhibition.

WE are preparing for special work in connection with the McAll Mission, during the spring and summer, when Paris will be crowded with guests from all parts of the land, not to speak of the many who will be visiting it from other shores. We are opening the special hall at the Porte Rapp on Sunday, May 6, God willing, and shall soon be holding meetings several times daily; though, owing to unavoidable delays in getting the hall ready, we cannot expect to be in full working order for another fortnight.

This "Salle Evangélique de la Porte Rapp" is opposite that entrance to the Exhibition grounds, and is situated at No. 59, Avenue de La Bourdonnais. The heavy rent has been provided for by subscriptions from many friends of the work of evangelization, raised by our friend, Mr. J. G. Alexander, chiefly from members of the Society of Friends; while the Religious Tract Society, the Scripture Gift Mission, and the Evangelical Alliance are also helping in the work. We need special help to complete the fitting up and furnishing, and to provide for the working expenses, which will be heavy, as prices of all kinds are rapidly rising.

Then at our hall in the rue Royale, No. 23, we shall also have meetings three times a day as soon as that hall is ready for us, it having needed a thorough renovation. Thus in a few days' time we shall be preaching the Gospel at these two centres, and a work of distribution will be actively carried on around the Exhibition. The British and Foreign Bible Society are already working, and they have kindly placed at our disposal a considerable quantity of Gospel portions.

We hope that our friends coming over to Paris will not forget to note these two addresses, and that they will not fail to give us a call, and to show their sympathy with us in this blessed service. We shall have a daily prayer-meeting each morning at 10 a.m. at the Salle Rapp, commencing with the 21st inst. (D.V.). Thus that hall will be open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., while that of the rue Royale will be open also during the day and till 10 p.m.

I may add that there is an exhibition of machinery, &c., at the Bois de Vincennes, outside the fortifications, and we have been able to take a small hall close by, at Bercy, for special work, chiefly on Sundays, when large numbers will be passing to that part of the Exhibition. We entreat friends to help us by their prayers and by their gifts.—Yours faithfully, 36, Rue Godot-de-Mauroy. W. SOLTAU.

Sailors at Bilbao.

LAST year, about this time, it was a great pleasure for me—as secretary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society—to open the Bilbao Sailors' Institute, and to witness some hundred British steamers, with all their crews on board, waiting for the precious mineral ore of Spain. When I first visited Spain as a sailor, the Spanish Bible was contraband, and to sell a copy to a Spaniard entailed the penalty of imprisonment, with other penalties of a most serious character.

Our brother, Mr. Edwin L. Neilson, who has now taken up the work at our headquarters at Shadwell, did a splendid year's evangelistic work at Bilbao; blessing followed, to the conversion of souls. But the work might be greatly extended by the help of lady Christian workers; and if one or two ladies, not quite dependent, but suitable for the work, would volunteer, their board and lodging at the Institute would be found.

Uncle Tom's Cots.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—Many of you, I know, are anxious to hear some tidings of little Hannah and Rosy, who have so long occupied the two cots in the Cripples' Home at Southend, towards which you have contributed, I think, over £30. First of all, let me express my gratitude to you for responding so heartily to the appeal I made on behalf of little Hannah. I asked you to provide £12 for her maintenance at the Ragged School Union Home for ten months; and you were so generous that you subscribed sufficient to keep her there for about two years! So "Uncle Tom" thought that you would prefer having two cots as long as the money would last, and Rosy has been the happy occupant of the second.

Now this week you have the portraits of the two little maidens. I had hoped that, ere this, Hannah would be able to walk with the aid of crutches; but, unfortunately, she has not reached that happy stage. She is still obliged to lie on her back and be kept in irons. In this position she takes all her meals, and enjoys the little niceties which are brought to her; and in this position she dresses her dolls, reads, looks through picture books, and witnesses the games of little girls who are more fortunate than herself. Still, she has greatly improved in health. When her father last saw her he was delighted to see the change for the better, and tears of joy filled his eyes. I was greatly pleased, too, when I saw her a few weeks ago, and found her as happy and contented as ever. She has grown a few inches since she was received into the Home, as that affected leg, alas! reveals—for this, of course, has not grown at all. But I was anxious to have the doctor's opinion as to her health, and to have an idea as to how long it would be necessary for her to remain in the Home; and I called on Dr. Waters, and put these questions to him. I must tell you that he has been most interested in the case, making no charge for his services, and is so glad that you have done so much for the little cripple. He has since examined her, and sent me the following letter:

"The young readers of The Christian will be glad to know that our little patient, 'Hannah,' has improved very much in health during the past few months; but it will be impossible for her to walk for several months to come.

"Every child who helps to keep the patient little suffering one at the Cripples' Home will be more than rewarded when little Hannah is able to walk once more, and thank God for giving her so many little friends."

Now, I wish I could get you all together in a large room, with little Hannah on her invalid couch in the midst, and ask you what you would like to do. I am sure you would all say, "We must keep her in the Home until she can run about." And I have no doubt that this is what you will say in effect by sending your contributions towards her continued stay at Southend. And I quite expect that some who have not hitherto been able to help will make an effort to share in this good work.

With regard to little Rosy, well, she is getting on satisfactorily, although her wounds have still to be dressed, and she needs a great deal of care and attention. She is most grateful to you for your kindness towards her, and so is her father—you will remember she has no mother; and perhaps for this reason you would like her to continue in the cot until she too is able to do without her crutches. I must, however, leave you to say whether you would like to continue the second cot, because this, you know, you have undertaken quite voluntarily. And we can leave "Uncle Tom," who knows you so well, to decide the question when your contributions come in.

Some of you have called at the Cripples' Home and seen the little sufferers there; and your visits have been much appreciated. I hope that during the coming summer many more may call and see for themselves both Hannah and Rosy, as well as the many other cripples who are spending a holiday at Southend. The Home is on the sea-front at South-church Beach. Any further particulars concerning the Cripples' work, or any other of the numerous agencies of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society, may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Personal.

I am very sorry for the unavoidable delay in the preparation of prizes and certificates, which, however, I hope to send off in a few days.

Many thanks for the lovely flowers that have been received this week.

CHRISTABEL BATH, HELEN JERRAM, GLADYS BARTON.—I am glad to welcome you as new "searchers," and trust you will enjoy the study.

LAURA FINCH, MILDRED WESTOBY.—Please do not write out the questions. Number your answers to correspond with the questions given.

ELLEN LARKE.—Chapter and verse only is not sufficient answer; write out the verse.

BEATRICE HARLAND.—I think the "star" must have been meant for both.

GRACIE GULSTON.—Many happy returns of your birthday.

DOROTHY HAVERGAL SHAW.—You will soon get a "star" if you try hard; but you have plenty of time yet.

HARRY WINTLE.—Yes, you must give your age each week.

GRACIE AND GORDON WINN.—Thank you for your kind thought in sending your "toy-money" for the famine children in India. The £3 will be acknowledged in next week's Donation List.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER (Matt. xiii. 1-8: xviii. 23).

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The seed is the Word of God" (Luke viii. 11).

INTRODUCTION.

A PARABLE is a picture to illustrate some great truth. Jesus wanted to teach the people how very different hearts are in the way they receive the Word of God. There were great multitudes (2), and Jesus found He could speak to them better if He sat in one of the fisherman's boats, and the people all stood along the edge of the water. Probably they could see a sower on the hills not far away, and Jesus takes him as his illustration.

ONE seed. sower. good result. FOUR grounds. ways of receiving. results.

The Great Sower is Christ; teachers and ministers are sowers too. The seed is the Word of God in two ways.

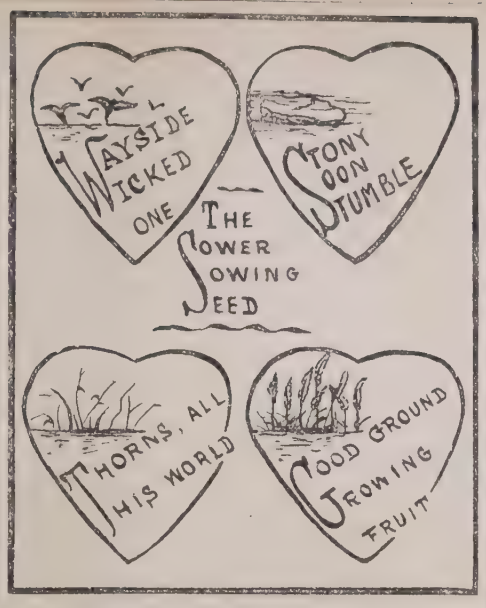
1. The Bible John v. 39: Acts xvii. 11.

2. Jesus Christ Himself: John i. 1, 2: Rev. xix. 13.

Notice where the seed fell in Matt. xiii. 1. By (4); 2. Upon (5); 3. Among (7); 4. Into (8).

Notice what became of it in Luke viii. 1. Word out (12); 2. No root (13); 3. No fruit (14); 4. Keep it (15).

Notice also three times "immediately" in Mark iv. 15, 16, 17.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—As the four grounds represent four hearts, a little sketch with two words explains each one.

FIRST GROUND, FIRST HEART.

"Wayside" (4) a path through a field. Luke viii. 5 says "trodden down" picture of hard, cold hearts.

"Heareth, understandeth not" (19), contrast with (23) "receiveth, and understandeth."

"The wicked one" (19), in Luke viii. 12, "the devil."

The birds illustrate how the devil takes away God's Word, for it cannot sink in, the path is too hard; it only lies on the surface, easily removed, makes no impression. How sad. Those who come and go to God's house, to Bible classes, &c., but the word goes "into" the heart. See a promise for such Ez. xxxvi. 26.

SECOND GROUND, SECOND HEART.

"Stony" (5). R.V. has it "rocky;" it means a layer of earth on a rocky or stony bed, just soft enough for the seed to go in a little and get a little moisture, enough to live on for a few days; but after that how soon it withers and dies (21). "No root." It must have good roots if it is to grow (see Eph. iii. 17; Matt. xxiv. 12; Luke viii. 13). It is when the testing time comes they utterly fail (James i. 12). Straw blazes, but does not last.

THIRD GROUND, THIRD HEART.

"Among thorns" (7). Mark iv. 19 says, "lusts of other things." Luke viii. 14, "riches and pleasures of this life." Worldly pleasures and amusements, love of money, are poisonous weeds full of deadly, killing thorns.

Luke xvi. 13 is true to-day. We must practise Luke xi. 28, Psa. cxix. 11, James i. 25, if we would overcome the weeds; only remember not in our own strength, but in that of the Great Sower Himself, who will cut down the thorns and help us to get rid of the weeds.

FOURTH GROUND, FOURTH HEART.

Good ground (8), good receiving of the seed. "Fell into" (23), "understandeth," Luke viii. 15, "keep it." These are the characteristics of the heart that brings forth fruit to the glory of God (Matt. v. 16). What is the fruit? (See Gal. v. 22, 23.)

Luke says "bring forth fruit with patience."

Corn grows first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear (Mark iv. 28).

We have an illustration of this in the life of Nicodemus — John iii. 2—Blade
„ vii. 50—Ear
„ xix. 39—Full corn
} Psa. lxxxiv. 7.

Let each ask—Which is my heart like?

Y.M.C.A.—At the meeting of the National Council held at Exeter Hall on the 4th inst., Sir George Williams was cordially welcomed back to the chair. In gratitude to God for his restoration to health, a minute was entered, recording the Council's thankfulness, on the motion of Mr. M. H. Hodder, supported by Messrs. J. K. Starley (Coventry), A. Everett (Ipswich), and J. Campbell White, M.A. (Calcutta). The large and representative gathering joined heartily in singing the Doxology. Mr. Charles Fermaud, Secretary of the Central International Committee at Geneva, gave an account of work being done by many of the Associations on the continent. Accounts were also given of special work in Rangoon, by Mr. Oliver H. McCowan, LL.B., the Council's representative in Burma; in India, by Mr. Campbell White; and in Paris, by Mr. H. D. Barclay, Secretary of the Anglo-American Association in that city.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR MAY 13.

VISION AND SERVICE. (Ex. xxiv. 15-18; xxxii. 19-20. Matt. xvii. 1-8, 14-20.)

THE vision of God must be accompanied by useful service. We ascend into our mountains that we may be better prepared for life in the valleys; we are permitted to enter the secret place of the Most High in the hour of morning prayer, the Lord's day service, the hallowed convention, that we may be equipped for all the conflict with the principalities and powers of darkness. Moses' stay with God amid the burning glory of Sinai was intended to prepare him for contending with the idolatry of the people, who, in his absence, had made the golden calf; and our Lord's brief, bright intercourse with Moses and Elijah on the Transfiguration Mount was an eminent preparation for the casting out of the demon, who had not yielded to anything less than prayer and fasting.

With respect to Moses, notice there are three stages in fellowship—that of the elders (v. 9), that of Joshua (v. 13), and that of the Man of God himself. He was absolutely alone when he entered into the midst of the cloud. What a marvellous six weeks was that, as God not only gave him directions for making the various equipment for the Tabernacle, but also explained to him the inner meaning of every altar covering, hanging, and rite. Ah, how different was the scene which awaited him below: the music and dancing; the calf, and his brother as ring-leader in the unholy orgie! His anger was probably righteous; he burned for the glory of God as he beheld it trampled under foot. This was more to him than any loss of personal prestige or authority. Had it not been for his sojourn with God, he might have looked upon it from a much lower standpoint than that which fellowship with the Highest taught him to occupy.

Those who have fellowship with God are quick to see things as they affect his glory; the tables, as they fell shivered from the Lawgiver's hands, are an emblem of the broken law which the holiest cannot keep; and the bitter waters, of which he made the people drink, remind us of the bitter consequences of sin. No man makes a calf without having to drink to the dregs of a bitter cup. Fresh from fellowship with God, it is for us to show men their folly, and warn them back.

As for our Lord, Raphael did well to combine in his great cartoon the scene of transfiguration with that of the demoniac child; they are indestructibly one.

Even our Lord needed times for retirement, and so, six months before He died, He crossed the northern frontier of Palestine, and betook Himself to the pine-clad slopes of Hermon. A happy eight days culminated in the scene of transfiguration, where Moses and Elijah came through heaven's open door to speak of his decease, encouraging and strengthening Him. Deliberately turning his back upon the open glories of heaven, our Lord took the way of the Cross which must lead through darkness and death to his Throne. Was it not in keeping with his great choice that He encountered the devil at the mountain foot?

By all means have your mountains of transfiguration; get away alone with God; open the page where Moses and Elijah still speak; let the Shekinah cloud overshadow you; but do not be surprised if the devil awaits you with his most violent temptation immediately afterwards, and dare to believe that God gives you that radiant moment that you may be better prepared to meet the tempter, and overcome his mighty assaults, not only in your own heart, but in the souls and bodies of those whom you are called to succour and save.

Delegates coming from America are numbered at about 2,000. There is also news of large deputations from many parts of the Continent.

Irish Mission to Jews.—At a meeting of the Belfast Branch of the Irish Mission to the Jews last week, Mr. I. J. Grande gave a report of the strength of the Mission. He stated that in Dublin there were about 2,500 Jews, most of them Polish refugees. There was also a large number of well-to-do and cultured English and Irish-born Israelites. Of the latter class many had very little sympathy with the faith of their forefathers, and among these had been distributed forty-eight copies of the Hebrew New Testament, and a quantity of religious literature. Mr. Grande, in the course of an earnest appeal for the Mission, stated various reasons why the Gospel should be preached or the Jews.

The May Meetings.

London Jews' Society.

REAL and substantial progress, with many tokens of the Divine blessing, has marked the ninety-second year of this Society's work. It was stated, at the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall last Friday morning, that whilst the state of the funds precluded any attempts at breaking up fresh ground or the assumption of new responsibilities, and even necessitated some slight measure of retrenchment, the work of the Mission has, in all its chief essentials, been prosecuted with vigour and zeal.

Mr. W. T. GIDNEY, assistant secretary, reported that, in the field covered by Home, Continental, Asiatic, and African operations, the number of baptisms has been well maintained, the circle of inquirers has increased, converts have been trained to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, and an ever-widening sphere of influence of Christianity upon the Jews at large, is to be noticed. Both direct and indirect results are distinctly encouraging. The Society commenced the year with 49 stations, 184 agents (including 24 ordained missionaries), 56 lay and medical missionaries, 52 school teachers, and 52 Scripture readers, colporteurs, and other lay agents. Of this number 83 are Christian Israelites.

There was received for the General Mission Fund £38,150, the largest amount during the past decade. General expenditure was £36,487 —£2,000 less than in the previous twelve months, owing to determination not to open up fresh work until the existing deficit has been liquidated. Excess of last year's income over expenditure has reduced the adverse balance to £9,424. By a donation of £1,400 from the family of the late Mr. Richard Cadbury, erection and furnishing of a fourth ward in will be put in hand; but there is still a debt of £1,176 upon the building fund of the hospital and doctor's residence.

The Dreyfus case and the Zionist movement awakened much interest during the year, the Basle Conference seeming to indicate a possible escape from European anti-Semitism. The Society asks for earnest prayer, as well as for means, that, by Divine blessing, it may be instrumental in leading many Jews to own Christ as Messiah, Redeemer, King, and God.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, who occupied the chair, pointed to practical results from the Society's expenditure, in the gathering and baptism of a large number of Jewish converts, carefully tested under the superintendence of the Bishop of London. The Society, however, does not rely upon mere statistics; for many of those who are influenced drop out of sight. To prepare the way of the Lord, and make the Jewish nation ready to receive Christ, is the chief aim. Spiritually, the condition of the Jew is one to awaken sympathy and stimulate effort for removal of the prejudice produced in him by centuries of oppression and wrong.

The special weight of Christian obligation towards Israel was eloquently urged by the BISHOP OF LONDON. Conservatism and scepticism have eaten out the heart of the Jewish religious system, until it is the mere badge of a race; for the more a system becomes external, the less does it have any real hold upon the minds and consciences of those who live under it. It is ours to to carry to Jew as well as to Gentile a knowledge of Christ's salvation; and, when we have done our utmost in that direction, we may leave immediate and further results in God's hands. The highest truth is made known by the deepest love; and it is in this spirit that Jewish missionaries go among members of their race, in order to reproduce before them the process of that grace which God has given. God calls each Christian to do his part in this great work.

In the course of his strong advocacy of the work, the BISHOP OF OSSORY AND FERNS quoted words written by the late Rev. M. Wolkenberg, who served the Society faithfully for thirty-eight years, concerning medical dispensary work, to the effect that very few Jews who come to be cured of bodily ailments can appreciate the sublime moral teaching of the Gospel; but this—its actual exhibition in the life of its professors—tells so powerfully upon them that they gradually learn what Christ is able and willing to do for them as their Saviour.

The DEAN OF NORWICH commended the Society, from considerations connected with its wide reach, sound principles, and wise methods; and Rev. D. H. DOLMAN gave some details of fruitful labours for the Society at Hamburg.

The Moravian Missions.

THE London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions held its annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon. The history of the Society dates from the year 1732, and, although initiated as an unpretentious movement, its career has been one of remarkable progress. At the present time it has 182 mission stations, and a home church membership of 30,000. Children are a special care. There are 266 day schools, with 25,000 scholars; and 123 Sunday schools, with more than 18,000 scholars.

The London Association was founded in 1817, and has sent, within the last ten years, nearly £100,000 TO THE MORAVIAN CHURCH.

Last year, however, witnessed a considerable falling-off in the receipts, at a time when substantial and permanent increase was most needed. Notwithstanding this, however, the largely increased average of the Association's income for the past twelve years has been fully maintained.

It is well known that the Moravians are in many fields. They are at work among the Eskimos of Labrador and Alaska, the Indians of North and Central America, the coloured population of the West Indies, the Hottentots and Kaffirs of South Africa, the natives of Nyassaland, the lepers of Palestine, the aborigines of Australia, and the Tibetan-speaking Buddhists of the Himalayas. From the reports presented at Friday's meeting, it is evident that Moravian Christians are by no means relaxing in energy or devotion.

Mr. T. CHENEY GARFIT, D.L., J.P., presided, and spoke of the Moravian Mission as the pioneer of missionary societies. Its history was an illustration of what heavy weights God often hangs on slender wires. God had blessed the Mission with

MANY ENCOURAGING RESULTS.

Its success was the outcome of adhering to the old principles of the Gospel. It was a matter for profound regret that only the fringe of heathendom had as yet been reached. The speaker urged a deeper interest in the mission and the wider diffusion of knowledge of its work.

A few earnest and practical remarks were made by Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH-THOMAS. The Protestant character of the movement had been maintained in the face of envy, hatred, and uncharitableness. The Church of England had been compelled to admit that many of its communicants were not workers, but in the Moravian Church all communicants are workers, and one in every sixty is a missionary. Mr. Thomas referred to the definite spiritual results, which were to be found in every part of the world, of the growth and activity of the society.

Rev. E. J. PECK related his experiences as a missionary to

THE ESKIMOS.

For twenty-three years he had laboured in the isolated district of Moosonee. He spoke in appreciative terms of the help he had received in his lonely sphere from the Moravian Brethren. In spite of many difficulties—arising from uncomfortable surroundings, and the trying conditions of life—many tokens of God's favour have been manifested.

General WARDELL, late R.A., gave some reminiscences of his experience in the West Indies, where he witnessed much progress made by the Moravian Mission. An address was also delivered by Rev. J. J. LLOYD, minister of the Presbyterian Church in Johannesburg.

The Church Association.

DURING the past year the work of the Church Association has been of a varied and useful character, and at the annual meeting of the society, held on April 30 in St. James' Hall, a large audience received the report of Mr. H. MILLER, the secretary, with enthusiasm.

The circulation of Protestant literature, Mr. Miller said, had grown in a remarkable manner, more than 1,100,000 copies of publications having been circulated. After a reference to actions taken against illegal procedures by Romanizing clergy, it was shown that the colporteurs in charge of vans had preached the Gospel and advocated Reformation principles in many villages.

After an address from Archdeacon TAYLOR, who said that the end they sought was not to be satisfied with anything less than the concession of their rights to the laity and the absolute suppression of the mass and the confessional, Rev. W. R. MOWLL spoke vigorously on the need for Protestant aggressive action, observing that he was convinced the rank and file of the English people were opposed to Popery and were Evangelical at heart. The working men to-day abominate the mimicry and mummery which go on in many places of worship, but they would come in hundreds to listen to the plain, simple statement of Gospel truth, and drink it in with avidity. He supported the Church Association chiefly because it was spiritual. It had made rapid strides ever since the van-work had been taken up; ever since it had preached the Gospel of a living and loving Saviour. He pleaded that in every discussion and in every controversy they should point to Jesus Christ, and instruct dying men in this dying world that the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Addresses were also given by Captain COBHAM, who presided; Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., and others.

South American Missionary Society.

THE claims of the "Neglected Continent" were powerfully put at the annual gathering of this Society, which took place at Sion College on April 26.

Rev. E. P. CACHEMAILLE reviewed the position, and recounted various advances which had been made. The two most interesting events of the past year had been the first baptism of Indian converts, and the opening of a new station in the Suhin territory, the first extension into the Far West. An Indian Church was being formed there in the very centre of the vast continent, and some of its members were manifesting so true a missionary spirit that it might be said that the evangelization of Indians by Indians had already begun. At the new station in the Suhin territory, houses had been built, and quite a little village of Indian huts was springing up around, the natives showing a friendly spirit and all confidence in the missionaries as their friends. Good work was being done, by the wives of two of the missionaries, among the Indian women. The school at Cholchol, and the industrial school at Quepe, showed an increase of scholars, and the accommodation was rapidly being outgrown. In addition, services were held and pastoral visitation carried on; and medical work was being done by Mr. W. Wilson, mostly among the Mapuches, but also among some of the poorer Chilians. An important development had been the opening of the new Church Hall at Palermo, built through the exertions of Rev. W. Case Morris. Rev. John Williams had reported encouraging work among the Spanish-speaking people at Punta Arenas. Services had been held in English and Spanish, Sunday schools carried on, and the Estancias visited.

Mr. F. A. BEAVAN, who presided, called attention to the needs of the work. Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, who followed, said that although the Society had met with opposition on account of its adherence to Reformation principles, it had received remarkable blessing during the past year.

Religious Tract Society.

DURING recent years the output of periodical literature has so greatly increased, and so many new publications of a hurtful character have been placed on the market, that additional importance has accrued to the vigorous propaganda and purifying influences of the Religious Tract Society.

At the anniversary gathering of the Society, which was held on Friday last at Exeter Hall, Rev. Dr. Borrett White reviewed the position. Among the distinguishing features of the Foreign Mission work, he mentioned the establishment of a Religious Book and Tract Society for West China; the publication of the first edition of the "Annotated New Testament" for China, a grant for the publication of in the dialect of Hainan, for issues in the Matabele language, and of paper for publications in that of the Kerepunu language of New Guinea. Grants have also been made for the publication of new tracts in Iceland and in Roumania. Upwards of 350,000 publications have been granted for the use of the troops engaged in the war in South Africa.

A special undertaking was a set of handbills printed on khaki paper, entitled "Bugle Calls." The music of some of the best-known bugle calls has been printed, and suitable texts follow. The Commander-in-Chief expressed his approval of the issue, and the first edition was sold in a few weeks.

At home, mission work has been helped in many ways by grants made to religious workers among all sections of the community. The promotion of Biblical education in Board Schools has been continued; nearly 300,000 children were examined in connection with the London School Board, and, as usual, prizes given by the late Mr. F. Peek and by the Society were distributed. The total number of publications sent out from the Society's depôt during the year was 33,764,030, and the number of tracts and handbills put into circulation was 15,942,380.

Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who presided, referred to the fact that the organization had commenced its second century. He gave a vivid sketch of the origin of the Society at a time when England had been greatly stirred by spiritual revival, and went on to trace its career of usefulness, and foreshadow a future of increased prosperity in spreading a knowledge of the Gospel. One of the chief national vices is gambling, and the Society's publications combated that evil, while they also endeavoured to displace, in the affections of young people, in which so many of them seem to revel.

Next came words of kindly encouragement from Rev. H. E. Fox, who acknowledged the obligations of missionary workers in general, and the C.M.S. in particular, to the Tract Society. In various countries, especially those under Mohammedan rule, where public preaching is forbidden, the advantages of tract distribution were obvious. Mr. Fox went on to allude to the useful character of many of the Society's books. The annotated Bible has proved fruitful of blessing in India and China, and Uganda's prosperous mission stations have been supplied with hymn-books. Divinity students in West Africa have received grants of books to aid them in their studies, and, as evidencing the far-reaching character of the work, a missionary in so lonely a district as Moab has been supplied with books for a lending library. Mr. Fox, adverting to his past experiences as a parish minister in Durham, referred to the results in the converting of sinners and the comforting of saints, arising from the labours of local tract distributing organizations. Such undertakings are carried on in all parts of the country, and are enabled to proceed by receiving subsidies of literature. The controversial publications of the Society, Mr. Fox went on to show, are happily but speak the truth in love. By the prayers of supporters, and the skill of writers and editors, it may still be said of the Religious Tract Society, that "thine arrows are sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies."

Among other speakers, Rev. Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, addressed the meeting. He referred to the debasing character of "the gutter press." Much fiction, too, written by prominent authors, he described as far from helpful. It has been contended that "art has no concern with morality." If so, then art, instead of being the handmaid of truth, is the bond-slave of the devil. Dr. Barrett concluded with a fervent appeal that the Society should be accorded an increased measure of public support.

Christian Evidence Society.

SPEAKING as Chairman of the annual meeting of this Society, held last Friday afternoon at the Mansion House, Sir Joseph Savory pointed out that there is still ample need for its work among the many persons who know not, forget, or despise God. Just as the walls of our Royal Academy afford ocular proof of artistic ability, the word-pictures of the Bible—as fresh to-day as when they were written—are full of divine life.

Mr. T. T. Waterman, one of the secretaries, said that the objects for which the Society was founded thirty years ago have been perseveringly maintained. Young men, Sunday strollers, absentees from public worship, sceptics, and scorners, are addressed, influenced, instructed, and convinced by the open-air lectures of the Society. Nearly 500 of these lectures were given in 1899, north, south, east, and west, at the small cost of £231; and at least as much is still required for this SPECIAL WORK IN 1900.

Examinations in various works on Christian evidences have been held; and while, from paucity of funds, little could be done in the publication of literature, a monthly leaflet is to be issued experimentally through the summer. The modest income for 1899 was £865, but the expenditure was £938.

Archdeacon Sinclair, in the course of a general review of the chief evidences for the truth of Christianity, bore testimony to the necessity and value of the Society, which gathers up the results of modern thought and compares them with the broad, reasonable, well-established truths of the Christian faith.

That the Society represents a real and living human need, and provides for it in the best possible way, were points in the address of Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon. He declared that the difficulties of unbelief are more of a moral than of an intellectual nature. The unfairness of unbelief is that it represents the Bible as made up of difficulties which are really only isolated incidents. His personal experience of the popular attitude towards the Christian advocate was that the people seemed to appreciate the utterance of what they were unable to express for themselves. Mr. Basil Woodd Smith and Mr. Arthur Robertson also spoke.

International Bible Reading Association.

A LARGE audience gathered at 56, Old Bailey, last week, to celebrate the eighteenth anniversary of the International Bible Reading Association. Mr. Charles Waters, Hon. Secretary, gave an encouraging report of the work. There was at the present time an English-speaking membership of 660,000, showing an increase during 1899 of 30,000. In addition to this, the cards were printed in twenty-eight other languages, eleven being European, fourteen Indian, and three African and South Sea Island, representing a foreign membership of about 64,000 in all. The ideal of the Association was a "million" membership; but, although this was not yet in sight, great thankfulness was felt for the results already attained.

Mr. E. P. Collier, J.P. (of Reading), presided, and delivered a hearty address. Herr J. G. Lehmann followed, giving an interesting account of the progress of the work in Germany. Herr August Palm, of Sweden, warmly recommended the system.

Ragged School Union.

SOME of the happy fruits of that practical Christian patriotism which seeks the social, moral, and spiritual elevation of neglected and perishing children were illustrated in the proceedings at the Ragged School Union meeting in Queen's Hall on Monday night. Influential supporters of the good work were among the speakers on the platform; and at the back were a number of the children representing the various Homes, who enlivened the programme with song and occasional mandoline playing. Mr. Lawrence Briant gave an organ recital before the speaking began, and in the course of the evening two appropriate and effective vocal solos were sung by Mrs. Lawrence Briant.

It was the sixty-fifth annual festival, and the President of the Union, the Marquis of Northampton, occupied the chair. He said that this is the day of the year when there is "a cheer up" for all concerned—when they thanked God for his blessings showered upon their good work, and were determined to do more for it than in the past. They had received another mark of royal favour in a gift from their beloved Queen. They prized the gift, but they valued infinitely more the sympathy and affection which it represented for the poorest and most afflicted of our children. After one verse of the National Anthem, the Chairman proceeded to speak of the great object of the Union as being the advancement of the Gospel of Jesus Christ among the poor, the outcast, and the afflicted of the greatest city in the world. Next, the Union aims at a steady pursuit of the Christ-like work of and want, chasing away ignorance, and training the young in industry and thrift, forming good habits, and developing sound character. The full results could be known only to Him in whose name all the varied plodding work goes on. Personal touch with the children is maintained by the 6,000 voluntary workers, who are active for their Divine Master; and surely such work must have his blessing. The Union still exists, because its work is as great as when the late Lord Shaftesbury began it; and as long as we lay claim to living in a Christian country, it is our absolute duty to send missionaries and to act as missionaries to the lowest in our land.

The report was taken as read; but among its mass of interesting detail is a statement of the pathetic fact that there are 6,240 crippled children on the register, with 214 superintendents and 1,000 visitors; 256 children were suppled with crutches, surgical appliances, boots, &c.; 1,188 were sent to homes at Southend, Margate, and Bournemouth, all of whom stayed at least a fortnight. Detachments were also sent to Windsor and other places. Altogether 6,648 children, senior scholars and adults, were sent away to country or seaside for a fortnight; and, as one speaker remarked, who shall tell the happy influence of fourteen days spent in the spiritual atmosphere of a Christian home?

Finance shows an increase on the gross total (owing mainly to legacies); but the dependable sources of income were less than those of the previous year, the total receipts being £18,011, with a deficit of over £60.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, urged the Christian duty of saving the "sad and weary" children of the streets. Such children, he said, constitute awaiting man's solution. The strength of a country depends not only upon the greatness of its territory, the vastness of its wealth, and its great population, but upon the character of its people. This is the summum bonum of the Union: to bring the children into such affinity with the Lord Jesus Christ, in his great personality, that they may receive, by the Holy Spirit, something of Himself in their lives; and "it is not the will of your Father which is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

"The Thump of the Tiny Crutch" was the title of an original recitation here given by the author, Mr. W. A. Eaton; and in response to to the plaudits of hearers, he voiced impromptu verses, well setting forth the characteristics of "The Workers," a subject suggested by the Chairman.

Words to voluntary and other workers of the Union were spoken by Rev. Robt. Culley, secretary of the Wesleyan Sunday School Union, dealing with love to Christ, to the children, and for the Bible, as an essential of joyful success. After the collection, there was a procession representative of 108 Ragged School agencies, a distribution of faithful service prizes by the Countess Brownlow; and some further speech and song brought the evening's engagements to a close.

The Church Army.

On Wednesday of last week, the anniversary of the Church Army was celebrated. At the meeting in the afternoon, at St. James's Hall, the chairman was the Earl of Shaftesbury, who gave expression to his hearty sympathy with the movement. The reports presented by Mr. Clifford and Mr. Colin Campbell, dealt with the social and evangelistic side of the Army's work. The gross income of the past year, including over £15,000 collected largely in the small contributions of working people, amounted to upwards of £124,000. During the past year 116 trained workers were added to the staff, including fifty-nine evangelists and forty-two mission nurses. This makes a total of upwards of 1,200 parochial evangelists, colporteurs, mission nurses, rescue and slum workers, pioneer and tent missioners, &c., trained by the Society.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Lord Hugh Cecil, M.P., spoke of the good the Army had accomplished by its evangelistic and social agencies, and "Captain" Davey related some thrilling experiences. The hon. Secretary, Rev. Wilson Carlisle, made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Mission, and the collection taken realized £1,600. A further meeting was held in the evening.

The Pentecostal League.

The ninth annual meetings of the Pentecostal League, of which Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., is the founder, were held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday last week. A conference was held in the morning, when numbers of short reports were given by secretaries and delegates of the work of the League in their different churches. At the afternoon meeting brief addresses were delivered by Revs. F. D. Cremer, vicar of Eccles, Manchester, and F. Hastings (Congregationalist), of Chelsea. The evening meeting was largely attended, and addressed by Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist ministers. Mr. Reader Harris spoke at both meetings, and emphasized the great need of revival in the churches.

Railway Mission Convalescent Home.

The annual meeting of the Railway Mission Convalescent Home was held at St. Leonards a few days ago. Mr. A. A. Head presided, and in a brief address remarked that the one great feature of the Home was happiness; they worked not only to minister to the body, but to the soul, and that was their principal aim.

Miss Dolby, the hon. superintendent, gave an account of the year's work. The number of patients admitted exceeded those of last year by eighty-five; the figures were 368 as against 283.

Mademoiselle L. E. Rilliet gave a very interesting account of her mission work amongst the railway-men of Geneva. Mr. Hamilton (of the United States), Mr. Jones (secretary of the United States Railroad Branch of the Y.M.C.A.), spoke of their work for winning the railway-road men of the United States for Christ.

Rev. Foster Pegg followed with a bright address.

Professor White's Bible School.

A large and appreciative audience assembled at the King's Hall, Holborn, on Monday last at the inauguration of a new series of Bible studies, undertaken by Professor Wilbert W. White.

The esteemed American divine was received with quiet but hearty expressions of lively satisfaction. He commenced by introducing a new feature, in the form of a brief prelude on the subject of Prayer. Referring to Rom. x. 13, "Whosoever shall call upon the Name of the Lord shall be saved," Professor White described prayer as the breath of God in man returning whence it came. Herein is a vital difference between Christianity and all other religious systems. Those endeavour to take man to God; by this, God comes to man. God gives the desire to pray; the petition ascends. God responds with the answer; man offers praise. God gives renewed blessing, and so the Divine plan goes on. Prayer is not overcoming God's reluctance, it is using his willingness. In the last analysis, prayer is the opening up of the soul to God.

Taking up the main subject for consideration,

"THREE PLAIN PROPOSITIONS, Stated and Illustrated—a Study in the Gospel by John"—Professor White, expressing the fervent hope that the course of study might be blessed to many, recalled the words of Whittier:—

> We search the world for truth; we cull
> The good, the pure, the beautiful,
> From graven stone and written scroll,
> From all old flower-fields of the soul;
> And, weary seekers of the best,
> We come back laden from our quest
> To find that all the sages said
> Is in the Book our mothers read.

Directing attention to John xx. 30-31, the Professor said these verses are a key not only to John but to the whole Bible. People are apt to object, regarding this passage: "Oh, but I cannot believe that 'Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God,' and cannot, therefore, 'have life in his name.'" The whole of the address, it should be said, was obviously framed with a view to encouraging the faith of believers meeting the difficulties of "honest doubt," and driving sceptics to a logical inquiry into, and acceptance of, the truth. With these aims the speaker went on to state his propositions.

The first was that the truth of Christianity is not claimed as a consequence of explanation, but on evidence. The student, it was pointed out, does not compromise his intellect because he accepts, on reasonable evidence, a statement which he does not understand in its completeness. He does not understand, e.g., how a blade of grass grows, or how food is assimilated. Yet he accepts these things as facts because he has evidence regarding them, and has also, to an extent, proved them for himself. Education has been defined as "the ability to weigh evidence," and in the Bible, evidence is given "in order that we might believe." Everything does not rest, it must be remembered, with the intellect. A grave danger of the day is a tendency to mere intellectualism. Belief carries us beyond the intellect, without, however, being opposed to it.

Secondly. The claims of Jesus to the Messiahship must be considered in relation to the TRUTH OF THE WHOLE BIBLE.

Professor White illustrated his point by observing that in Chicago and Calcutta, being cities on opposite sides of the globe, men's heads point a different way. Yet, if the statement be made to some person unacquainted with the physical universe, that people walk with their bodies in opposite directions, it may be rejected. As it is necessary to take a comprehensive view of the relation of things in physical, so it is in spiritual affairs.

Professor White next considered the nature of the evidence tendered in support of the claims of Christ to be the Saviour of men. John said: "Many other signs truly did Jesus . . . which are not written." That is, John had said enough to satisfy genuine inquiry. The whole Gospel deals with witnessing and belief. The word "witness" occurs some forty-eight times, and the word "belief" ninety-eight times. The witness to Christ was next stated as that of:

(a) Christ Himself.

(b) John the Baptist (chap. v. vv. 32, 33, as though Christ should say to the Jews, "You believed in John the Baptist, you went so far as to ask if he were the Messiah; believe, then, his testimony as to Me").

(c) Christ's own works ("The works bear witness," &c.).

(d) The Father ("The Father Himself hath borne witness").

(e) The Scriptures ("They are they which testify of Me").

The third proposition was next dealt with: We must act in order that we may know. The very opposite is too often accepted as true; but as a matter of course, in pursuing investigation. The Gospel, the Professor went on to remark, does not contend that all men believed, although the testimony was so strong. This affords evidence of truthfulness, harmonizing with experience, for in no community is it, or has it been, found that every person believes. The testimony of the Holy Spirit must be taken in connection with that of the Scriptures. Christ pointed back to the testimony of the Scriptures (Old Testament), and forward to the testimony of the Spirit, "the Spirit of truth" . . . He shall testify of Me (xv. 26). This is fulfilled in the Acts and other New Testament books, so that in the study of the whole of the Bible we find testimony to Christ.

In the course of his address Professor White dealt with difficulties and cast light upon many passages. Time passed so rapidly in his explanations of internal evidence that he was obliged to condense his review of the external testimony to reference to a printed outline, which was distributed in the meeting. After expressing his anxiety to meet inquirers in personal interviews, Professor White concluded by reading several letters from pastors, which told of valuable results accruing from the method of leading people to testify to such belief as they possessed, however small, and on, through prayer and earnest seeking of further light, to salvation.

So terminated a highly helpful study, which will probably result in increased attendances at the ensuing gatherings. Professor White speaks at King's Hall, Newton Street, Holborn, on Mondays, at 5.30 p.m.; at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W., on Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.; and at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, on Fridays, at noon. Communications respecting interviews should be addressed to the secretary, Miss Meager, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

Irish Notes.

The Methodist District Synods have been in session during the past week. Increases in church membership are reported from Dublin, Portadown, and Belfast districts. About ten ministers are retiring from active work owing to advancing years, and a similar number of candidates for the ministry have been received. Encouraging revivals of religion are reported as having taken place in several centres.

The ninth annual meeting of the Dublin Methodist Colportage Society has been held in the Centenary Church, Dublin, under the presidency of Mr. Robert Morgan. Mr. Michael O'Toole submitted the report, and said that the colporteur had carried on most hopeful work during the year in various centres. Addresses were afterwards delivered by Revs. William Maguire and Thomas Connellan. There was a large attendance.

Mr. F. A. Elliott, B.A., has been appointed missionary to the deaf and dumb in Cork; and Mr. R. W. Dods has been appointed to a similar position in Belfast. The latter appointment is in connection with the Belfast Presbytery, while the former is under the direction of the Irish Church.

RECORD OF . . . CHRISTIAN WORK.

Founded by D. L. MOODY.

Feeling the need of a monthly review of aggressive Christian Work, with courses of Bible Study, Mr. D. L. MOODY induced an American publishing house to undertake the publication of such a periodical. At his suggestion it was called the "Record of Christian Work," and for eighteen years it has been the organ of the leading American Evangelists. The Bible Notes for Daily Devotions were edited by Major D. W. WHITTLE, and have been followed by many thousands in Great Britain and America during these years.

One of the last enterprises in which Mr. Moody was interested was in securing the absolute control of the magazine to be the official organ of the work with which he was associated, and at the beginning of the year its publication was assumed at Northfield, and it is now the Exponent of Northfield Schools and Conferences.

For the benefit of English friends, a number of sample copies have been consigned to

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT,

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Goldsmiths' Company have made a grant of £1,000 to the fund being raised for founding the proposed Bishopric of Southwark.

In connection with St. Peter's Church, Devonshire Street, Islington, N., ten open-air meetings weekly are being arranged for the summer months. There is a large company of earnest and enthusiastic workers, and a capital brass band. The vicar (Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow) would be grateful for supplies of Gospel tracts, for distribution at these gatherings.

A book or manual widely circulated by the sacerdotal clergy, entitled "The Peoples' Eucharist and Children's Service Book," contains hymns addressed to angels. One of these runs:—

"Then love me, love me, Angel dear,
And I will love thee more;
And help me when my soul is cast
Upon the eternal shore."

The vicar of St. Clement's Church at Bournemouth, referring in the "Parish Magazine" to the use of incense at St. Clement's on Easter Sunday, states: "At the solemn celebration at 10.15 a.m., the ceremonial and liturgical use of incense being in abeyance by episcopal command, the only use contemplated by the Archbishops' decisions of August, 1899, was employed, and both altars were censed immediately before the service, and the chancel was filled with smoke of the incense. It is a poor analogy for the right and rightful use of this Catholic symbol, but we must fain be content with it until better days."

Congregational.

Consequent on his breakdown in health, Rev. J. Morlais Jones has definitely decided to relinquish the pastorate of Lewisham Church, which he has held since 1868.

Rev. William Crosbie, M.A., preached the anniversary sermons at his old church in Victoria Street, Derby (Rev. G. Hunsworth). It was thirty-six years that very day, and in connection with the anniversary, that Mr. Crosbie preached his first sermons in that church.

The opening services of the new church at Muswell Hill were held on May 2. In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Parker preached to an overflowing congregation. At the public meeting which followed, Mr. J. Carvell Williams presided, and Revs. W. B. Selbie and G. Campbell Morgan took part.

Hope Chapel, Clifton (Rev. F. W. Bryan) is showing signs of revival in various departments of work. Congregations have increased, and many persons have sought the Lord. On Sunday last a number of candidates were admitted into church fellowship. The pastor conducts a preparatory class for converts who desire to join the church.

On Sunday evening, by request of the church at Wycliffe Chapel, London, E., Rev. J. W. Atkinson, of Latimer Chapel, one of the oldest of the late Rev. T. Sisson's ministerial friends, conducted the service. Mr. Atkinson, in feeling terms, expressed the deep sympathy felt by all the ministers and churches of East London with the church at Wycliffe in the great loss they had sustained by the decease of their beloved pastor.

Baptist.

The Council of the Baptist Union have been requested by Pasteur R. Saillens, of Paris, to arrange for English services on Sundays during the Paris Exhibition in the French Baptist Chapel, 48, Rue de Lille (near the Pont-Royal), Paris, and arrangements have been made extending to Sunday, September 2. The services are to be held at 11 a.m.

The new building erected for Ferme Park Church (Rev. C. Brown) has been opened. The meetings included a dedicatory service conducted by the pastor, and a luncheon, at which a number of ministers spoke. Subsequently, Rev. J. G. Greenhough preached, and at an enthusiastic gathering in the evening Revs. A. Rowland and Dr. Glover took part.

At a special meeting of the church and congregation of the Metropolitan Tabernacle held on Monday last, under the presidency of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, it was reported that the building operations are drawing towards completion, and the following resolution was adopted: "Believing that in answer to prayer, the Lord will send us the total amount required to re-open the Tabernacle absolutely free of debt, we agree that the opening days be September 19, 20, and 21. The total cost of re-building and refurnishing has been £44,500, towards which the insurance companies provided £22,000. The remainder has been subscribed with the exception of about £4,000.

Methodist.

The amount of subscriptions to the Wesleyan Century Fund received up till the present time at the central office has reached £255,394 5s. 9d., or rather less than a quarter of the total amount aimed at.

The Wesleyan Fernley Lecturer this year will be Rev. Dr. Little, president of the Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston. He is expected to reach England in June, and to return to America in September. The subject of the lecture is "Christianity in the Nineteenth Century."

In summing up the results of the movement begun in the Leeds Wesleyan Methodist District last year, it is stated that the attendance at the class meetings has improved, and the spiritual life of the members has deepened. The Spirit of God is working in the Sunday schools, and great things are being asked for in prayer and worked for. It has been arranged to hold thirteen great central open-air gatherings in Leeds.

The annual gatherings of the Bible Christian body were marked by fervour and enthusiasm. At the evening meeting, in Exeter Hall, Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, in the course of a powerful address, said that "past history revealed the fact that the Christian religion had vitality enough to throw off all efforts to destroy it. It did this years ago—often it threw off Judaism, and, later on, when it conquered the brute force of Rome. Then Roman Catholicism tried to strangle Christianity, but it disentangled itself and stood forth triumphant. After this came the unbelief propagated by David Hume and Voltaire, the latter of whom prophesied that across the threshold of the nineteenth century there would be found the dead body of the Christian religion. But what did they find? Not a dead Christianity, but more alive than ever. Strauss and Renan did their utmost, but none of these things had impaired the vitality of Jesus Christ."

Presbyterian.

Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson and Thornton preached at the morning and evening services respectively at the opening of the new Church Hall, at Finchley Road, West Hampstead. The congregations were large, and it is probable that a strong cause may be established.

The accounts of St. Mark's Church and Sunday School, Greenwich (Rev. G. Elder), showing a balance of £95 on the wrong side the deacons, on a recent Sunday, asked the congregation to contribute this amount by a special collection. The result was gratifying; not only the sum asked for was contributed, but £10 more.

The foundation-stone of a new church at Didsbury was laid on May 3. A number of ministers from the Synod meeting attended. Dr. Monro Gibson, who conducted the service, said there was nothing their church needed more than the broadening of its base at home. Excepting the Moravian Church, the Presbyterian Church was foremost in its foreign missionary enterprise, and the home church required to keep pace with the advances abroad.

At the Church Synod, which met at Manchester, Rev. Dr. Watson, of Liverpool, the new moderator, delived his inaugural address, speaking on "Faith and Humanism." In the course of his remarks, Dr. Watson observed that "if one were to judge intellectually, the humblest street preacher, who believes in the Deity of the Lord, even though he does not understand the doctrine, and declares the Sacrifice of the Lord, even although it be in crude terms, has a much more profound grasp of the mystery of religion and the principles of life than the person who prides himself upon his culture, and is satisfied to place Jesus between Socrates and Seneca."

At the Synod meeting, Rev. W. Hutton (Birkenhead) submitted the report of the committee on the State of Religion and Public Morals. The Synod regretted to learn that, while there had been much good work done, there had been a prevalent feeling of discouragement, not only in their own church, but in other churches over the land, because of widespread indifference in reference to Divine things. The Synod felt that in these circumstances there was a loud call for earnest conference and prayer and renewed consecration in the Synod itself, and in its Presbyteries and congregations, and also in conjunction with the evangelistic work contemplated by the Council of Free Churches in view of the opening of the new century.

Society of Friends.

The Quarterly Meeting held at Norwich, which was more largely attended than usual, will be remembered especially in connection with a visit from Ellwood Brockbank, whose service was acceptable in various ways, and who, at the closing meeting, gave an account of the Friends' Mission on Mount Lebanon.

At Warwick, Leicester, and Stafford Quarterly Meeting, Samuel Price read a paper on the Development of the Ministry. He said that of young men, full of fresh thought, and in touch with the conditions and needs of modern life, although many of them are actively engaged in religious or philanthropic work, few are coming forward to take up the burden of the ministry in our meetings for worship. He was anxious that the Society of Friends, which in some directions is advancing with the times, should keep pace with its opportunities in this vital matter.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. THOMAS SISSONS, one of the secretaries of the London Congregational Board of Ministers, and Pastor of Wycliffe Chapel, Stepney.—Mr. THOMAS GRAHAM, missionary connected with Carver Street Wesleyan circuit, Sheffield. He had laboured in connection with the cause for over twenty years, and will be greatly missed.—Rev. P. LEWIS, an esteemed Baptist minister. He fell off his machine while cycling, and was found lying in the road in an unconscious state.—Mr. ROBERT SMITH, for many years a deacon of Spalding Congregational Church. At his own cost he erected a mission church at Station Farm, Deeping Fen.—Mr ANDREW MACRAE, banker, of Dingwall, a highly respected elder of the Free Church at Halkirk, N.B.—At Carrigtwohill, Rev. J. W. MARTIN, M.A., for the past twenty-seven years rector of the parish.

Personalia.

Rev. H. E. HAMILTON PROBYN has been appointed private chaplain to the Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Chavasse).

Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG is to return at the end of the month to his sphere of work among the Red Indians on the western side of Hudson's Bay.

Mr. JOSHUA POOLE, the well-known evangelist, has removed from Halifax, and should now be addressed 33, Salisbury Street, Higher Crumpsall, Manchester.

The Liverpool Daily Post states that Bishop RYLE is far from well, and has not shown such indications of improving health since his settlement at Lowestoft as his friends anticipated.

Rev. W. J. WOODS, secretary of the Congregatianal Union, is making slow but substantial progress towards recovery, and may be expected to resume his duties at the Memorial Hall at the end of June.

Rev. C. M. SHELDON, the well-known American preacher and author, who is about to visit England, has undertaken to preach for Rev. C. F. Aked in Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, on Whit Sunday.

Rev. G. W. OLVER, senior secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, has, by reason of ill-health, been obliged to relinquish his ministerial work, and he will at the May Synod apply to be made a supernumerary.

Mr. D. C. JOSEPH, of Haifa, is at present on a visit to this country. Communications for him may be addressed: care of Mr. F. Newth, "Oakleigh," Grove Road, Sutton, Surrey; or Miss Wilson, 9, Mona Terrace, Douglas, Isle of Man.

Owing to the precarious state of his health, Rev. Dr. STEPHENSON is retiring from the active superintendence of the Children's Home. Another notable Methodist, Rev. ALLEN REES, is pronounced out of danger. The cause of his recent severe breakdown was diptheric poisoning.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the appointment of Rev. JOHN CULLEN, M.A., to the vicarage of Radcliffe-on-Trent was celebrated recently. At the morning service, Rev. Canon Lewis unveiled a memorial window in commemoration of this ministry. The window has been erected by the children, or the parents of the children, whom Mr. Cullen has baptized during his long and fruitful charge.

Rev. Dr. PARKER on Monday last, at the assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, was elected president of that body. This is the second time that the esteemed minister of the City Temple has been chosen to fill the position.

Rev. JOHN ROBERTSON, of Glasgow, who has for some time been labouring in America, is expected in London shortly. At the East London Tabernacle, on Sunday last, it was announced that Mr. Robertson would preach there for six months, beginning in September next.

Notes & Comments

WE are grieved to state that Professor Wilbert W. White was last week suddenly recalled home to America by the serious and dangerous illness of his son. He sailed on Saturday, hoping against hope that he might possibly find his dear child still alive. His brother, Mr. J. Campbell White, had kindly agreed to give Bible-readings during the Professor's absence. Accordingly, on Monday afternoon, at 5.30, the first of these was given, and just at the close of the meeting a cablegram arrived bearing the sad intelligence that the dear boy passed away on Saturday, the day on which his father sailed. All present were deeply affected, and Mr. J. Herbert Tritton expressed, in a few touching words, the sympathy felt by all, and commended the sorrowing family to our prayers.

It is stated that 400 Members of Parliament are pledged to vote against the Bill to prevent the sending of children to the public-house for drink. There is no more beneficent measure before Parliament, and it will be a crying shame if vested interests are allowed to block it. But public sentiment will need a good deal of rousing before it will take a determined stand for the Bill. We hope our readers will generously spread all the literature they can find upon the subject, such as Miss Harriet M. Johnson's Children and Public-Houses (1s. 2d. a dozen. C.E.T.S., Westminster); also How Child Drunkards are Made (6d. per dozen), and Give the Child a Chance (2s. per 100. Morgan & Scott).

An illustration of the need for further legislation was recently given by Mr. Charles Inglis at the noon prayer-meeting. He told how, on a Sunday afternoon, a lad of about thirteen years of age was carried into the Great Assembly Hall at Mile End, in a condition of mad drunkenness. The unhappy lad made a determined effort to take his own life, and was removed to the London Hospital.

Gradually the Bible is being translated into every language spoken upon the globe, and in 1898-9 the Bible Society made or aided its production or revision in 133 different tongues. Thirteen of the translations were made into languages in which the Word of God had not previously appeared, including the dialects of various Indian tribes, and one for the natives of South Australia. What ground for rejoicing and hope there is in the fact that the Society, now nearly a century old, has upwards of 1,000 translators and revisers employed, when we regard the work in the light of the Divine assurance, "My word shall not return unto me void."

A letter placed in our hands last week contains a sentence which we think it well to pass on. In doing so, we are betraying no confidence. Sent to a friend who for many months had laid herself out to win the writer for Christ, the letter says:

> At last, by God's grace, I have made the great decision. I have been very wilful, and my delay is without justification. How wonderful of God to have borne with me so long. I thank you, too, dear friend, for all your patience and prayers. It is to these, humanly speaking, that I owe my conversion. How I wish that all Christians would be as persistent in seeking even one soul as you have been with me! I think then we should see conversions on a large scale. Preaching has not moved me much, but I have not been able to resist your persistent interest in my soul's welfare.

This personal and persistent ministry is open to all of us. It is the method of which we have full record in John i. Preaching reaches only the minority, but the exercise of private influence would touch the entire world.

The famous saying of Pascal—"The heart has its reasons of which the reason knows nothing"—may with advantage be commended to those who, in preaching, make exclusive appeal to the reason. Certainly the reason ought to be dealt with. St. Paul "reasoned" with a temporizing judge. But the vulnerable part of human nature lies deeper than the intellect, and preaching should, above all things, direct itself to that profounder depth. The capture of the heart means, also, in the majority of cases, the capitulation of the intellect; while, on the contrary, it is, alas! too true that the intellect often assents to a truth which the heart steadfastly refuses to receive.

The proposed simultaneous mission to be held early in 1901 is being freely discussed in the columns of the Free Church Chronicle. Most of the correspondents are wisely calling attention to the necessary preparation of the Churches on behalf of the great mission. With truth it is said that if Christians themselves are not enthusiastic concerning the matter, it is not likely that the lapsed masses will be. This seems to us to touch the heart of the matter. Judgment must begin at the house of God. It is suggested that the communicants in every church should be invited to a conference where the matter might be brought before them. If all the Christians in the land could be induced to meet for special prayer and conference concerning this great effort to win souls, the country would be stirred as never before.

The pressing question of overcrowding has been brought before several large audiences during the early May meetings. One well-known East End minister, who ministers to a congregation of more than 2,000 persons, declared that he had not, in his audience, more than 100 persons who lived in separate houses—the vast majority of the people came from one and two rooms. In many parts of London it is well known that whole families occupy single rooms, in which all the offices of life have to be performed. Morality is simply impossible in these conditions. Men, women, and children are literally forced to live an animal existence. Whose is the responsibility for this degrading state of affairs? The bottom of the mischief, as Mr. Cameron, M.P., recently pointed out, is the heavy rent demanded for houses, and behind that there is the exaction of the ground landlord. Such conditions are fatal; and they who create them must be held responsible for the sin and misery which ensue. The time for talking about this scandal has passed; vigorous and prompt action is imperatively demanded.

The authorities of the Leicester Free Reading-room have, for some time past, put into practice a very wholesome and necessary measure. Before the daily newspapers are exposed for public reading, the betting columns of each paper are covered over with strips of paper so that it is impossible to read them. This measure was adopted after a hard struggle, but it has proved of immense benefit. Loafers, whose only interest in the papers was the betting intelligence, are now prevented from misusing a public boon; moreover, a great source of temptation has been removed from young men and others.

The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Chronicle recently announced the cession of the marvellous Achilleion Castle at Corfu to a French syndicate, which has purchased it for a million francs for the purpose of turning it into a Greek Monte Carlo. Every attraction is to be offered to the public, in order to allure them to this den of robbers. Greece has already granted to the syndicate the concession for gambling. A contemporary remarks:

> Corfu is one of the Ionian Isles ceded to Greece by England, as a result of Mr. Gladstone's efforts, and it is a mocking comment on his life that it should be turned, with the consent of Greece, into a gambling den.

Many of the fair spots upon earth are already cursed with this sort of thing. Has a struggling country like Greece nothing better to do than to permit blood-sucking strangers to establish themselves amongst her fair islands, with the open intention of sapping her moral strength?

Various rumours have quite recently reached this country concerning the future of Morocco. From one source comes intelligence that France is making incursions from the Algerian side; from another, a report that probably the Sultan of Morocco will visit this country with the object of securing an English friendship. This rumour may, however, be definitely dismissed, as the Sultan is not likely to break with tradition by quitting his own country, even for a few days. Another correspondent alleges a most serious state of revolution at the centre of the Government. It is unquestionable that before long the existing régime will cease. In the interests both of civilization and of Christianity, the passing of the present order is absolutely necessary. It is almost incredible that an empire within actual touch of civilization, as is Morocco, should, at this time of day, be in the grip of barbarism. And Tangier once belonged to England!

Lord Halifax is, at any rate, a courageous man. The opinion of the Archbishops upon the question of Reservation does not in the least degree disconcert him. He is determined to insist upon "Catholic rights," and he is even prepared to pay the price of Disestablishment for them. In a letter to the Church Times, he declares that "the laity will not consent to die without the Sacraments." We do not hesitate to say, respectfully, that his lordship has no right to speak in the name of the "laity" of this country. Lord Halifax may be a good and devout man, but it is pitiable to see him so passionately attached to a purely mechanical, we may almost say, magical, system of dealing with God. What a shocking perversion of truth it is to lead men to suppose that "being fortified with the Holy Sacraments" their peaceful entrance into the other world is thereby secured. Such teaching is neither more nor less than pagan; it is fetishism with a Christian label.

The Church Review, the organ of the extreme High Church party, dealing with the topic of the Archiepiscopal "Opinion" on Reservation, has advised the clergy to follow a course worthy of Ignatius Loyola and his modern followers:—

Sit still, go on quietly as you are. Make no protests, public or private. Do not write to your Bishop. If your Bishop should issue a public pastoral, take no notice of it. . . . Let nothing be said, not even from the pulpit, but let priests act, act by simply going on.

The same journal makes it a grievance that "Catholics" should be forced into feeling that "it is impossible to be loyal to Christ and loyal to his Church, which is the pillar and ground of the Faith, unless they oppose their Bishops," and it goes on to speak of "the hideous evil of the Reformation," and to assert that:

Once believe that Mary is the mother of God, and devotion to her follows as a necessary consequence. Neglect devotion to her, and we forget her Son is the Eternal God. . . . But there are other ways of doing her honour—her litany said devoutly every day, the five joyful mysteries of the Rosary, a single decade of the Rosary, or a few Hail Marys in a church we may look into for a few moments; a Hail Mary every day throughout May in reparation for the little love there is for her in England, once called her dowry.

Preaching at Bolton recently, upon the occasion of the ordination of a priest, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford stated very clearly the Roman claims in regard to the prerogative and power of the Romish priest, who is, he asserted, a priest solely because he has the power and office of effecting the real objective presence on the altar of the true body and blood of Christ, and therefore offering Him up in sacrifice.

As though this declaration was not sufficient, he went on to make an equally unfounded claim on his own account in respect of the obedience and reverence due to him from the priest:

Since 1865, when he was ordained, he had had a large and varied experience; he had watched his fellow priests, and had come to the conclusion after much careful observation that the moment a priest forgets his ordination vow of reverence and obedience to his Bishop, from that moment his labours in the vineyard become fruitless, struck with sterility. He does no more good. . . . Our Lord has established order and authority in his Church, and the moment authority is disturbed, even by one of his priests, He seems to withdraw from that priest his blessing to win souls or to adorn his own soul with virtue.

The Catholic Times last week had an amazing article on "The Progress of Catholic Ideas." Inter alia it says:—

Protestantism may be a strong force yet amongst the English people, but there can scarcely be a doubt that it is a waning force. On its side are those who are ignorant, or but half-instructed. They have had the old Protestant traditions poured into their ears in childhood, or they have read in school-books of the wickedness of Rome.

The editor must surely be sporting with the intelligence of his readers. He should know that "the ignorant and half-instructed" are not found amongst us, but in his own communion, which in this country is so largely composed of the poorer sort of Irish and Italian people, many of whom are without education. As to Protestantism being a "waning force," the editor of the Catholic Times would do well to study the reports of the Church Missionary Society, the Baptist Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, the Free Church Council, and a hundred others amongst us. "Waning" might then be spelt "waxing strong."

God's Rights in Men.

A KEY-NOTE FOR THE COMING REVIVAL.

AFTER an unusually dreary winter, Spring, with all its fascination and promise, has returned. There is a more cheerful note being sounded amongst men. All nature is yielding to the spell of the new life which everywhere is unfolding itself under our eyes. Springtide is a time of revival in the life of nature, and we welcome it with joy.

For a long time there have been signs of a coming springtide in the life of the Church. Men who are competent "seers," declare that on every hand there is dissatisfaction with the present deadness amongst so many Christians, whilst there is a wistful yearning for a great awakening both in the Church and in the world.

In every part of the kingdom godly men and women have met together for prayer on this behalf, while to prayer there has been joined effort. The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign is fresh in our memories. The Free Church Federation is promoting the most colossal mission ever arranged, to be held next year; in addition to which there are numberless smaller efforts continually in operation.

The nearest work to hand, however, is the London Tent Campaign, just inaugurated (see page 29). The remarkable blessing of last year is regarded as the Pillar of Fire and Cloud leading to renewed and extended effort in the same direction during the coming summer and autumn. If, then, a new religious awakening is directly ahead of us,

WHAT IS TO BE ITS LEADING NOTE?

Let us not be misunderstood. In every work of Divine visitation the most ample room must be left for the free working of the Holy Spirit of God. There are still left in the world many persecuting Sauls whom the Spirit will strike down in penitence apart from any human agency; and numberless people of the type of Cornelius, to whom an angel will come ere ever a Peter appears upon the scene. These things, however, represent the extra-ordinary work of the Spirit of God; we are now thinking of his ordinary method.

What particular and distinctive note needs to be sounded by the evangelists, who, in the present time, rise to proclaim the Gospel of Christ? The Word of God is a living message, and it bears the characteristics of life. The great mark of life is its wonderful variety, and its power of adaptation. The Gospel is not a cast-iron message, imprisoned in certain formulæ; it is a living Word which may be spoken in every accent to which man is accustomed. Here, again, let us be very careful to define. The Gospel is a Gospel of Facts; and we must proclaim the facts without alteration. Yet, owing to the bias and onesidedness of life, nearly every age requires that in the preaching of the Gospel there must be one outstanding, commanding aspect of the truth to meet the specific sin and the specific need of the time. Let us glance at history. In a dark age, when men believed in justification by works alone, Luther arose to proclaim the doctrine of Justification by Faith: it was his sole note. George Whitefield, too, had one outstanding note for the revival of his time. Mr. Moody came to a country in which the Gospel of "do" was largely preached, and his great note was "It is finished." Since Mr. Moody's day our Evangelism has been penetrated with the thoughts of God's love, Christ's compassion, and the simplicity of faith. Evangelistic hymnology is full of this, and evangelistic preaching has emphasized it to the last degree.

Shall we emphasize all this less in the coming revival? God forbid! But there is one thing that we must emphasize more. The average man to-day does not doubt the love of God, the compassion of Christ, and the simplicity of faith. On the contrary, he believes too much in these things (if one may speak in this manner). A remark made by a confirmed drunkard a short time ago is a fair sample of the average notion which is abroad amongst a certain class. "Ah, well!" said he; "I know I'm bad, but then God won't be too hard on me. I can always trust his mercy." This idea of the liberality of God acted as a salve to his conscience, but it did not lead him to repentance.

Amongst another class of people the doctrine of the Fatherly love of God has been preached so one-sidedly that any true notions of justice and retribution are openly derided.

It would be superfluous, then, to make the Fatherly love of God the distinctive note of the coming revival. What shall that note be? What is imperatively demanded at the present time?

This: both the nation and the individual need to have emphasized in their hearing, that most radical of all truths,

THE RIGHTS OF GOD IN MEN.

The reason of this seems abundantly clear. The foundation of all order in the universe is the submission of the creature to the Creator. Things inanimate perform their functions according to law; hence order is the universal rule in the physical worlds. Man equally is under law, but he possesses the gift of volition, which, if normally exercised, means a true life; but if abnormally exercised means disorder, anarchy, and rebellion.

Does order reign amongst men? There is no need here to answer the question; each person has only to lift up his eyes and behold the world. Why does the disorder exist? Because men are out of harmony with God. Men are conscious of the disorder, but they are ignorant of its cause. It is for us, in the coming work, to tell them plainly what is the matter with the world. Non-Christian reformers are wasting their time in trying to suppress effects; it must be ours to expose the cause of the infidelity of our time. We need to preach the truth that God's rights take the first place in life, and that we are but creatures sent into this world to accomplish the will of the Creator. This is the foundation of all religion and of all duty, but it is ours is the responsibility to try and restore it. Emphasizing this truth, we can show that it is the centre of all life. The individual who gives to God his rights will at once be placed in harmony with God: true to God, we cannot fail to be true to our neighbour; true to our neighbour, we shall not want to rob him, to seduce him, or to kill him, nor shall we vote him beneath us because he happens to live in South Africa, and to possess a skin darker than ours.

The sin and wretchedness and peculiar shame of our epoch is due entirely to the ignoring of God's rights in men. Let us bring this forward as the commanding truth of the hour, and in the power of the Holy Ghost preach and insist upon it until men's consciences burn with shame; then, and not until then, can we return to the beautiful Gospel of the love of God, the compassion of Christ, and the simplicity of Faith. This truth of the rights of God is pre-eminently the needful message for our present condition. The country must be awakened to it there is no salvation without it.

God in Foreign Missions.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.*

MY subject is "The Superintending Providence of God in Foreign Missions." God is in creation; God is in history; and especially mission history, which is a mystery until read as His story. The word Providence, means literally forevision, and hence foreaction—preparation for what is foreseen; and expresses God's invisible rule of this world, including his care, control, guidance, as exercised over both the animate and inanimate creation. For our present purpose the word Providence, may be limited to God's activity in the entire control of persons and events.

We are to trace the working of the Creator and Ruler of the matter-worlds, and time-worlds, and worlds of being, controlling the blind forces of nature and the intelligent forces of human nature, so as to make all serve his ends as Redeemer. The work of missions has on it the seal of his authority. Thus the whole course of missions becomes God's march through the ages. He has his vanguard, the precursors or forerunners that prepare his way, making ready for, and heralding, his approach. He has his bodyguard, the immediate attendants that signalize his actual advance, bear his banners, and execute his will; and He has his rearguard, the resultant movements consequent upon, and complementary to, the rest. God's superintending providence in missions is thus seen in the Divine preparations for world-wide evangelization, in the Divine co-operation in missionary activity, and in the Divine benediction upon all faithful service.

God's preparations have reached through millenniums. But, within the century just closing, we may see Him moving before us, opening doors and shaping events, causing the removal of obstacles and the subsidence of barriers, raising up and thrusting forth workers, and furnishing new facilities. His co-operation is seen in of the work, in the marked fitness between the workers and the work, the new fields and the new facilities. Startling correspondences in mission history reveal his omnipresence and faithfulness, such as synchronisms and successions among his chosen servants, parallel and converging lines of labour, and connecting links of service. All these and much more show, behind the lives and deeds of the workmen, One who wrought in them both to will and to work.

As to Divine preparation for world-wide ministries to human souls, what events and what messengers have been his chosen forerunners! The first half of the eighteenth century seemed more likely to be the mother of iniquity and idolatry than to rock the cradle of world-wide missions. Deism in the pulpit, and practical atheism in the pew, naturally begat apathy, if not antipathy, toward Gospel diffusion. How then came a century of modern missions? Three great forces God marshalled to co-operate: the obscure Moravians, the despised Methodists, and a little band of intercessors, scattered over Britain and America. There had been a consecrated few in Saxony for about 100 years, whose hearts' altars had caught fire at Huss's stake, and fed that fire from Spener's pietism and Zinzendorf's zeal.

underlie the whole life of the United Brethren. Each disciple is to find his work in witness for God; second, his home where the widest door opens and the greatest need calls; and third, his cross in self-denial for Christ.

The Holy Club of Lincoln College, Oxford, touched by Moravian influence, took on a distinctively missionary character. Their motto had been "Holiness to the Lord:" but holiness became wedded to service, and evangelism became their watchword. Just then, in America, and by a strange coincidence, Jonathan Edwards was unconsciously joining John Wesley and the Moravians in preparing the way for modern missions. In 1747 Edwards sent forth his bugle-blast from Northampton, New England, calling God's people to a visible union of prayer for a speedy and world-wide effusion of the Spirit. That bugle-blast found echo in Northampton, in old England, and William Carey resolved to undertake to organize mission effort—with what results we all know. Thus modern missions came of a symphony of prayer! At the most unlikely hour of modern history, God's intercessors in England, Scotland, Saxony, and America repaired the broken altar and called down the heavenly fire.

We turn now to look at the history of the missionary century. There was a rapid opening of doors in every quarter. At the beginning of the century cannibalism in the Islands of the Sea, fetishism in the Dark Continent, exclusivism in China and Japan, the rigid caste system in India, intolerance in papal lands, ignorance, idolatry, superstition, depravity, everywhere, but in most cases conspiring together, reared before the Church

IMPASSABLE WALLS, WITH GATES OF STEEL.

In most countries, to attempt to bear the good tidings was simply to dare death for Christ's sake. The only welcome awaiting God's messengers was that of cannibal ovens, merciless prisons, or martyr graves.

As the little band advanced on every hand, the walls of Jericho fell, and the iron gates opened of their own accord. India, Siam, Burma, China, Japan, Korea, Turkey, Africa, Mexico, and South America, the Papal States, were successively and successfully entered. Within one decade from 1850 to 1860, new facilities were given to the entrance and occupation of seven different countries, together embracing half the world's population. At the same time God was raising up workers in unprecedented numbers, and men and women so marvellously fitted for the exact work and field, as to show his unmistakable foresight and purpose.

Think of William Carey's inborn adaptation to his work as translator in India; of Livingstone's fitness for missionary explorer and general in Africa; of Alexander Duff's capacity for educational work in India; of Adoniram Judson's schooling for the building of an Apostolic Church in Burma; of John Williams's unconscious training for evangelist in the South Seas.

Study the theology of inventions, and watch the furnishing of new facilities for the work as it advanced. He who kept back of Reformation times, the mariner's compass, the steam engine, and the printing press, until his Church put on her new garments, waited to unveil nature's deeper secrets, which should make all men neighbours until the reformed Church was mobilized as an army of conquest!

At times this superintending providence of God has inspired awe by unmistakably judicial strokes of judgment, as when in Turkey in 1839, in the crisis of missions, Sultan Mahmud suddenly died, and his edict of expulsion had no executive to carry it out; his successor, Abdul-Medjid, signalizing the succession by the issuing of a new charter of liberty. Or as when in Siam, twelve years later, at another such crisis, God, by death, dethroned Chaum Klow, the reckless and malicious foe of missions, and set on the vacant throne Maha-Mong-Kut, the one man in the empire taught by a missionary and prepared to be the friend and patron of missions, as also his son and successor, Chula-langkorn!

These are but parts of God's ways. The pages of the century's history are here and there written in blood, but even the blood has a golden lustre. The churches of Polynesia and Melanesia, of Syria and Africa, of India and China, stand rooted in martyr graves as the oak stands in the grave of the acorn, or the wheat harvest in the graves of the sown seed. It is part of God's plan that thus the consecrated heralds of the Cross shall fill up the measure of the sufferings of Christ in their flesh, for his body's sake, which is the Church. He who thus prepared the way, and wrought in and with the workers, has shown the same superintending providence in

THE RESULTS OF MISSIONS.

Two brief sentences outline the direct results in the foreign field: First, native churches have been raised up with the three features of a complete church life—self-support, self-government, and self-propagation; and second, every richest fruit of Christianity, both in the individual and in the community, has been found growing and ripening wherever there has been faithful Gospel effort. Then, as to the reflex action of missions on the Church at home: first, Thomas Chalmers' remark, that "foreign missions act on home missions not by exhaustion, but by fermentation;" and second, Alexander Duff's wise saying, that "the Church that is no longer evangelistic will soon cease to be evangelical."

The whole hundred years of missions is a historic commentary on these four comprehensive statements. God's Word has never returned to Him void. Like the rain from heaven, it has come down, not to go back until it has made the earth to bring forth and bud, yielding not only bread for the eater, but seed for the sower, providing for salvation of souls and expansion of service. Everywhere has been wrought. Instead of the thorn has come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier the myrtle tree—the soil of society exhibiting a total change in its products, as in the Fiji Group, where a thousand churches displace heathen fanes and cannibal ovens; or as among the Karens, where, on opposing hills, Schway Mote Tau Pagoda confronts the Kho Thah Byu Memorial Hall, typical of the old and the new.

God has distinctly shown his approval of missionary zeal and enthusiasm in the Church at home which supplied the missionaries. Spiritual prosperity and progress may be gauged so absolutely by the measure of missionary activity that the spirit of missions is now recognised as the Spirit of Christ. Solomon's proverb is proven true: "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." And Christ's paradox is illustrated: "The life that is saved is lost, and the life that is lost is saved." Phillips Brooks, with startling force, compares the Church that apologizes for doing nothing to spread the good news, on the ground of its poverty and feebleness, to the parricide who, arraigned in court for his father's murder, pleads for mercy on account of his orphanhood! The hundred years have demonstrated that "religion is a commodity of which the more we export the more we have remaining."

What seal of God upon mission work could be more plain than the high ideals of character seen in the missionaries themselves. They have shown unswerving loyalty to the Word, and unsparing sacrifice for men. Theodore Parker said that it was no waste to have spent all the money missions had cost, if they gave us one Judson. Here, on the mission field, are to be found, if anywhere, the true succession of the apostles, the new accessions to the goodly fellowship of the prophets, and the continued procession of the noble army of martyrs.

Surely all this is the standing proof of the superintending providence of God. He who gave our marching orders and gave at the same time the promise of his perpetual presence on the march, has kept his word—"Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." At every step He has been seen by faith, the Invisible Captain of the Lord's Host; and in all victories there has been, behind the sword of Gideon, the sword of the Lord.

This whole history reminds us of that conspicuous passage in the Acts of the Apostles, where, within the compass of twenty verses, fifteen times God is put boldly forward as the one Actor in all events. Paul and Barnabas rehearsed, in the ears of the Church at Antioch and afterwards at Jerusalem, not what they had done for the Lord, but all that He had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles; what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them. And, in the same spirit, Peter, before the council, emphasizes how God had made his choice of himself the very mouth whereby the Gentiles should hear the word of the Gospel and believe; how He had given them the Holy Ghost and between Jew and Gentile, purifying their hearts by faith; and how He who knew all hearts had thus borne them witness. Then James, in the same strain, refers to the way in which God had visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name; and concludes by two quotations or adaptations from the Old Testament which fitly sum up the whole matter:

"The Lord who doeth all these things." "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." (Acts xiv. 27 to xv. 18).

God is thus the one Agent or Actor; even conspicuous apostles, like Paul and Peter, being only his instruments. God was working upon man through man, choosing a man to be his mouthpiece, with his key unlocking shut doors; God was visiting the nations, taking out a people for his name, turning sinners into saints, purifying hearts and bearing them witness; He and He alone did all these wondrous things, and according to his knowledge and plan of what He would do from the beginning.

There is, indeed, a superintending Providence of God in foreign missions; the King is there in imperial conduct, the Lawgiver in authoritative decree, the Judge in reward and penalty; God, the eternal, marshalling the ages with their events; God, the omnipresent, in all places equally controlling; God, the omniscient, wisely adapting all to his ends. The Father of spirits, discerning the mutual fitness of the worker and his work, raises up men of the times for the times. Three of the most conspicuous movements of the century have been the creation of a new regiment of Medical Missions, the Woman's Brigade, and the Young People's Crusade. But one thing more is needful, namely, to recognize the invisible Captain of the Lord's Host as on the field, to hear his clarion call summoning us to the front, to echo his word of command; and in the firm faith of his leadership, pierce the very centre of the foe, turn his staggering wings, and move forward as one united host in one overwhelming charge.

Sunday.

"This is the day which the Lord hath made."

ANOTHER day of holy peace,
Another day of blissful calm;
From toil a day of sweet surcease,
For wounded hearts a day of balm.

A happy day, for long ago,
Above the others it was blest.
Six days the Maker worked; but lo!
Upon the seventh took his rest.

On this glad day the Holy One
Shook off the bondage of the tomb.
The Dayspring rose, and soon the sun
Irradiated all the gloom.

On Sunday, too, the Holy Dove—
The blessed Comforter—was sent
To pour into our hearts his love,
And flood our spirits with content.

A joyous day it needs must be,
If we devote it to the Lord,
At home in perfect harmony,
At church with saints in sweet accord.

A day to be set all apart,
And to the loving Saviour given,
To worship Him with all our heart,
As angels in the courts of heaven.

A day that is a shadowy type
Of rest on yonder golden shore,
When all the harvest shall be ripe,
And garnered in the heavenly store.

MARY G. HUNTER.

The Indian Famine.

THE preoccupation of the public mind by the Transvaal War has, we fear, prevented our full realization of the horrors of the Indian Famine. Six millions of people are in receipt of relief; but even this figure conveys no idea of the appalling magnitude of the suffering. The Simla correspondent of the Standard states that "the present famine is as bad, if not worse, than any two previous famines of which we have records put together." The details of suffering and of starvation make one speechless with horror. Yet, owing doubtless to the war, the charitable aid from this country is only about one-quarter of what it was three years ago. Sir William Wedderburn recently made a motion in the House of Commons on behalf of a national grant from the Treasury for the work of alleviating the sufferings in India. All that has been done, so far, in this direction is to debate it and to refuse it, on the ground that the Indian Government "fear the creation of a claim for financial interference." Surely, however, there ought to be no two opinions about making a grant for meeting an unparalleled need.

MORE SUPPLIES FOR THE FAMINE.

We have again the pleasure of recording a number of generous gifts of food for the relief of the famine sufferers.

Messrs. Horlick and Co., in addition to executing an order for £10 worth of their milk, are contributing thirty-six dozen of the same as a donation.

Messrs. Alexander Crawford and Son, of Belfast, are sending one ton of their amylaceous food, made from the finest Irish wheat.

Miss Carr, of Carlisle, is giving twelve drums of biscuits.

Mr. Chambers, of Gibraltar, sent £5 to Messrs. Allen and Hanbury for half a gross of their milk food and one gross of malted food.

Some ladies at Geneva instructed Messrs. Nestlé to send in two cases of their milk food.

Nearly all the above donations have been given spontaneously, as the result of reading in THE CHRISTIAN of what was being done. In addition, many friends are sending money for the purchase of food, and these amounts are put to Rev. Dennis Osborne's fund, as, although the suggestion originally came from Dr. Valentine, of Agra, the distribution of the food is being superintended in India by Mr. Osborne.

SOME EXCELLENT IDEAS.

A friend in Lincoln obtained some of our "Illustrated Famine Leaflets,"* and, pasting one on cardboard, placed it outside his shop window, with a box beneath. As a result he sends a cheque for £5, the amount of the first week's collection. He truly says that many who are not reached by collections in places of worship will avail themselves of such opportunities of giving as he has afforded.

From a correspondent at Edinburgh we learn that he purchased some of the Famine leaflets and distributed them throughout his neighbourhood, with an intimation that a collecting box would follow. One day's collection realized £3.

There are many other ways of helping which will doubtless occur to our readers, and we are glad to know of the various efforts that are being put forth. The need is so great that the help of everybody, whether much or little, will be appreciated by the devoted workers who, in the famine districts, are bearing so heavy a burden at this time.

All gifts, whether in money or foods, sent to us are promptly forwarded to the missionaries of various societies labouring in the famine districts, so that our readers may depend upon their donations accomplishing the greatest possible amount of good.

* These leaflets can be obtained from our publishers at the following rates, post free: 100, 2s.; 500, 8s. 6d.; 1,000, 15s. They will be found very useful for distribution, either privately or at meetings, and cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of all into whose hands they may come.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Rev. ROBERT WARD, who at the request of the Government authorities, has undertaken to supervize the Famine Poor House at Godhra, writes from the Methodist Episcopal Mission House, Godhra, Panch Mals: "In spite of the utmost care taken by Dr. Mistri (the civil surgeon) and the staff, there are about THIRTY DEATHS DAILY.

That is to say, the majority of the people arrive just in time to die. On the other hand, many of them get steadily stronger and are ultimately drafted on to the ordinary Famine Relief Works.

"Where the relief works, or any portion of them, are under the control of native officials, there is very little hope for the poor creatures who dare to complain about anything whatsoever. I know of a Hindu official who leisurely kept some 14,000 famine labourers waiting for their pay until he felt inclined to sign the cheque which was necessary.

"Nearly adjoining the Poor House is a camp of 14,000 toiling sufferers. Men, women and children are living out in the open dried-up bed of a large lake, with nothing but a bamboo mat between them and the fierce sun, day after day. The little ones cry out for water, but as they open their little mouths, they are filled with the blinding hot dust which has been stirred up by thousands of restless feet.

A CHOLERA EPIDEMIC.

"As the remainder of the water gradually evaporated in the fierce heat, the people were surprised to see the fish so close and so big that they could be caught by hand. For two or three whole nights the famishing crowds seized, cooked, and devoured the fish as fast as they could. It is supposed that many of them ate fish which was fetid, but whatever the case, a fearful form of Asiatic cholera broke out so suddenly that about 200 persons perished the first day. Then, the panic seized the multitude and they fled in all directions, throwing down their tools and abandoning their dead and dying. While riding to the burning ground to see that the bodies were being properly disposed of, I found that the bearers of the biers had themselves been stricken down in front of the pyre. The civil surgeon and I administered some medicine and did all we could, but without avail. A young woman who was carrying small quantities of bricks upon her head for the mission orphanage suddenly sank down upon the ground, and, in spite of all that we could do, died within four hours. Her husband heard the news at four in the afternoon, and three hours after he also was dead. Their child followed. The grand-father carried the dead body on his shoulder to my compound, and I disposed of it, first giving the poor old man and the remaining children some cholera mixture. The people suddenly fall, in the midst of conversation, and rapidly sink, notwithstanding the most rapid treatment. And so the fearful disease spreads abroad, and none of us yet can say what the end may be. Gruesome as this account must seem, the actual sights are so dreadful that one cannot describe them. I have kept back the worst things."

Mrs. E. H. LAWSON, writing from Aligarh, describes the relief work undertaken by her husband and herself: "We have 170 widows, with their 40 babies, and 170 boys and 40 or more girls, all new refugees in addition to our 400 of three years ago. We are busy fitting up sheds so as to be able to take more. We feel God will help us to care for these poor ones. The suffering is increasing as the heat approaches."

Our Workhouse Poor.—The lot of the poor is hard enough at the best, but it is, of course, much more trying in sickness; and it is, therefore, gratifying to find that, although there has been a great improvement of late years in poor law nursing, the Northern Workhouse Nursing Association, Manchester, in a recent report, refers to the fact that a number of schools are making praiseworthy efforts to secure a higher training for workhouse nurses. Many workhouse hospitals have already been furnished with nurses by this and kindred Associations, and there is room to hope that through such means the life of the workhouse may be brought still more into accord with Christian fellowship.

The Messiah Manifested.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

JOHN'S life, at this period, was an extraordinary one. By day he preached to the teeming crowds, or baptized them; by night he would sleep in some slight booth, or darksome cave. But the conviction grew always stronger in his soul, that the Messiah was near to come, and this conviction became a revelation.

The dim characteristics of His glorious personality glimmered out on the sensitive plate of his inner consciousness, and he could even describe Him to others, as well as delineate Him for himself.

He conceived of the coming King, as we have seen, as the Woodsman, laying his axe at the root of the trees; as the Husbandman, fan in hand to winnow the threshing-floor; as the Baptiser, prepared to plunge all faithful souls in his cleansing fires; as the Ancient of Days, who, though coming after him in order of time, must be preferred before him in order of precedence, because He was before him in the Eternal Glory of his Being (John i. 15-30). He insisted that he was not worthy to perform the most menial service for Him whose advent he announced. "I am content," he said in effect, "to be a voice, raised for a moment to proclaim the King, and soon dying on the desert air, whilst the person of the crier is unnoticed and unsought for. 'There cometh after me He that is mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.'"

John was not only humble in his self-estimate, but also in his modest appreciation of the results of his work. It was only transient and preparatory. It was given him to do, but it would soon be done. He was to bid the people to believe on Him who should come after him (xix. 4). He was the morning-star ushering in the day, but destined to fade in the glory of ruddy dawn, as it flooded the eastern sky. But our impression of

of this great soul will become deeper, as we consider that marvellous scene in which he first recognised the divine mission and claims of his Kinsman, Jesus of Nazareth. Consider the meeting between the Sun and the star, and take it as indicating an experience which must always supervene on the cleansed and holy soul, which desires and prepares for it.

I. Our Lord's Advent to the Jordan Bank. Picture that remarkable scene. The arrowy stream, rushing down from the Lake of Galilee to the Dead Sea; the rugged banks; the shadowy forests; the erect, sinewy form of the Baptist; and Jesus of Nazareth, as depicted by the olden traditions, with auburn hair, searching blue eye, strong, sweet face, and all the beauty of his young manhood. At the sight of Him, note how the high look on the Baptist's face lowers, how his figure stoops in involuntary obeisance, how the voice that was wont to ring out its messages in accents of uncompromising decision, falters and trembles!

John said, "I knew Him not" (John i. 31); but this need not be interpreted as indicating that he had no acquaintance whatever with his Divine relative. Such may have been the case, of course, since John's life had been spent apart from the haunts of men. It is more natural to suppose that the cousins had often met, as boys and afterwards. But the Baptist had never realized that Jesus was the Messiah whose advent he was sent to announce. He had not recognised his high descent and claims. Perhaps it had never occurred to him that this village carpenter, so closely related to himself, whose course of life was apparently so absolutely ordinary and commonplace, could be He of whom Moses in the Law and the Prophets did write. In this sense John could truly say, "I knew Him not."

But John knew enough of Him to be aware of his guileless, blameless life. The story of his tender love for Mary, of his devotion to the interests of his brothers and sisters, of his undefiled purity, of his long vigils on the mountains till the morning called Him back to his toils, of his deep acquaintance with Scripture, of his speech about the Father—had reached the Baptist's ears. He had come to entertain the profoundest respect amounting to veneration for his Kinsman; and, as He presented Himself for baptism, John felt that there was a whole heaven of difference between Him and all others. These publicans and sinners, these Pharisees and Scribes, these soldiers and common people, had every need to repent, confess, and be forgiven; but there was surely no such need for Him, who had been always, and by general acknowledgment, "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." "I have need," said he, "to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me?" (Matt. iii. 14).

II. The Significance of Christ's Baptism. "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness"—with such words our Lord overruled the objections of his loyal and faithful Forerunner. This is the first recorded utterance of Christ, after a silence of more than twenty years; the first also of his public ministry: it demands our passing notice. He does not say, "I have need to be baptized of thee;" nor does He say, "Thou hast no need to be baptized of Me." He does not stay to explain why the greater should be baptized by the less; or why a rite which confessed sin was required for one who was absolutely sinless. It is enough to appeal to the Baptist as his associate in a joint necessary act, becoming to them both as and therefore claiming their common obedience. "It becometh us (you and me), to fulfil all righteousness."

In his baptism, our Lord acknowledged the divine authority of the Forerunner. As the last and greatest of the prophets, who was to close the Old Testament era, for "the law and the prophets prophesied until John"; as the representative of Elijah the prophet, before the great and notable day of the Lord could come; as the porter of the Jewish fold—John occupied a unique position, and out of deference to his appointment by the Father, and in acknowledgment of his office, Jesus sought baptism at his hands.

John's baptism, moreover, was the inauguration of the Kingdom of Heaven. In it the material made way for the spiritual. The old system, which gave special privileges to the children of Abraham, was in the act of passing away, confessing that God could raise up children to Abraham from the stones at the water's edge, and demanding that those who would enter the kingdom must be born from above, of water and of the Spirit. It was the outward and visible sign that Judaism was unavailing for the deepest needs of the spirit of man, and that was about to take its place; and Christ said, in effect, "I, too, though King, obey the law of the kingdom, and bow my head, that, by the same sign as the smallest of my subjects, I may pass forward to my throne."

There was probably a deeper reason still. That Jordan water, flowing downwards to the Dead Sea, was symbolical. In the purity of its origin, amid the snows of Hermon, and in the beauty of its earlier course, it was an emblem of man's original constitution, when the Creator made him in his own image and pronounced him very good; but in these sullied and troubled waters hurrying on to the Sea of Death—waters in which thousands of sinners had confessed their sins, with tears and sighs—how apt an emblem was here of the history of our race, contaminated by the evil that is in the world through lust, and meriting the wages of sin—death! With that race, in its sin and degradation, our Lord now formally identified Himself. His baptism was his formal identification with our fallen and sinful race, though He knew no sin for Himself, and could challenge the minutest inspection of his enemies: "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?"

Was He baptized because He needed to repent, or to confess his sins? Nay, verily! He was as pure as the bosom of God, from which He came; as pure as the fire that shone above them in the orb of day; as pure as the snows on Mount Hermon, rearing itself like a vision of clouds on the horizon: but He needed to be made sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. When the Paschal lamb had been chosen by the head of a Jewish household, it was customary to take it, three days before it would be offered, to the priest, to have it so our Lord, three years before his death, must be set apart and sealed by the direct act of the Holy Spirit, through the mediation of John the Baptist. "Him hath God the Father sealed."

"It becometh us"—I like that word, becometh. If the Divine Lord thought so much about what was becoming, surely we may. It should not be a question with us, merely, as to what may be forbidden or harmful, what may or may not be practised and permitted by our fellow-Christians, or even whether there are distinct prohibitions in the Bible that bar the way; but if a certain course is becoming. "Need I pass through that rite?" It is becoming. "Need I perform that lowly act?" It is becoming. "Need I renounce my liberty of action in that respect?" It would be very becoming. And whenever some hesitant soul, timid and nervous to the last degree, dares to step out, and do what it believes to be the right thing, because it is becoming, Jesus comes to it, enlinks his arm, and says, "Thou art not alone in this. Thou and I stand together here. It becomes us to fill up to its full measure all righteousness." Ah, soul, thou shalt never step forth on a difficult and untrodden path without hearing his footfall behind thee, and becoming aware that in every act of righteousness Christ identifies Himself, saying, "It becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

"Then he suffered Him." Some things we have to do for Christ, and some to bear for Him. Active virtues are great; but the passive ones are rarer and cost more, especially for strong natures like the Baptist's. But, in all our human life, there is nothing more attractive than when accepts a deeper interpretation of duty than he had preceived, and is prepared to set aside his strong convictions of propriety before the tender pleadings of a still, soft voice. Yield to Christ, dear heart. Suffer Him to have his way. Take his yoke, and be meek and lowly of heart—so shalt thou find rest.

III. The Designation of the Messiah. It is not to be supposed that the designation of Jesus as the Christ was given to any but John. It was apparently a private sign given to him, as the forerunner and herald, through which he might be authoritatively informed as to the identity of the Messiah—"Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and abiding upon Him, the same is He that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." The same thought appears from putting a perfectly legitimate construction on the words of Matthew (iii. 16): "Lo, the heavens were opened unto him" (i.e., the Baptist), "and he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming upon Him."

The exclamation, lo, indicates his startled surprise. He saw far away into the blue vault, which had opened into depth after depth of golden glory. The stress of the narrator, as he told the story afterwards, was that the Spirit not only came, but abode. Here was the miracle of miracles, that He should be willing to abide in any human temple, who, like Noah's dove, had for so many ages wandered restlessly over the deluge of human sin, seeking a resting-place, but finding none.

The voice of God from heaven proclaimed that Jesus of Nazareth was his beloved Son, in whom He was well pleased; and the Baptist had no further doubt that He was the Desire of all Nations.

John now knew that his mission was nearly fulfilled, that his office was ended. He had opened the gate to the true Shepherd, and must now soon consign to Him all charge of the flock. Jesus must increase, while he decreased. He that was from heaven was above all; as for himself, he was of earth, and spake of the earth. The Sun had risen, and the day-star began to wane.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 20. Psalm xcvi.

THERE is a close similarity between Psalms xcvi. and xcviii. They are made on the same pattern, and should be compared.

Throughout the Bible there are grave hints of the veil which sin has drawn over our world. Whether other worlds are suffering as this we cannot say, though it is probable that the devastation caused by evil is not confined to our small planet. Creation groaneth and travaileth together until now. It has been subject to vanity, not of its own will, but by reason of him (that is, by reason of the god of this world, the prince of the power of the air) who subjected it. It is under the bondage of corruption, and awaits the manifestation of the sons of God. Goethe said that nature seemed to him as a captive maiden sighing for release. The injustice and evil perpetrated on our world have turned its songs into sighs, its Jubilates into *Miserere*s.

Here, however, the scene is reversed. The psalmist beholds the throne of God, exalted above the world. He comes to reign. He judges the people with equity. He brings back righteousness and truth which had fled the world. Honour and majesty go before Him, strength and beauty attend his train.

Forthwith nature breaks into song. The heavens are glad and the earth rejoices; the seas, like the bass organ stop; the field, with the hum of human life; the trees of the wood, quivering throughout their foliage with the musical response of the wind, break into praise, and earth sings again in the choirs of her sister stars. There is a sure precursor of all this in the gladness which the heart, that is itself at peace with God, detects in the world. To the man who loves God, the song of the new heavens and the new earth seems already to have commenced.

MONDAY, May 21. Psa. xcvii.

The keynote of this psalm and of Psalm xcix., which is parallel to it, is the Reign of God. How truly this holy singer thinks of it. To the man who is alienated from God by wicked works, God's reign means misery; to the believer it is the inauguration of harmony and joy. From isle to isle, through the archipelago, the contagious glory spreads, as though angel-heralds stepped from islet to islet with the announcement of the Divine kingdom, as happy children skip across the stepping-stones of a brook.

The reign of God, which is righteousness and judgment, is often a matter rather of faith than sight. Clouds and darkness are round about Him. Through the thick canopy the eye of sense cannot penetrate. Why He permits Satan to tempt; why He allows Death's scythe to mow down manhood in its strength, and maidenhood in its tender beauty; why innocent children suffer so cruelly for sins in which they had no part—ah, what clouds and darkness are here!

Sometimes God comes in fire (v. 3), as at Sinai, or on the day of Pentecost, which took place upon the anniversary of the majestic theophany of Sinai. Days come like that on which Jerusalem fell, or the Turk took Constantinople, or the Spanish Armada was scattered along our northern shores, or the greatest despotism of modern days was shattered on the field of Waterloo—then hills melt like wax. They that boast themselves of idols are ashamed, whilst the inner circle of those who love God rejoices. Through all these dark and terrible dispensations, which are as the dreary days of autumn, God is sowing light for his people. The sower goes forth weeping, bearing precious seed; but he comes again rejoicing, bearing his sheaves in the warm autumn glow. Count that every tear, pang, disappointment, and heart-break is a seed which shall bear a hundred-fold of joy. Be glad, then, with the joy of faith, if not of sense.

TUESDAY, May 22. Psa. xcviii.

This psalm, as we have seen, is parallel to xcvi. As that dealt with the reign of God which brings joy to the universe, this deals with the conflict on which his reign is based. "His right hand and his holy arm have brought salvation."

It was easy for God to create, but before He could redeem He had, in the Person of his Son, to become a man of war, and to enter into conflict with the prince of darkness. He met him in the forty days of temptation, throughout the trials, wrestlings, and conflicts of his ministry, and notably in the hour and power of darkness which he endured in the Garden and on the Cross. But He openly showed his righteousness and salvation when, in his resurrection and ascension, He put off from Himself the principalities and the powers, making a show of them openly, and triumphing over them in his Cross (Col. ii. 15).

See how all his path upward is lined with triumphal greetings! The earth breaks forth, and sings for joy; angels with trumpets, and sound of trumpet, make a joyful noise before the King. Far from the noise of warriors, at the places of drawing water, the triumphant acts of the Lord are rehearsed. And as He ascended, so shall He come again. When He cometh to judge the earth, to set up his millennial kingdom, to establish righteousness and equity, seas and floods, mountains and hills, shall praise Him. Why will you not live in these great hopes? Why not listen to these songs that pour into and over the anguish and sorrow of the world? Be optimistic. God shall triumph yet, and the public-house and house of shame shall be converted into museums and schools of holy song. Let the new song begin in thy new heart.

WEDNESDAY, May 23. Psa. xcix.

This psalm, as we have seen, is paralleled with xcvii. There Jehovah's reign is associated with the gladness of faith, here with the trembling of mortal and sinful hearts. Thrice we are reminded that He is holy (3, 5, 9). This threefold ascription of earth, concerning the holiness of God, answers the threefold ascription of heaven, where one seraph cries to the rest, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of Hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory (Isa. vi. 3).

God's holiness is terrible to sinners. It inspires even his own people with awe. However near we come to Him in Christ, we always must remember that we are sinful men who have no right to stand before Him, save through the mediation, and in the righteousness of his Son. If we dwell always upon our sinnership, we shall have no comfort or joy as we approach Him in whose eyes the heavens are not clean. But in so far as we appreciate the finished work of Christ, and our standing therein, the peace of God that passeth all understanding fills our heart and mind.

How great God must be who can reckon Moses, Aaron, and Samuel as his servants! And we are permitted, though immeasurably beneath them in personal character and gift, to be among his priests, to call upon his Name, to hear Him speaking from the pillar of cloud. Let us all walk worthy of our high calling! Let us fear this great and holy God, who cannot tolerate sin in his children, and will not scruple to inflict pain if sin is persisted in. He does forgive, glory to his Name, but He will not hesitate to take vengeance on those sins which we presumptuously and knowingly permit.

THURSDAY, May 24. Psa. c.

This psalm is called the Old Hundredth, but it is always new. It is a summons to all lands to praise. The soul from which it burst like a crystal stream from the rocks, must have had broad views which overleapt the narrow isolation of Judaism. Think of a Jew so catholic in heart as to want all lands to join the mighty chorus of praise, as all shores are washed by the sea! It is the missionary hymn of the Church!

The heralds of the Cross go forth to summon all lands to come before God's Presence with songs. They go to make men know that Jehovah is God; that He is the Creator who made, and the Redeemer who purchased us to God by his blood; the Shepherd who has other sheep than those of the Jewish fold, which, through the centuries, He goes to seek. They go with the glad tidings that the Lord is good; that if there be tares in the world, an enemy hath done this; that there is forgiveness with Him, because his mercy endureth for ever; that men may safely reckon on Him, because his faithfulness is unto all generations.

Notice the significance of the R.V. in v. 3. It is He that hath made us, and we are his. His, because He made us. Not our own, because bought with a price, a people for his own possession, zealous of good works. Have you ever realized this—that God hath an absolute claim upon you? You may ignore it, as Onesimus his obligation to his master Philemon; you may be a runaway slave, but your attempt to exercise your rights apart from God, does not absolve you from your bounden duty and service. How much wiser and happier for you to look up into his face, and say, I am thine; save me, keep me, shepherd me. Then enter into the gates of life, which open one behind the other, always giving thanks.

This psalm was, as the title indicates, composed by David, and probably at the commencement of his reign. It contains a number of resolutions on which he was prepared to act.

First, he made up his mind that he would give heed to the perfect way (v. 2 R.V. mar.), and would walk in his house in the integrity of his heart. Next, he made up his mind to choose his friends with rigorous care, that froward hearts and evil persons should depart from him; that he would not enter into close relations with those that slandered their neighbours, or gave evidence, by their high looks, of proud hearts. Deceit and falsehood were alike to be banished from his palace; whilst faithful souls, who walked in a perfect way, should minister to him. Finally, he made up his mind to carry out his rule into the public state, that the wicked might be put out of the way, and the righteous exalted.

It was an excellent programme, and happy would he have been if, throughout his life, he had rigorously adhered to it. But he found, as we all do, how great a difference there is between resolving and maintaining the life upon the level of resolve. Indeed, only the Holy Spirit is competent for this. It is not possible for us to exercise his absolute power in the selection of our environment. It is often necessary for us to dwell in homes and places of business with those whom we would not choose. But we can, at least, forbear making any of these our intimates, associates, and friends, with whom we spend our leisure and recreative hours (1 Cor. v. 9-11).

SATURDAY, May 26. Psa. cii.

From sorrow the heart turns to the Lord, who abides for ever, and we must remember that the Holy Spirit invites us to appropriate these words as an address to the Son of God (see Heb. i. 10-12). "The Lord shall arise and have mercy upon Zion." Does not this indicate that the sorrow of the afflicted described in the previous paragraph was more connected with the desolations of the city of God and of the holy temple, than with any personal misfortune? The pious Jew always counted Jerusalem above his chief joy, and therefore if the city was laid waste, he gave himself up to hopeless grief. But whenever a soul feels thus, deliverance is near. Prof. Finney tells of a woman who came to her pastor, under such concern about souls that she could neither eat nor sleep, asking him to appoint an inquirers' meeting; and though there were no signs of revival, it suddenly broke out. When Christians take pity on the stones and dust of the Church of God, the time to have pity upon her—yea, the set time has come.

Behold the unchanging Christ! Creation may wax old, the heavens and earth may be laid aside as an outworn garment, the old order may give place to new, but, beneath the change of dispensation, for evermore Jesus Christ will remain. How delightful those immortal words, "But Thou remainest."

Prof. White's Bible School.

THAT a strong interest has been aroused in the series of Bible studies which Professor Wilbert W. White has inaugurated, is evidenced both by the large attendances and by the keen attention with which the speaker has been followed.

The subject of the lecture at Queen's Hall, on Friday last, was "The God of Abraham." At the outset, Professor White spoke of the Old Testament as covering what might be termed pre-Incarnation time; the Gospels, Incarnation time; and Acts-Revelation, post-Incarnation time. Considering the first of these, as divided into three periods, we have three dispensations of grace, i.e., from Adam to Noah (Gen. i.-v.), Noah to Abraham (Gen. vi.-xi.), and Abraham to Christ (remainder of O.T.). From the first God's plan was large and beneficent: the idea, which not infrequently obtains, that the character of God as revealed in the Old Testament appears narrow when compared with the large ideas of the New, is entirely erroneous. It was from the beginning that "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son," who was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." God dealt with man in Adam, and man failed. He dealt again through Noah, and again the race failed him. The striking feature of the record is in enduring such things in men, families, and nations as only the All-patient could. The true position is seen in Christ weeping over Jerusalem as he foresaw the impending judgment: "How often would I," and "ye would not." Only when nothing else will take the place of judgment does judgment come.

In considering the call of Abraham, Professor White pointed out that it was not given in favouritism, but for service. "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." The speaker next dwelt briefly on (a) the unity of the Book of Genesis; (b) the narrowing down process in the genealogical records to the line of Jacob; and (c) the incompleteness of the book, showing its introductory and "reaching out" character. There is but little space devoted to the description of the creation; the writer evidently regards man and God's dealings with him as of chief value.

Defining some of the characteristics of the God of Abraham, as revealed in Genesis, Professor White said that He was a living personal being, "I AM," shown to be (a) ante-mundane—before the creation; (b) supra-mundane—independent of the creation; and (c) intra-mundane—"in all things," in connection with which Paul's words on Mars Hill may be noted, "In Him we live, and move, and have our being."

Professor White expressed the earnest wish, with reference to critical study of the Bible, that students would familiarize themselves with the material of the books and the relative position in which it is found. The speaker gave emphasis to the point, observing that anyone taking a bicycle to pieces would feel much more confidence in the component parts if he had to be able to carry. A practical knowledge of the constituent parts of Scripture, and their uses and bearings, is a necessity to safety in criticism. This view would be better appreciated were students brought into more frequent contact with pantheism and polytheism as accepted by hundreds of millions of people in the East. Such contact would result in a realization of the contrast between the materialism of those systems and the idea of a living personal God. Describing an argument which a Brahmin had sought with a missionary in Bengal, the former endeavouring with subtle and dialetical efforts to justify a contention that man is part of the Godhead, and that there is no such thing as sin, Professor White went on to declare, in glowing terms, that critical questions pale before the teaching of the living I AM, and of each man as an independent personality. Not only the whole book of Genesis, but the whole of the New Testament, is a protest against idolatry. The purpose of the writer of Genesis was evidently not to describe the creation, but, to protest against profane worship. He saw men worship objects in nature, the sun, the stars, and so forth, and he declares God made them. The aim was not to inform as to geological development, but to convey the truth that all was God's handiwork. The order of recapitulation is unimportant in view of the great fact.

Professor White next proceeded to inquire why a knowledge of nature and natural forces had not developed under non-Christian systems of religion, and found the reason in the disposition to deify the powers of nature. From the theory of pantheistic theology, that God is in all, it is an easy stage to the polytheism which says everything is God. And so of things in nature, of rivers, sun, stars; and progress ceases—there can be no free research. In the order of things in Genesis, however, man is to have dominion (i. 26). Again, the writer of the eighth Psalm has no fear in the matter. He considers "the stars which Thou hast ordained," and says "Thou hast made man to have dominion over the works of thy hands." Science has been taught not to fear, and to-day even a child may bring about great results by merely pressing an electric button. Having demonstrated the obligations of scientific men to revealed religion, Professor White pictured the world dying for and went on to refer to the Almighty as a God who takes the initiative, who works in association with man, who is influenced by prayer, who tells his secrets to his friends (Gen. xviii. 17), who knows our frame, adjusting trials to our abilities to endure them, whom to serve is to deny oneself, who links us by promises to Himself, and who is a God of large and beneficent aims.

Remarking further upon a number of these heads, Professor White pointed out that the Bible stands alone in this great characteristic, that it reveals God taking the first step. In other religions the system makes man work towards God; in ours, God comes to man. Others bid men to work and live; ours, to live and work. The speaker then drew a number of spiritual lessons from Abraham's career, revealing the tenderness, wisdom, and power of "the God of Abraham—our father's God and our God."

AN ALTERATION OF PLAN.

On assembling at King's Hall on Monday last, the audience found that Professor White had been summoned to New York owing to the dangerous (and since, fatal) illness of his young son. It is anticipated that the Professor will be away for three weeks; at the expiration of that period he is expected to resume his present series of studies. Meantime the gatherings will be addressed by Mr. J. Campbell White, M.A., Professor White's brother, whose labours in India and elsewhere have made him widely known and loved.

On Monday, Mr. White directed his hearers to "The Business of a Christian's Life." Luther had said, striking his breast, that if asked who lived there he should not say Martin Luther but Jesus Christ. Carey, when asked what was his business on earth, had replied, "My business is to serve the Lord." John Vassar, a consecrated American, who tactfully sought opportunity to deal personally with the unconverted, had succeeded, on one occasion, in leading to Christ a lady to whom he had spoken in a hotel lift. The lady having told her husband, the latter said, "I should have told Vassar to mind his own business." "Well," replied the lady, "had you seen and heard him, you would have thought he was about his business." Mr. White proceeded to draw stimulating lessons and illustrations from the life and words of Christ, and ended with an appeal to Christians to make the regeneration of humanity, through our Saviour, the chief business of life.

THE LATE

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

A REMINISCENCE AND TRIBUTE.

IN the summers of 1897-98, Mr. Macgregor was one of the chief speakers at the great Northfield Conference. It was Mr. Moody's custom to secure two speakers who should occupy the platform every morning and give consecutive teaching from the Word. In the afternoon and evening the programme would be more varied.

In 1897, Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and G. Campbell Morgan were the selected teachers. At first sight it seemed somewhat incongruous that two such young men should be alone upon the platform, with Mr. Moody and scores of the most earnest and thoroughly equipped ministers of America sitting at their feet. But one meeting sufficed to demonstrate the fact that these were God-sent men. Ministers and people, in ever larger numbers, waited upon their ministry and testified to the blessing and help received. Some suggestion as to the line of helpfulness is contained in the fact that, in 1899, one of the leading Presbyterian ministers in New York City, preaching at Northfield, publicly acknowledged the transformation wrought in his life and ministry under the teaching of Mr. Macgregor in the previous year.

Mr. Macgregor naturally appealed to the ministers in his audience. His up-to-date scholarship and his keen analytical mind were in evidence, even in the discussion of phases of the most intense spiritual life. His was no mere emotional appeal, touching the feelings of his hearers only. Rather was it the plea of an argument clearly and forcefully reasoned out, which no man could withstand without doing violence to his own judgment.

His Bible was an indication of his method. Chatting together one day between the meetings at Northfield, he handed his copy of the Word to the writer to verify some passage in dispute. Many people mark their Bibles, but few have a perfect system in so doing. His consisted not so much in writing as in rulings in coloured inks, making a complete analysis of the books therein. This method doubtless helped to make him the master of the Word which he certainly was. Few young men could excel him at that point. Whilst not neglecting other study he could say with the psalmist, "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."

At the end of the '97 Conference, Mr. Moody asked the people if they desired Messrs. Macgregor and Morgan to come again the next year, and the entire assembly rose as one man in an affirmative response. It was an unusual thing for Mr. Moody to do, but it marked the impression which had been made, and in the following year the attendance was larger than ever, whilst the manifest results were more striking still.

In private, Mr. Macgregor's life was entirely in harmony with his teaching. It was a life dominated and controlled by the will and spirit of his Master. He was not by any means narrow or one-sided. He fully realized the many-sided character of human life, and sought to do all things to the honour and glory of God. In his public ministry and in his recreation, in the place of sunshine and in that of shadow, those who knew him best ever found alike the strength and tenderness, the passion and the sweetness, of the true man of God.

It is hard to realize that he has left us for the higher service above. Two out of the three whose names have been mentioned in these reminiscences of Northfield two years ago are no longer with us. Mr. Moody, if not an old man, had accomplished many years of labour, and had reached the place where he was no longer equal to his former travel and work. Mr. Macgregor was but a young man; his life-work seemed to be only just beginning.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

East Dulwich. ALBERT SWIFT.

The Congregational Union.

By a Minister.

THERE was a large attendance of delegates —considerably over a thousand—at the meetings last week, May 7-11. Not a few of them prefaced the serious work of the week by a peep at the "Handy men" of H.M.S. Powerful, in their triumphal march along the Thames Embankment. Wedged for an hour in the struggling humanity of the street, and then similarly wedged in the tea-room for half-an-hour, seeking much-needed refreshment, one felt that the attendance was even more than need be desired.

A pleasant impression fell upon many, who looked for some trace of the grim and grizzled veteran, from the war on the Establishment, in the new Chairman, Mr. J. Carvell Williams, M.P., when they found him to be a benevolent looking and mellow voiced gentleman, full of charity, and only regretting that the limitations of his subject in the inaugural address prevented his paying fully a tribute of admiration to the revived spiritual life and the wide expansion of the Anglican Church.

Very suitably, the address aimed at a review of Free Church Life and Progress during the Nineteenth Century. There are few who have so long and so closely watched this movement as Mr. Carvell Williams, and his summary and remarks were listened to with deepest interest. Changes in modes of worship he traced, and, on the whole, "in the direction of improvement;" though he noted, with apparently some satisfaction that the movement for a Nonconformist liturgy "does not show signs of growth." Worth remembering, too, is his

CHARACTERIZING OF PREACHERS:—

(1) Those of the older type, who are not bewildered by "higher criticism" or "modern scholarship"; who still expound the Scriptures in the belief that they are able to make men wise unto salvation; and who have not ceased to speak of sin, conversion, judgment to come.

(2) Those who philosophize rather than preach; who go to the Bible for mottoes rather than texts; and whose true vocation is not in the pulpit, but in the professor's chair.

(3) Those who try to embody in their preaching the fruits of modern taste and culture, with spiritual fervour and a passionate desire for the salvation of men.

(4) Those who seek to increase the attractiveness of preaching by the arts of the buffoon, forgetting that the pulpit is no place for clowns, but is a place for those who "watch for souls."

This classification, though the speaker did not explicitly say so, one could realize was nearly in what he regarded as their order of merit.

There could be no greater fallacy, he added, than that the newspaper press is taking the place of the preacher. "For is it not the fact that what we call the secular press for the most part deserves its name—does not regard religion as the surest means of elevating the lives of men, and almost ignores the Almighty as the world's Supreme Governor?"

On his own peculiar line of work, for religious liberty, Mr. Williams reckoned there are three forces working with him now for viz., sacerdotalism, church reform, and the growing number of Churchmen, both lay and clerical, openly embracing the principles of freedom from State control. "In my opinion disestablishment will be the result of combined forces, both without and within; and if so, that end will be attained as the result of agreement rather than of conflict." These were regarded as significant words.

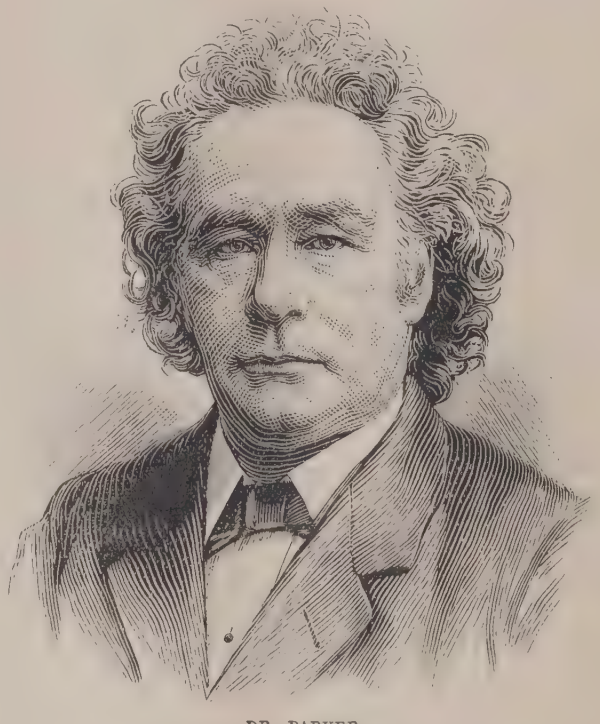
The Chairman-elect for 1901 is Dr. Parker, who thus, for the second time, receives a signal mark of the love and confidence of the churches.

In seconding a resolution of congratulation to the Queen, on the happy circumstances of her visit to Ireland, and of gratitude that Almighty God should have delivered the Prince of Wales in the recent attempt on his life, Dr. Mackennal recalled an incident in the reception of various representatives by Her Majesty in the year of her Jubilee. She had received a number of addresses seated, but when the bearers of addresses from religious societies and Nonconformist Churches were announced, the Queen stood to receive them. "We recognised what it meant, and our hearts were one with her."

In the report of the year now ended touching references were made to prominent workers deceased, including eight conspicuous Christian leaders whose service was over fifty years' duration, and six whose term was just under the half century.

The Twentieth Century Fund was announced to have already reached £475,000; that is, within a little of the amount aimed at. This, however, includes large amounts which are appropriated by the donors to special local interests, and belong, therefore, rather to the "supplemental" fund. It is hoped that nearly, if not quite, half a million may be raised entirely free of all local restrictions.



DR. PARKER.

It was a matter of widespread regret that, owing to a prolonged interruption of the business of the Assembly on Tuesday morning by Dr. Parker, who gave a personal word of farewell to Dr. Rogers on relinquishing the pastorate, the important statement and appeal on behalf of this fund, which was to have been made by Rev. C. S. Horne and Dr. Goodrich, was crowded out.

An important topic was introduced for discussion by Rev. Arthur Furner, of Leicester: "The Place of the Church Meeting in the Life and Work of our Churches." Strange that the agreement on the principle, that the gathering of the disciples of the Lord insures the actual presence and power of the Lord for the affairs of his Kingdom, should be so complete, and the failure of many churches in practice also so complete, and yet the conference on the question yielded only languid discussion!

The only alternative to most eager and heart-searching inquiry on such a matter should surely be, and even by clear preference should be, eager and heart-searching prayer.

The paper touched the weakest part of all our church life, and touched without strengthening it.

London Medical Mission.

DAILY work of a very varied character in the service of God and for the benefit of suffering humanity, has been maintained by this Mission for over twenty-eight years among the sick poor of St. Giles, in and around premises in Short's Gardens, off Endell Street. Here it was that the unpretentious anniversary meeting took place one afternoon last week; and all that was said tended to show how the Gospel finds ready entrance to many hearts, through those deeds of mercy which are the outcome of active Christian love.

The treasurer, Major Mackinlay, said that, although expenditure was lessened by economy, more than the ordinary income had been spent, but legacies saved the Mission from debt. Interest of supporters is no less, but fresh demands upon their means seem to reduce the amount of each subscription. The chief aim of the Mission is spiritual blessing; but a larger grant from the Hospital Sunday Fund indicates that, in a business sense, the work is without reproach.

Dr. Henry Soltau, superintendent, spoke of the need of Divine power in this enterprize, and told how the number of patients grows, owing to prevalent influenza and the consumptive cases consequent on overcrowding. Nurses are here trained to be useful in all parts of the world; and the Mission unites its helpers in happy labour for their Lord.

The Chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, expressed strong confidence in the superintendent and those who are associated with him in this combination of medical help and Gospel usefulness.

Rev. Dr. George Hanson heartily commended the Mission. He had seen similar work in Dublin, where it won the hearts and the confidence of the poor. It involves much that is offensive to eye and nostril; but the sacrifices thus made are to whose heart the poorest soul under the sun is precious. Depressed workers may be cheered by considering the certain issue of all that is undertaken for Him, who, in days of old, showed the boundless waste of sea to be teeming with life.

The Lambeth branch of the Mission in North Street, Kennington Road, is under the charge of Dr. R. F. Owen. He described some of the inconveniences that have to be endured, both by workers and patients, in these temporary and unsuitable premises. New quarters are much needed for the growing work in this poor neighbourhood. During the past year 16,752 sufferers attended at the dispensary.

Describing the general work, Dr. Owen gave interesting details of the opportunities afforded for dealing with the souls of the people. Extensive home visitation of the sick is another means of exercising influence for Christ. The work requires utmost endeavour to keep pace with it, and a great deal of grace to continue in it. Instances of marked changes wrought by God's Spirit in confirmed invalids were mentioned; and it was good to hear how afflicted and poverty-stricken ones glorify God by patient endurance, simple testimony for Christ, faith, and prayer. To find souls coming out of darkness into divine light is the one encouragement of work carried forward in many saddening surroundings.

Mr. Denny added to former words the declaration that more sickness arises from breathing bad air than from all other causes, and he commended to the consideration of Christian women the way in which the cream of our poor are crowded out of the country, to be replaced by the scum of Europe.

Dr. Heywood Smith was thankful to God for all that has been done through the Mission since its start, and trusted that similar Christian activities may be extended to each of the coming "township" divisions of London.

The May Meetings.

The Evangelical Alliance.

MENTION of this organization revives memories of its long stand for Christian union, religious liberty, and spiritual worship; and these principles found renewed expression at the yearly afternoon conversazione, for which friends from near and far gathered at Exeter Hall on the 8th inst. Words of welcome were spoken from the chair by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., to all who approach God directly through our Lord Jesus Christ, as distinguished from believers in a human priesthood. All other divisions, he said, should be deemed insignificant, in view of the necessity for a united front to the powerful forces of evil around us.

Glimpses of the report were afforded by the general secretary, Mr. E. P. Field. First came a note of thanksgiving to God for his abundant blessing upon the operations of the Alliance during the past year. Effective testimony has been borne by every branch, not only against ritualism and sacerdotalism, but in opposition to that rationalism and agnosticism which have invaded the ranks of religious teachers. The Week of Prayer at the beginning of each year finds ever-widening circles of observance; and the day of humiliation and intercession, organized by the Alliance last January, led a large number of Christians to join in public acknowledgment of God amid the stress of war. Romish persecution in Madeira and in Peru had been combated; and the suffering Stundists of Russia are succoured in ways which, of necessity, cannot be publicly detailed. Since the beginning of 1899 the Alliance has been strengthened by the accession of over 600 new members.

Mr. John Paton—elected treasurer owing to the retirement of Mr. Donald Matheson through increasing age—rejoiced in the Alliance as a glorious manifestation of the subsisting between all Christian believers, in fellowship with their Lord. During the speaker's long connection with the Alliance, on both sides of the Atlantic, it had never been more active and useful than now. It strives to maintain the principles of the Reformation, and occupies a unique position in support of religious liberty all over the world. The funds, mainly derived from membership subscriptions (optional as to amount), need augmentation in view of the extensive work carried on.

The venerable Dr. F. W. Baedeker was listened to with much interest as he recounted some of his experiences and impressions in the course of Russian travel. While Russia avoids Western religious influence, the Word of God is allowed free course. For years the speaker had been permitted to visit the prisons of Russia and Siberia, telling, in few words, the old story of God's love in Christ, and distributing Bibles in various languages. The one lack is labourers for this wonderful mission-field, with its 140,000,000 of people, speaking 128 languages. Side by side with the exclusive character of the Greek Church, the priests themselves start discussions in large assemblies of the people, upon such points as that of picture-worship; and in these with his New Testament, will often confound the priests. There is toleration towards German Baptists, but the Stundist is forbidden any attempt to influence the indigenous race. These Stundists (a name common to all dissenters from the Greek Church) are loath to leave the country, despite disabilities and persecution. They pray for the free course of the Gospel in Russia, and confidently expect an answer in God's own time. It is a sign of some progress that legal measures have taken the place of administrative repression, and that appeals to the Synod often prevail. Gospel preaching is impossible in Russia, but there is ample and free scope for circulation of God's Word.

Pastor Rohrbach (Berlin) spoke of the spread of Alliance principles on the Continent of Europe, and particularly referred to the better understanding and practice of Christian union which is promoted by the four German branches of this Society.

Some of the helps and hindrances to spiritual life were expounded by Rev. H. B. Macartney, who strongly urged the prayerful use of God's Word, in all simplicity, for illumination, devotion, and obedience.

Protestant Reformation Society.

THE efforts put forth by the Church of Rome to destroy the Protestant faith are challenged by numerous organizations with encouraging results. Not the least resourceful and active agency in this direction is the Protestant Reformation Society, and at the annual meeting, held last week, in Exeter Hall, there was every indication of increased sympathy and support.

The report by the Secretary, Mr. Walter A. Limbrick, was received with much satisfaction, giving evidence as it did of progress in every department of operations. There has been an increase in the sale of the publications of the Society, and grants of literature have been made on an extensive scale. The Executive Committee have also taken public action in various ecclesiastical matters, not the least important being the protest against the inculcation of prayers for the dead.

Colonel T. Myles Sandys, M.P., was in the chair, and, in the course of his address, looked forward to the time when Great Britain would have

A PARLIAMENT TRULY PROTESTANT.

Canon Christopher, in a characteristic speech, urged the claims of the Society upon all who desire to see the Protestant faith upheld. "If you are not supporting the Protestant Reformation Society, you are doing nothing for the salvation of Roman Catholics. They are our neighbours, and it is for us to take the truth to them."

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas remarked that Protestants have a three-fold fortress of strength. The first was:—"It is written," "It is finished," "It is I." The second consisted of the doctrine of justification through faith in Christ, the indwelling of Christ in the human soul, and the doctrine of the witness of the Holy Ghost. The third fortress was,—The Bible accessible to all, and the Bible used by all. The speaker urged the importance of emphasizing more than ever the imparting of instruction to the young, of the Gospel of Christ in its simplicity and purity.

Mr. W. Mayo, one of the society's missionaries, related some of his experiences at Hastings, in promoting the cause of Protestantism.

Rev. F. S. Webster moved a resolution denouncing the introduction into the Church of England service, of prayers for the dead. He held that, as the soul is when it leaves the body, so it is at the hour of judgment. The world is always

ASKING FOR A SECOND CHANCE.

The Bible does not offer it; the Bible only offers a second birth, and men who will not accept the second birth will perish. If buoyed up by a false expectation, their blood will be upon the souls of those who fostered the delusion.

Dr. C. H. H. Wright, the clerical and general superintendent of the Society, seconded the resolution, vigorously denouncing the whole basis upon which the plea for the introduction of prayers for the dead rests. He strongly criticised the excuse of the Archbishops, who themselves were bound by the Thirty-nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer. No Archbishop, however learned, could be allowed to go beyond the Reformation Settlement. The resolution, which was carried with acclamation, will be communicated to the Archbishops and the Duke of Devonshire.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

IN the eighty-second report of this Society, which was presented at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon, Rev. E. W. Matthews, the secretary, reminded the audience that "King Solomon made a navy of ships"; and it was added, that the nation which "has had the navy at sea has always had the gold." Furthermore, nations which have had ships have been those which have become rich by the treasures of all countries. Hence, "London is the banking and commercial exchange of the world; and is the centre of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, which is attempting to girdle the globe with its stations." It had a mission to all ships, irrespective of nation or flag. The Society was ministering to the men of the sea, and was seeking the consecration of the shipping world to the world's Redeemer. The language of the sea was becoming increasingly English. There were 108 stations, 121 chaplains, missionaries, &c., and 92 institutes.

In course of the year there has been held a large number of meetings on ship-board; there was an extensive distribution of Bibles, Testaments, and Scripture portions, as well as of evangelical literature. Eight new buildings were opened, commenced, or projected, during the year. A fine Bethel for sailors and deep-sea fishermen, capable of holding 1,000 persons, was opened at Lowestoft; while the Sailors' Rest at Fleetwood, provided by Mrs. Fielding, was which the Society had received during the century. A large institute, with a chapel, is in course of erection at Great Yarmouth for the accommodation of fishing folk, the stone being laid by the Duchess of Fife, while the building is named after Lady Ashburton, who gives £1,000 towards the cost, £1,500 being still required. The total income of the Society was £25,097, or nearly £5,000 less than last year, when more was given for new buildings. Hence, it was added that, "the financial year will bring with it increased and far-reaching responsibilities, and £5,000 are urgently needed."

A telegram from Lord Roberts, sent from Bloemfontein on the eve of his starting northwards towards Pretoria, was received, viz.:—"I accept with great pleasure the invitation of your Committee to become a Vice-President of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, the value of whose services I keenly appreciate. I trust that it may continue to flourish."

The Lord Mayor, who presided at the Mansion House meeting, said that an important national work was being done on a comparatively small income. No nation could compare with England in regard to her mercantile and naval marine; but sailors require to be looked after. They are addicted to excesses, and need a restraining power. The aim of the Society was good, and the field was a wide one. The Lord Mayor concluded his address with the announcement that Mr. Passmore Edwards had resolved to present the Society with a building for its headquarters, which would be associated with the name of the late Duke of Clarence, who was a Patron of the Society. Archdeacon Sinclair said that the Society was one of the oldest for promoting the welfare of sailors, who were quite as capable of being influenced for good as for evil. Addresses followed by Revs. W. T. Faulding, Dr. Hanson, of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, A. J. Palmer, &c. A telegram was sent to the Queen, mentioning the new building and the Duke of Clarence.

London Missionary Society.

A REVIEW of the mission field to-day reveals the outcome of an enterprise undreamed of by men a hundred years ago. In the foremost ranks of agencies which have been instrumental in bringing about this happy result must be placed the London Missionary Society, which, this year, celebrates its 105th anniversary. The Society is to-day in a very different position than a hundred years ago.

As the wide extent and incessant demands of its operations have been realized, there has been a disposition to ask whether contraction or consolidation would not be the wisest plan to adopt. Such contraction of area was effectual more than once in the earlier history of the Society. That, however, was done at a time when the

of a sense of responsibility led to the formation of many societies belonging to different denominations, which gladly entered upon special fields of labour. Thus, to-day the Society has not to seek for new spheres for its energy and enterprise, but to respond as far as possible to the urgent appeals from all quarters for more workers.

During the year, twenty additional missionaries have joined the staff. Of these, nine have proceeded to China, five to India, three to Madagascar, two to New Guinea, and one to the South Seas. Six others have received appointments, and will shortly leave England, for South and Central Africa, &c. The annual report shows that there has been on the part of the auxiliaries throughout the country. An effort has also been made with much success to increase the quantity, and improve the quality, of the Society's literature. The Watchers' Band continues to prove a means of diffusing information and deepening interest in missions. In the 740 branches in Great Britain and Ireland there are upwards of 22,000 members. The unity of sympathy and loyalty of the Colonies has again been asserted during the year, the amount received from Australia and New Zealand being £5,934. The spirit of self-help and generosity are steadily growing in the mission field. The grounds for encouragement are stronger than ever, and the call for God becomes irresistible, in the presence of the accumulated evidences of his power and faithfulness to those who seek to hasten the day when the Gospel shall have been preached to every creature.

The annual meeting at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday of last week attracted a magnificent assembly. Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., presided, and the platform was occupied by a large number of ministers of various denominations as well as prominent laymen.

The Chairman dwelt upon the power of evangelical missions, although he was afraid there existed a danger in foreign fields of overlapping. Many people spoke disparagingly of efforts to evangelize the heathen; to do so was to despise the command of Christ, "Go ye into all the world." We shall not be redeemed as a race until all the human family had heard of Christ as their Saviour.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary, commented upon the annual report of the Society, and the progress of the year. Referring to the Missionary Conference which he had been attending in New York, he said it provided a delightful evidence of the unity of the whole Church of Christ in the face of the WORLD'S NEED OF CHRIST.

The Society's field in India, he was thankful to say, was only slightly affected by the famine, and it had been their joy to hand over sums of money subscribed by their constituents for distribution by Baptist and Presbyterian missionaries. In South Bechuanaland operations had been almost entirely suspended in consequence of the war. When the time comes for a final settlement in South Africa, and equal rights for all white men south of the Zambesi are claimed, the Christian public will have to remind those concerned in making the settlement that there is an enormous native population, many of whom are rising in industry and intelligence, who have an equal claim to consideration. The speaker made an earnest appeal to the supporters of the Society to with which the directors were met. An increase of £15,000 in the annual income was needed even for the maintenance of the present work. A great move forward was wanted, the openings were more numerous, the claims more urgent, and the reasons for going forward more cogent than ever.

The story of the missions in Madagascar, as related by Rev. James Sibree, was one of trial and endurance. He traced the history of the work from 1894 to 1898, during which period the island came under the rule of the French Republic. The outlook at the present time is much more hopeful and bright. There have been many changes in the social life of Madagascar, and the French authorities are now disposed to favour the work of the missionaries, and are seeking to ensure its success.

Of New Guinea, Rev. C. W. Abel had an inspiring account to give. There is no lack of eager volunteers from the South Seas, ready to take up evangelistic service; and the mission stations give promise of growth and development. Mr. Abel's recital of his experiences revealed the change which God has wrought to this island through the instrumentality of his devoted servants. The "May" meetings held in December were attended by over two thousand from a district where, but a few years ago, barbarity and heathenism reigned supreme.

Dr. S. Lavington Hart spoke in warm terms of hope and thankfulness of the achievements and prospects of the Society's Mission at Tientsin, China. He emphasized the vast amount of useful work—medical and educational particularly—accomplished by the missionaries' wives, and related some touching instances of the natives maintaining their faith, often at the sacrifice of their means of subsistence.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THERE was an encouraging attendance at the annual meeting of Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, held at St. James's Hall on May 3, when Rev. A. R. Cavalier told the story of the year's work in the various departments of the Mission. The following are some of the facts gleaned from his statement:—The present number of centres of work in India are 36, and the society is employing 137 European missionaries and assistants, 201 native Christian teachers, nurses, &c., 76 Bible women—making a total of 414 workers. The society has 67 schools, and the missionaries have access to large numbers of Zenanas and houses, having 2,610 regular pupils under Christian instruction. The Bible women who visit the villages and the workers in the society's hospitals and dispensaries at Lucknow, Benares, Patna, &c., have sent news of development and advance.

Lord Kinnaird made further reference to the encouraging character of the reports from India. There have been many conversions, numbers of baptisms, and in connection with medical and educational work much good has been accomplished. Their's was a many-sided mission, and appealed to varied sympathies. There were a number of famine orphans in the care of the society, and he hoped the little ones might grow up to be a great army of teachers, and so do a great work in the evangelization of India. In concluding, Lord Kinnaird set forth several urgent needs confronting the society, such as new schools in Bombay.

Professor W. W. White followed, dwelling upon the eternal purpose of God, which he declared was from the beginning to reach the whole world. That purpose was also shown in the teaching and example both of the Apostle and of the Apostolic Churches. It was revealed in the need of the non-Christian world, the need itself being a call of duty. Opportunity as well as need was God's call. He endorsed Lord Kinnaird's remarks as to the value of medical work, but every kind of mission effort was valuable. No mission had been without its converts, and every one of them had borne testimony to the truth of the Lord's words, "Other sheep I have." Professor White pleaded for personal service. Money was the cheapest thing in missionary enterprise. People were only giving of their superfluity. God wanted lives.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. Habershon, the new honorary finance secretary; and by Rev. W. E. Burroughs.

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

FACTS and figures point to the quiet but effective work that is being done by this Society; and some of its very strong claims to Christian support were urged by speakers at the forty-sixth annual meeting held in Exeter Hall Parlour on Monday afternoon last week.

Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. secretary, briefly touched upon a few of the good results realized by this useful and valuable auxiliary in the great campaign for evangelizing the nations. Money grants have been maintained or increased towards Gospel labours in lands debased and sunken by Mohammedan rule—Greece, Macedonia, Asia Minor, Persia, Arabia, Egypt, Palestine, and Syria; the principal aim of the Society being to stimulate the practical interest of British Christians in mission enterprises carried on by their American brethren.

The chair was taken by Lord Kinnaird, who also read the financial statement. Income for the year under review was £2,162, with a balance from the previous year of £1,714. There had been expended upon Armenian relief and orphanages £1,540, and upon special objects and grants in aid £1,654; while the working expenses were only £189. Grateful thanks were expressed to Mr. Essery for his honorary service during the past seven years, resulting in increased income and decreased expenditure.

As a traveller in some of the countries mentioned, Rev. Dr. Moinet, of Bromley Presbyterian Church, spoke of the Society as interesting in regard to and also in view of the localities with which it is concerned, especially the scenes of the Saviour's life and death. The tide of Mohammedan incursion may be regarded as God's judgment upon his Church in those lands, for its fall from the primitive Christian ideal. Amid ignominy and persecution, the Scriptures are practically a dead letter with the nominal Christians of these countries; but the Society seeks, in a truly catholic and purely undenominational spirit, to aid all Christian missionary agencies of an evangelistic, educational, medical, literary and relief character, by gathering and distributing contributions from a much wider area than could possibly be accessible to any one of the organizations working for the spiritual enlightenment and material succour of these persecuted and suffering people.

Rev. Professor Radford Thomson, New College, N.W., found strong motives for approving the principle of the Society, in the benefits we have derived from Bible lands, in the evils produced or fostered by Mohammedan rule, and in the Christ-like work of the missionaries in relieving bodily suffering — a department of which the orphanages were most interesting features. Sir Wm. Muir, Professor Ramasy, and Mrs. Bishop testify to spiritual power accompanying American missionary labours in these countries; and this Society constitutes a further bond between Great Britain and America.

Among other points in favour of the Society, was one advanced by Rev. J. Head Thomson, of Blackheath, who pointed out that British support of American missions disarms political jealousy on the part of European powers.

British Jews' Society.

THE record of the year's operations of the British Jews' Society, as presented at the annual gathering at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, was one of development and progress. Colonel W. J. Seaton, who presided, was supported by many well-known friends of the cause.

After devotional exercises, Rev. Isaac Levinson, secretary, reviewed the present position and prospects of the Society, and expressed gratitude for the blessing which had been given during a year of solicitude. After referring to the twenty-two years' labours of the late Dr. John Dunlop, Mr. Levinson went on to speak of the two Homes for which have proved so helpful to needy and persecuted converts in their latter years. As to the effort being made to establish a forward movement in the west of London, it is hoped to influence the large and increasing Jewish population in that part of the Metropolis. The stations of the Society at home and abroad have been blessed. In Paris, advantage is being taken of the Exhibition to undertake work among the Jews, who figure in such considerable numbers both as exhibitors and visitors. Mr. Levinson concluded with a sympathetic tribute to the devotion of the Society's missionaries and the sterling character of their work.

Rev. Dr. Hanson in a fervent address, said that no people have come through such fiery ordeals as the Jews. The national separation of the Jews is a political miracle. This small nation have outlived all the great empires of the earth. Even the iron monarchy of Rome has gone: the Jews have seen their destroyer destroyed. Their survival constitutes a spiritual miracle. They were not, in the first instance, devoted to monotheism, but easily inclined to worship various gods; for centuries, however, they have steadfastly worshipped Jehovah. Again, the Jews' separateness may be called a social miracle. The nature of nations is to amalgamate. For example, the "true-born Englishman," of whom we speak with a touch of pride, has been welded, as we know, of various peoples. The Jews, on the other hand, do not become one with the nations in which they move; and is not the reason for this that God has in the earth? And, may we not conclude that Israel is kept apart, being designed in God's providence to witness, in the latter days, for the Christ whom they crucified? Dr. Hanson next pointed out that it is proved, by the glorious effects of mission work, that no people, however debased, are too vile to be raised by the power of Christianity. The marvellous spread of the truth must stimulate all to believe that in the case of the Jews, also, the missionary cause will triumph.

Rev. Professor Hackney recounted various interesting experiences among the Jews, and rejoiced in the increasing measure of love felt by Christians for God's ancient people. The present attitude of the nation, as seen in the attention paid to Christianity by multitudes of Jews, and the progress of the Gospel among them, go to show that the time is ripe for increased missionary labour in the interests of Israel, which efforts will surely prove to be remarkably fruitful. Lamenting the persecution meted out to the Jewish race in times past by so-called Christians, Professor Hackney said that the memory of those wrongs is ingrained in the Jewish nature; and one of the great difficulties of the work lies in the fact that the Jew cannot regard as desirable a religion professed by those who harass his people. This obstacle, however, and all others, will be overcome by preaching the Gospel in the power of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. A. A. Isaacs anticipated the time when the Jews would be divinely used for the general blessing of humanity, and urged his hearers to take note of movements which tended to that end, and earnestly pray for their success.

Rev. M. Nachim, followed with a cheering report of progress on the Continent.

Central Y.M.C.A.

JOYFUL praise to God for the abundant prosperity He has graciously given to the grand organization pre-eminently concerned with the moral and spiritual well-being of young manhood in this big city was the dominant note of the two great meetings held last Thursday to celebrate the fifty-sixth anniversary. In the afternoon the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House was, by kind permission of the Lord Mayor, devoted to a conversazione, with the Marquess of Northampton in the chair, and addresses by Archdeacon Madden and Rev. F. W. Macdonald. At this meeting, and at the one yet to be mentioned, the speaking was preceded by a selection of classical sacred music, finely sung by a choir from the London Training School for Choristers.

Exeter Hall was thronged for the evening meeting; and there were repeated expressions of affectionate welcome to Sir George Williams, from the moment when he crossed the platform to take the chair. Many were the signs of enthusiasm for the good work of which he is the founder and president.

"All hail the power of Jesu's name," was heartily sung, followed by Scripture and prayer; and then Mr J. H. Putterill, general secretary, tried to convey some idea of the vast field covered by the varied operations of the past year. The Y.M.C.A. is still in the forefront for forming the character of the young men of this nation upon a solid basis; and it is fully recognised that the fulfilment of this purpose is impossible apart from living union with our Lord Jesus Christ. Manifold agencies are employed of a religious, educational, social, physical and recreative, evangelistic, and missionary character, at the three centres of work, in Exeter Hall, Aldersgate Street, and Cornhill. At no period in the history of the Association has Bible study assumed so much importance as during the past twelve months. The members numbered 2,151; associates, 881; junior section members, 116. There are forty-one meetings for young men every week, with an aggregate weekly attendance of 1,910; and the average number of young men visiting the three centres weekly are 12,000. Coming to finance, for the fifth time in succession the Association closed the year free of debt; but considerations of efficiency in the work necessitate the raising of £1,000 before December next.

Despite difficulties, said Sir George Williams, a considerable number of young men, coming to London from all parts of the provinces, have been gathered to the benefits of the Association. The unexpected and exciting turn taken by public events, within one brief year, enforces the need for young men to be ready for commercial or professional life, for the kingdom of God, and for the mansions above, where the dear Lord Himself dwells; and in such preparation the Association offers its loving aid. Concerning new Y.M.C.A. buildings costing £50,000, opened at Newcastle, Sir George called Mr. W. H. Mills to the front, and put him through a sort of witness-box examination for the information of the meeting. Mention of the fact that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught had opened the premises, gave occasion for the suggestion of Sir George that a verse of the National Anthem be now sung. After this had been loyally done, he proceeded to counsel, as a means to still greater blessing from God, observance of the principle that every converted man should seek to man under the regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit. Then shall we rejoice together when we meet in the glory. The "Hallelujah Chorus," grandly sung by the choir, gave suggestive point to the last sentences of the chairman's speech.

From the long-continued dependence of infancy, the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe traced the Divine law of moral as well as physical development, which brings strength out of weakness. God wills that all our life long we shall remember how, in childhood, we learned the nature of tenderness. In ever-widening circles, that lesson of reciprocated kindness runs on through family, nation, and empire, teaching us the unreality of material things as compared with the things that are unseen. These are Nature's premonitions of the self-sacrificing spirit of the Church of God. Realization of the immense power of association is a new thing in the Church; but men are growing tall enough to look over necessary partitions between them, and see the great family of Jesus Christ. We are required to confess Him, not ourselves, that others may share the spiritual benefits we have ourselves received.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon said he still believed in the Gospel as God's own way of saving men and women, though it is supposed in certain quarters to have been superseded. But we need preaching of a "button-holing" sort that, at least, attempts to reach the heart and conscience. This is a special gift; but it can be had from God for the asking, and is capable of cultivation. It will be abused unless delicacy and infinite tact accompany it; but here, too, "if any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God."

The possibility of defending the Empire without wearing khaki was the subject of a stirring address by Rev. J. Daniel Jones. Christians must rise in the might of God, and safeguard England from her sins. If she be corrupt, her doom will inevitably come, despite an increased army and a strengthened fleet; but if the British are righteous, sober, clean, and God-fearing, they may defy every enemy. Intemperance, gambling, greed, and impurity must be fought as giant evils that threaten our national existence.

Lord's Day Rest Association.

THE operations of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association continue to be of great service to the community. The story of the year's work, as unfolded by Mr. Charles Hill at the annual meeting, held at the Holborn Restaurant on May 10, was of notable interest. Mr. Hill referred with satisfaction to the refusal of a seven-day licence to the Crystal Palace, the failure of the express letter delivery system in London, the attempts in progress to suppress Sunday trading in various cities, the efforts of hairdressers and other classes to free themselves from Sunday labour, and the collapse of the Sunday Concerts at Covent Garden. Mr. R. Bell, general secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, who presided, said that if people had to pay double for what they bought on Sunday, they would realize how little of the Sunday labour they caused was necessary. He pointed out that since railway signalmen had been paid extra for Sunday work the number employed on Sundays had been diminished to one-third; and if the station men were paid in the same way, a similar result would be seen. The train men, too, were doing far more Sunday work than was really necessary, especially in connection with mineral traffic on certain lines.

A Christian in Commerce.

THE LATE MR. PETER TERRY.

IT would be difficult to over-estimate the value of the influence for good exercised in commercial circles by Christian men of business. They maintain high ideals in directions where the trend of affairs is towards mammon worship, and the abandonment of principle in a mad haste to become rich.

Such a champion of true and honest commerce was the late Mr. Peter Terry, whose death was recently recorded. He had been called "the father of the news trade," and the appellation was apt, for so long ago as 1818 he founded the firm of wholesale newspaper agents which bore his name. A man of energy and of uncompromising he came into public notice on several occasions when contesting with various evils of the day. He incurred some odium and suffered loss with regard to a paper which he believed to have an immoral tendency. He first refused to sell it, and then denounced it in public. His efforts, doubtless, helped to kill the undesirable production in question. He pursued a similar line of action with regard to other periodicals of a like nature, and with equally satisfactory results.

Actuated by strong principle, Mr. Terry declined to supply Sunday newspapers under any circumstances. One valuable customer whom he refused, retorted, "Then I will get all my papers elsewhere," and closed his account. Mr. Terry, however, stood firm, and the objecting customer soon returned. Another notable step in connection with the observance of the Lord's Day was the commencement of an action against a place of amusement which had begun to open its doors on Sunday. An injunction was duly obtained, ordering the Sunday opening to cease.

Mr. Terry was for by far the greater part of his life associated with religious work as a member of the Baptist body. In early days he attended Elim Chapel in Fetter Lane. Then came a visit to the well-known John Street Chapel, during the pastorate of Rev. Harington Evans, when, under the influence of a sermon on "Justification," preached by the minister, Mr. Terry realized the pardoning love of God in Christ.

In 1832 he became a member at John Street, and subsequently laboured long and well in various departments of Christian service.

AS A DISTRICT VISITOR

he proclaimed the Gospel to the ignorant and depraved in many dark homes of Metropolitan slums.

In Clerkenwell Workhouse he conducted services, and passed from ward to ward and bed to bed, speaking of his Master. In 1857 he was elected to the diaconate, during the pastorate of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, whom Mr. Terry held in deep esteem. On removing to New Southgate, Mr. Terry founded a Baptist church in that district; and when, later on, he made his home at Hornsey Rise, he became a member of Rev. J. R. Wood's church at Upper Holloway.

In the world of philanthropy, Mr. Terry's name was familiar, especially in connection with the Newsvendors' Benevolent Institution, founded by him in 1839, and which owed much to his efforts and gifts. He was also interested in the Bethel Asylum, Camberwell, and in the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind.

After Mr. Terry's retirement from business, in 1878, up to the time of his death, which occurred on April 2 last, at the age of ninety-four, he was largely occupied in enlarging the usefulness of various Christian and philanthropic undertakings; and regarding "the things of the Kingdom" he occasionally gave wise counsels in our columns.

The Stones in the Stream.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

ONE came from London carrying the sacred burden of responsibility, that only a pastor of a large church can understand. The other was from a manufacturing town further north, but the two men had become acquainted while staying at a boarding-house in a southern town. Winter was reluctantly leaving the land, and cautiously the flowers and beautiful foliage appeared.

After a walk together one morning, Pilfred was asking counsel of his companion, and they sat down beside a stream to talk. He was a Christian man, yet, like too many, allowing his Christian course to be hindered and checked by little interruptions. His business difficulties, his family troubles, he spoke of with unusual freedom, realizing the minister could sympathize.

"Do you notice that stone in the middle of the water there?" quietly asked McCleeton. "I have been watching how it turns the course of the stream; it dashes against the obstruction, then runs on either side, and does not regain its even flow." "One can easily remove that," said Pilfred, rising to dig it out with his stick.

"You'll disturb the surrounding sediment, and spoil the clear stream," replied McCleeton, desiring to carry on his line of thought. "Better do that and make the way straight; it will soon be clear again," and Pilfred resumed his seat. Mr. Cleeton resumed:—

"Haven't you heard of sermons in stones? and of looking 'not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen'? Now I find a parable here. The right and even flow of spiritual work has been disturbed and thwarted by a stony-hearted member in my church. It would stir up the sediment which gathers round such obstructions, so we let the wrong remain, and suffered the baneful consequences. I have learned the mistake as I gazed on yon stream."

"Would you apply that to social and business matters?"

"Yes, and to our own spiritual life too; you spoke of trouble in your family relationships, why not remove the stone, be open and frank. In business dig up the first hindrance to honest and transparent dealings, avoid the very appearance of evil, 'let yea be yea, and nay be nay.' I mean to take this lesson to myself, whatever you may do, for to-morrow I return to the duties of my church."

An hour passed on, and when they rose to go, the place where the stone had been was smooth and the water ran clear and merrily on.

"If 'every good gift is from above,' surely a helpful conversation must be reckoned as one of God's blessings," said Pilfred as they parted.

Three spring-tides came, and the third was followed by a summer of unusual heat. McCleeton, jaded and glad of rest, had again resorted to the southern town where his friends resided. Never had he forgotten the God-sent message by the brookside, and on the second day he walked along the promenade thinking of all the consequences.

The stream of church work was cleansed, misunderstandings cleared up, and hindrances removed, and he saw the work of the Lord prospering. Still, rejoicing as he could, he knew he must be vigilant, for Satan is busy with weeds and stones.

He made way for an invalid's chair to pass, but the sufferer's face attracted notice, when instantly they knew each other, and he turned and walked beside the chair, in which Pilfred, the strong man of three years ago, now sat.

Later on McCleeton went to the lodgings and talked with him of the sad affliction that had overtaken him.

"You remember, and I do, the things seen, which are only temporal, such as that simple stone in the stream, but I forgot the things seen through it—the unseen, which are eternal, and unremovable. The wrong went on. I lost my faith, troubles increased, business difficulties entrapped me, and I was crushed. The current ran in a wrong direction and gathered force, and paralysis crept over me, and here I am a hopeless invalid, a warning to others."

McCleeton spoke of comfort and sought to lift the burden, but opportunities lost never return. Wrongs unremoved befoul life's stream, and hurry on to ruin.

Let us each manfully face our task, pull out the stones, pluck out that which offends, and let the pure stream of righteousness and truth and grace flow unhindered, till all life's greatest possibilities are reached, the soul's highest purpose attained, and an abundant entrance be granted to the eternal kingdom of our Lord.

This world's no place for weaving
Light webs of fancies grand,
But for firm will, achieving
High purpose with strong hand.

If weaklings deem it cruel
That life so hard should be,
Deem thou all hard things fuel
For victories meant for thee.

A Prayer for London.

LORD, look on London. Turn thine eyes
On London's awful need,
Oh, hear thy people's suppliant cries:
For London, Lord, we plead.

Before this millioned multitude
Thy servants stand dismayed;
Their hearts are grieved, their souls subdued,
Their spirits sore afraid.

But every knee to Thee must bow;
No power can Thee appal.
Though we be filled with awe, yet Thou,
O God, art over all.

And Thou the mightiest mass of men
Canst with compassion see;
By prayer and supplication, then,
We bring these souls to Thee.

Thou who erst o'er Jerusalem
Didst shed the scalding tear,
Wilt surely sympathize with them
Who hold their city dear.

Help, help us, O Thou pitying Lord!
No other help we have.
And here Thy mighty Name record:—
Lord, London, London save!

The "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

THE "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union includes all the activities which, under God's providence, have sprung from the original work founded by Rev. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness in 1872—namely, the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. The several works in London, on the Congo, and in South America were incorporated under the new name in 1899. To these have since been added a mission in India. The directors are Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., Dr. Harry Guinness, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Their organ is the Regions Beyond, a monthly illustrated magazine, and the headquarters of the Union are at Harley House, Bow, E. For upwards of forty years has been engaged in active service for the Lord by voice and pen. As a young man, he was greatly blessed in the work of the great revival of 1859, especially in Ireland, and also in the succeeding years when the quickened interest in the deep things of God, which had been aroused in thousands of newly-converted souls, created open doors throughout the English-speaking world. After his marriage in 1860 to Miss Fanny Fitzgerald, he and his wife spent twelve years in travelling widely over Great Britain, the United States and Canada, Switzerland, and France, arousing the indifferent, and building up believers in their most holy faith. During this period they initiated in Paris a work of the same kind as that now associated with the honoured name of McAll. In 1870 the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war put an end to this, and they returned to London. Two years later was laid the foundation of that work for foreign missions which has made the family name a household word in every part of the world where the Gospel is preached to the heathen.

The East London Training Institute, begun at Stepney Green and afterwards transferred to Harley House, Bow, was at first destined to train for both home and foreign missions, and many of the earlier students went to evangelize neglected settlers in the Wild West. But foreign missions were always on the hearts of the founders; and their little magazine, Regions Beyond, whose name has now been given to the whole organization, strove, by its world-wide advocacy, to arouse hitherto dormant classes of Christians to their responsibility towards the heathen.

MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS,

the mother of the Congo Balolo Mission, as she has been affectionately called, was truly a remarkable woman. A former student of the Institute, now a minister in the United States, wrote to her family at the time of her death: "I think your dear mother was the greatest woman I ever met or shall meet. She had an imperial spirit and a passion which dominated her whole being for saving the world."

She passed away from her manifold labours on November 3, 1898; but her husband and children live to carry on the work so long shared with her. Among the mothers in Israel, eminent during the past century for their labours in the Lord's service, her name can never be forgotten. The memorial sketch, "Enter Thou," written by her daughter, gives a beautiful picture of her life and work.*

In the words of its honoured founder: "The Institute was established under a deep sense of the needs of the unevangelised heathen, and the amount of talent running to waste in the persons of young men and women who possess every qualification for becoming missionaries, except that they could not afford the necessary training." The one training institute soon developed into four, namely—Harley College, and Doric Lodge at Bow in the East of London, for the training of men and women respectively; the Berger Hall, also in the East End, where special training in nursing and maternity work is given to those deaconesses who desire it; and Cliffe College in Derbyshire, where the students are received during their first year. Altogether more than have passed through the institutions, the large majority having gone into the mission field under the auspices of more than thirty different societies, whilst a few have become independent and self-supporting workers. Of course the larger number are of British birth, but many other nationalities have been represented. The training is now exclusively directed to the foreign field, and every effort is made to secure all-round equipment—physical, intellectual, spiritual, and practical. To secure this last, Gospel work from the first is carried on among the working population of East London, which has resulted in the establishment of Berger Mission Hall, and its annexe, the Mackenzie Memorial Hall, where the medical branch of the work is carried on. The students also engage in varied evangelistic and pastoral work in and around the Metropolis, and in the towns and villages of Derbyshire.

The founders of the East London Institute had never contemplated undertaking a mission of their own. But Mr. Stanley's explorations of the Congo riveted their attention upon the new world of Central Africa, and the formation of the Livingstone Inland Mission on the Lower Congo, pioneered by Harley students, was their response. After some years this work was taken over by the American Baptist Missionary Union, retaining the workers recruited from the Institute. Later on some of these desired to respond to the invitation of a chief 800 miles in the interior to preach the Gospel to his people. The A.B.M.U. did not feel equal to such an extension of its responsibilities; and this led to the formation in 1889 of a separate work, to the inhabitants of the southern shores of the great horse-shoe bend of the Congo. This Mission now includes forty workers distributed among five stations. Alas! more than half as many have laid down their lives in that fearful climate; but since the Congo railway has been carried past the worst malarial region, much better health has been enjoyed by the missionaries.

On each of these stations there are native churches, some numbering thirty communicants. Of course the services are attended by a much larger number, often three or four hundred. Industrial, medical, and school work are carried on regularly, as well as preaching. Beside the services on the stations, the missionaries take it in turns to preach in the outlying districts.

Various languages are spoken in the vast region which it is sought to evangelize. The most important of these has already been reduced to writing, and portions of Scripture have been translated into it.

The work is yet in its infancy, but the workers look forward to a day of harvest. One missionary writes: "Our cook boy has just been received into the Church. He has stuck a notice on the cookhouse as follows: 'This is the house of Eyanya; Jesus has given me his Spirit, and his joy and his salvation. He has built his house in my heart, and I am his.'"

Mr. Bowen adds: "We are too apt to judge Christianity as it is found after many hundreds of years' teaching. I believe there are many believers in Jesus in the villages round us."

THE PERUVIAN AND ARGENTINE MISSIONS.

Dr. and Mrs. Guinness had long been interested in South America. The former, indeed, had wished at one time to join those who were taking up the work of Captain Allen Gardiner; and many students of the Institute had caught the enthusiasm and found their way there. In 1893 took place the memorable tour of Rev. G. Grubb and Mr. Millard, and an account of their journey was published, entitled "The Neglected Continent," by E. C. Millard, to which Miss Lucy Guinness contributed an historical sketch and summary of the missionary needs of South America. This was used to open many eyes to the immensity of the field. Over forty workers have gone thither from Harley College alone, some uniting with existing societies, others working independently.

The needs of Peru were specially laid upon the hearts of three young men—Messrs. Stark, Peters, and Jarrett. Religious freedom does not exist there, and no Protestant preacher had ever obtained a footing in Cuzco, the ancient capital and stronghold of Romanism. It was to this city that Messrs. Peters and Jarrett directed their efforts, while Mr. Stark worked in Callao, and subsequently with Mr. Patrick in Trujillo. Every device of fanaticism was resorted to, in order to dislodge them; and twice the clerical party succeeded, but the missionaries and their wives returned a third time, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Newell, of Reading, and they have now been in Cuzco for over a year. They have not been unmolested, but so far all efforts to expel them have failed.

At first these workers were independent, but they have now come under the ægis of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union, which has two centres in Peru—namely, Trujillo and Cuzco.

In the words of one worker, "Not only have they ranged against them the most highly-organized and fanatical of Churches, but also all the forces of infidelity. Rome, as she displays herself in South America, has alienated thinking minds, who, knowing no other form of religion but one they cannot accept, find refuge in deism and atheism." Those who are neither fanatical nor sceptical are

SUNK IN SPIRITUAL APATHY.

No public propaganda is permitted—no meetings, no school teaching. All must be accomplished by private personal influence. In time it may be possible to reach the Indians and Cholos (half castes) with the Gospel, by means of industrial missions.

In Argentina, the same difficulties are presented by the character of the people. But, politically speaking, there is full liberty given for the circulation of the Bible and preaching of the Gospel. The "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union has at present four workers in the Argentine Republic, all trained in Harley College, and others have recently sailed.

THE BEHAR MISSION.

The Behar Mission is only just begun. This province of Bengal contains 24,000,000 of people. The Baptists have long been working among them, and of late years several other societies have entered the field; but, making a liberal calculation with regard to the possible sphere of every missionary in that place, 22,000,000 must yet remain absolutely unreached. The overwhelming claims have impelled two students to carry the Gospel thither, viz.: Messrs. Banks and Hicks, and the close of this year will, it is hoped, find them established in work.

Thus the fields occupied have extended spontaneously in a manner never contemplated by its founders, but, as each successive step has been taken only in obedience to a manifold impulse of the Holy Spirit, it cannot be doubted that blessing will rest upon these various enterprizes, and that support will be forthcoming for those who have gone forth, trusting not in any circle of influential friends, and not in support of any denomination, but have gone forth solely in faith, and in obedience to God's Word.

Ecumenical Conference.

GREAT MEETINGS IN NEW YORK.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

DURING the past four years, careful and exacting preparation has been made for the success of the great Missionary Conference—April 21 to May 1. For several weeks special prayer meetings were held on its behalf. The work of preparation has borne fruit, and prayer has been graciously answered.

The little band of loyal-hearted men who met in Kettering a century ago, gave re-birth and new impulse to a movement which has girdled the world in its onward sweep, and has just been focussed in New York City. More than 600 missionaries assembled from many lands; nearly 3,000 delegates representing Evangelical Churches were present, and many thousand sympathizers attended to acknowledge the purpose and providence of God in the history of missions. The Conference, gratefully giving thanks to God for the past, sought to arouse the Church Universal for a more rapid and thorough endeavour to preach Christ to every creature.

The personnel of the Conference has been of the highest order. There have gathered astute statesmen of world-wide repute; scholars of international fame; eminent theologians; men foremost in the commercial world, promoters of great enterprises; missionaries of heroic deeds and self-sacrificing lives, who have written opening pages in

THE HISTORIES OF HERMIT NATIONS.

The programme was an exhaustive and instructive study. No one could read it thoughtfully and prayerfully without an increase of interest in the missionary enterprise, and the conviction that no other can so worthily occupy the spirit, soul, and body of a redeemed man. "Ye are my witnesses that I am God" was Jehovah's claim upon his people Israel; "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me...to the ends of the earth," was the promise and the claim of Jehovah - Jesus, spoken to his believing people as He ascended to the Father.

The programme began with the Authority and Purpose of Missions; the Source of their Power; and their Supreme and Determining Aim. Then the Field was surveyed in ten different sectional meetings, including twenty-eight countries. The Century was reviewed; Centennial Statistics were given; and Foreign Missions were shown to be under the Superintending Providence of God. This was the work of the first day.

The consideration of Evangelistic Work followed: The Character, Importance, and Conditions of Success; How to Present the Gospel so as to win souls; the Pervasive Influence of Missions; Native Agency in Relation to the Missionary; Training of Evangelists and Development of Leaders; Administrative Problems of Missions, such as Organization, Government, Conferences; German Methods; Life on the Field; Effect of Surroundings; Some Causes of Breakdown in Health. Such was the work of the second day.

PERSONAL DEALING;

The Relation of Missions to Discovery, Geography, Commerce, Colonization, Diplomacy, Philology, Science and Philosophy; and Present Problems in the relation of Missions to Governments—these were discussed in papers by able and experienced brethren, and were followed by addresses from Africa, India, and British Columbia.

The Native Church and Moral Questions gave rise to a spirited discussion, amongst other things, on the reception to membership, or otherwise, of men having more than one wife. The third day, a very important subject was that of Comity and Division of Fields of Labour—a burning question, to the vital character of which Missionaries abroad and Boards at home are becoming awake.

Woman's Work made Thursday a high day, second to none in enthusiastic interest, skilful management, and spiritual power. Self-support by Mission Churches, Medical Work, Relation to Non-Christian Religions, the Bible, Christian Literature, Education and Higher Education, were all considered suggestively, and as thoroughly as the circumstances would admit.

Then there were a business men's meeting, with 400 delegates; and a meeting for students and other young people. Besides which, there were sectional gatherings of Lutherans, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends, and others. The Japanese Christians of New York invited the Japanese delegates; Dr. Harry Guinness invited former students of Harley House, now delegates from various lands, of whom fourteen met him at his hotel. And one of the most important of all was an immense meeting, convened on Sunday night, to speak about the famine in India, in pursuance of an appeal made by the Indian delegates on the previous Tuesday night to the American public on behalf of the famine sufferers in India.

The daily papers of New York gave as much prominence to the Missionary Conference as their English confrères do to theatricals or races. There were fourteen columns in the New York Times of April 27!

THE SHREWD AMERICANS

realize that it is prudent as well as fair to supply information which interests the Christian portion of the community no less than that which attracts pleasure-lovers and politicians. Therefore, reports of papers which discuss missionary topics are given, sometimes in full, at other times more briefly, and always with the respect and sympathy which are their due.

The great Carnegie Hall was found inadequate to accommodate the rushing crowds. Nearly a dozen commodious church buildings were, in addition, utilized, and the meetings commenced with a total attendance of 16,000 in the day. The addresses were generally of a very high order, and they will reach through the Press

MILLIONS OF READERS.

The great newspapers have devoted their columns to extensive reports. These will be read in many languages, and in many lands.

Best of all, and beyond all human influence, the gracious Lord is Sovereign. At this Conference his Name was magnified, his Cross kept in view; his Word was honoured in its fullest integrity, and the Holy Spirit's presence was constantly invoked.

The Conference was opened under the chairmanship of a foremost statesman, ex-President Benjamin Harrison. There were addresses of welcome, and fitting responses. President McKinley welcomed the delegates on behalf of the nation, while Governor Roosevelt did the same on behalf of the great State of New York. Among other suitable expressions of sympathy, said:—The story of Christian missions is one of thrilling interest and marvellous results. The sacrifices of the missionaries for their fellow-men constitute one of the most glorious pages of the world's history. The missionary, of whatever church or ecclesiastical body, who devotes his life to the service of the Master and of man, carrying the torch of truth and enlightenment, deserves the gratitude and the homage of mankind. The noble, self-effacing, willing ministers of peace and goodwill should be classed with

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY

THE WORLD'S HEROES.

Wielding the sword of the Spirit, they have conquered ignorance and prejudice. They have been the pioneers of civilization. They have illumined the darkness of idolatry and superstition with the light of intelligence and truth. They have been messengers of righteousness and love. They have braved disease and danger and death, and in their exile have suffered unspeakable hardships, but their noble spirits have never wavered. They count their labour no sacrifice. "Away with the word in such a view and with such a thought," said David Livingstone. "It is emphatically no sacrifice; say, rather it is a privilege." They furnish us examples of forbearance and fortitude, of patience and unyielding purpose, and of a spirit which triumphs, not by the force of might, but by the majesty of right. They are placing in the hands of their brothers, less fortunate than themselves, the keys which unlock the treasures of knowledge and open the mind to noble aspirations for better conditions. Education is one of the indispensable steps of mission enterprise, and in some form must precede all successful work. The labours of missionaries, always difficult and trying, are no longer perilous, as in former times. In some quarters indifference and opposition have given place to aid and co-operation. A hundred years ago many of the fields were closed to missionary effort. Now almost everywhere is the open door, and only the map of the world now marks the extent of their thought and action.

GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT,

in a vigorous address, said: I wish it was in my power to convey my experience to those people—often well-meaning people—who speak about the inefficacy of foreign missions. I think if they really could realize but a tenth part of the work that is being done, and the work that has been done, they would realize that no more practical work, no work more productive of fruit for civilization, could exist than that work being carried on by the men and women who give their lives to preach the Gospel of Christ to mankind—the men and women who not only have preached, but have done; who have made action follow pledge, performance square with promise.

GENERAL HARRISON

responded to both President McKinley and Governor Roosevelt. Having thanked them for turning aside from their exacting official duties to express by their presence their active interest in work of foreign missions, he proceeded:—It is in this and out of this sacred Word of God that a system has come that makes life sweet. It is said that Hohenlohe, the German Chancellor, as he looked about over the world, said to a body of scholars that it seemed to him as if the era had returned when the saurians walked about the earth devouring the defenceless. He was addressing scholars, and he no doubt turned to scholars for relief. My friends, not to scholarship, nor invention, nor any of these notable and creditable developments of our era, but to the Word of God and the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, must we turn for deliverance and happiness. "Thy neighbour as thyself!"—that great second command of our Lord! In that and in the power it has attained and shall attain over the hearts of men, is our deliverance from the hand of which Hohenlohe spoke. The Church of God is

NOT A REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT.

It does not stir up rebellion. It does not set up intrigue. These missionaries going into foreign lands do not go to disturb political conditions; and yet, by the instilling of the principles of the Gospel of Christ—that God has made of one blood all people, and that the heart is the seat of the judge—the world is being rejuvenated. This doctrine is winning its quiet way through the world, and will yet bring the kingdom that is promised. "Thy neighbour as thyself!" Blot out of our constitution and law all that has been received from this Sacred Book, and what would be left to bind society together? It is a great thing that this great city, so full of activity and stir, has been so moved as to present to the Conference this assemblage.

Dr. Augustus H. Strong, President of Rochester Theological Seminary, spoke with great freedom and power on

THE AUTHORITY AND PURPOSE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

It was, in part, as follows:—Foreign missions are Christ's method of publishing God's redemption, and so of re-establishing God's authority over an apostate and revolted humanity. I derive the authority for Foreign Missions from Christ's express direction, from his single word, "Go." His one injunction to all his believing followers is "Go"—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation; go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations." It is the sublimest order ever given on earth. When I think of the breadth of the world that was to be subdued, of the time it has taken to subdue it, of the small numbers and the narrow views of those disciples, the audacity of that command seems almost insanity, until I realize that He is God, and that all other authority is but the shadow of his.

The authority for Foreign Missions is the authority of Christ's character, of his work, of his love, and of his life. How slowly that authority has dawned upon the minds of men. At first it must have seemed hardly more than the authority of a human teacher and example. The disciples knew nothing as yet of Christ's divine nature, or of his atoning work, but his character compelled their trust and allegiance. Noblesse oblige—nobility lays under obligation, not only its possessor, but all who come in contact with it. When Christ said "Go," his disciples went, because they saw Him going, to teach, to help, and to save.

There is a still larger conception of the authority for Foreign Missions. It is the authority of Christ as the inmost life of the church and of the universe. We learn that this love of Christ which constrains us is not simply our love to Christ, or his love to us, but rather his love in us. When I hear the word "Go," I hear no arbitrary command. It is which the Father spoke to Him, and He sends us only as He was sent by the Father. He imparts to us his own longing to redeem! He reveals to us the heart of God; He communicates to us the very life and movement of the Trinity; He takes our little boats in tow on the broad current that sets in the direction of

> That "one far-off divine event
> Toward which the whole creation moves."

The word "Go" discloses the secret of the universe. Since all things were created through Christ and for Him, and in Him all things consist, I can interpret by that word the whole course of history. By this word I can interpret the inarticulate groaning and travailing of nature—the plaintive song of every bird, the sighing of every breeze, the mighty currents of the ocean, and the steady pull of gravitation itself—all these co-operate with One who goes to proclaim his Gospel. The sun shines, and the heart of man beats within him, in order that this command may be obeyed. For this word "Go" is not simply the word of One who lived and died 1,900 years ago in Palestine, but of Him whose goings forth are from everlasting, and who is Himself the very truth, and love, and righteousness of God.

He has kindled his light. How long it has taken us to realize that the command to "Go" is addressed, not to official servants, but to all Christians; and that Christ's purpose is to make EVERY CONVERT A MISSIONARY.

Every enemy subdued is to become a recruiting officer, and the whole population is to be enlisted as his forces sweep on. Christian love begins at home; but it does not end at home. Like the circles set in motion when you throw a stone into calm water, it widens ever more in its gifts and its regards, until it encompasses the globe. What are churches for, but to make missionaries? What is education for, but to train them? What is commerce for, but to carry them? What is money for, but to send them? What is life itself for, but to fulfil the purpose of Foreign Missions, the enthroning of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men?

Sunday, April 22, was not the least important of these memorable ten days. Nearly 300 of the missionaries and delegates are said to have preached in various churches. Their addresses gave missionary information and stimulus to the thousands who thronged to hear their experiences in entering the doors opened in nearly every land to the Gospel of God.

The real work of the Conference began on Monday, April 23, with addresses of an exceedingly forcible character. The first was delivered by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, founder and superintendent of the China Inland Mission, who ranks in the Christian world among those whose sufferings have entitled them to the honours of martyrdom, discussed

THE SOURCE OF POWER IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In substance his address was similar to Dr. Strong's in its emphasis upon the position of Christ as the centre of the universe, and therefore the origin and the power of all aspirations and energies directed to the salvation of men.

To show the living, active, accessible power of God, the speaker told of a conference of a dozen missionaries in China in 1886 in which he participated. Help in men and money was needed. For eight days the conference prayed, fasting on alternate days. The conference was guided to ask for 100 missionaries and at least £10,000 additional within a year. The result was the offer of services from 600 persons. The most suitable were chosen and taken to China; when counted they numbered just 100. The sum of £11,000 was received, instead of £10,000. It had been asked for in large sums, so that the missionaries would not have to spend much time in acknowledging gifts. It came in eleven various amounts, the smallest being £250.

Those only who had seen the darkness of a heathen death-bed could realize with what despair they looked forward to the Judgment. They knew they were sinners, but knew nothing of God's atonement, nothing of the forgiveness which He had provided.

Mr. Taylor emphasized the fact that there are two ways of preaching the Gospel—one by giving instruction as to the truths of Christianity, the other by a direct appeal to the sinner to believe on the Lord Jesus for salvation, as soon as it has been declared to him. This, he remarked, is the way I have adopted. I try to get him for "whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." He gave numerous illustrative cases of the conversion of Chinese. One who heard the Gospel but once, had lived for fifteen years as a Christian in the interior, never seeing a missionary. When, finally, a missionary went there, he found this one Christian man and his family living and worshipping daily, a light in the province and known of all as a Christian family.

THE SUPREME AND DETERMINING AIM IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

This was the subject of Mr. Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. Mr. Speer animadverted forcibly upon what he described as the mischievous doctrine that the aim of missions was to reorganize governments and societies. Such indeed was the ultimate effect of successful missionary enterprise, but it could not properly and happily be its immediate purpose. What progress, for instance, could be made in Christianizing the Turkish Empire were missionary agencies to avow that their aims were political and social?

The aim of missions was predominantly religious and spiritual—not political, nor even philanthropic. The supreme aim of missions was to make Christ known to the world with a view to the salvation of men—all else being left to become the natural and inevitable fruit of that knowledge. Christians were bound to preach to every creature that Jesus Christ is his Saviour. But this did not exhaust the duty and responsibility of Christians; those to whom the word of life was spoken must also be gathered into the institution of the Christian Church. These two ends, and these only, were those which a true conception of Christian missions proposed—not to erect republics or limited monarchies; not to impose our modes of clothing upon alien peoples, or to remodel already clean social institutions because different from the Western.

Political and social regeneration, where needed, might be safely left to God, whose hold upon these matters the speaker could not believe had been lessened or weakened. Mr. Speer's address, which was delivered with much animation as well as earnestness, was the most successful of the morning in arousing the enthusiasm of the audience.

In the afternoon nine sectional meetings were held in different churches, in which missionaries from in all parts of the globe took part.

Rev. Dr. Hepburn, the first missionary to Japan, received an ovation from his audience. He was in feeble health and only spoke a few words. He said he was one of the five who translated the Bible into Japanese, and that when he went to the Empire, sixty years ago, there was not one Christian in it.

Dr. Ashmore, for more than fifty years a missionary in China, presided at a meeting in which that country was the subject of testimony. Rev. George Owen said that fifty-three societies were at work there, but that there were only 1,000 men and 800 women missionaries. There are, however, 100,000 church members, and 5,000 native teachers and preachers.

With regard to India and Ceylon, Dr. Wynkoop, secretary of the North India Bible Society, said the Bible had been translated into sixty-two languages and dialects. Of 117 Mohammedan converts in North India, sixty-two had become missionaries.

With regard to Oceania, Malaysia, and other island fields, Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, secretary of the London Missionary Society, described the South Sea Islands Missions. Dr. J. G. Paton, who has laboured in the New Hebrides for forty-two years, said the inhabitants were cannibals when he went there. Now there are 18,000 converts, 3,000 Church members, and 300 preachers and teachers. He appealed to the American people to stop supplying the natives with rum and firearms.

Mr. F. de P. Castells, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, said that, taking South America as a whole, it was a priest-ridden continent, and that the Romish system is so lightly held that many European and American Catholics worship in Protestant churches. Seven millions of people still adhere to the superstitions of their ancesters, and had never yet submitted to any ordinance.

In the evening Mr. Eugene Stock, secretary of the Church Missionary Society, reviewed the mission work of the century, dividing it into four peroids of twenty-five years each. He attributed the great advances of the last quarter-century largely to Mr. Moody's great revival of 1874 and the Mildmay Conference. Dr. J. S. Dennis supplied the following

throughout the world:—

Of societies directly engaged in conducting foreign missions, there are 249, distributed as follows: United States, 49; England, 42; Asia, 29; Africa, 28: Australasia and Oceania, 26; Germany, 15; Netherlands, 10; Canada, 8: Sweden, 7; West Indies, 11; Scotland, 7; Ireland and Norway, 4 each; Denmark, 3; France and Switzerland, 2 each; Wales and Finland, 1 each. The total income was 17,161,092dols., England leading off with 6,843,031dols.; United States, 5,403,048dols.; Germany, 1,430,151dols.; Scotland, 1,280,684dols.

The total number of missionaries, including ordained physicians, lay missionaries, married women not physicians, unmarried women not physicians, is 13,607, divided as follow: England, 5,136: United States, 4,110; Germany, 1,515; Scotland, 653. The United States leads in the number of physicians, having 274; England coming next, with 186.

The entire number of native helpers, including those ordained and unordained, teachers, &c., is 76,615, England having much the larger proportion — 27,795; United States, 16,605; Germany, 6,464; West Indies, 5,574; Australasia, 4,923. There are 5,233 stations, and 25,586 out-stations, or sub-stations. The number of organized churches is 10,993, English missions having 4,774; United States, 4,107; Germany, 564; West Indies, 558.

The total number of communicants is reported as 1,289,298, United States leading with 421,597; England, 278,548; Germany, 154,356; Africa, 132,280; West Indies, 102,554. The additions during the year as reported were 83,895; United States reports 31,970; England, 20,093; West Indies, 6,326; Scotland, 4,179. There are 14,940 Sunday Schools, with a membership of 764,684; United States leading with 7,231 schools and 344,385 members; England comes next with 2,875 schools, and 171,247 members; others following are Australasia, 1,921 schools, and 58,241 members.

Next come the West Indies, with 744 schools and 65,138 members. The total gifts of native Christians for the extension of the Gospel and for Christian education and philanthropy are 1,833,981dols.; the total of native Christian community, including, besides communicants, non-communicants of all ages, most of these items being estimated, is given at 4,327,283. United States Missions report 1,257,425; English Missions, 1,081,384; West Indies, 1,005,960; Germany 357,436.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World, gave a long, eloquent, and inspiring address on "The Superintending Providence of God in Missions." An abstract of this appears in another part of this issue.

On Tuesday many subjects were discussed by many missionaries. Perhaps the most noteworthy incident of the day was the earnest appeal of Dr. Pierson that the Conference should utter no uncertain sound as to the necessity of guarding the integrity of the inspired Word of God, and the sympathy evoked by him on this subject.

Mrs. E. H. Miller, Dean of the North-Western University, sent a very clever paper on the subject of "Giving," especially by women, in which several present-day modes for raising money were gently satirized and the use of business-like methods was advocated. Many questions bearing on the women's side of missions were discussed—Kindergartens, higher education, industrial training, and problems of zenana work being among them. The question of the marriage of missionaries was warmly discussed at one Church, speakers of experience and standing having widely divergent views. On this point Mr. Hudson Taylor said that the Chinese climate was much worse for women than for men, and that his mission made it a rule that their ladies must live three years in the country before marrying.

Dr. Grace Kimball, formerly a missionary in Turkey, but now resident physician at Vassar College, deprecated the placing of the duties and responsibilities of an evangelist upon a physician; but Dr. Carlton, of China, and Dr. Wilson, of Persia, took an opposite view.

At the meeting where Bible translation and distribution were considered, Canon Edmonds, of Exeter, gave a brief but interesting sketch of the history of the Bible.

Many interesting predictions were made about China's future by missionaries well acquainted with her past; and Rev. Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, who had given forty years of his life to India, and was about to "hasten back to give her the remainder of his days," told of the progress of Christianity there, and appealed for more missionaries.

EDUCATION IN MISSION WORK

was dealt with, on Wednesday, by Rev. W. T. A. Barber, Head Master of Levs School, Cambridge, a Commissioner of Education of the United States, and the Professor of Sociology and Missions, Bible Normal College, Springfield, Mass.; and addresses by these gentlemen were discussed by ten experienced men from all quarters of the globe.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson gave a warning note lest, in the effort to give higher education, the spiritual end in view should be subordinated to the assisting of the intellect. It was made evident that the successful mission equipment must include educational as well as evangelistic branches.

On the question of missionaries and Government protection, the large audience fully endorsed the sentiment that missionaries were as much entitled to protection as merchants or other citizens.

On this subject, President James B. Angell, of Michigan University and ex-Minister to Turkey, gave an address referring to Treaty guarantees, especially in respect of Turkey and China. While deprecating war being made on account of injuries to missionaries, he pointed out that if such evils were not remedied or prevented as against one class of citizens, other classes were likely to be treated in the same way. In conclusion, he expressed his satisfaction that the United States Government was taking steps to secure from Turkey the indemnity that she owed, and he hoped that the President and the Secretary of State would attain the object they had in view.

Rev. M. Phillips, London Missionary Society, described many of the good results from agitation by missionaries in India as to such things as the abolition of the burning alive of widows upon the death of their husbands, the destruction of pilgrims under the car of Juggernaut, the management by Government of heathen temples, and the persecution of converts.

Dr. Harry Guinness spoke of the success of the heroic efforts of a Swedish missionary (sent to the Congo Free State by an American society) to stop certain atrocities committed by Belgian officials. The rubber trade there had been quite revolutionized in consequence. He had, in days gone by, seen as many as eighty human hands, some of them those of women and children, brought in by soldiers in a single day. These had belonged to members of some tribe who had not given enough free labour or material to the local rubber trust.

Bishop Ridley, of Caledonia, B.C., spoke of the Government sympathy and aid in his work among the 35,000 Indians in his diocese. He said that, though he had not been wanted there, he had been needed. When he went there, not one of the nine languages had been reduced to writing; but now the natives were printing and binding their own books. He had himself translated the Bible into two languages.

The speakers on "Literature and Missions" put their instruction in very pleasant form, under the presidency of Canon Edmonds. Rev. Richard Lovett brought out the point that but for missions there would, over much of the globe, be no Christian literature. The history of the East India Company and of the Dutch Company had shown that commerce with uncivilized countries had done nothing to spread literature. Dr. Laws, of Lake Nyassa, had found in his district no missionary, school, or written language. Now seven languages have been reduced to writing, and there are 123 schools, 460 native teachers, and 15,000 pupils.

SOME ASIATIC PROBLEMS

were discussed in one of the subsidiary meetings. Among them were the questions of the reception of polygamists into Church membership; the reception of persons who do not profess faith in Christ, but are willing to become nominal Christians in order to be further instructed, and to bring their families under Christian influence; of whether a convert should work on Sunday or no, or whether he should take part in heathen marriage or idol feasts. In regard to the last three matters, severe punishment would follow failure to do as others do.

"Vernacular Literature," "Medical Training of Natives," and "Methods of Education" were all handled by experienced speakers, who were at one as to the goal, if possessing different views as to which path might be best to reach it.

METHODS OF SUPPORT

for missions engaged attention of meetings on Friday. The home boards had asked for information on this matter from workers on widely differing fields, and many papers and addresses were given in response to the call. The idea of self-support was evidently accepted by all. No speaker dissented, and facts, figures, and pleadings were given to maintain it. Dr. W. R. Lambuth, secretary of the Board of the M.E. Church, South, forcibly said: A missionary conscience is as much the need of an expanding church abroad as it is of a contributing church at home. If there is no conscience it must be created, or all is lost. There can be no true and permanent missionary spirit without conviction. The failure in self-support is largely at this point. Every church which has been Scripturally and wisely planted, not only possesses a missionary conscience which responds to the demands placed upon it, but will demonstrate by its fruitage its divine origin and its right to live. The missionary body throughout the world has come practically to be agreed in accepting the principle of self-support as fundamental, and the native church, during the past decade, has shown a marked growth in the sentiment of self-respecting maintenance of an aggressive missionary spirit.

Some speakers during the day, however, urged that care should be taken not to push the practice of self-support too far or two quickly upon native churches.

The Carnegie Hall was crowded half an hour before the time for commencing the "Laymen's Meeting." President SETH LOW, of Columbia University, introduced President ANGELL, who presided, and Mr. IRA D. SANKEY conducted the singing. The 400 vice-presidents included many of the wealthiest and best known merchants of the land. In his address, President Angell referred to his having visited three great mission fields, and went on to speak of what he thought of a missionary's life. Concerning these, he said:

First is that sad day which comes upon the father and mother when they must send their children home for education, when they so need the companionship of father and mother, and father and mother more need, perhaps, the companionship of their children.

The second is that great trial to the soul—to the moral and spiritual nature—which comes at last after months of solitude in a non-Christian community. The terrible weight of non-Christian thought and custom and habit seems to stifle spiritual life and hope itself. It is to the spiritual and moral life what imprisonment in a narrow cell is to the man who is robbed of the vital element of oxygen, and more than one missionary has found his reason tottering under it.

The third great trial is that which comes upon the missionary when, as he finds hope of harvest in sight, he is stunned by tidings that there must be fatal curtailment in effort, and that all this promise must be blasted because the churches at home are not ready to support this great and Godlike work. If the laymen of this country will furnish the means, the colleges of America will double the number of missionaries on the foreign field in five years.

President CAPEN, of the American Board, in a review of the success of missions, referred to Hawaii, of which he stated that eighty years ago the missionaries found the natives eating raw fish with the dogs, and then eating the dogs. Last year, with their proportion of church members, as compared with ours, of one to 120, their gifts were as one to six; forty years ago they were sending their own missionaries to neighbouring islands.

On Saturday the "Young People" had an innings, of which they made excellent use, and from which the foreign field is likely to gain large reinforcements later on. Mr. JOHN R. MOTT, president of the presided at the first meeting. Professor J. ROSS STEVENSON said that this important movement had already enrolled more than 5,000 members, of whom 1,550 were already on the foreign field. Mr. H. C. DUNCAN, chairman of the corresponding body in Great Britain, acknowledged the debt of his country to the United States, and said when the Union was formed there was no intercollegiate movement in Great Britain. Now there are 119 affiliated unions, and 2,000 students are enrolled in 300 societies for the study of the Word of God. During eight years were enrolled 1,720 student volunteers 381 of whom are women, and 560 of whom have reached the foreign fields. Over 50 per cent. of those who have completed their college course have already entered the foreign field. The missionary spirit is spreading in the colleges.

Dr. CHARLES CUTHBERT HALL, Principal of Union Theological Seminary, and next Haskell lecturer in India, delivered the chief address of the morning on missionary training. For the afternoon meeting, Mr. Mott again presided. Dr. WHITMAN gave a useful illustration in the first address when arguing that an enlargement of opportunity should be matched by increase of resources. "Sometimes new power is given to the world," he said, "and sometimes enlargement comes in the new form of the old power. Here is a parable from our daily lives: Man's hands, first formed to carry a few pounds weight, when taught to marry its strength with engines, lifts a mountain, so doing, not by multiplying elements within itself, but by understanding how to utilize the resources close by. Very likely we shall find that the principle of Christian service remains unchanged, leaving to us all the while the greatest flexibility in applying it."

Mr. S. EARL TAYLOR, of the Columbian University, Washington, D.C., said the great foes of foreign mission work were prejudice and indifference, and that both of these were born of ignorance. "Ask any boy of fifteen," he said, "to name the great military and naval heroes of his time, and he will tell you; but ask a group of young people for the names of the great heroes of the Cross, names that should be on every Christian tongue, and an embarrassed silence will ensue."

Mr. MOTT gave a stirring address, showing that the evangelizing of the whole world in this generation is well within the bounds of possibility, and pointing out, as he went along, the various modes and instrumentalities by which it can be done; as also the numerous agencies at the disposal of those who we set about the task. It was an earnest, inspiring speech, the results of which are likely to show themselves at an early day—and for all days till the Trumpet shall sound.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. PATON, of the New Hebrides, Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, Dr. GULICK, and others, spoke of the terrible curses of and of the hindrances these things form to the spread of the Gospel. Dr. WILBUR CRAFTS, of Washington, D.C., gave a cheery address, mentioning grounds for hope that future action against these evils might be successful, chiefly on account of a convention entered into by sixteen nations with regard to Central Africa, and partly because of Lord Kitchener's great object-lesson in total abstinence in Africa furnished by his last Soudan campaign, and his subsequent prohibition of liquor in that land.

In the evening a large meeting was convened to raise funds for the famine sufferers in India. Several American missionaries warmly commended the British Government for its efforts on behalf of the people, and a committee to receive contributions was formed, some forty of New York's most prominent citizens having given their names as being willing to act on it. The 2,000dols. collected was but a small earnest of what will speedily follow.

On Monday, Medical Missions and their work aroused the interest of large audiences. Drs. POST, of Syria; CHAMBERLAIN and SCUDDER, of India; HOWARD TAYLOR and ROBERT BEEBE, of China; AVISON, of Korea; and LYNCH, of the Congo, gave much valuable information. Dr. CROSS said, among other things: "What China needs to-day is an army of well-equipped, liberally supported unsectarian surgeons. It is not with the point of the bayonet, but with the point of the lancet, that we are to Christianise China." Several lady missionaries told terrible tales of heathen cruelty and fanaticism, especially in Asia.

In the evening many prominent men, including the venerable Dr. THEODORE CUYLER, spoke of the liquor traffic as a hindrance to mission work abroad.

An interesting occurrence the same evening was a reception by Chinese Christians of missionaries and delegates, the Chinese Consul here being present.

Sailors' Welcome Home.—Mr. J. Lampard writes: "The renewal of an old acquaintance, by a visit to the monthly muster at the Sailors' Welcome Home at Canning Town, was a happy experience. Although our friends had removed from their old quarters in Ratcliff Highway, one found no departure from the old hearty spiritual tone, which has ever characterized this valuable effort to evangelize sailors of all lands while in London. The cosmopolitan nature of the work was evidenced by the fact that speakers from India, Africa, Jamaica, and Sweden took part in the meeting. The hall is a cheery bright little spot. One was glad to hear of recent conversions, and to find an excellent congregation."

In West Africa.

WRITING from Monrovia, Liberia, Mr. W. F. Hawkins furnishes some particulars of the encouraging work accomplished at the Granger Mission: "The heathen of Liberia are very easily reached, opening their hearts to all who come in the name of peace. These people are not afraid of us as they are of white missionaries. They realise that we are their own kindred, so that we have their sympathy at once. We invite them to our little mission, and so many come that we have no room to seat them. The men, women, and children are perfectly delighted with pictures and object lessons. As they gaze at the picture of Christ nailed to the cross their minds instinctively inquire why He is there. Then comes the glorious opportunity of telling of the love of God. It touches their hearts, and many are thus led to leave all and follow Christ."

Mr. Hawkins describes the greatest evil to be encountered is the habitual drunkenness which prevails to the destruction of thousands of souls. "It is no rare sight to see fifty or sixty lying on the ground near their mud huts with no clothing on—some asleep, others half conscious. Mothers and fathers are to be seen selling their children for supplies of rum." A home has been provided for these neglected children, although at present there is only accommodation for twenty boys and girls. The building answers the purpose of dormitory, schoolhouse, and church.

Numbers of destitute boys and girls are turned away daily, as the insufficient accommodation of the home will not meet the requirements of the Mission. Mr. W. F. Hawkins' address is Granger Mission, Monrovia, Liberia, West Africa.

Notes from Madrid.

A PARTY of twenty-seven Eskimo from Labrador, some of them from as far north as the ice-bound shores of Alaska, are on their way to the Paris Exhibition, after having spent about two months in Madrid. They are simple, evangelical Christians, belonging to the Moravian Church, and their home-life and whole deportment are an honour to the Gospel. Their dogs accompany them, and all their household utensils, and seal-skin tents; their snowhouses are also well represented. Christians who may be visiting the Exhibition may well give a word of cheer to these simple loving followers of Jesus, so far from their native shores. We felt like parting from old friends as we said "Goodbye" early one morning last week at the railway station in Madrid, and the Eskimo women shed tears as they kissed our children. Most of them speak a little English, and one called John Oliver speaks well and acts as interpreter. Pastor Fliedner has had several meetings with them here.

The Christians meeting at Chamberi have been much encouraged by a visit from Mr. Faithfull's son Edgar, who has just left England as missionary to Central Africa. We all feel he has left a blessing behind him in Madrid.

The Gospel Hall at Marin (much opposed for many years) was opened last January, and crowded by a Bible-loving audience. It stands on rising ground, and towers above the surrounding houses, a monument to answered prayer and an encouragement to the poor persecuted followers of Jesus in this priest-ridden land. We were all delighted that dear Mr. and Mrs. Hoyle were able to see the completion of the work for which they had laboured and prayed.

Will your readers pray that God will work with an irresistible power on Madrid, so that this city, sunk in idolatry and fashion, bull fights and theatres, may know that the Son of Man (and not the priest) hath power on earth to-day to forgive sins?

LYDIA B. DE WIRTZ.

Italians in America.—It appears from an official return that, out of 750,000 Italians in the United States, there are but seventy-five priests of that nationality, or one in every 10,000; whereas in Italy there are no fewer than 76,000 Italian priests, or one in every 370 of the entire population of the country. These figures have been taken as pointing to the need for more priests in America; but doubtless they point to that "leakage" from Romanism which invariably follows the exodus of Romanists from a priest-dominated country.

The Railway Passengers.

SOME months ago we had a talk about trains, comparing them with life, and one sentence ran like this: "There are the passengers, and it would never do to forget them! Those that get into the train are like your thoughts; those that get out are like your deeds." Let us look and see what became of them.

All was rush and bustle at the terminus, for in ten minutes the express train to Opportunity Station would start, and everyone was eager to secure a seat. In spite of the notice over the barrier, "Tickets marked 'O' this way," Mr. Conscience, the ticket collector, was driven nearly wild by the endless queries: "Is this the right train?" "What time does it start?" "When will it arrive at its destination?" "Have we to change?" Every minute the crush became greater and greater, and he found it increasingly difficult to see if people had their right tickets; in fact, he got so confused at last that he let several through with wrong ones.

Had you gone on to the platform, you would have noticed that one of the carriages was marked "Reserved," and it is about the people who entered this carriage that I want to tell you.

Elbowing his way up the platform came a young man, looking very annoyed and indignant with everyone who jostled against him, quite forgetting that he was pushing them just as much. As he passed the "reserved" carriage the guard (Mr. Duty) was unlocking the door for two ladies. He, rudely pushing in front of them, chose the most comfortable seat, and soon became lost in the contents of his newspaper. Slightly surprised at the rude behaviour of Mr. Selfish (for that was his name), the two ladies followed him into the carriage and took their seats. The elder, Mrs. Love, carried with her a large basket and numerous queerly-shaped parcels, and was accompanied by her niece, Miss Sympathy.

Soon the guard opened the door again to admit two gentlemen, and a boy and girl—Mr. Sincerity, Mr. Knowledge, Miss Joy, and Master Content, her brother. Being suddenly called away, he forgot to lock the door, and presently four more passengers came hurrying up. The first was a lady, very hot and out of breath, whose name was Mrs. Anger. Behind her came Miss Conceit, and Miss Someday, a merry faced girl who laughed when the guard told her she was nearly late, remarking "Dear me, I will be more careful next time." By now the "reserved" carriage was uncomfortably full. It wanted but a few minutes to starting time, when along came the inspector, calling out "Tickets please," and on complaints being made to him as to the overcrowding, he found that four of the passengers had no right in that carriage at all. Instantly he bustled Mr. Selfish, Miss Conceit, Mrs. Anger, and Miss Someday into another. Just as the guard was about to wave his flag, Mr. Deceit came speeding up the platform. "Stop," cried Mr. Conscience, "you have not a ticket." "Season," replied Mr. Deceit running on, and tumbling into the carriage which contained Mr. Selfish, as the train steamed slowly out of the station.

Now, perhaps you know that the three signals used on the railway are coloured: (1) red, for danger; (2) green, for caution; and (3) white, for line clear.

All went well for a time; but suddenly the train drew up with a violent jerk, jolting Mr. Selfish out of his seat, and causing him to knock his head against Mrs. Anger, who sat opposite, which did not improve that lady's temper. Much annoyed, Mr. Selfish thrust his head out of the window. The green signal faced him, bearing the words "He that findeth his life shall lose it." "Not worth putting my head out for," he muttered, as he resumed his seat. Once more the train proceeded, but soon it began to shake alarmingly. This time Mr. Deceit looked out, but drew his head in sharply. "Whatever is the matter?" said Miss Someday, "you look as white as a sheet; is the danger signal out?" "No, no" replied Mr. Deceit, "it's nothing; just a trifle faint, that's all." The fact of the matter was the danger signal was out, and bore the words "Be sure your sin will find you out." The train coming to a standstill again, Miss Someday looked out, saying, as she did so, "I do wish this train would go on; I mean to do so many nice things when I get to Opportunity Station." "Why, how strange," she added; "there are three green signals out: one reads 'Be not wise in your own conceits' (that must be meant for you, Miss Conceit); another, 'The tongue is an unruly evil' (that is clearly meant for you, Mrs. Anger); and the third, 'The night cometh when no man can work,' though whom that can be meant for I can't imagine." "You, I should think," said Miss Conceit testily, who did not care to have people's attention attracted to her in this fashion.

At last, after a most unpleasant journey, they arrived at Opportunity Station. They had got in as thoughts; now let us see them as deeds. Once outside the station Mrs. Love set to work. She found in her basket many things that others were in need of—kind words for the little children, loving attention to the weak and aged, useful gifts for the poor—and little by little her basket emptied and her parcels diminished. Miss Sympathy set off down the street of "Bear ye one another's burdens," and she found so much to do—there were tears to be wiped away, hearts to be comforted, pain to be soothed, and care to be lightened. Miss Joy and Master Content ran away down the streets, popping into houses, bringing sunshine and happiness with them. Children ceased their grumbling when Master Content played with them, and they forgot to sigh about things they wanted, but could not have. Miss Joy tripped about like a sunbeam, and tired faces grew brighter and heavy hearts more cheerful as she smiled on them.

Mr. Sincerity found his way into many a home, proving a faithful and true friend, and men knew that his word was to be relied upon. Mr. Knowledge found many things from which he could learn—books, conversation, nature—and he used the information thus gained to the best advantage for himself and others.

And what about the other passengers? Mr. Selfish only troubled to go to the nearest shop and buy good things for himself, ignoring the pleading eyes of the little children who were looking in at the window. Miss Conceit wandered aimlessly about looking sulky and crestfallen, for the folk in Opportunity Town had little time to devote to her. Miss Someday only got as far as the platform of words, where she remained all day discussing the things she meant to do, but never did. Mrs. Anger visited some friends, and spent the greater part of the day in grumbling about the unpleasant journey down, and the inconvenience caused. Mr. Deceit stole into several houses, leaving behind him uneasy consciences and troubled minds.

Now, my dear children, don't you think the journey would have been far more pleasant if Mr. Conscience and Mr. Duty had been on the alert to keep out the wrong passengers, for five of those mentioned had the wrong tickets? So it is with your life; you must not keep only one part of it for Jesus Christ, but you must ask Him to help you keep the whole of it reserved for Him to fill, or your life will be less useful and beautiful than He would have it. Down the lines flash the signals of God's Word; pay good heed to them and you will journey safely on, whether through the village of Youth, the city of Manhood and Womanhood, or the town of Old Age. Remember, too, that thoughts without deeds do not amount to much, as Miss Someday teaches us. Opportunity Town is open to you: enter it and resolve in God's strength to

Do noble things, not dream them all day long,
And thus make life, death and that vast forever,
One grand sweet song.

Kate Hopkins.

TOPIC FOR MAY 20.

THE POWER OF A TEMPERATE LIFE. (Dan. i. 1-17.)

NEBUCHADNEZZAR carried Judah away in successive deportations. Daniel and his friends were the victims of one of the earliest. They were of the seed royal and were naturally richly gifted, dowered with those physical and intellectual endowments that are youth's richest possession (see verse 4).

It was the wise policy of the Babylonish monarchy to train the flower of the youth of conquered nations for the Civil Service. Examinations for positions in this body were instituted then as now. The young men who now prepare for and undergo the stiff Civil Service examination, preparatory to entering on the service of the State, are only following in the steps of young men of remote times, between which and our own there may have been much less essential difference than we suppose. In this way the Court of Babylon was able to procure the services of the brightest intellects it could obtain, and, at the same time, it attached to itself the representative men who otherwise had been the centres of disaffection and revolt.

The lead among this band of captive Hebrew youths was taken by Daniel. "He purposed in his heart." His objections to taking the food brought from the royal table lay in the fact that, according to the usual custom, it had been presented before an idol shrine before being served; and, though Daniel knew that "an idol was nothing in the world," yet to partake seemed to him to recognise the heathen rites, which his soul abhorred. Altogether, apart from his religious convictions, his decision was eminently wise. Nothing could be more destructive of high thinking and healthy living than to partake of those rich viands. Abstemiousness, a frugal diet, and abstinence from intoxicating drink are a first condition of health and success to all young people, especially in Eastern lands, but also in the home country. More people are killed by drinking beer and spirits, and maintaining English customs of eating and drinking in India and elsewhere, than ever fall victims to the deadly climate.

But the noticeable point is that Daniel made up his mind that he would abstain; and it was his strong resolution that heartened up the courage and directed the purpose of the rest. Had Daniel yielded, they might not have stood; but in his strength they stood strong. I have heard many good stories of Endeavourers leading others to take a stand for God and righteousness, who were encouraged by their attitude towards the Right, Good, and Pure. One of a C.E., who read the Topic in his breakfast hour at a large forge, leading others to declare themselves and gather around him; whilst another in a shop, where 100 tailors sat on the board, turned the whole company into a school of interested listeners.

God was with the young soul in its protest and endeavour, for Daniel was an Endeavourer indeed. The Divine favour rested on him, giving him the goodwill of the officials, and blessing the simple fare with which he contented himself. It would appear that the Prince of the Chamberlains did not dare to give the direct permission which the Hebrew youths sought, but apparently hinted that if his charge were as healthy and quick as the others, he would wink at the substitution of other diet. Thus Daniel was left to make his own bargain with the steward (compare vv. 10 and 11).

The lesson which these verses teach is very suggestive. All around us mighty men are falling, and lives of fair promise being wrecked by indulgence in luxurious diet, by the use of tobacco and alcohol. Oh, that every reader of these words, that all our membership, might be absolute in their refusal of all these articles of food and drink, which, whilst they tickle the palate, excite passion, induce grossness of habit, and hinder the equable balance of mind and heart! A special blessing from God lies as a benediction on a life of self-denial. It tallies with the nature of things. Health, peace, and success accompany such a resolution. And by the force of such an example many a companion is saved from the dire results of intemperance and vice. Daniel saved himself and his companions from nameless graves. F. B. MEYER.

C.E. NOTES.

The Eighth National C.E. Convention in Japan was held in Kobe, March 8-11. Dr. and Mrs. Clark were present, and, in speaking of some of the services, a correspondent writes—"We came down from that Mount of Transfiguration with a new sense of the blessedness of working and living for Christ."

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM (Matt. xiii. 24-33).

GOLDEN TEXT: "The field is the world" (Matt. xiii. 38).

INTRODUCTION.

WE have three short parables to-day from amongst the many spoken by our Lord: "For without a parable spake He not unto them" (34). In two of them Christ speaks of a field (24, 31), and in v. 38 He tells us what the field is. These two show the kingdom of God in the world; third shows the kingdom of God in man's heart. They can be taken as follows:

First, the People in the World.
Second, the Gospel in the World.
Third, the Gospel in the Heart.

Key for Blackboard.—Christ uses our earth as a picture of God's ground for God's seed. The three parables are briefly set out below.

PARABLE 1.

Notice the "twos" and what they each illustrate:

{Wheat, Tares.} {Householder, Enemy.} {Harvest, Reapers.} {Fire, Barn.}

Wheat and Tares.—The WHEAT (30) is the good seed (24); it represents the children of the kingdom (38); these are also children of God, joint heirs with Christ (Rom. viii. 17), friends of Christ (John xv. 15), brothers and sisters of Christ (Matt. xii. 50).

The TARES (25) are weeds (30), are children o the wicked one (38); they are quite apart, quite the opposite of the wheat. There is enmity between the two (Gen. iii. 15); they are against Christ (Matt. xii. 30); they belong to Satan (Acts xiii. 10); they are "of the devil" (1 John iii. 8).

The Householder and the Enemy.—The HOUSEHOLDER (24, 27) is the Son of Man (37). He is always sowing through his ministers, teachers, workers and others. THE ENEMY is (25, 28) the devil (39), and the devil is a reality; he is greedy for souls (1 Peter v. 8), he has no truth in him (John viii. 44). While the Household is "The Truth," he also deceiveth everyone he possibly can (Rev. xii.); he is real.

The Harvest and the Reapers.—The two go together; one belongs to the other. The HARVEST (30) is the end of the world (39); it is the time when the fruit shows itself, and the fruit proves what the plant is (26; John xv. 8). The harvest is another name for what we find in 1 Sam. xxv. 29; Mal. iii. 17; John x. 28; Col. iii. 4.

The Fire and the Barn. The FIRE is used for destroying (Mal. iv. 1; Rev. xviii. 8). The BARN, the "keeping" place, the "abiding" places in John xiv. 2; Rev. vii. 13, 14, "washed white," not "white-washed."

PARABLE 2.

The growing of the tiny mustard seed illustrates how the Gospel spreads through the world. The little seed was started at Bethlehem (Luke ii. 11, 12). It grew to twelve (Matt. x. 2). It grew to 3,000 (Acts ii. 41, 47). It grew to 5,000 (Acts iv. 4). To-day it has grown to millions: the stone is becoming a mountain (Dan. ii. 34, 35). See our orders to help it grow in Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; Luke xxiv. 47.

PARABLE 3.

As the woman puts the leaven in her basin in the midst of the dough to leaven the whole (1 Cor. v. 6; Gal. v. 9), so does the Gospel of the kingdom work in human hearts till the whole is influenced by its power—gradually, quietly, gently, but surely. (2 Cor. iii. 18), "Unto the same image from glory to glory; (Job xvii. 9), "Stronger and stronger;" (Psa. lxxxiv. 7), "From strength to strength;" (Prov. iv. 18), "More and more."

LESSONS WE LEARN.

To pray that God will make us children of the kingdom, for then we shall be safe for the heavenly barn when the harvest is gathered in. To ask Him to help us to help others: to give what we can that his glorious Gospel may spread throughout this earth.

To let the Gospel have its way in our own hearts, so that we may be able to overcome temptation and live for his glory.

Metropolitan Tabernacle. — The Poor Ministers Clothing Society will hold its annual meeting at the Tabernacle on Monday, June 18. The president, Mrs. Thomas Spurgeon, will be present to receive parcels of clothing and donations from friends to help poor ministers and their families in poor country districts. Material that can be made up is very acceptable. Parcels of clothing may be sent to the hon. sec., Metropolitan Tabernacle, London.

United Presbyterian Synod.

AS the members gathered up this year, the thought was in every heart that this would in all probability be the last of the Synods. Many forms had to be gone through and much formality observed before there could be consummated the union upon which they and their brethren of the Free Church some years ago set their hearts. But the goal is now well in sight. The retiring Moderator—Rev. Dr. John Robson, of Aberdeen, formerly missionary in Jamaica—improved the occasion, and at the same time dealt earnestly with the duty of the Christian Church in connection with the South African War, by his retiring sermon preached from Heb. xii. 26. He expressed the hope that the imperial spirit which had taken hold of the nation would in its spiritual counterpart take hold on the Church, that among her younger men men there would be an emulation to "go to the front;" and also declared that a wider union of churches must take place before Scotland could occupy the place it should in the work of evangelising the world.

The making up of the roll showed that, during the year, eleven ministers and one missionary had been called to the higher service. On nominations being called for, Rev. Dr. Alexander Mair (Morningside, Edinburgh) was unanimously called to the Moderator's chair.

DECREASING SABBATH SCHOOLS.

When presenting the report on Church Statistics, Rev. John Young called particular attention to those relating to Sabbath schools, where for the fourth year in succession a decrease had taken place. He did not think the change which had come over the work of the Church among the young was sufficient to account for this. A striking fact was that the corresponding diminution in the number of teachers had begun a year earlier than that among the scholars. Among other suggestions, he asked whether the habit of week-end visiting, as well as a following of their seniors in going less frequently to public worship, might not be among the causes at work, and asked that the whole question should be carefully looked into. Rev James Todd (Moffat) showed that the falling-off in the membership of Bible-classes amounted to almost the same percentage as in the case of the Sabbath schools, and said that the state of Sabbath observance seemed to be clearly reflected in these returns. Several gratifying testimonies to the increasing value of Christian Endeavour Societies served to brighten this rather gloomy side of the work of the Church. From another report it appeared that the small number of students for the ministry is still causing concern.

CHURCH UNION.

The reception of deputies from sister churches afforded the first opportunity for referring to the great question of the year. Principal Rainy declared that the manner in which both churches had refused to allow subordinate interests or feelings to intervene, had been a just ground of encouragement and a strong indication of singleness of heart—and had shown a great desire to do that thing which was called for by their Master in connection with his cause in Scotland. The other Free Church deputies were Rev. Dr. Wells (Glasgow) and Mr. James Guthrie (Brechin). Speaking on behalf of the English deputies, Rev. Dr. John Watson (Liverpool) revived memories and reminiscences of the early days of his ministry in Scotland. He was accompanied by Rev. A. H. Drysdale (Morpeth), Rev. John Steele (China), Mr. John Coull (Newcastle), Mr. Robert Coutts, and Mr. Robert Thomson. Wales was represented by Rev. Lewis Ellis (Rhyl).

LIFE AND WORK.

Under the report on Religion and Morals, considerable discussion took place on the present position of the temperance question. Among others, Professor Orr and the Lord Provost of Glasgow protested against the idea of compensation to publicans; and the motion finally passed took this position.

The Church Life and Work Report was a most interesting document. Testimony was borne to the value of the Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign. Lord Provost Chisholm said if the Church were not succeeding among young men as they would like, they must take the blame to themselves; and it was shown that he had the full sympathy of his audience as he said they were convinced that the class in question would not be attracted by talking on any light and frivolous functions to the Church services, nor by having dances at Sabbath-school gatherings, nor by amateur theatricals at guild meetings.

SUCCESS ABROAD.

The Synod culminates with the Wednesday Foreign Mission gatherings. The membership of the native churches has grown by 3,460 during the twelve months, bringing it up to 30,431. The mission stations in Rajputana are in districts suffering in the worst degree from the Indian famine. In accepting the care of orphan and destitute children, the missionaries are now responsible for 1,200 boys and girls, and are persuaded that the home congregations will provide all that is required for their maintenance and upbringing. The Famine Relief Fund of the Church has amounted to £9,548. The Zenana Mission is making rapid progress, there being now forty-seven workers in the field, nine of whom have full medical qualification.

The evening meeting was an enormous gathering. Dr. Laws told the story of the past and present of Livingstonia; Rev. Alexander Cruickshank related the triumphs and needs of Old Calabar; Dr. John Watson spoke on "The Debt of the Church to the People;" Dr. John Hosband, C.I.E., described the state of affairs in India; and addresses followed on "The Spiritual Awakening in Manchuria," and "Progress and Prospects of the Missionary Enterprise."

University Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE Oxford Pastorate meets a real need by its work among undergraduates, none the less real because quiet and unobtrusive. Leaving home, with its strong personal influence, and coming up here, where so much of the life is mechanical—we refer to the work in the schools—there is a big void in the heart; and life, in its deeper depths, is in danger of neglect. It is just here the Pastorate steps in and helps to supply what the Christian home imparted. In many cases we cannot but believe that the need is met, and many an undergraduate goes down thanking God for the friendly visit received, and the warm sympathy extended. The Pastorate should have a place in the prayers of all who are interested in our University life.

The annual Spring Conference of Delegates of the South Midland District Union was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Wednesday, when Rev. and Hon. W. Talbot Rice, President of the Oxford Y.M.C.A., presided. He also conducted the devotional meeting at noon. Perhaps the most interesting part of the day's proceedings was the discussion in the evening, on "Half-hours with the Associates," opened by Mr. C. E. Derham (general secretary of the Durham Y.M.C.A.). He urged that the busiest men, who were the best men, had half-hours to spare. He wanted these to consider how best they could use their leisure half-hours in winning young men. The duty must not be shirked because of its difficulty. Their supreme aim, their passion, must be Jesus Christ for young men, and young men for Jesus Christ.

A meeting in connection with the Factory Girls' Charity Holiday Fund was held in the hall of the New College on Thursday afternoon. Rev. H. Rashdall presided, and the report showed that 2,200 girls and women were sent to the country and the sea during the year 1899 for 3,700 weeks. The work of the society speaks for itself. As the Chairman very pithily said, if those whose real work lasted but two or three months of the year found it necessary to keep themselves going by looking forward to the vacations, how about those who had no holidays to look forward to? The work of the Society gave moral health and pleasure to those who could not otherwise obtain it, and introduced hope into lives that were all but hopeless.

Rev. Professor George Adam Smith is preaching a course of sermons on the Old Testament at Mansfield to large numbers of undergraduates. It is needful to have these subjects treated by wise and strong men. There is much unsettling of opinion, owing to a criticism that is merely destructive. We are greatly needing someone who will counteract this influence by a clear exposition of the text of Scripture, making it live in the power of the Holy Ghost, and thus prove its own inspiration. Dr. Smith's discourses have been very helpful.

CAMBRIDGE.

ARCHDEACON EMERY, preaching at the Abbey Church, Barnwell, recently referred with pleasure to the increase in the spiritual life of that part of Cambridge. In that church alone there were 182 communicants on Easter Sunday. Four years ago there were only thirty-six communicants. Those who knew Barnwell a few years ago will appreciate this great change.

The Archbishop of York preached the University sermon on April 29. His subject was the example of Christ, and his text 1 Peter ii. 21. The Bishop of Bristol preached the following Sunday on "Inspiration," basing his sermon on 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

On Sunday, May 6, sermons were preached on behalf of the C.M.S., and on the following day the anniversary meetings were held. The chief speakers were Right Rev. Bishop Johnson, of West Africa, and Rev. A. K. Finnimore, of Mauritius. The former alluded to the drink traffic as a great hindrance to missionary work, and said it was far worse than the slave trade ever was, even in its blackest character.

On Thursday, May 10, a meeting of the C.M.U. was held in Ridley Hall (by kind invitation of the Principal), when addresses were given by Archdeacon Phair, of Rupert's Land, and Rev. W. E. Burroughs. Professor Moule was in the chair, and in his opening remarks he made a very touching allusion to the death of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of whom Dr. Moule said, quoting from the book of Wisdom, "He being made perfect in a short time, fulfilled a long time." Many in Cambridge regret the death of Mr. Macgregor, whose addresses before the Christian Union were full of power and spiritual food.

Mr. H. H. Weir, the travelling secretary of the Student Volunteer M.U., has been in Cambridge, addressing meetings in the various colleges.

Scottish Notes.

THE monthly conference of the Ayrshire Christian Union was held in Bridge Street Hall, Girvan, on Saturday, March 5. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Rev. A. H. Charlton (Kilwinning), Mr. Richard Hill, Mr. John Climie, and Mr. W. C. Gray.

On Sabbath evening of last week, Dr. Talmage (Brooklyn) preached in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow (Rev. William Ross). The interest in the American preacher's visit was so great that the church was packed an hour before the time, and an overflow meeting was also crowded in every part. Dr. Talmage's text was 1 Samuel xxx. 24.

City Sparrows—the magazine of the Children's League of Pity—for May announces that the League has now branches established in all the Scottish counties save five. The Home at Murrayfield, Edinburgh, received thirty-one boys and girls last year, and sent forth thirty-three, all the girls going to service save those who were too young.

London City Mission.—Mr. Albert T. A. Millership, Association Secretary of the London City Mission, has a few vacant dates in June, July, and August, and would be pleased to occupy vacant pulpits on Sundays; or conduct short missions, ent, or seaside services in the Northern and Midland Counties. His address is 3, Bridewell Place, London, E.C.

Irish Notes.

WITH the advent of fine weather, open-air mission work on an extensive scale has recommenced in Phœnix Park, Dublin, and is carried on by different agencies on three or four evenings of every week.

Eight members of the Salvation Army have been summoned in Dublin for obstructing the thoroughfare in Middle Abbey Street by preaching the Gospel on a Sunday evening, and four of them have been fined £1 each or one month in gaol. While various political meetings are allowed to be held in the public streets, it is difficult to see on what principle of justice and fair play religious meetings can be prohibited. The worst of it is that smaller places will copy the example of Dublin, and will also try to check the public proclamation of the truth. Surely the offence of the Cross has not yet ceased!

The Jungle Tribes Mission, which is connected with the Irish Presbyterian Church, and which does not solicit subscriptions in the ordinary way, is doing a most encouraging work in India. During the year not only have the Sabbath services increased in numbers and in interest, but a medical missionary, Dr. McKaig, has been sent out, and several most promising conversions have recently taken place. The Irish General Assembly's Foreign Missions have also advanced rapidly during the year in India and China, where very large numbers of baptisms have taken place.

After making up for all losses by death and other causes there is a net increase this year of 277 in the membership of the Methodist Church. This is in accordance with the experience of several years past, on each of which an increase in membership has been reported.

The Irish Church Colportage Mission is doing a good and useful work. During the past year the four colporteurs employed sold 17,169 books or booklets, and of these nearly one-half were to Roman Catholics, while out of 53,000 books sold during the last five years 33,000 were Bibles or portions of the Bible. Mr. E. Chamney, one of the colporteurs who is about to take up work in connection with the South American Missionary Society, sold during the last year and eight months 4,000 books, of which 2,500 were Testaments or portions of Holy Scripture, and very many of these were to Roman Catholics.

The total receipts of the Hibernian Church Missionary Society for the past year amount to £22,560, being an increase of over £3,000 as compared with the previous year.

The Hibernian Band of Hope Union, which has now about 90,000 children connected with it, has held its annual May Day Festival in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, under the presidency of Sir Thomas Pile, Bart., Lord Mayor of Dublin, who stated that he was a total abstainer, and that over twenty-five years ago he and his wife signed the pledge through the instrumentality of Mr. William Carty, the founder of the Union, and said that the drink was the greatest curse of Ireland.

Protestant Rescue Home, Kingstown.

A SMALL but important work has been carried on for the past forty years in Kingstown, co. Dublin. It takes the form of a rescue home, in which fifteen erring women can be housed and instructed. During the past the Lord has given manifest tokens of his helping, both in things spiritual and temporal. Under its roof Roman Catholics and Protestants alike find shelter from evil, and are pointed to the Saviour.

At the present moment the Home and laundry is in danger of being closed owing to the exceptional circumstance of the expiration of the lease. The lords of the soil will only grant a new lease on condition that the premises be put in thorough repair. To accomplish this a sum of £300 is needed. This Home is almost self-supporting, but owing to the circumstances just mentioned an appeal is now made to Christians who would like to share in this effort to rescue the fallen.

Foreign Waiters in London.

COMBINING, in a general way, intelligence with politeness, and being exposed to peculiar hardships and temptations, the foreign waiter has special claims upon the interest and sympathy of the Christian public. At an early age he leaves his friends, and is bereft of the influences of the home circle. His avocation almost entirely separates him from social intercourse, and his hours of work are long and wearisome. Were it not for a frequent change of situation, with intermittent seasons of rest, the lot of these strangers in our midst would be physically and mentally unendurable.

These facts are set out with interesting succinctness in a booklet issued from the German Y.M.C.A. About twelve years ago, the Association entered upon Christian work in the interest of the foreign waiters, and it looks back upon efforts that have been greatly blessed of God. In 1892, the Christian Home for Waiters was opened in Clipstone Street, Portland Place, W. The enterprise has proved a conspicuous success, the premises being a centre of increasing activity for the spiritual and social welfare of its numerous guests.

The Home provides a temperance restaurant, and a reading and writing room for the use of visitors, free of charge. Sleeping accomodation is available on moderate terms, and there is an employment agency by which hundreds are annually assisted to situations. The premises are accessible for, and visited by, English as well as foreign waiters. So far the Home has been self-supporting; but development, so as to meet the growing needs, depends upon outside help.

Larger and more suitable premises are an immediate and urgent necessity, and to accomplish this the committee of the Association is asking for some £4,000. Copies of the booklet, "Our Waiters' Home," and other particulars of the work, may be had from the secretary, Mr. A. Scholten, at the Association headquarters, 28, Finsbury Square, E.C. The treasurer of the Association is Mr. E. Walser, Angel Court, Friday Street, E.C. A circular soliciting help bears the names of numerous influential promoters of Y.M.C.A. work, along with other well-known Christian philanthropists.

The Railway Mission.

WE have secured at Southport a very desirable residence, with a view of adopting it for a Convalescent Home for some twenty-five to thirty railway men, of various grades, who are needing change of air and rest. Our Home at St. Leonard's, under the care of Miss Dolby, who so kindly volunteered to take charge since it was opened in 1892, has proved such a blessing to some 1,700 railway employés that we are encouraged to take this step. We are earnestly hoping that the travelling public, as well as directors, shareholders, and the public in general, will give us their cordial support, and provide us with the sum of £1,000, which is required to furnish the building, and also become annual subscribers towards the maintenance of the Home.

Some 3,000 railway employés are injured by accident on the line every year, in addition to the large number on the sick list through exposure while on duty by night and day. Our Convalescent Home at St. Leonard's, which contains forty beds, is now full, and as all the beds have been occupied for some time, it has been found impossible to admit all the railway men who have applied for admission.

Samuel G. Sheppard, hon. treasurer.

Railway Mission, 1, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

The Victoria Institute held a meeting a few days ago, when Arhdeacon Sinclair reviewed the present aspect of science towards religion, and urged that, whatever might be the faults of our times, there was a deeper and more fruitful searching out the works of creation; and the greater the devotion of men of science, the more effectually did their researches demonstrate how rich and beyond the powers of the human intellect were the arguments for a Creator which nature afforded

London Tent Campaign.

AS previously announced, a proposal to encircle London with large Gospel tents is being energetically carried on. The first tent was opened at on Wednesday, 9th inst., in the presence of a large number assembled, many of whom on Monday and Tuesday evenings had gathered for prayer; there had also been previous meetings in which, with scarcely an exception, evangelical ministers of Ilford had taken part. Numbers of people gathered early in the evening; a choir of about seventy was in attendance; and Messrs. Leonard Weaver, William Grove, W. Notman, R. Edwards, and some of the Executive Committee, with a number of other workers, were present.

An earnest address was given by Mr. Leonard Weaver, chiefly to Christians, Miss Angel singing the Gospel with great tenderness to about 800 or 1,000 persons.

On Friday evening, the Gospel was with power, several souls coming out and confessing Christ as their Saviour.

On Sunday, Mr. Varley, preaching in the afternoon and Mr. W. Notman in the evening, the Word was owned of God, and this was a day of much blessing. On Monday night too several professed to find salvation after Mr. Varley's address.

EDMONTON.

On Saturday last the second tent at Edmonton, opposite Silver Street Station, was opened. This is seated for nearly 2,500, and a very large number gathered for the opening, including some who were converted during the services of the tent at Tottenham two years ago.

Mr. Leonard Weaver preached on the Sunday morning to men, many rising for prayer. The meeting in the afternoon was a stirring one, and in the evening—in spite of the cool weather—the tent was filled, the workers leaving a little before 10, up to which hour there were still some seeking Christ.

The next tent will be opened in Clapham Road on Wednesday, May 16, D.V.

Friendless and Fallen.

INTERESTING incidents illustrating the good results of the work of the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge, are continually coming to hand, while the need for such places is seen by the following letter recently received.

"E—— is not able to write. . . . She is a clean bright looking girl. Poor child, she has had very little Christian teaching; her father drank himself to death, and was most cruel to his children when drunk. She does not remember her mother . . . "The writer was communicated with at once to send the girl for training in the Jubilee Training Home.

By the same post a letter was received from a former inmate, which is encouraging:—"Just a line to let you know how I am getting on. . . . I was baptized last Sunday. I go out this Sunday to be made a member of the Church. I remember your words when you spoke to me that Monday morning . . . you said, 'My dear girl, you never have been saved.' Jesus is very precious to me now, and by the help of God I mean to be a blessing to those about me . . ." Further particulars of the work of the Homes and Night Refuge will be sent on application to Mr. William J. Taylor, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

Union Tabernacle.—The fourteenth anniversary of the work at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, was held recently. The occasion was marked by a number of services in which the pastor (Rev. D. M. Cameron), Dr. Cronin, and other friends took part. A special feature was a conference on "Revival," in the course of which Messrs. A. Garstin, Leonard Weaver, and others, gave addresses. At the evening meeting, Mr. Cameron said that the work had been carried on for fourteen years in a densely populated district, and was hampered by the want of a hall for work amongst young people. £500 is needed in order to carry out the proposed improvements and enlargement

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

A FERVENT and prayerful anticipation of coming revival characterized the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last. Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, gave some account of the principal meetings at the recent Ecumenical Conference in New York, and recalled some of the most notable utterances, giving their gist and moral. Subsequently the meeting joined in singing Miss Fanny Crosby's well-known hymn, "Some day the silver cord will break," with its chorus, "I shall see Him face to face," which had proved so helpful, under Mr. Sankey's leadership, at the conference. Next came some vivid testimonies from a number of the evangelists present. Mr. Leonard Weaver briefly reviewed the position of the London Tent Campaign. At Edmonton, the first meeting had been attended by about a thousand people, and many had sought the Saviour. Mr. Henry Varley told of blessing at the Talbot Tabernacle, and also in connection with the tent work at Ilford. Mr. Ned Wright has been engaged in work among the rough characters of the "New Cut," in South London. Some of them had been deeply convinced of sin, and had been brought to the Lord. Mr. G. F. Assiter spoke of cheering signs of revival in a difficult field at Hornsey: and Mr. A. Garstin related how, at a meeting at Junction Road, N., an old lady had sought salvation on the hall staircase.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Temperance Society has now over 1,300 members banded together for this special work.

The committee of the Central London Association have placed at the disposal of the Lord Mayor twenty beds in their holiday home, Shaftesbury House, Margate, for the use of members of the City of London Imperial Volunteers invalided home through wounds or sickness incurred in South Africa; and the offer has been cordially accepted.

The half-yearly Conference of the Manchester District Union was held at Oldham on April 28. About seventy delegates were present, representing thirteen different associations. At the afternoon session, papers were read dealing with such topics as "How to keep in Touch with Members," Mr. H. Ward (Blackburn); "Cycle Mission Corps," Mr. J. Bennett (Ashton); "Young Men in the Regions Beyond," Mr. W. J. Dobson (Preston). The reports from the various associations were encouraging.

The Y.M.C.A. in the Bristol suburb of Totterdown has just opened a commodious new building, costing upwards of £5,000. The Association developed from a Bible class, started some years ago by Mr. J. C. Marsh, the secresary; and the present undertaking has been rendered possible, primarily by the lead of Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry.

At Grosvenor House, on May 5, a meeting was held in furtherance of a scheme promoted by the North-East Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s to further work for young men in the East End of London. Lord Kinnaird occupied the chair, and the Archdeacon of London, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Sir T. F. Buxton, and others took part in the proceedings. There was a good attendance, and gifts and promises were realized in aid of the fund, amounting to over £500.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught paid a visit to Newcastle-on-Tyne, on May 9, for the purpose of opening the fine new buildings of the local Y.M.C.A. Their Royal Highnesses were accorded a great popular demonstration. They proceeded direct from the railway station to the new buildings, which they duly opened, after an appropriate speech by the president, Mr. Alderman Stephenson, a sympathetic reply on the part of the Duke, and a reception by the Duchess of purses of gold in aid of the building fund. Amongst those who were present were the Earl and Countess Grey, the American Ambassador (Hon. Joseph Choate), and the Earl and Countess of Pembroke. The rooms were inspected, and the royal visitors were then escorted to the Assembly Rooms, where they were entertained to luncheon by the Mayor and City Council. The buildings are probably the finest Association premises in the country. They occupy a most central position, and are splendidly fitted throughout. The cost has been upwards of £43,000. £1,569 was received in donations on the day of opening.

Soldiers in South Africa.

THE work of the Soldiers' Christian Association continues to make good progress at many centres. Mr. A. H. Wheeler, the secretary, forwards some extracts from letters of workers at Ladysmith. One says: "I have not had time to draw rations for two days, the work is so great. Have to go about one-and-a-half miles for them. To-day I have met many of the S.C.A. members in the Manchesters and Gordons, &c. They are all so glad that the marquee is here for them. We had a splendid meeting to-night at 6.30. All chairs and forms were soon filled up; I doubled up the tables and laid them down as seats; very soon we had the largest congregation of men as yet. God was truly in our midst, and many will yet give testimony as to blessings received in our marquee."

In another communication we read:—"Visited Somerset Regiment to-day. Saw Mr. Ransley, who, I am glad to say, has been having times of much blessing, and souls are being saved. To-day we have had repeated tokens of the way God is using us among our comrades. In 13th Hussars sinners are being saved, and backsliders restored. How glad I am, for I know this news will cheer many devoted servants of God in our Irish Soldiers' Homes, who spent much trying time sowing the seed in this regiment. One dear lad, lying sick with fever, asked a Christian if he would go and bring that 'Scotch fellow' (meaning me). What joy it was to be able to help this poor lad. He wanted me to write to his father. I found out that he was in great misery as a backslider, but now he says that he is right with God. Tears filled his eyes as he spoke. Our open-air meeting was a powerful one, and some sought the Saviour."

The Late Mr. H. L. Hastings.

AS a tribute to the memory of this departed Christian worker, it is proposed to publish a memorial edition of 1,000,000 copies of his striking lecture, "The Inspiration of the Bible."

It is the desire of the family of the deceased to distribute half a million copies in India, for which aid is solicited. Amongst the student class, ample scope would be found for a widespread circulation of the booklet; while the Y.M.C.A.'s of Calcutta, Bombay, Lahore, Madras, and Colombo would arrange for placing copies in large centres of the population. The edition can be printed and circulated in India at the uniform rate of 20 dols. per 1,000 copies.

Doubtless there are many willing to assist in this effort to further the Evangelization of India, and perpetuate the memory of one who, for more than half a century, devoted himself, with untiring energy and personal sacrifice, to the promotion of the interests of the Church of Christ and the proclaiming of his Gospel.

Correspondence may be addressed to Mrs. H. L. Hastings, 49, Cornhill, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

World's Y.W.C.A.—An interesting meeting was held on Tuesday afternoon, May 8, at 11, Bryanston Square (by the kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Denny), to welcome Miss Reynolds, General Secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A., on her return from visiting the various associations in India. Miss Reynolds gave a graphic account of some of her impressions of undertakings carried on under various conditions and surroundings in the different parts of India, and dwelt strongly on the great need for more workers. Her account of the work in Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, as well as in smaller stations and in Ceylon, was most encouraging. Mr. J. Campbell White followed with an earnest appeal for workers amongst the Europeans in India.

The London Evangelistic Singers' Union.—The first annual meeting was held at Mildmay on April 30, Mr. W. H. Seagram in the chair. The report showed substantial progress, and useful work done during the year. The membership is now 255. The necessary business was interspersed with the singing of several pieces from the "Christian Choir" and the "Gospel Male Chorus Book." A letter of congratulation was read from Mr. Sankey, expressing the hope that the Union might be able to be present at the silver jubilee meetings of the London choirs in September, and meet many old friends of the 1875 campaign. A special committee was appointed to arrange with Mr. Sankey. The hon. treasurer of the Union is Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N.

British Soldiers in India.

REV. DR. BOGGS, of the American Baptist Mission in India, is at present in England endeavouring to interest Christian people in an important undertaking at Secunderabad. He writes:—

"There are ordinarily about 70,000 British soldiers in India. Thirteen thousand new men are sent out every year, and as many return to England, or are transferred to other stations in the East. The great majority of these go to India as young men, lads from the homes and firesides of Great Britain; and on their arrival in India they are exposed to terrific temptation.

"Secunderabad is the largest garrison in India, with perhaps one exception. The British force there usually comprises two regiments of infantry, one regiment of cavalry, and four batteries of artillery—say nearly 4,000 men altogether. The mission with which I am connected (the American Baptist Telugu Mission) has had a station at Secunderabad for upwards of twenty years. From the first our missionaries have been interested in the spiritual welfare of the soldiers there, and have given more or less time to this branch of work. All along during the following years men have been converted there, and helped to live Christian lives.

"Five years ago I was transferred to that station, and it has been my privilege to see much of the Gospel's power. We have seen many saved from the whirlpool of vice around them, and, by God's grace, built up into steadfast Christians. From the Afghan frontier campaign, from Burmah, from England, from Ladysmith and Modder River we have received letters from dear brethren, who look back to Secunderabad either as or the place where they found a full salvation. Some have written that they had reason to thank God for ever for sending their regiment to that station, and for turning their feet towards that little chapel where they found a living Saviour. There are at present in South Africa about twenty members of that little flock.

"And now our need is a new chapel for the better carrying on of this work. The present building is unsuitable in several respects. It is part of a dwelling-house. It is small, and it has to be used as a native schoolroom all the week. Moreover, it is 'out of bounds' for the troops whenever there is epidemic disease in the town. We wish to build a new chapel, to seat 300 or 400 people; and possibly, if the money contributed will warrant it, a prayer and reading room attached, where we may have a small library of books and Christian papers.

"The military authorities at Secunderabad have already given their sanction to the erection of such a building, and the plans are ready. We are waiting only for the means. £700 or £800 would suffice for the chapel. If we could get £1,000, we would be able to add the reading and prayer room, &c. We have raised something in India—about £30. Our soldier brethren are praying for the success of my visit to England.

"Though I have been transferred to another station, my interest in Secunderabad is the same; and my successor there, Rev. W. E. Hopkins, and those associated with him, are carrying on the same work. I shall be glad to give an account of the work, either in addresses at public meetings or in smaller gatherings. My address in London is 23, Torrington Square, W.C."

London Reform Union.—The seventh annual report of this Union indicates much progress in several directions. Its efforts to secure an improved service of workmen's trains on the great trunk lines in and out of London have been rewarded, and many thousands of workpeople have had their hardships lessened, and the strain on their slender resources lightened, by the effective action of the Union. The various publications have done much in the dissemination of progressive ideas, and remedies for the removal of social evils. The secretary is Mr. F. W. Galton, Trafalgar Buildings, Charing Cross, W.C.

Evangelistic.

Mr. C. Inglis at Walsall.

MR. CHAS. INGLIS has just concluded a ten days' mission in connection with the Walsall Y.M.C.A. with very gratifying results. A number of young men accepted Christ as their Saviour, and many believers were spiritually awakened.

As the meetings proceeded, great interest was manifested in the afternoon Bible readings and the evening services. The testimony given at the praise meeting, and the letters of thanks received by the secretary, combined with the large increase at the Sunday afternoon Bible class, furnished proof that "signs and wonders" followed the faithful messages of the missioner.

The last Sunday was a memorable day, Mr. Inglis preaching four times in the different places of worship. Many inquirers were dealt with personally. C. B.

Chester Races.

Writing with respect to the work of the Open-Air Mission at Chester, Mr. Levermore says: "At the first service a man was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ. He said that he was going to Liverpool to make an end of his life, when he was led to the meeting. On the course during the 'Cup' day a strong man was quite broken down with contrition. At another service several backsliders attending the races were restored, and at once started giving away tracts on the spot. The evening service in the market square was impressive. Mr. Barry Wake spoke to a large crowd, and Mr. F. Cockrem also took part. On the two following evenings the interest increased: people knelt upon the wet ground, seeking the Lord in prayer. At one afternoon service several yielded to Christ. Thus, in the place where, thirty years ago, Reginald Radcliffe, Richard Weaver, and James Jones were imprisoned for Christ's sake, it has pleased God to pour out streams of salvation."

Mr. Henry Thorne at Stockwell.

The mission which has just been concluded at Stockwell Baptist Church (Rev. Arthur Mursell) has been one of blessing. Our hearts are filled with gratitude for its fruitful character, and for the stimulus it has given to the work of the Church. After earnest preparation by the Church, Mr. Thorne commenced his mission on Saturday, April 28. The Sunday services were well attended, inquirers coming forward each evening at the close; while during the week Bible readings were held each afternoon, and were much appreciated by those who attended. The week evening services were marked by deep earnestness, and we believe many were brought "out of darkness into light." The converts are chiefly among the young people of the congregation and Sunday school, the earnest and persuasive words of Mr. Thorne bringing many of them to decision. The mission has been characterized by quiet solemnity; the presence of God was manifestly felt amongst us.

The Weaver Brothers at Leith, N.B.

For the third time the Weaver Brothers have visited this town, at the invitation of the United Fellowship Union, for a two weeks' mission. The first week's meetings were held in Ebenezer U.P. Church. On the first Sabbath the church was densely crowded. At the close a number of persons confessed Christ. During the week the inquiry room was filled every night with seekers. During the second week the meetings were held in the Wesleyan Church. At the Sabbath evening service the doors had to be closed upon the crowd, many failing to gain admittance. When the invitation was given, men and women came boldly from all parts of the church seeking Christ. The second week was one of joyous reaping. The greatest unity prevailed, and ministers of all denominations were present at the services. A conference was held on the Saturday, presided over by Rev. Peter Wilson. Rev. Dr. John Smith, and Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver took part. This closed one of the most blessed missions Leith has seen.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey's Movements.

Mr. Sankey has paid a visit to Danbury, Conn., U.S.A., on behalf of the funds of the local Y.M.C.A. Two meetings had been arranged, that in the afternoon being in the First Congregational Church. The crowd was so large that an overflow gathering was announced to be held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that building also was filled to overflowing. In the evening the attendances were again very large. Mr. Sankey sang a number of the well-known hymns with which his name is associated, notably the "Ninety and Nine." He also sang the memorial hymn which he had rendered at the grave of Mr. D. L. Moody. Mr. Sankey gave reminiscences of his journey to Palestine, interspersing his address with evangelistic appeals and invitations.

At a meeting in Piedmont Church, Worcester, held in the interest of the local Christian Endeavour work, the building was densely crowded in spite of a rain storm, and Mr. Sankey spoke at length of his work in connection with Mr. Moody, sang a number of hymns, and related with much pathos how some of them came to be written. Mr. Sankey also expressed regret that he would be unable to attend the London Christian Endeavour Convention in July, but said that he hoped to be present and sing at the opening of the Metropolitan Tabernacle in September.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a fruitful mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E. During the past month a large number passed into the inquiry room to be dealt with concerning their spiritual life. Some very interesting cases were among those who sought assistance at the hands of the workers. One man said he dare not leave until he knew he was saved. He found peace, and during the rest of the month worked hard getting others to attend the meetings. A young man of twenty-eight, a victim to gambling, who was in great agony of soul, was set free. A drunkard of many years cried bitterly for mercy, and became a changed character. A backslider through domestic trouble had been seeking to drown it in worldly pleasure, and was on his way to the music hall to have, as he said, "a thorough burst up." He had come to the East End, where he was unknown. Passing the Great Assembly Hall, he looked in to see what was going on. The Word went home, and he went into the inquiry room. His agony of soul when reviewing his past was terrible. The Lord that night restored unto him the joy of his salvation, and he went home to confess and rejoice over his deliverance. The prayers of many follow Mr. Collins to his future work for the Lord. During the month Master Percy Kahn sang at the Sunday evening meetings.

Rev. John McNeill at Govan.

To see from 700 to 800 working men in a church on a wet week-night, listening attentively and eagerly to a Gospel address, is a sight worth seeing, more especially since many church pews are almost empty of such men even on the Sabbath. This was the sight that greeted our eyes in looking over on the audience from the pulpit-platform of Free St. Mary's Church, Govan, on Thursday, May 3. Govan, it should be said, is in the south-west of Glasgow, and is one of the centres of the great shipbuilding industry for which the Clyde is famous. It was in this same district, and in the same church, that Rev. John McNeill conducted a fruitful mission in connection with the Evangelistic Campaign. It was felt at the time that the closing of the mission at the end of the pre-arranged fortnight was to be regretted, the meetings being so large and the interest so great. Rev. Dr. Howie, who has been prominently associated with evangelistic work in the city for the space of forty years, ministers in Free St. Mary's, and without a doubt a vigorous, earnest ministry, such as his is, paved and prepared the way for Mr. McNeill's visit. It was in Dr. Howie's church that Mr. Richard Weaver was to have preached and conducted a mission at the time when death stepped in and stayed the veteran evangelist's career. Mr. McNeill has now returned to Free St. Mary's, and is conducting a mission for men only. He is thoroughly at home with the working class, as indeed he is with any class. In arranging the present mission, his aim is to get at the working people, of which class Govan, as a huge industrial centre, has a large share.

Commencing on Sabbath evening, April 29, with an audience of over 1,200, the meetings have been continued nightly. Mr. McNeill was advertised for one week; but on intimating that, with the men's consent and desire, he would continue another week, they indicated their desire that he should go on. Mr. McNeill is also conducting meetings in the ship-yards during the dinner hour. The addresses have a freshness that interests and charms. The result of the mission is that men are being led to Christ. The spirit of hearing is very manifest, the preacher being earnestly followed as he goes on from point to point in his Gospel expositions and appeals. J.C.

Mr. Henry Varley's visit to the Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, on Sunday last, proved to be one of great interest and blessing. Large audiences listened with deep attention to the stirring expositions of Scripture which were given. Mr. Varley referred to the important movement commenced last week in connection with the Tent Mission.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been labouring for six months in evangelistic work in the United States. He has held missions in Boston, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, and other cities. Mr. Telford is expected in England on May 30, and is to begin a month's mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., on Sunday, June 3.—Writing from Edinburgh, Mr. R. Craig says, "We have commenced summer open-air work in connection with the Carubbers Close Mission and the Y.M.C.A., with signs of blessing.—Mr. Leng, of the City of London Police Institute, has, with a number of converted policemen, conducted a five days' mission with the Primitive Methodists, Balham Grove. A number of young people yielded to Christ. Mr. Leng is, with his friends, open to undertake such missions, and may be addressed, 49, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

Church of England.

Rev. Edward Henry Bryan, formerly vicar of Hensall, Yorkshire, whose extreme views and practices aroused such attention, has been received into the church of Rome.

The annual May Day Service for working men at Holy Trinity, Burton-on-Trent, was held last week, and, as usual, commenced at 5 a.m. The Archdeacon of London preached, and was listened to by a congregation of 1,500 men.

On Saturday last the foundation-stone of the new Church of St. Cyprian, Adelaide Road, Brockley, was laid by the Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the sheriffs, the Bishop of Lichfield, and the Countess of Dartmouth. The site of the new church is a gift from the Corporation of the City of London.

The council for promoting the creation of a diocese for the whole of London south of the Thames has issued the first list of subscriptions towards the £130,000 which is required for carrying out the scheme. These amount to £33,153 15s. 6d., and in addition Colonel Norbury Pott has subscribed £500 toward the Chapter Endowment Fund.

The attention of the Bishop of London has been called to the practices of the vicar of All Souls', Harlesden, Rev. H. E. Carlyon. At a service advertised as a "Children's Eucharist," the vicar wore illegal coloured vestments, prostrated himself before the elements, and afterwards consumed them, there being no communicants. The Bishop has replied that he does not approve of such a service, and is communicating with Rev. H. E. Carlyon on the subject.

Congregational.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan preached on Sunday evening last at Holloway Church, Caledonian Road, in the interests of the L.M.S. work. There was an overflowing congregation. The cause at Holloway appears to show signs of re-awakened interest and spiritual life.

Rev. H. J. Shirley has closed his seven years' ministry at Dawes Road Church, Fulham, and at the end of this month sails for British Guiana. Hundreds were unable to gain access to the church for the farewell sermons, and the valedictory meeting was largely attended.

The new church at Viewland Road, Plumstead, has made a very auspicious beginning. Dr. Horton preached the opening sermon, and on the first Sunday morning and evening, when Rev. Andrew Mearns preached, there were crowded congregations. It may be necessary ere long to supersede the present building by a larger one.

At a recent meeting of the council of the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund, Dr. Guinness Rogers presiding, it was stated that the half million guineas aimed at had already been practically promised, but that only about £120,000 had been allocated to the central fund. A resolution raising the central fund to 350,000 guineas was adopted, thus increasing the total fund to three-quarters of a million.

At the Kent Congregational Association annual meeting Mr. Edward Unwin spoke on "Christian Stewardship." He appealed to his hearers to take the money question on to a higher plane. Their income was a gift of God, and they should systematically set apart a portion of it to God's service before spending the remainder; not first living almost up to their income, and giving God what was left. There would be no lack of money for Christian work when they realized to whom their money really belonged. He regarded giving as a part of public worship, and the sooner it became universal the better for their religious life.

Baptist.

Services have been held at Westbourne Grove Chapel in connection with Rev. George Freeman's second anniversary. The report showed two years of progressive and encouraging work. New members have been added—ninety-five by profession of faith and baptism and fifty-three by transfer. A society of Y.P.C.E. was started a few months ago, and has now a membership of fifty-four. There is also a revival of prosperity in the Sunday school.

Owing to the continued ill-health of his wife, Rev. F. J. Feltham has had to relinquish his pastorate at Wellington Street Church, Stockton-on-Tees; and on Sunday, May 6, farewell sermons were preached. On the following day a social meeting of the church and congregation was held, at which Mr. and Mrs. Feltham were the recipients of many expressions of love and goodwill. During the summer they will reside on the South Coast, and Mr. Feltham will be at liberty to engage in the Lord's work as opportunities offer. His address is, St. Agnes, Aldwick Road, Bognor, Sussex.

Methodist.

The building fund of the Wesleyan Central Hall for Edinburgh now stands at about £10,300. The total cost of the new premises (including the site) will be £50,000, of which at least one-half must be raised by midsummer of next year.

In the annual report of the Wesleyan Worn-Out Ministers' and Ministers' Widows' Auxiliary Fund, Rev. Walford Green says that it is matter for deep thankfulness that, notwithstanding the special appeals during the year for the Twentieth Century Fund, the Transvaal War Fund, and other charitable objects, the income of the Fund has been fully maintained.

At a recent meeting of the General Committee of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the President of the Conference reported the wonderful success of the Foreign Missionary Exhibition just held in Manchester. There were 1,000 voluntary helpers, and more than 40,000 people passed the turnstiles during the days the Exhibition was open. The Government also allowed many hundreds of school children to attend the Exhibition, and have it counted as a school attendance on the ground that the Exhibition was so distinctly educational.

Presbyterian.

For several weeks past the congregation of St. Andrew's Waterloo, have been contributing to the Indian Famine Fund, and have periodically remitted the sums to one of the lady missionaries in the famine-stricken district, who is known to the congregation.

In connection with the proposal of Mr. John M. Grant, one of the Willesden elders, that, by way of an endowment for Westminster College, 100 members of the Church should promise to leave to the college £100 each, pledges to the extent of £3,000 have already been secured.

Society of Friends.

Joseph James Neave and John M. Watson, after a visit to Washington, D.C., and a short time in East Tennessee, in continuation of their Gospel labours, passed on to North Carolina.

At the recent meeting for sufferings, E. W. Brooks, referring to the Dukhobortsi, mentioned information to the effect that the emigration will have, in Russia, further important issues. There is some intermission of persecution, and great growth of religious feeling is going forward over a wide area.

Watson Grace and Joseph Taylor, who were recently appointed delegates of the Friends' Foreign Mission Board to the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York, have been visiting some of the meetings of Friends in Eastern and Central States in the foreign missionary interests. They have addressed meetings at a number of centres, besides taking a share in the regular meetings for worship.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. ARTHUR MARSHALL, of Hampstead, one of the best-known London Congregationalists. He took a deep interest in the work of the London Missionary Society, and was one of the most active of its directors.—Rev. EDWARD J. ROBINSON, who entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1846. After spending six years in Ceylon, Mr. Robinson travelled in many important English circuits, finally retiring from active work in 1887.—Mr. W. SPRUNT, a prominent member of the Baptist Church at Myrtle Street, Liverpool.—Rev. HENRY LUMSDEN MITCHELL, minister of the Scotch Church, New Brompton, and Presbyterian chaplain to the forces at Chatham.—Rev. A. F. CARKY, vicar of Brixham and Churston Ferrers. He was an evangelical Churchman, and a supporter of the London Jews' Society and of foreign missions.—Mrs. Taylor, the wife of Archdeacon Taylor, recently died quite suddenly and unexpectedly.—Rev. Canon MATHIE, of St. Paul's, Hendon, Sunderland. His death is much felt by his attached people, to whom he has faithfully ministered as an evangelical clergyman for more than half a century.—Mrs. REA, wife of Rev. Geo. T. Rea, M.A., Irish Presbyterian Missionary at Borsad, India. It is thirty-three years since deceased first went to India with her husband, and during all that time she was his faithful and devoted helper in Christian work.—At Carrickfergus, Mr. JAS. C. HOLDEN, an elder-elect of the Presbyterian Church.—At Elandslaagte, Natal, S. H. WEIR, son of Rev. Samuel Weir, Methodist minister, Castlebar.—At Crumlin, co. Antrim, Mr. JOHN MOORE, an earnest temperance worker.

Orphans in Persia.—The eighth annual report of the Nestorian Orphanages, at Geog Tapa, Urumia, Persia, records much progress. Armenian as well as Nestorian orphans are received. The boys learn farming, joinery, etc.; while the girls are instructed in housework, sewing, carpet-making, etc. Thus the destitute children are loved and cared for in all temporal things, and trained to be followers of Christ and servants of God. About 200 children have proceeded from the orphanages since the commencement of the movement. The institutions are under the care of Khnan Eshoo Abraham, and many grateful testimonies come to hand from the children who have passed through the orphanages, and are now in happy and prosperous circumstances. Correspondence may be addressed to Miss M. Barclay, Urie House, Tranton Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

Obituary.

MRS. HARRIET C. WOOD.

THE late Mrs. Harriet C. Wood, an esteemed American lady, who passed away on March 29, at Amherst, Mass., U.S.A., was remarkable for the energy and enterprise with which she worked for home and foreign missionary causes, and especially in connection with movements for improving the social and religious condition of the people of Cuba and Porto Rico. She came of Puritan ancestry, and was loved in Amherst for her pious deeds.

MISS WILMOT-SMITH.

Particulars have reached us of the decease of Miss Wilmot-Smith, of Ballymanty, Bruff, Ireland. This gracious-spirited lady, whose loss will be widely felt, passed away on March 10. An esteemed correspondent writes: "Miss Wilmot-Smith took a deep interest in the poor and sick, also in the work amongst our troops at present in South Africa; by her loving and sympathetic presence the homes and lives of many in Ireland were brightened. In her own home her unselfishness was beautiful. In every difficulty she applied the test, 'What would Jesus do?'" Miss Wilmot-Smith was a niece of the late Mr. William Talbot-Crosbie, a record of whose earnest Christian life appeared in our issue for November 2 of last year.

Personalia.

Rev. T. BARRASS, who has lately retired from the pastorate of Queen Street Baptist Church, Peterborough, had laboured for nearly fifty years in the one pastorate.

With the development of the work of the Open-Air Mission, it has been found necessary to appoint an "organizing missioner," and Mr. WILLIAM LAURENCE TWEEDIE has been selected to fill the position.

Rev. Dr. HARRIS BOOTH, the late secretary of the Baptist Union, is somewhat improved in health. At the late Assembly of the Union a letter was received from him, written at Bournemouth, in which he affectionately greeted the brethren.

Rev. A. B. DEMILL, of the Demill Ladies' College, sails for St. Catharines, Ontario, Canada, on June 5. Another £1,000 is greatly needed to relieve the pressure of the College work. One sympathizer with this important Protestant effort, offers £100 if the other £900 can be secured without delay.

Rev. G. E. BUTT, a Primitive Methodist missionary from South Africa, who has come to England for the May Meetings, experienced many vicissitudes on his way. He was besieged at Aliwal North; then, through misrepresentation, he was imprisoned by the Boers. On reaching Capetown he embarked on the ill-fated Mexican for home. He was one of the passengers who were at sea in an open boat for five hours, when, with Mrs. Butt, he was picked up and taken again to Capetown.

Canning Town Christian Mission. — The Sunday school connected with this Mission is considerably hampered in consequence of inadequate accommodation. It is hoped that funds will soon be forthcoming, enabling the promoters to secure a larger hall for the work. The hon. treasurer is Mr. W. L. Wall, 23, Fords Park Road, Canning Town, E.

Notes & Comments

THE whole Empire rejoices at the relief of Mafeking. Every Englishman is proud of Colonel (now Major-General) Baden-Powell and his gallant band, and is grateful that the long and terrible privations endured by them are over at last. The story will go down to posterity, and will be unceasingly quoted, as an example of what devotion to duty and country is capable of. The next news we long for is the termination of the war itself.

Everyone who wishes to understand the South African question should read the able and lucid letters of Rev. R. J. Campbell in the Daily News. The communication of last Monday bristles with facts, and is in accord with the statements of that good man, Rev. John Mackenzie, in his "Austral Africa: Losing it or Ruling it," and largely derived from Mr. Fraser, who, to the great loss of the Free State, was the unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency, in opposition to Mr. Steyn. When the delegates of the Southern Confederacy met President Lincoln and proposed their terms of settlement, he brought his hand down upon the table and replied, "Gentlemen, this Government must have all." Mr. Fraser expects a similar reply from our Government, and Mr. Campbell hopes that as early as possible magnanimous terms will be given to the Orange Free State. His reasons for discriminating between that and the Transvaal are worthy of very serious attention.

Her Majesty the Queen attains her eighty-first birthday to-day. British subjects everywhere rejoice with thanksgiving that her valuable and arduous life has been so wonderfully prolonged. Her reign has been a blessing to the world as well as to the Empire. She stands before the nations not only as a wise ruler, but as a type of true Christian womanhood. She has proved that amidst the glamour and earthly glory of Court life, it is possible to be true to God, and we owe more than we realize to the uplifting influence she has exerted. England to-day is purer and nobler because of her presence with us, and we may well sing with heart and voice, "God save the Queen."

If we have any word of regret to add to this, it is such a fact as the following, reported in The Times of April 23:—

Her Majesty drove to Loretto Abbey. Two hundred nuns and 600 pupils were grouped round the front of the Convent, and sang "God save the Queen" on her Majesty's arrival. The Rev. Mother Pope, The Rev. Father Kennedy, and others connected with the Convent had the honour of being presented to the Queen by the Lord-in-Waiting.

It has been truly said that Royal recognition of such institutions tends to make it easy for wily and interested ecclesiastics to allure and capture simple souls, who sacrifice fortune and freedom for life in a convent, from which, alas! there is not only no escape, but no possible expression of complaint of convent crimes and cruelties.

There appears to be a rapidly developing tendency on the part of the Romish leaders and teachers to depreciate, if not set aside altogether, the primary doctrine of salvation through the finished work of Christ. A striking illustration of this lamentable downgrade movement is furnished by a writer in the Irish Catholic, who, in calling attention to the Indulgence of 300 days granted last month by the Pope "to those who observe the devotions of the month of Mary," goes on to point out that, "without the friendship of God, peace is impossible," and adds:

If you wish to find this peace, seek it through Mary; she has found it for millions of the human race through the ages of Christianity, and she is now active in imparting to her clients this most precious of God's gifts to his creatures.

A member of the High Church party has asserted that there was no intention on the part of those who were moving in favour of Reservation to adopt, at any rate for the present, the (Roman) service of Benediction. It is therefore interesting to learn what is the Romanist view of the case, and to find the (Roman) Catholic Times sneering at the argument that Reservation was being fought for simply because of the difficulty of "communicating the sick." The Romanist writer asserts that it was "for the purposes of worship and adoration;" and adds:—

It is certainly not the sick who will be the principal sufferers. It has been found possible for 200 years to communicate the sick according to the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer, and no need for any change was discovered until quite recently. There are, however, a few Anglican convents in which the Sacrament is reserved for adoration, and it is here the judgment, if enforced, will be the most severely felt, for it will deprive the religious inmates of their greatest consolation.

It is a serious question how far the recrudescence of sacramentarianism in our time is due to the unspirituality of much Protestantism. So far as Protestantism is only political or social, it is in the highest sense a failure. The raison d'être of Evangelicalism is its spirituality, and if this is missing its very soul has departed. It is a common doctrine with us that all Christians are priests, possessing the privilege of direct access to God through Jesus Christ our Lord, and the responsibility of pleading with Him on behalf of men. In much of Protestantism this double privilege remains unexercised. And may it not be that often men have invented the false priesthood, with its accessories, because they have failed to see in us a demonstration of the true priesthood? A general revival of spiritual life among Christians would be the surest way of banishing the fungus-growth which threatens us. Where the body is kept in perfect health, disease need not be feared; it is low vitality which invites the plague.

The death of Miss Anna Thekla von Weling, of Blankenburg, Schwarzathal, will be sorrowful news to many of our readers. For a number of years this devoted lady has carried on a work of deep spiritual interest in Germany. The Allianzhaus at Blankenburg has become a busy centre of Evangelical effort, while the annual Conference has been instrumental of much good, both in Germany and far beyond. Miss von Weling was prostrated by influenza with complications, and fell asleep on Monday morning last, from heart failure, after nine weeks' illness.

We are glad to call the attention of all interested in the desired reform to prevent children being sent to the public-house (and what right thinking person should not be?) to the following publications of the Church of England Temperance Society:—Alcohol and Childhood (4d.); Alcoholism in Childhood and Youth: Its Causes, Results, and Prevention (½d.), and sundry leaflets on the subject (1s. per 100). The Society, whose publications can be obtained at 4, Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W., has rendered splendid service to this cause, and is still doing so.

The same may be said of the U.K. Band of Hope Union (60, Old Bailey, E.C.), whose penny pamphlets, The Child's Peril; Facts and Opinions on the Sale of Drink to Children (as well as its leaflets), are calculated to enlighten an all too thoughtless public regarding this terrible evil. We hope our readers will widely distribute them all.

Temperance workers will find in several of Lord Roberts' communications from the front a new weapon of defence and of attack. A letter from the famous general was read at the annual meeting of the Army Temperance Association, in which he declared that "there never was a more temperate army than that which marched under his command from Modder River to Bloemfontein." He expresses his belief that nothing but good can result from so many soldiers from all parts of the Empire being brought together, when they see how splendidly the temperance men have borne up against the many difficulties and dangers they have had to face.

In a recent Note attention was drawn to the unpleasant fact that a large number of clergymen and ecclesiastical dignitaries were shareholders in a large brewery. It is refreshing to find that if, in some quarters of the religious world, there is not only much laxity in regard to the temperance question, and even complicity in the evils wrought by the drink traffic, in others the Christian's duty in the matter is fully and freely recognised. Thus, out of 2,890 ministers of the Congregational body in England and Wales, no fewer than 2,400 are abstainers, whereas twenty years ago only 760 were returned as such. It is stated, too, that in some of the training colleges all the students abstain; and at a recent examination of ministers on probation of the United Methodist Free Church each candidate was a total abstainer. This certainly is as it should be.

During the next three months many thousands of poor children, cripples and others, will be taken by kind-hearted people into the country or to the sea-side. Once a year these less-favoured folk are enabled to escape from the squalor or the restriction of their surroundings; and the respite is for them at once a memory and a hope. Appeals for help will be made to the charitable, and doubtless these will be once more liberally responded to.

We should like, however, to put in a plea on behalf of an overlooked class of people to whom a little change would be a veritable godsend. We refer to those genteel people who, through one cause or another, have been terribly reduced in circumstances, and who are unable ever to enjoy a temporary change. Such persons feel their poverty more acutely than those who have known nothing else. They do not advertise their distress; they prefer to suffer in silence. Such needy ones have to be discovered, but there is an easy way of discovering them. They must be helped quietly and without ostentation. We wish that a committee of ladies and gentlemen could be formed for the express purpose of discovering and cheering this retiring order of needy persons.

In Manchester a number of ladies and gentlemen undertake to give, during the summer months, what they call "Court and Alley Concerts." Good singers penetrate into the slums of the city, and, with the aid of a first-class piano, treat the inhabitants to an open-air concert. The idea is very good, and last summer it was very successful. But it would be a benefit of untold value it some competent ladies would enter the slums and teach the wretched women who live there how to cook food properly, and how to make the best of the little they have. More men than we have any conception of are driven to the public-house because their homes are unattractive and the food is badly cooked and badly served. There is a virgin field of effort in this direction. If Christian ladies would undertake the work, both body and soul would be kept in view, and mission work would become much easier and more fruitful. Such instruction should be connected with every mission hall.

Some important points are contained in Dr. Cuthbert Hall's address upon "The Relation of the Ministry to Missions," of which a report will be found on page 22. In pleading that the home-pastor should be fired with missionary zeal, he wisely maintains:—

> The far-off workers at the front depend upon him to co-operate with them by maintaining their supplies. He is a missionary as well as they, for the effects of his influence are telling on the maintenance of evangelization. By his acceptance of the pastorate he accepts an implied obligation to co-operate with those who are face to face with heathenism. To place a man in the pastorate in whom there is not the missionary passion is a twofold disaster; it breaks faith with those who have gone to the front, believing that the leaders of the Church at home will keep pace with their advance; it occupies the place of a better equipped man who, having that passion, might stir a whole community to acts of sacrifice.

The breezy speech of Rev. Jas. Smith, of Ahmednagar, is also worthy of note (see p. 23). In appealing for "an education that develops latent powers" in native converts, he says:—

> What are schools and teachers for if not to insure that boys and girls shall not turn out dunces and failures? Would it not display more wisdom and modesty on our part if we confined our efforts in education to developing what we find in our pupils, and meddled less with the work of the Creator? Is it ignorance of the province of the educator, or presumption, which leads the teacher to try to make parrots out of pupils that were created for architects, engineers, or machinists?

There are two sentences in the Old Testament which, when placed together, open the way into a fruitful study. Thus:

> In the land of uprightness will the wicked deal unjustly (Isa. xxvi. 10).
> But so did not I because of the fear of God (Neh. v. 15).

That is to say, if a man's heart be wrong he will act wrongly, although the life around him is morally healthy and helpful; while, on the other hand, if a man's heart be right with God the presence of surrounding wickedness will not taint his life. Good and evil do not reside in surroundings and circumstances, but in the heart.

Certain modern philosophers preach without ceasing the doctrine of "Environment," as explanatory of all evil and good; badness or goodness, they say, are affairs of our surroundings, and what we denominate "conscience" is merely the focussing of the total notions of a people or an epoch. The Bible, true to facts, traces everything to the heart. In the land of uprightness, where the totality of life is just, the wicked will elect to be a wretched exception to the rule; or, if all around are corrupt, Nehemiah, in the fear of God, will always say, "So do not I." Any religious teaching which ignores this fundamental truth is utterly powerless to regenerate man.

Dean Farrar's new book on the Life of Christ has, as was to be expected, come in for some severe criticism at the hands of certain "advanced" teachers. The chief matter of offence is, that so learned and capable a writer as Dean Farrar should, "at this time of day, cling to the outworn superstition of the Virgin Birth of our Lord." These critics want a non-miraculous Christ—a Christ who shall be harmonious with what they imagine to be the final word of science—a Christ of their own manipulation, a Christ who is no longer the Divine Son and the world's Redeemer. And they are angry because an erudite scholar, himself an advanced critic, deliberately re-affirms his faith in the all-important truth of our Lord's miraculous entrance into his own world.

Had an obscure country preacher made the same affirmation, it could have been explained on the alleged ground of ignorance. Dr. Farrar, however, is a man to be reckoned with, and his critics dare not raise the cry of ignorance; so they profess surprise. Rationalists need reminding, with frequency, that others besides themselves are capable of reasoning, and that men may be scholarly and scientific and yet remain humble adorers of our Lord.

A capable reviewer, in a critical paper upon the recently published biography of Dean Milman (the author of a number of very learned and elaborate books, including the famous History of Latin Christianity), has observed with much truth, that, when those scholarly volumes are left unread or are forgotten, Milman will be remembered by his two hymns—"When our heads are bowed with woe," and "Ride on, ride on in majesty." Such words are helpful to those who are debarred from undertaking anything great in the service of the Master, for they illustrate the Divine truth of the value of small things, the productive grains of mustard seed which each of us may sow.

One of the most timely and valuable utterances during the recent May meetings of the Congregational Union was given by Rev. J. D. Jones, M.A., of Bournemouth. Speaking on "Doctrine and Ethics in Modern Preaching," he said that we are in danger of teaching and preaching ethics to the neglect of doctrine. It is absurd to say that it does not matter what a man believes, so long as he acts rightly. The truth is, he can only act as he believes. If a man believes ill, he cannot act well. Christian ethics are grounded on Christian belief. Those who reject Christian doctrine finally reject Christian ethics.

Rev. H. G. Grey, of the Lahore Mission (C.M.S.), has accepted the post of Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, vacant through Dr. Chavasse's appointment to the Bishopric of Liverpool.

Immoral Plays.

A COURAGEOUS act was that of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., when he called attention in the House of Commons last week to the character of many plays found on the boards of London theatres. Without discussing the question of the influence of the stage in the abstract, he gave concrete instances of distinctly demoralizing productions, of which all too many have drawn large audiences of late years.

Of course he was held up to ridicule by some of the succeeding speakers, but no attempt was made seriously to combat his position. The arguments brought against it were of the flimsiest order. One opponent held up the well-worn bogey of "grandmotherly legislation;" another had seen the plays named and "had enjoyed them," as if that were any guarantee of their morality! One laid the onus of reform upon the public, well knowing that there is always a sufficiency of loose-minded persons who, like his predecessor, "enjoy" such exhibitions, and further that if any luckless wight had pluck enough to protest audibly, he would be eliminated. Another had always found these theatres "well conducted," which means no more than that the audience had behaved themselves with decorum—more decorously, in fact, than some of the players. The Home Secretary could find no better reason to oppose the motion than his reluctance to "cast a reflection on the Lord Chamberlain" in his capacity as censor of plays.

Thus while playing with the fringe of the question, those who opposed the motion carefully avoided the point at issue, which was to deprecate the increasing tendency on the part of some modern playwrights to feed their clients upon offal. Plays which reek with the loathsomeness of the seamiest side of life; others, whose whole raison d'etre is the presentation as humorous of all the characteristics of gay life, have been the order of the day. Nothing is more infernally insidious than the sowing of such seeds in the minds of young people of both sexes, who form a considerable portion of the audiences. Infidelity to the marriage vow has been made the foundation of drama, comedy and farce, while cynicism, innuendo and gesture are all called upon to discourage virtue and encourage vice. Surely it is high time for right-minded parents to cease taking their children to breathe this poisonous atmosphere.

It is contended that all sides of life must be presented to fulfil the highest purposes of the drama as an educator. What we now complain of is that the vices of society are set forth, not as object lessons for moral guidance, but as material for jest, on the one hand, or for serious approval on the other.

As for the theatrical manager having any desire to educate or improve the morals of the public, never was greater cant imposed upon credulity. His first aim is to get back the money invested in the production of the play, plus as much profit as possible. If the piece is paying, it will have a long run; if, perchance, it should be a moral play, and yet popular, so much the better; if immoral, and still well attended, so much the worse, for all except himself and his shareholders. No matter how good its tendency, if it does not pay it is promptly withdrawn in favour of something less desirable, but more likely to answer. Morals are the last thing to be considered; money the first.

And of the life imposed upon many of the actresses, who can speak except with bated breath? It is a practical certainty that, however high-minded a woman may be, she is ound to demean herself to act in plays against hich her moral sense revolts; if she has ndependent means, she can afford to pick nd choose. And, in the humbler class f actresses, hundreds are forced into dresses hich outrage their sense of decency, or uffer rejection from the cast if they refuse. nd to such girls employment is absolutely read and cheese, with starvation or the streets s alternatives.

It is time, indeed, that the moral sense of ne community were aroused on this matter, r the sake of the multitudes of young people oncerned, whether in the front of the house or pon the stage. As Mr. Smith said: This is no light matter, because the moral tandard of the people is very much governed y the standard of the theatre, at least among ne young. When they see the purest and oliest things of life turned into derision, and centiousness treated as the normal rule of fe, is it likely that their own normal standard ill remain high?" Therefore he moved, and ad the support of some other speakers:

That this House regrets the growing tendency to put upon the stage plays of a demoralizing character, and considers that a stricter supervision of theatrical performances is needed alike in the interest of the public and the theatrical profession."

Ireland's Future.

A WARNING NOTE.

A GREAT change is coming over the conditions of national life in Ireland in consequence of the operation of the ocal Government Act of 1898. In the pinion of many thoughtful men this change ill not tend towards the religious emancipation of the people.

The Local Government Act has transferred ast powers of administration from the Government, and from the grand juries, to county and istrict councils popularly elected. Such a ransfer in a country free from the dominion f the Roman Church could result only in ood. But in Ireland the effect is distinctly rejudicial to the interests of religious liberty.

It is true that the Act denies ministers of eligion the right to sit on the new local ouncils, but it is equally true that this provision gives no effective safeguard against riestly domination. In the three provinces f Leinster, Munster, and Connaught it is otorious that the new administration of local overnment is being worked in the interests of ne Church of Rome. Officers of asylums, edical officers to infirmaries, barony conables, tax collectors, and a host of minor fficials are selected in most cases—the exceptions are few indeed—only from the ranks of dherents to the Roman Church.

"NO PROTESTANT NEED APPLY"

practically the motto written up over the oor of admission to the multitude of offices eld under the local councils.

The effect is seen in the depletion of the umber of resident Protestants in most of the omish districts. Place after place might be stanced in which Protestants, despairing of btaining employment in their own neighbourood, have left the country. The priests have, some cases, openly avowed their intention directing the action of the local councils, nd it often happens that the selection of candidates for official posts takes place in the apel yard at the conclusion of the last Mass Sunday!

The effect of such a state of things is isastrous in every sense. The Church of ome is presented with a new weapon whereby oppress and drive out the Protestant minority, and religious texts and disabilities are enforced to the demoralization of the people.

We are concerned as to the effect of all this on the Sister Isle. And we feel that no effort should be spared to press forward the evangelization of the Roman Catholics, and to sow diligently among them the seeds of Divine truth and true national freedom, by the circulation of the Word of God.

Mr. Campbell White's Bible Studies.

THE Bible studies which Mr. J. Campbell White is conducting during the temporary absence of his brother, Professor Wilbert W. White, are attracting considerable audiences by reason of their earnest and helpful character.

Speaking at Queen's Hall on Friday last, Mr. White took for his subject "The Bible and Spiritual Growth." Remarking, at the outset, on those to whom religion is merely a form, Mr. White dealt with instances of superstitious belief, especially in connection with the abominations of Hinduism; and went on to describe a priest at Benares who admitted that his sole object in performing rites for the people was to extract money. The "gods," as presented by the priests, are in morals and intelligence, but the people continue their devotion to the religious form. Mr. White added some forcible words regarding those to whom religion is a creed and nothing more. They accept all that the Bible states of the character of God, and of the plan of salvation, yet they are no more Christian than the superstitious Hindu. It is possible to be intellectually orthodox without being religious at heart.

Others, however, the speaker continued, have not only their creed, but the belief of faith, plus experience. Paul says "I know Him whom I have believed" (2 Tim. i. 12 R.V.), thus placing his direct communion before his statement of belief.

The question arises, then, as to what religion is, viewed from a Biblical standpoint, and Mr. White observed that he had found it effective, in replying to the incessant queries of Oriental seekers, to quote the words of Scripture, and so he would refer to James i. 27, which shows that religion means (1) unspottedness; (2) service. The Bible is the great searcher of hearts. It gives a revelation and vision of God. Job spoke of his own righteousness, until he received a vision of the Almighty; then he cried, "Now mine eye seeth Thee. . . . I abhor myself." It reveals Christ as and gives eternal encouragement to strive to overcome evil (Rom. vi. 14). Religion is but partial in its blessing unless it saves, not only from the punishment, but from the pollution and power of sin. As to the position and privileges of service, Mr. White remarked on (a) Christ as the Servant (Luke xii. 27; Matt. xx. 28); on (b) Christ's justification for service, on the ground that "My Father worketh even until now, and I work;" and on (c) the prospect of eternal service (Rev. xxii. 3).

In the final section of his address, Mr. White said that religion is also knowledge of God; it is divine friendship (John xvii. 3). Such friendship cannot grow without communion. In the Bible and by his Spirit God speaks to the soul; but as, in earthly relationships, we should not regard professions of friendship as sincere if our written communications were ignored or neglected, so we cannot expect the Spirit's guidance and communion if we fail to pay due regard to the Bible. With the Divine friendship, however, and by prayerful study of the Word, spiritual growth will follow. In stimulating terms, Mr. White pointed out some of the results of a consecrated life, and concluded with prayer.

Points and Outlines.

"PRECIOUS" THINGS.

THERE are seven "precious" things in the Epistles of St. Peter: (I.) Trial of faith (1 Pet. i. 7); (II.) Blood of Atonement (1 Pet. i. 19); (III.) Living corner-stone (1 Pet. ii. 4-7); (IV.) The preciousness itself—Christ (1 Pet. ii. 7); (V.) Meek and quiet spirit (1 Pet. iii. 4); (VI.) Like precious Faith (2 Pet. i. 1); (VII.) Promises of God (2 Pet. i. 4).

GOOD COUNSELS.

Let me never delay anything, unless I can prove that another time will be more fit than the present, or that some other more important duty requires my immediate attendance.

Never let me enter into long schemes about future events, but in the general refer myself to God's care.

Let me remember, that through the mercy of God in a Redeemer, I hope I am within a few days of heaven. Dr. Doddridge.

SINNERS DESPICABLE.

(1 Sam. ii. 30.)

I. Who are those that despise God? (a) Such as extol anything above God. (b) Such as prefer anything before Him.

II. How are they despicable? (a) They are content with despicable things. (b) They are employed on despicable business. (c) They find delight in despicable pleasures. W. W.

THE WHEAT AND THE CHAFF.

(Jer. xxiii. 28.)

The preacher is—(I.) not a novelist, dreaming or amusing; (II.) not a lecturer, dealing with finite things for the purposes of instruction or pleasure; but (III.) an ambassador of God, put in trust with the Gospel, and delivering a message from heaven; (IV.) one who is to put self out of sight, and aim to burn the thoughts of God into the hearts of men.

A PASTOR TO PASTORS.

Brethren, I hope you are content to be plainly dealt with. If you have no sense of the worth of souls, and of the preciousness of that blood which was shed for them, and of the glory to which they are going, and of the misery of which they are in danger, you are not Christians, and, consequently, are very unfit to be ministers. And if you have, how can you find time for needless recreations, visits, or discourses? Dare you, like idle gossips, chat and trifle away your time, when you have such works as these to do, and so many of them? Richard Baxter.

JEW, GREEK, AND CHRISTIAN.

(1 Cor. i. 22-24).

First, there are three typical persons—the Jew, the Greek, the Christian. Secondly, the typical persons have three characteristic quests—the Jew requires a sign, the Greek seeks after wisdom, the Christian preaches Christ. Thirdly, there are three typical attitudes of the one subject. Christ is to the Jew a stumbling-block, to the Greek foolishness, to the Christian the power and the wisdom of God. What the Jew demanded was a vision of power; what the Greek sought was a source of wisdom; what the Christian found was power and wisdom in One.
Dr. Fairbairn.

THE SAVIOUR.

See from this verse (1) THE PARTICULARITY OF GOD'S FULFILMENT OF HIS PROMISES: "Unto you is born in the city of David." (2) THE TRUTH OF A CONTROLLING PROVIDENCE; even the great Roman Emperor was a thrall of God toward the birth nowhere but in Bethlehem. (3) THE INTEREST OF HEAVEN IN EARTH; celestial beings announced the birth. (4) THE NEEDLESSNESS OF THE ETERNAL LOSS; a Saviour has been born. (5) THAT WE HAVE NO NEED OF ANY HUMAN PRIESTS; the Messiah, the "anointed" High Priestly One has appeared, and it is arrogance for men to claim to mediate. (6) CHRIST IS LORD; if we accept Him at all, it must be, not only as the One who forgives our sins, but as the One who is henceforth to rule us—and we must joyously submit to his gracious rule. Dr. Wauland Hoyt.

Soldiers in South Africa.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

IN a further interesting communication from the front, Mrs. M. S. Osborn Howe gives some vivid glimpses of her experiences after leaving Stormberg for the north: "I had the honour of being the first woman to travel through since the war began, and we came by the second train that has run. We travelled by a military train of long open trucks conveying the Royal Irish Rifles. They put our saloon to the leading engine, about forty-five trucks behind us, and two engines at the end. . . . Yesterday the D.A.A.G. came in and seven other officers, so thankful to find us. The D.A.A.G. said to Mr. Howe, 'When the Quartermaster-Sergeant told me you had left Stormberg I was filled with blank dismay, as 600 R.H.A.'s were coming in.' A regiment was marching in, and my husband went to meet them. Their officer, a stranger to us, said, 'Mr. Howe, I know what you have come about—you want to feed my men.' 'I do,' said he, 'and the officers too.' 'Well,' said the other, 'I shall be so thankful; I am ready to fall off my horse.'"

Mrs. Osborne Howe continues: "Yesterday about 1,000 men were refreshed with food and tea. To-day, about the same number of the R.H.A.'s came. As I looked across from our saloon I saw crowds of men, some holding their horses, round our camp fires. Then came a message from Mr. Howe begging me to go and look after the officers, as they were too busy caring for the famished men. I was cooking in the carriage for worn-out workers, but rushed over, and oh! how grateful the poor fellows were, so dusty and hot, one with his face scorched and blistered. Our men who went on were under fire, carrying tea and food to the soldiers whilst bullets were flying and shell falling around them, looking after the wounded before the field hospital arrived on the scene. Pray for us that strength may still be given, and for means to carry on the work."

Mrs. Osborn Howe's letters have been collected, and issued in pamphlet form. (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

SIEGE LIFE IN LADYSMITH.

Rev. Charles Thompson, who conducted religious services in Ladysmith throughout the siege, has supplied an interesting account of his experiences to Rev. D. B. Hooke, of the Colonial Missionary Society. In the course of his letter Mr. Thompson says:—"My work was largely among the Gordon Highlanders. Sunday after Sunday we met for worship in a large pit dug in the bank of the river. Our church was commandeered for a hospital, and during five months we worshipped at the Manse, most of the time under an awning erected at the end of the building. The Boers kept us in a very narrow space.

"On every hill-top was posted an enemy's gun, but the Lord was in our midst in all the fulness of his love and grace. Now, as we review it all, we can but marvel at the little damage that has been done, considering the thousands of shells that were thrown into the town. One splinter came through the roof, and another piece, about 10lb weight, struck the wall, burst the plaster and paper inside, then rebounded and broke the gate at the entrance. I lost my horse, and my trap was damaged by a bursting shell, which also made a number of holes in an outside building. After all, we have escaped wonderfully, and our hearts are full of gratitude to God.

"I had a pit dug behind the house about nine feet deep, where I took shelter when the shells came very near, or when I was driven out of bed at midnight, as was the case on five different occasions. The noise caused by the passage of the large 94lb shells one will never forget. I have often read about the glories of war, but here we have seen much of the other side. On two occasions our church was filled with wounded men, as they were brought in from the hills, and it just looked like a slaughter house. I had to go out to the funerals on several battlefields; and to see the men laid out in rows in all the attitudes in which they fell and stiffened, mutilated and blood-stained, is a sight never to be forgotten. It forces the question upon one: Surely nations can find some more humane way of settling their quarrels than this? Through the kindness of Sir George White, I received a permit to visit the prison and preach to the prisoners, mostly Boers. Many of the men I have known for years, have visited their homes, and know their families; but I make no reference to politics, and they welcome the Gospel."

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

A notable addition to the series of penny booklets, issued by the South Africa General Mission, is At Ladysmith, which gives accounts of the evangelistic labours of the late Mr. Ion Smyth and Mr. James Taylor during the siege. The illustrations are remarkably good, some of them being reductions from drawings made on the spot for the Illustrated London News, by Mr. Melton Prior. The booklet may be obtained from Mr. Arthur Mercer, Secretary of the S.A.G.M., 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

The Indian Famine.

FOOD SUPPLIES.

A THIRD consignment of foods for the famine sufferers has been despatched, per s.s. Parramatta. The response to our appeal has been so generous that a fourth shipment will be necessary; particulars of this we hope to give next week. We hear from the missionaries in India how much they appreciate the practical sympathy which is being shown. The help, both in money and in kind, which they are receiving, not only enables them to administer relief, but becomes to themselves a source of cheer and encouragement, assuring them that friends at home are mindful of them in this time of stress and suffering. As will be seen by our Donation List, contributions continue to flow in for the relief of our distressed fellow-subjects, many of whom are our fellow Christians. We are glad to know that our readers are availing themselves of the Illustrated Famine Leaflets* which we have prepared. Several friends have written saying they are adopting the suggestions made in our last issue.

We have not space to quote all the interesting letters which accompany many of the donations. One lady writes: "I am so ashamed to have this £5 note lying useless in the sight of such great need as your pathetic appeals in The Christian indicate." Another: "One of the Lord's servants—poor in this world's riches"—sends £1 for the Indian Famine Fund, and "believes, if Christian ladies would exercise just a wee bit more self-denial this spring in housekeeping and renewal of dresses, bonnets, &c., much may be done to help these starving, suffering ones."

Some donations came to hand on Monday, given for the relief of the Famine sufferers as thankofferings for the relief of Mafeking.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Rev. Dennis Osborne, writing from Poona, under date May 3, gives some particulars of a tour of inquiry and relief which he had undertaken through the affected districts, saying: "The scenes I witnessed were most harrowing. The weather is now at the hottest, and it is dangerous to travel. The sky is as brass, the earth as iron, the soil dust, and the sun pitiless in its furnace-like heat. No verdure, no moisture, hardly any life! The streams have dried up, the wells have failed, and everywhere there is nothing but desolation and death. Throngs of poor starving creatures flit about hither and thither, staggering to death. To give details could fill a volume; let it suffice that, irrespective of relief directly dispensed by myself and agents working under me, I have been able to put substantial means in the hands of nine responsible missionaries working in the worst parts of the stricken areas. In my addresses in England I presented a forecast of five millions of people receiving government relief, and many thought this too high, but the figure is now largely exceeded."

Mrs. Laura Wheeler Moore, of the Basim Mission, writes:—"The pinch of famine is growing more and more severe as the hot season advances. At present there are more than 100,000 persons on relief works in our district alone. Women and helpless children seem to be the greatest sufferers. There is great mortality among children, who must sit all day in the burning heat with their mothers, who are at work breaking stone. With some of the help afforded by your readers we are giving pieces of cloth to these poor women, which they use as a covering by night, and for a by day for their little ones. The Government officials are doing all in their power to save life. For babies, whose natural supply of food has failed because of the starved condition of the mothers, milk is prepared in the relief kitchen, poured into feeding-bottles, and given to the mothers, who return the bottles to be cleaned and refilled at the next feeding. I now have nearly seventy girls in the orphanage, and upwards of forty boys, besides the twelve babies in the nursery, and several widows."

Rev. P. B. Keskar, hon. secretary of Sholapur Famine Relief Committee, writes: "The famine is still on the increase. Hundreds of people are

REDUCED TO MERE SKELETONS.

The sights are beyond description. Women are willing to part with their children and babies for little money or even for a morsel of bread. Children are brought for sale daily; we do not buy, as it is against the law to do so, but we accept them if offered free of charge.

"We have under our care more than fifty children of various ages, from two days to eleven years and upwards. We have four babies; one had been half buried by its mother under the sand, in order that she might not see it die from starvation. We desire to take more children—up to 400. Twenty famine-stricken old people and invalids, and some lepers are also under our care."

In connection with the Balaghat Mission the number of Gonds and others being relieved continues to increase. "At present," writes Mr. John Lampard, "between 500 and 600 adults and children are fed daily, either gratuitously or in return for labour, as they may be able to work, or otherwise." At Nikkuni over 300 persons are employed on our Mission Farm and Property, and village works.

is still largely attended by little folk, mostly between the ages of five and ten; these come from villages within a radius of about two miles. In connection with this kitchen the attendance at our school has been largely augmented, and an assistant to the schoolmaster has been engaged. The children arrive for their first meal at 9 a.m., and at 4 p.m. are again fed before going to their homes for the night: between the two meals from two to four hours are spent at school, according to the age of the child. At each opportunity, as the people gather together, the Gospel is preached."

Rev. Albert Norton, of the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, says: "We have sixty-three orphan and destitute boys from the famine, and we are expecting another party in a few days. Also we expect, by the Lord's mercy, to go on receiving these orphan lads from the famine, until we have at least 400."

SUGGESTED STREET COLLECTIONS.

In connection with Dawes Road Baptist Church, Fulham, S.W., street collections were recently taken up on behalf of the famine sufferers. A large number of members of Dawes Road and other churches took part in the work, and as a result a sum of £37 was remitted to India. Mr. William Trickett, who acted as secretary, writes suggesting that "many churches, unable to raise a large sum from their congregations, might collect a substantial sum by means of a street collection." Mr. Trickett will be pleased to give any information on the subject; he may be addressed, 26, Kilmaine Road, Fulham, S.W.

Not the Light—a Witness.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE baptism and revelation of Christ had a marvellous effect on the ministry of the Forerunner. Previous to that memorable day, the burden of his teaching had been in the direction of repentance and confession of sin. But afterwards, the whole force of his testimony was towards the Person and glory of the Shepherd of Israel.

Our subject, therefore, naturally divides itself into two divisions—John's admissions about himself; and his testimony to the Lord. And it is interesting to notice that they were given on three successive days, as appears from the twofold use of the phrase, "On the morrow,"—(i. 29, 35).

I. The Baptist's Admissions about Himself. When the fourth evangelist uses the word Jews, he invariably means the Sanhedrim. John had become so famous, and his influence so commanding, that he could not be ignored by the religious leaders of the time. In their hearts they derided him, and desired to do with him whatsoever they listed." His preaching of repentance, and his unmeasured denunciation of themselves as a brood of vipers, were not to be borne. But they forbore to meet him in the open field, and resolved which might extract some admission from his lips which would furnish them with ground for subsequent action. "The Jews sent unto him from Jerusalem priests and Levites to ask him, 'Who art thou?' . . . 'Why baptizest thou?'" The first question was universally interesting; the second specially to the Pharisee party, who were the high ritualists of their day, and who were reluctant that a new rite, which they had not sanctioned, should be added to the Jewish ecclesiastical system.

If a murmur of voices burst out in anger, disappointment, and chagrin, as this answer spread from lip to lip, it was immediately hushed by the second inquiry propounded, "What then? Art thou Elijah?"

There was a third arrow in their quiver, since the other two had missed the mark; and in allusion to Moses' prediction that God would raise up a Prophet like to himself (Deut. xviii. 15; Acts iii. 22; vii. 37), they asked, "Art thou the Prophet?" and he answered, "No."

The deputation was nonplussed. For the fourth time they challenge the strange being, whom they found it so hard to label and place in any shelf of their ecclesiastical museum:—"Who art thou, that we may give an answer to them that sent us? What sayest thou of thyself?" "He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said Isaiah the prophet."

How infinitely noble! How characteristic of strength! A weak man would have launched himself on the flowing tide of enthusiasm, and allowed himself to be swept away by its impetuous rush. What a mingling of strength and humility! When men suggested that he was the Christ, he insisted that he was only a voice—the voice of the herald, whom men hardly notice, because they strain their eyes in the direction from which he has come, to behold the King Himself.

Such humility always accompanies a true vision of Christ. If we view it from the low ground, the mountain may appear to reach into the sky; but when we reach the mountain-top, we are immediately aware of the infinite distance between the highest snow-peak and the nearest star. To the crowds John may have seemed to fulfil all the essential conditions of the prophetic portraiture of the Messiah; but he stood on the mountain, and knew how infinitely the Christ stood above him.

II. The Baptist's Witness to the Lord.—Six weeks passed by from that memorable vision of the opened heaven and the descending Spirit, and John had eagerly scanned every comer to the river-bank to see again that divinely-beautiful face. But in vain: for Jesus was in the wilderness, being tempted of the devil, for forty days and nights, the companion of wild beasts, and exposed to

A VERY HURRICANE OF TEMPTATION.

At the end of the six weeks, the interview with the deputation from the Sanhedrim took place, which we have already described; and on the day after, when his confession of inferiority was still fresh in the minds of his hearers, when some were criticising and others pitying, when symptoms that the autumn of his influence had set in were in the air, his eye flashed, his face lit up, and he cried, saying: "This is He of whom I said, 'After me cometh a man who is become before me, for He was before me.' Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Let us notice the successive revelations which were made to John, and through him to Israel, who, you remember, held him, as they had every warrant for doing, to be in the deepest sense a prophet of the Lord.

(1) He rightly conceived of Christ's pre-existence. "He was before me" (John i. 30). The phrase resembles Christ's own words, when He said: "Before Abraham was, I am." In John's case it developed soon after into another and kindred expression: "He that cometh from above is above all" (iii. 31). With such words the Baptist taught his disciples. He insisted that Jesus of Nazareth had an existence anterior to Nazareth, and previous to his birth of the village maiden. He recognised that his goings had been of old, even from everlasting, that He was the mighty God, the Father of the Ages, and the Prince of Peace. As for himself, he was of the earth, and of the earth he spoke; as for this One, He came from above, and was above all. It is not to be surprised at, therefore, that one of his disciples, catching his master's spirit, wrote: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him."

(2) He rightly apprehended the sacrificial aspect of Christ's work. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." To the Jews his exclamation could have but one significance. They would at once connect with his words, those of the law, the prophets, and the Psalms. "The goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a solitary land." "He bare the sin of many." "He is led as a lamb to the slaughter."

From the slopes of Mount Moriah, a young voice has

EXPRESSED THE LONGING OF THE AGES,

"Behold the fire and the wood; but where is the lamb?" This has been the cry of the human heart in all generations. From the days of Abel, men have brought the firstlings of their flocks, laying them on the altar, and consuming them with fire; but there was always a sense of failure and insufficiency. Through the ages, and in every clime, priest after priest offered the lamb upon the altar, but by the very fact of continual repetition, bore witness to the insufficiency of its propitiation.

Nature cannot answer that cry. She is fascinating, especially when she dimples with the smile of spring, and unveils her face in summer to receive the caresses of the sun. But with all her beauty and fascination she cannot answer the cry of the conscience that the penalty of sin may be removed, its power broken, so that man may walk with God with a fearless heart.

Dear soul, thou mayest venture on Him. He is God's Lamb; on Him the sin of our race has been laid, and He stood before God with the accumulated load—"made sin"; the iniquity of us all laid upon Him; wounded for our transgressions; bruised for our iniquities; chastised for our peace; stricken for our transgression; bearing the sin of many. As the first Adam brought sin on the race, the second Adam has put it away by the sacrifice of Himself. Men are lost now, not because of Adam's sin, nor because they were born into a race of sinners; but for the sin which they presumptuously and wilfully commit, or because they contract themselves out of the benefits of Christ's death. The servant who had been forgiven by his king, but took his brother by the throat, brought back upon himself the full penalty from which the royal warrant had freed him; and if anyone of us cling to sin, rejecting and trampling under foot the Saviour's works on our behalf, we cancel so far all those benefits of our Saviour's passion which otherwise would accrue, and bring back upon ourselves the penalties from which He WOULD FAIN HAVE DELIVERED US.

(3) He understood the baptism of the Holy Spirit. "The same is He that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." As Son of God, our Saviour from all eternity was one with the Holy Spirit in the mystery of the blessed Trinity; but as "the one Man," He received in his human nature the fulness of the Divine Spirit. Thus it fell that He was able to assure his disciples that if they waited in Jerusalem for the promise of the Father, as John baptized with water, they should be baptized with the Holy Spirit (Acts i. 4, 5).

The term baptism, as applied to the Holy Spirit, refers more especially to those marvellous manifestations of spiritual power which are recorded in Acts ii., viii., x., xix.; whilst the word filling is more appropriate to those experiences of the indwelling and anointing of the Divine Spirit which are within the reach of us all. Still, we may all adopt the words of the Baptist, and tell our living Head that we have need to be baptized of Him — need to be searched by the stinging flame; need to be cleansed from dross and impurity; need to be caught in the transfiguring, heaven-leaping energy of the Holy Spirit. The blood of the Lamb, and the fire of the Holy Spirit are thus

INEXTRICABLY UNITED.

(4) He beheld the mystery of the Holy Trinity. For the first time this was made manifest to man. On the one hand there was the Father speaking from heaven; on the other the Spirit descending as a dove—and between them was the Son of Man who was proclaimed to be the Son of God, the beloved Son.

The doctrine of the Holy Trinity is a profound mystery, hidden from the intellect, but revealed to the humble and reverent heart; hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed to babes. Welcome Jesus Christ as John did; and, as to John, so the whole wonder of the Godhead will be made known to thy heart. Of what good is it to reason about the Trinity if thou hast no spiritual appetite for the gifts of the Trinity? But if this is thine, and thou openest thine heart, thou wilt receive the gift and understand the doctrine.

(5) He appreciated the Divine Sonship of Christ. "I have seen and have borne witness that this is the Son of God." This witness counts for much. John knew men, knew himself, knew Christ. He would not have said so much unless he had been profoundly convinced; and he would not have been profoundly convinced unless irrefragible evidence had been presented to him. What though, when on the following day he repeats his exclamation, his whole congregation leaves him to follow the Man of Nazareth to his home? The heart of the Forerunner is satisfied, for he has heard the Bridegroom's voice. The Son of God has come, and has given him an understanding that he might know Him that is true.

SUNDAY, May 27. Psalm ciii.

IN a recent meeting of railway men, an engine-driver, relating his experiences, said: "Mates, you know the A—— siding. I had to shunt my train there one morning this week. As we were waiting, about 4 o'c., the sun began to rise, and such a sense of God's goodness came to me. I thought of Jesus my Light, and I said to my fireman, 'Mate, I wish you'd help me sing,' and we struck up, 190, Sankey, 'Hallelujah, what a Saviour.'" It seems a far cry from an engine-driver on a railway siding to David, the royal psalmist, but it was an identical experience.

A ray of light had entered the psalmist's heart. He had a new and deeper view of what God was to him than ever before. He saw how God dwelt in the present tense of blessing to those who love Him; and, as the prism unravels the pure ray of light, he began to analyse the various elements that went to make up life in God's Presence so blessed. There was forgiveness for all sins, and healing for all disease. Redemption and crowning, satisfaction and renewal, and these not now and again, but continued always in unbroken thoughtfulness. Metaphors are coined in the mint of his fervid imagination, which are extremely delicate. The eagle on its crag; the height of the starry heaven; the breadth of the far horizon; the pity of a father to his little sick child; the perishing flower in the meadow; the passing wind; the mighty angels; works of power and ministers of God's pleasure—all are called upon to add to the grace of the anthem of praise.

The song began with one adoring soul, but see, how it spreads with quick contagion, until angels catch the strain, and the furthest limits of the created universe, and the works of God find voice. Sing, dear Christian soul, and thou wilt set others singing.

MONDAY, May 28. Psalm civ.

The former psalm deals with the goodness of God to the soul that fears Him; this, with his lovingkindness to his works. The thought of the psalmist ranges from light, the first-born of God's works, the clouds and the winds, to fire and water, to mountains with their springs and valleys with their grass, to the trailing vine and the sturdy cedar, including all living things in the embrace and sweep of his thought. Nothing so weak or small as to be beyond his care, all abiding in his smile and fed by his bounty, the ease with which all living things are fed being as the opening of our hand.

One of the most exquisite touches of the psalm is a double picture of night and morning. We are transported to the tropical forest on which the sudden darkness has fallen, and which soon resounds with the cries and roaring of wild beasts. Then sunrise breaks through the forest glades, and the living creatures make for their den, while man goes forth to his work. The companion picture of the ocean traversed by ships, and in which the sea-monster gambols with ungainly motion, is also remarkable for its delicacy and strength.

But the main lesson for us is to see, beneath the veil of natural law, the direct operation of God Himself. All is of Him, through Him, and to Him. His smile is life, the hiding of his face death. Shall God do so much for his works, and neglect his child? Shall He spend all his strength on creation, and neglect those whom He bought with his precious blood? Has not this God resource enough to meet all our need? Turn from this psalm to Matt. vi., and answer Christ's interrogations.

TUESDAY, May 29. Psalm cv.

This psalm and the next form a pair, probably composed during the exile in Babylon. They are evidently derived in part from the old Tabernacle service, in which was found the beginning of this and the end of the next. (See 1 Chron. xvi.) This psalm tells the story of Jehovah's faithfulness, that, of Israel's ingratitude.

It is right to make known God's doings. Nothing touches men more quickly, or more certainly excites their faith and hope, than to hear what others have experienced of God's saving health. Let us talk more often of his marvellous works. If God has forgiven you, even to ten thousand talents, confess it. If you have learnt more of the patience of Christ in bearing with your many sins and failures, do not be slack in telling that which redounds to his credit, though to your shame.

The salient points which stand out in our record of the past may be summarized under the same general divisions as those of the holy psalmist. God hath remembered his covenant, which He has ratified in the blood of his Son, that He would love and bless us, for nothing in ourselves, but because of his grace in Christ. He has fenced us around with his protection, suffering no one to do us harm. Even when, like Joseph, we have been the victims of malice and cruelty, He has brought us up out of the pit and the prison-house. He has often brought us out of Egypt, and led us through the Red Seas of trouble into the land of promise. The exodus of Israel is the exodus of the soul; and the love of God to his chosen people is the same to us.

WEDNESDAY, May 30. Psalm cvi.

What tender prayers begin and end this sad recital of sin! In vv. 4, 5, the prayer for remembrance; in v. 47, for salvation and ingathering. In spite of all the evil in which we are more or less implicated, we come back to God with the same simple-hearted faith, believing that his mercy-gates stand always open, and that we are welcome. Yes, and we realize that we may dare to act as the intercessors for others, and specially for his people.

What a recital is here. We have sinned . we have committed iniquity . we have done wickedly . understood not . remembered not . rebellious . forgat . waited not . lusted exceedingly . tempted God . worshipped a molten image . despised the pleasant land . believed not . murmured . hearkened not . joined to Beth-peor . provoked him . angered Him . rebelled against his Spirit . mingled themselves with the nations . sacrificed their sons and daughters . were defiled with their works. This litany of confession, in almost every item, may be duplicated from our own bitter experience.

And on the other side, He saved them for his own name's sake . led them . saved them . regarded their distress . heard their cry . remembered his covenant . repented according to the multitude of his mercies . made them to be pitied. There is no slackening of God's reprimands to his people, or of his righteous judgments. When his people are froward, He shows himself froward. He gives us our request, and sends leanness into our souls. He permits us to reap as we sow. But through it all He carries forward his Divine and loving purpose, that by frost or heat, by summer or winter, by chastisement or tenderness, He may make us partakers of his blessedness.

THURSDAY, May 31. Psalm cvii.

This psalm is constructed on a regular and symmetrical plan. It consists of five stanzas, which are clearly marked in the R.V. The first four depict the sufferings of the exile in the desert (2-9), the prisoner in his cell (10-16), the victim of deadly sickness (17-22), and the storm-tossed sailor (23-32). Each of these cries to Jehovah, and is heard; and upon this a chorus of singers praises God for his mercy.

Life is like this psalm, so full of changeful and trying experiences. To few is it given to enjoy unbroken prosperity. For most of us, the desert-loneliness, the confinement of circumstances, the pressure of sickness, and the tossings of the restless deep, are but too familiar. But God is in all, and brings us through all to the haven where we would fain be, and where the weary rest for evermore. Notice that the cry is elicited from all alike. They all cry unto God in their trouble. There is an equal claim in each case for praise. Too many cry but do not praise. Quick enough in their appeal for help, they forget to return to give thanks.

Let us give heed to these things, observing them, shewing the of holy meditation, until we come to understand the lovingkindness of God, which is over all his works. We should cultivate the habit of looking out for God's lovingkindness. It is always present in the most unpromising circumstances, but only the quick eyes of love, at times, can discern it. God help us to have love enough to find love, as the magnet detects the magnetized.

Give me this fixed heart, O God—fully and for ever set on Thee, on thy glory, thy work. Too often have I been like some rudderless bark, at the mercy of every wind and current. I would have a settled course, from which I would never swerve again. Oh, that my life might be one long psalm, that I might go through the world awaking psalteries and harps.

When some great deliverance has come into my life, I extol thy mercy, thy truth, and thy glorious holiness; but too often I drop back into the old lethargy and sluggishness, which have held me too long. But give me the fixed heart—my will fixed, if not my emotions—my purpose, if not my feelings. Whether joy or sorrow fall to my share, may my soul pursue its even course, as when the ocean steamer cleaves the billows and cross-currents on her way to her far-off destination.

Speak to me, O God, in thy holiness; then I will exult in such consciousness of thy favour and blessing, that whatever be the difficulties and temptation of my lot, they may yield before me. Shechem and Succoth, Gilead and Manasseh, Ephraim and Judah, all represent the difficulties and obstacles that oppose us in life; but when our faith is strong in God and his nearness, in God and his promises, how easily do we surmount them! We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

Mark that, it is not we who can tread down our adversaries. They are too strong and insidious. But God goes before us, treading them down, as a man may trample down the weeds that gather before his steps, and we have only to follow after. Go forth with us to that fight, O God! for vain is the help of man.

SATURDAY, June 2. Psalm cix.

Here is a bitter complaint of one who has suffered from accumulated calumny, ingratitude, and cruelty—who calls down terrible curses on the family and person of the persecutor.

It may be that the psalmist personifies his people, down-trodden by some proud tyrant, who, like Haman, is destined to meet his speedy doom; and if so, this outburst of complaint and prayer may be applied to the Church in dark days of persecution. But she can never adopt these maledictions as they stand. She has been taught to love her enemies, bless them that hate her, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute her. Those who find a difficulty in receiving this psalm may be reminded that the let is said by some to be equivalent to shall. In that case, instead of imprecation, this might be the language of certain anticipation of the results of wrong-doing, treachery, and sin; and such an interpretation seems in harmony with verse 20.

With what touching prayer the Psalm closes. Poor and needy, like a declining shadow, tossed up and down, with weakened knees and failing flesh, the suppliant asks that God would undertake for him, and save him according to his mercy. And from prayer he passes to assurance that God will certainly stand at his right hand and save him.

I met with one to-day who for five days was shut up alone in a Chinese town, placarded with bills inciting the mob to take her life. Her husband was away seeking help for them both; there was only a mud wall between herself and the infuriated mob, whilst in the next house she could detect the shrieks of a miserable demon-possessed girl; but she was kept in perfect peace, because she realized that Christ stood at her right hand saving her from those who waited for her soul. Such peace is possible to all of us.

Home Missions.

Chingford Cottage Homes.

ONE of the chief branches of Miss Steer's well-known work at the Bridge of Hope, Ratcliff Highway, is that which has for its object the rescue and maintenance of little girls, who are taken from positions of moral danger or poverty in the slums of East London. The children are comfortably housed and cared for in a row of nine pretty cottages at Chingford, close to Epping Forest. They receive a sound education, and are trained in domestic duties, ultimately passing out into situations, but remaining connected, by ties of gratitude and affection, with the directors and teachers who had proved their benefactors in the time of need. As a rule about 150 girls are accommodated. On the occasion of the annual gathering in connection with the homes, a large number of friends and supporters travelled to Chingford on Saturday last. A large marquee had been erected on part of the open space at the rear of the institutions, while the remainder of the space was occupied by the children, who entertained their many visitors with recitations, part songs, and musical drills; and evidenced by their healthy appearance, modest manners, and mental quickness, how thoroughly they had been trained. Their knowledge of the Bible was shown to be remarkably accurate.

The prizes were distributed by Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, who went on to advocate the claims of the work to a larger measure of public support, and said that the results of Miss Steer's operations, as seen in the safety and happiness of the little ones, must not only afford satisfaction to friends of philanthropic work, but inspire them to fresh endeavour in the interests of the needy classes of the community. The speaker thought that the command of the Master, "Feed my lambs," was, on the whole, sadly neglected. At the Chingford institutions, however, they could see it was sweetly carried out, and the little ones brought into the Christian fold.

Appreciative words were also spoken by Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., and Miss Steer gave a brief review of the year's work; after which the homes were thrown open for inspection.

Homes for Crippled Boys.

THE annual report of the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Woolsthorpe House, Kensington, records the gratifying fact that there has been no lack in the generous support and sympathy in alleviating the sad lot of afflicted lads through this agency. This timely care and training have transformed these sufferers into happy, useful, and self-supporting members of society.

The average number of boys in the Home during the year was ninety-three. Twenty have been placed in situations, and give every evidence of a promising future. The educational inspector presents an excellent report, showing that great care has been exercised in the education of the boys, and their progress has been highly satisfactory.

Trade in the various departments has been active and profitable. The work done in the homes includes the stamping of all kinds of stationery, dies and copper plates engraved, printing, the manufacture of harness, portmanteaux, &c., tailoring, carpentering, and cabinet-making, &c. The boys in the home are taught these trades, and are thus on leaving the institution enabled to obtain situations. Correspondence with these boys is retained, and a visit to the Home is a pleasant experience to its former inmates.

The hon. treasurer of the Home is Mr. E. Parker Young, 30, Westbourne Square, W.

The Bible as a Gift.

A PERUSAL of last year's record of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures reveals how far-reaching have been the results of the Society's activity during a period of unusual and protracted anxiety. With the aid of this organization, workers amongst the troops in South Africa have been enabled to place in the hands of the soldiers the precious volume.

This addition to the ordinary work of the Association, needless to say, still continues to be maintained, and cannot fail to bring joy and peace to the hearts of the men in times of distraction and sorrow. From centres of missionary labour throughout the world come tidings of encouragement as to the interest awakened through the efforts of the Association. From Egypt, Mexico, South America, China, Russia, Spain, &c., the testimony of missionaries is unanimous to the assistance received in their work through the grants of the Association. The funds subscribed are available for the object of the Association without deduction, the work being done by voluntary helpers, and the expenses privately defrayed. The distribution of Bibles has exceeded 178,000; Testaments, 1,075,162; and portions, 1,117,657. Copies of the annual report may be obtained from either of the hon. secretaries, Mrs. A. E. Robertson, Chesils, Christ Church Road, Hampstead, N.W.; or Mrs. A. E. Pridham, 6, Cannon Place, Hampstead.

Homeless Little Ones.

THE great army of destitute children grows apace with appalling rapidity. Public indignation is often aroused by some terrible story of cruelty and often worse, and the perpetrators meet their just punishment. It is not always realized how many of these helpless children are half starved, whilst those in charge of them manage to keep outside the law. Many a mother, after trying in vain for weeks to secure someone to come for her child while she earns her living, has to face starvation. To such the "Haven for Homeless Little Ones," Castle House, Walton-on-the-Hill, opens its doors, for the reception of what too often proves a burden to the

DISTRACTED AND DESPAIRING MOTHER.

During last year thirty-six new cases were received, many of them sad indeed, but saved from unknown dangers.

One of these, a little fellow, was found by a clergyman's wife in a shocking state of starvation, and subject to every form of ill-usage. Though only eleven months old, the child's face looked old and worn, with an expression of terror indicating what he had endured. The inmates of the babies' nurseries are the pictures of health and happiness.

One is the babe of a young mother who struggled bravely to provide for her child quite unaided. After removing him repeatedly, and utterly failing to find a suitable woman to take charge of him, she incidentally heard of Castle House. Overjoyed to know there were some who sympathise with her in her critical position, she applied for the admission of her child. She is but one of many in similar circumstances to whom the institution has been blessed in the highest sense, and has proved the means, with the grace of God, of leading them to a new life. The stories of some are too sad to record. Rescued from innumerable forms of neglect and cruelty, these "little ones" are safe and happy in their beautiful home, and after a joyous childhood, careful training for work and service, a plain sound education, they will take up positions in the world as useful men and women, having been trained in the knowledge and fear of God.

It is desired to purchase Castle House and the eight acres of land, which will enable the promoters to maintain more children than at present without increase of income. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Ransome Wallis, Burgh Heath, Epsom.

United Presbyterian Synod.

(Concluded.)

UNION WITH THE FREE CHURCH.

THURSDAY of the Synod week was an historic occasion. As the clerk (Dr. Kennedy) submitted the formal report on the negotiations for union with the Free Church, it was felt that the finger of God was unmistakably pointing the way in this new departure. He reviewed the history of the denomination since 1847, when by the amalgamation of the Secession and Relief Churches the United Presbyterian Church was constituted under its present name; and showed how, during the latter half of the century, the whole tendency of church life in Scotland had been towards a closing up of the ranks and abolishing of outward divisions among Christians.

To Professor James Orr (Edinburgh) fell the privilege of moving the adoption of the report, and his manner of doing so proved how deeply this matter is touching the real heart of the Church. He repudiated and rebutted all charges of political motive or sectarian jealousy in the matter; but admitted that it had become inevitable—"by force of circumstances, by community of testimony and work." The churches had during many years been growing to know each other better and better, differences had receded, and the vastly more important common interests had come steadily to the front. Speaking of the final consummation near attainment, Dr. Orr announced that the Joint Committee had unanimously agreed to propose the name of "The United Free Church of Scotland" for the new organization. The largest building in Edinburgh had been secured for the union gatherings. The two churches hoped to meet in their separate capacities on October 30 next, and on the following day to come together for the purpose of joining hands. The motion was seconded by Rev. G. L. Carstairs (Glasgow), supported by Mr. Thomas Shaw, M.P., and carried without a dissentient voice or vote.

FOREIGN VISITORS.

An interesting part of the proceedings was the reception of deputies from other countries. First to speak was the Rev. R. Bulloch Douglas, from the Presbyterian Church of South Africa, who appealed for the sympathy and support of the home churches in the arduous task of undoing the havoc wrought by the present war, in taking up the broken threads of the work, as well as in view of the great opportunity for expansion which will certainly arise in the near future. Then Rev. R. M. Dickey spoke of the importance of the work carried on by the Presbyterian Church of Canada; and Rev. Patrick R. Mackay, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, called in urgent and touching terms for an increase of Christian effort among Europeans resident in India; and Pastor Monnier brought the fraternal greetings of the Union of Free Evangelical Churches of France.

CLOSING ADDRESS.

Dr. Mair brought the Synod to a close by an able address, in which he reviewed the doings and sayings of the week in masterly fashion. Speaking of the work abroad, he pointed out that the 30,400 church members in other lands constitute more than one-seventh of the whole membership (about 230,000), and referred to the vote of confidence implied in the fact of large contributions being sent in for this work from the Society of Friends and other outside sources. In the future he saw a new and wide field for their sympathies and prayers in the bond which would by the union be established between them and the work of God in the Highlands and islands—which have been till now almost like a foreign country to them.

Soldiers in Camp.—Mr. F. E. Wootton, North View, Lydd, Kent, writes:—"I have permission to hold open-air services in camp on Sundays, and should be glad to hear from any gentleman who would come at his own cost for the week-end to assist. I am also seeking the services of a lady, who can defray her own expenses, to help me in my work here."

The Late Mr. Peter Terry.

SIR,—I am very glad you did honour to this servant of God by a portrait and sketch in your last issue. If more were known of what has been accomplished for the cause of the Church by some of those honoured servants who let their light shine in comparative obscurity, many a humble worker would be encouraged to believe that his work also is "not vain in the Lord."

The late Mr. Peter Terry was an old friend and fellow church member with my predecessor, the late Mr. E. W. Thomas, and an incident which occurred before this institution was founded Mr. Thomas seemed never to weary of telling. It was at a time of great perplexity, when there appeared no light to guide him as to the course to pursue. Mr. Thomas consulted Mr. Terry. After carefully considering the matter submitted to him and advising thereon, Mr. Terry quoted the words of the wise man: "In all thy ways acknowledge Him and He shall direct thy paths." God was acknowledged, and He gave unmistakable direction, with the result that this institution arose, which has been the means of temporal and spiritual blessing to thousands of women.

Mr. Terry's interest was maintained through long years, and at the advanced age of ninety-three he took part in the annual meeting of this institution last year.—I am, sir, yours faithfully, William J. Taylor,

"Friendless and Fallen."

Salvation Army Extensions.

IN connection with the women's social work of the Salvation Army, three extensions were inaugurated on Wednesday, May 16.

At Brent House, the maternity home in Hackney, a new wing was opened, giving accommodation for twenty-one more girls, of whom 240 can now pass through the home yearly. In three years 427 girls have been admitted. At Stamford Hill capacious premises were opened as an industrial home for twenty-nine girls, twenty of whom will earn their own living and enjoy as much freedom as they would in domestic service. It is hoped to make this home self-supporting almost immediately; but the authorities seek help in the matters of renovation and furnishing. A third building, situated in the High Road, Clapton, was opened as a receiving home, with accommodation for forty-two girls. The new premises will give room, not only for the receiving work, but also for a knitting factory.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.

A FEW days ago Mrs. Birt sailed for Canada with her fifty-seventh party of boys and girls from the Sheltering Homes, Myrtle Street, Liverpool. This happy and intelligent group are entering upon a new life. They have known what it is to suffer hunger, neglect, and want. They are proceeding to a new land, where, away from overcrowded cities they will thrive amid the healthy and congenial surroundings of Canadian country life, and in due course strengthen the bonds of sympathy, emulation, and patriotism between the mother-country and her colony. The party consists of sixty carefully-trained destitute children, who will be placed into good homes, where it is hoped they will develop into useful God-fearing men and women.

Communications respecting this movement may be addressed to Mr. E. C. Thin, 24, Chapel Street, Liverpool, Epsom Races.—Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, pleads for prayer and practical help for the campaign to be undertaken, as in former years, at Epsom during the race week. The expenses attending on convening about sixty preachers and singers (the London City Mission Choir being a strong element of attraction) for this work amount to about £100. A special prayer meeting for workers and friends will be held in Exeter Hall (parlour) on Saturday next at 3.30.

Scottish Notes.

LAST Thursday Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte presided at the opening of a new mission hall, situated at 36, Lauriston Place, in connection with the work carried on among the cabmen of Edinburgh. Accommodation is provided for 300 persons. Dr. Whyte remarked that he had been present at the opening of many churches and halls, but believed he had never attended an opening ceremony with greater pleasure than he did on that occasion.

A very successful conference of Sabbath-school teachers was held in Maxweltown Baptist Church, Dundee, on Saturday, May 12, under the auspices of the Baptist Union of Scotland. There was a large attendance of delegates and friends from congregations in the counties of Forfar and Fife. The Rev. John Dick, who occupied the chair, gave an instructing and and interesting model lesson on "Jesus at the Pharisee's House." Addresses were given by Mr. W. L. Thomson, Cupar, Fife, on "The Necessary Qualifications for a Sabbath-school Teacher;" by Rev. W. P. Simpson, St. Andrew's, on "The Supreme Aim of Sabbath-school Work;" and by Mr. Alexander Young, Glasgow, on "The Twentieth Century Fund."

Bishop Webb, who is at present acting for the Bishop of Brechin, performed last week the opening ceremony connected with a new mission church erected in Blackscroft, Dundee, by the congregation of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in that city.

Dr. Talmage visited Edinburgh last week, preaching on Sabbath evening in the Synod Hall, Castle Terrace; and his appearance was the occasion of even greater enthusiasm than had been witnessed in Glasgow.

At last week's meeting of the Scottish Sabbath Protection Association, a statement was submitted of the operations of the Association, and correspondence from the Convention of Royal Burghs, showing that active measures are being taken with a view to legislation in connection with Sabbath trading in ice-cream and other shops.

An important symposium was held on Monday of last week by the Central Literary Association of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., on the subject of "Church Union in Scotland." Addresses were given by the Rev. John MacLean (Tron Parish Church), Rev. James Paterson (White Memorial Free Church), and Rev. W. H. Winter (Coatbridge Episcopal Church). The opinion was expressed that there is growing in the community a spirit of readiness to confess that a brother who happens to belong to a different section of the church may be even more honest and upright than ourselves.

Speaking on "Gambling" last week, ex-Councillor Scott (Edinburgh) said he knew a working man who, with an income of only thirteen shillings a week, had bought a shilling lottery ticket every week for forty years, and had never won a prize; boys went to the Queen's Park in groups to gamble, and expert newsboys in process of time became professional bookmakers; while rich young men are lured to baccarat dens, where they are "plucked" by means of "faked" cards. If unchecked this evil would consign our nation to the doom that befel the great empires of antiquity. At the same meeting Bailie Sinclair (Glasgow) expressed the opinion that an important step would be gained if it were made penal for newspapers to publish sporting forecasts, and another if the Post Office were not allowed to transmit sporting telegrams.

The Protestant Alliance.

THE first of a series of afternoon lectures was delivered on Wednesday, May 16, at the Y.W.C.A. Hall, Surbiton, by Mr. D. S. Hyslop, who spoke on "Some recent Protests against Sacerdotalism." "The Reservation of the Sacrament" will be the subject on Wednesdays, May 23 and 30.

An interesting lecture on "Savonarola, the Italian Reformer and Martyr," was delivered on Friday, May 18, at Avenue Road Church, Shepherd's Bush, by Mr. J. W. Flower. The chair was taken by Rev. E. J. Dukes, of Harrogate, who gave an interesting account of Romanism in foreign countries.

Irish Notes.

THE Irish Presbyterian contribution to the Indian Famine Fund has reached the sum of £6,000.

Two members of the Salvation Army have been fined £1 each for conducting open-air services in Dublin. On the other hand, some rowdies who tried to disturb an open-air meeting in Rathgar Square, Dublin, by forcing an ass through the crowd, were fined also £1 each, not for disturbing the service, but for abusing the ass.

A meeting to bid farewell to Mr. Edward Chamney, who is going out as a missionary to the Gran Chaco Indians in connection with the South American Missionary Society, has been held in Rathdrum Church, co. Dublin, where some years ago Mr. Chamney had been led to decide for Christ. Rev. Henry Mahony and the rector of the parish were among the speakers on the occasion.

The Gag in Dublin.

SIR,—Two members of the Salvation Army are at the present moment in jail for the crime of preaching the Gospel in Middle Abbey Street, Dublin, last Sunday. They were not ordered by the police to move on, nor was there any obstruction, for Middle Abbey Street is almost deserted on Sunday. Yet Mr. Mahony, a Roman Catholic Magistrate, sentenced them to fourteen days' imprisonment or £1 fine, and compelled them to give security for good behaviour, or go to jail for an additional month. The case is going to be carried to the superior courts, and I have no doubt some of your readers will joyfully help to enable the men to have a fair trial, according to law. Thomas Connellan.

For God and the Gospel.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE heavy demand for War, Famine, and other National funds has seriously affected the receipts of the Mission, so that as we near the close of its financial year we find ourselves several hundred pounds in arrears for current expenses. The need is therefore peculiarly pressing at the present time, and all the more as the season is rapidly approaching for our various in London and country town and villages, which God has so wonderfully blessed during the past thirty-five years in the winning of souls, and which we greatly desire to extend this year.

Many thousands have thus every year been brought under the sound of the Gospel who would not otherwise have heard it.

This Mission forms one of the most practical training colleges for missionaries going abroad, and not a few of its converts and evangelists, including two of our own daughters, are now devoting their lives to the spread of the Gospel in distant lands, shrouded in paganism and idolatry, whilst others are looking forward to, and preparing for, similar fields of service.

Homes for Motherless Children.—In connection with the work on behalf of motherless children initiated and carried on by Mr. R. T. Smith, of Chiswick, the premises known as The Roystons, Chiswick, were recently opened by Lady Newnes. A meeting of supporters was held, and Mr. David Tweddle, who presided, stated that 174 children had been received since the work started in 1896, and ninety are now in the homes. Addresses were given by Revs. Nevison Loraine and F. G. Benskin.

Strangers in Manchester.—The Manchester London Road Station Strangers' Home continues to prove an incalculable boon to the large numbers of women and girls who find themselves in that city without friends. The Railway Station Lodging House at 53, New Bridge Street, has also been the means of providing help to those in need. The aim of the committee is to prevent strangers in the city suffering from the perils by which they are surrounded. The wholesome advice and timely caution administered are gratefully appreciated by an increasing number of inmates. The annual report contains particulars of many cases of interest. Copies may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. W. Redford, Willholme, Charlton-cum-Hardy.

The May Meetings.

Presbyterian Missions.

QUEEN'S HALL was well filled for the tenth annual missionary meeting of the United Presbyteries of London, held on the evening of Tuesday week. Half-an-hour's musical service preceded the speaking, including Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer," with Miss Ada Forrest as soloist, and the combined North and South London choirs.

Presbyterian mission fields now include: Amoy, 65 stations, 117 native agents; Swatow, 52 stations, 56 native agents; Formosa, 55 stations, 31 native agents; Singapore, 8 stations, 19 native agents; India, where dispensary patients in one year represent 500 villages; and among Jews in London as well as Syria. In the nine hospitals, some 40,000 of those who seek bodily healing hear of the Great Physician. The special aim in China is to raise a Chinese Church which shall be self-governed, self-supporting, and self-propagating. Already Chinese Christians have become missionaries to others. Amoy, in this respect, took the lead years ago; then Formosa commenced work in the Pescadores; and Swatow has now missions in the islands of Namoa and Hai-sua. The cost of these three last-mentioned forward movements is borne by the native churches. Native Chinese agents of the Mission out-number the European staff by nearly three to one. Last year there were 6,703 communicants in mission churches, as compared with 1,927 in the year 1876.

In his address from the chair, Rev. Dr. Watson, Moderator of Synod, spoke with thankfulness of the real spiritual prosperity resting upon the work of the Church in China, and the consequent responsibility for adequate support from Christians at home. He felt that among the richer and more educated Presbyterian congregations there is as regards foreign missions, owing to a low spiritual temperature and failure to realize the true relation of the Christian faith to all others. These latter, each serving a particular end, have prepared the way for the supreme religion of Christ; but to contend, from their bearing certain good fruits, that these faiths are sufficient in themselves shows but superficial acquaintance with the life of the countries concerned. There is no form of cant more hollow than that which magnifies every religion on the face of the earth to the depreciation of the religion which has done everything for the person who so speaks. Christians owe all social, moral, and individual benefits to the life and death of their Lord; and they are therefore bound, by loyalty to Him and compassion for their fellows, to make his Gospel known to all men. There is absolute harmony between work of God at home and abroad; and experience shows that those who are influenced by a wise Christian generosity usually have equal regard to the claims of both fields of labour.

Rev. J. Steele, of Swatow, spoke of points in the report presented to Synod. There is great opportunity in the opening of every Chinese province to the Gospel; but these large fields are only sparsely occupied. The work is not without difficulty, such as cruel persecution endured by converts; but the earnestness of the people is to home Christianity. They have taken upon themselves the establishment of a book-lending society, which has proved very useful in reaching the literati. The Amoy people are considering the expediency of sending their own missionaries to the Philippines. Last year poor natives gave £2,000 for propagation of the Gospel in China. Side by side with that, however, there was a decrease in home congregational contributions, although the fund, as a whole, has risen through Christian Endeavour and Sunday-school effort. Surely this is a call to more prayer and self-sacrifice.

Comparison between the condition of Central Africa in the days of David Livingstone and the present time, afforded Rev. Dr. Laws, of the Livingstonia Mission, abundant material for an instructive and comprehensive review. The death of the Christian explorer had perhaps done more for Africa than all his years of toil and privation; for several missions took up the work which he died in pioneering. Details were given illustrating the vastness of the land to be possessed for Christ, the eagerness of the people for Christian instruction, and the special necessity, in this case, for prompt obedience to Christ's great commission. Stirring addresses were also delivered by Rev. F. Scott Webster, Rector of All Souls', Langham Place, and Rev. T. T. Matthews, of the London Missionary Society, Madagascar.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

TO reach the many thousands of whom the world speaks as lost or fallen, and, in the loving spirit of Christ to stretch out an uplifting hand to them, such is the noble mission of this organization. The name is suggestive of the work as originally started in 1859, the plan then being to meet those in whom interest centred, at the hour most likely to find them abroad in the street. Of late years afternoon and evening meetings have been added, the work being associated with various localities.

At the fortieth annual meeting, held on the afternoon of Tuesday week, at Exeter Hall, some particulars of last year's operations were given by Mr. T. Nixon, a member of committee. Numerous meetings were arranged for and addressed by the secretary, Mr. C. Wilson McCree, in various parts of London, and in provincial towns. "Letters to Men," have been discreetly distributed, in the hope of influencing for good those who are associates of the women in their sin. One poor creature, in what proved to be her death-bed confession, said: "How little anyone thought that if I had been won from my cruel life ten years ago, over a hundred sons from good homes might never have strayed into the paths of immorality. For these pure and innocent mothers' boys

I PLANNED RUIN—AND RUIN CAME!"

Archdeacon Sinclair, speaking from the chair, said that unless efforts of this kind are maintained, the evil must constantly increase in an overcrowded city with a growing population. Adult Sunday-schools, such as are common in the north of England, are worthy of wider attention in this connection. Not only parents, but employers and mistresses, should exercise more care over young people. This work mercifully recognises the fact that no human soul is past reclamation, through the power of God's Holy Spirit.

A full measure of compassion and help for our fallen sisters was strongly urged by Rev. Canon M'Cormick, from the plain example of Christ Himself.

In an impassioned address, the Rev. J. Fleming Shearer maintained that nothing can conquer vice save change of heart through the Gospel. Fighting the social evil is worthy of the united energies of Christ's Church; and for such work, a truly loving heart is essential, under the direct inspiration of Him whom we serve in the persons of his degraded and needy creatures. Miss Bryant gave several instances of God's blessing upon her work at Portsmouth, in connection with the movement.

Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society.

EIGHT and twenty years ago this Society was organized, not as a missionary agency for the conversion of Romanists in the countries indicated, but in response to an appeal from groups of brave and earnest men, seeking freedom from Romish corruption, and trying to build up a reform upon primitive Church lines. The work of enlisting British sympathy and support on behalf of these reformed Episcopal Churches, was reviewed at a meeting held in Exeter Hall.

Rev. Dr. Noyes, hon. secretary, thankfully acknowledged God's hand in the steady maintenance of work in Spain and Portugal, with decided progress in some districts. There has been a remarkable religious awakening in San Esteban, where the Reformers support their own evangelist, and form a missionary centre for the surrounding villages. In Seville, churches and schools chronicle advance in the face of many difficulties. The great group of buildings known as the Mariannos Convent, Lisbon, is now occupied by the congregation of St. Paul, and the usefulness of this central church has been already proved. The bold stand of Rev. Dr. La Cerda, lately a Romish priest, for the faith of the Gospel, is made remarkable by comments of approval in the Portuguese secular press. Renewal of Spanish persecution may turn out for the furtherance of the Gospel. In Villaescusa, four on the charge of disrespect to a religious procession, which they could not possibly see! Notwithstanding such incidents, a growing feeling in favour of religious toleration is arising throughout Spain. The financial year of the Society closed with a deficit of £322; and the earnest co-operation of all friends of the Reform will be needed to carry on the work.

In a thoroughly logical way, the Bishop of Derry, who presided, urged that the Reform movement should command the earnest recognition and support of the Anglican Church. The foundation of his argument was that the Romish authorities have sought to impose upon the Reformers unlawful terms of communion. The presence, since the days of Queen Elizabeth, of Romish bishops upon the domain of the ancient Church of Ireland, is a walking satire upon the contention that Anglican bishops should not be "obtruded" upon Spanish and Portuguese Churches. In both countries resident oversight is needed, not occasional visitation. No principle of church government, however, can compare in importance with the vital, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, as applied to this struggle to maintain and extend new spiritual life, contending against the blighting system which ossifies heart and brain.

Archdeacon Madden said that the cry of deliverance from the thraldom of Rome comes from France, Italy, and Austria, as well as from Spain and Portugal; and it is our duty to hold out a helping hand to men struggling towards the light under great difficulties, as evidenced in some extracts he read from a letter lately received from Bishop Cabrera.

Further testimony was given by Dean Lefroy, Revs. John Sharp, S. Musgrave Harris, W. H. Griffith Thomas, and Mr. Wm. McCall.

Bible Flower Mission.—The plentiful supply of spring flowers during the last few weeks has enabled the workers of the Bible Flower Mission to gladden the hearts of the inmates of various workhouses, infirmaries, &c. The secretary, Mrs. W. W. Turton, 110, Cannon Street, E.C., writes that evergreen and wool are still much needed, as well as ready-made bouquets. More visitors are required, also workers at the depôts.

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

AMONG the many influential men who expressed regret for inability to be at the well-attended annual meeting in Grosvenor House on Wednesday week, were Bishop Ingham, the Chief Rabbi, the Dean of Westminster, the Bishop of Chichester, the Archdeacon of London, Cardinal Vaughan, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and Sir Julian Goldsmid. In a letter accompanying his donation of £10, Mr. Lionel Phillips, manager of South African mines employing from 2,000 to 3,000 natives, testified in favour of totally prohibiting the sale of drink to them, but doubted the possibility of carrying into effect any sweeping enactment for the whole of our South African dominions. Much, however, can be done by local restrictions. He said that all well-wishers for the natives and the country will gladly co-operate with the United Committee.

The report read by Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, hon. secretary, opened with reference to the great loss the cause had suffered in the death of the late president, the Duke of Westminster. Gratification was expressed at the meeting of the Powers at the Brussels Conference held in Paris last year, and at the views expressed by Sir Francis Plunkett on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, that the fixed rate of duty needs increase. Efforts are being made to secure fuller protection for the natives of South Africa from the drink traffic. A summary is given of the recent "Innes Liquor Bill," also extensive quotations from the 1899 Blue Book on native affairs in South Africa, in which various officials of the Cape Government condemn in strong terms the traffic in intoxicants. It is hoped, on the conclusion of the war, to approach the authorities in order to advocate further legislative restrictions upon the traffic. Last year's income was only £364, and more than one-fourth of this was contributed by the late president. Greater financial support is needed in order to use the

for the Committee's influence afforded by the opening up of the West Coast of Africa, the occupation of the Soudan, and the coming settlement in South Africa, as well as to maintain efforts to secure the co-operation of various British Colonies and foreign Powers.

Sir Mark Stewart, who presided, owing to the late arrival of Sir John Kennaway through his Parliamentary duties, was glad to find the zones of prohibition maintained. For practical purposes native races are as children, and their continued existence depends upon protection from the traffic. Both Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain are in favour of more stringent restrictions. It is hoped that a French Committee may be established on similar lines to the one now doing excellent work in Germany; and the organizers of the World's Temperance Congress have agreed to devote a section to the subject.

The report was characterized by Bishop Barry as a record of distinct and unequivocal progress, in the face of much antagonism from selfish greed. In spite of strong Governmental opposition, public opinion is running in the direction of active recognition of the evils of intemperance. England is destined to be of the world; but all her beneficent action to that end is hindered or thwarted as long as native races have the evils of drink thrust upon them. He trusted that, like the slavery of olden days, this form of bondage may yet be effectually broken by English hands.

Mention was here made, by the honorary secretary, of the inauguration of a strongly supported United Committee for America, as the result of his visit to that country.

Mr. R. W. Perks tendered, on behalf of the meeting, sympathy with the bereaved Duchess of Westminster and her family; and took occasion, from consideration of the late Duke's courageous and active example, to urge the most resolute exercise of individual and representative influence to enforce the convictions embodied in the report of the Committee

Bishop Johnson, a native worker in West Africa, made an eloquent appeal for bolder action, and full confidence in God, on the part of England, declaring that, so long as European Christianity is associated in the native mind with the traffic in strong drink, the missionary outlook among negro races must be disappointing.

Sir John Kennaway expressed thanks to the Duke of Westminster for the use of Grosvenor House, which concession, he trusted, might be regarded as an earnest that his Grace is desirous of maintaining the many good works of his honoured grandfather.

Country Towns Mission.

"IN every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ," are words of Scripture which well express the principal work of the missionaries of this organization; men whose lives are devoted to work in our country towns and villages on much the same lines as that of the London City Mission.

At the sixty-third anniversary meeting held in Exeter Hall last week, interesting details of fruitful labour for Christ were given by the secretary of the Mission, Mr. G. H. Mawer. He thankfully announced that the debt burdening the Mission for many years has at length been extinguished. Work in some of the stations calls for particular notice. At Bideford, North Devon, where a missionary was appointed five years ago, there are full attendances at a Mission Hall seating 400 persons. Bible classes and prayer meetings are well attended, especially by men. There have been some hundreds of conversions, and every week definite results are seen.

The work has also been very fruitful in a group of villages in Essex, where, were it not for the efforts of the Society, numbers of people could not hear the Gospel. Visits of the missionary are heartily welcomed, and cottage meetings have been arranged in outlying districts—two and three miles from any place of worship. By open-air meetings and every means in their power, the men engaged in this quiet work of God labour to make known the glad tidings of the Gospel throughout their districts. The following figures are of the labours of a missionary during one year:—Hours devoted to visitation, 1,533; visits, 4,465; Scriptures read, 3,819 times. Who can estimate the result of such an amount of personal intercourse carried on by one who is anxious to press home upon those he sees daily the truths of God's Word?

Mr. Augustus Churchill, as chairman of the meeting, traced the success of the Mission to its deeply spiritual character, and the self-denying devotion of the men, who are not daunted by the difficulties of commending Christ's salvation to our home heathen.

Three of the missionaries gave interesting details of their work. Mr. Joseph Harris described the encouraging growth from small beginnings at Bideford, where he never has an attendance less than 500 at an open-air meeting. His instances of simple dealing with souls in a direct and wise way were quite convincing as to the value of such efforts; and it was encouraging to hear how his ministrations are even solicited by all classes of the people.

Work among New Forest gipsies was described by Mr. G. R. Shaw, and very pathetic were some of the stories he told of ready acceptance of the Gospel by these rough and despised people, when once their confidence is gained. He found it hard to stop speaking of his loved work, and of the way in which the Word of God is uplifting poor gipsy folk.

Gospelling in Stansted, Essex, was represented by Mr. J. H. King, who told, among other things, of men over eighty years of age attending a Sunday afternoon meeting.

Rev. Arthur Mercer said that his own ministerial work had been helped by the devoted labours of Mr. King near Potter's Bar some years ago. He felt that the Mission goes far to meet the conditions of country places, which are so unfavourable as compared with the spiritual privileges enjoyed in London.

Irish Church Missions.

THE friends of the Irish Church Missions had an encouraging report to listen to, at their annual meeting, from Rev. N. F. Duncan, clerical secretary.

This organization does a vigorous work amongst the Roman Catholics of Ireland, a field difficult enough, and one requiring tact and skill on the part of its agents. To visit 120 fairs and markets is in itself no small tax upon strength and persistence, while the sale of many thousands of books (most of which are Testaments or portions thereof) opens the way for light to enter many a dark heart. The development of this distribution of literature, which is one of the most encouraging means of spreading the truth, has led to the opening of book shops in Belfast, Dublin, and Galway; to the last no fewer than 5,000 visits having been paid during the year. This speaks well for the interest which is being awakened.

Then in Limerick, Dublin, and other places a movable wooden hall has been the means of gathering in many, who would not attend meetings in a permanent building, to listen to the glad Gospel.

But the backbone of the work is the Mission schools. Those in Dublin contain nearly 900 children; and the twenty schools in Connemara and Galway over 400, where an excellent education, based upon religious teaching, is supplied.

The speakers at the meetings included Revs. the Hon. Talbot Rice, H. W. Bainbridge, P. B. Johnson (the Dublin superintendent), and Dr. A. B. Stoney. Reference was made to the Local Government Act of 1898, to which we have alluded at length on page 10. This has greatly intensified the difficulties pertaining to the work in Ireland. The Society's offices are at 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

The Lord's-day Observance Society.

THE record of the Lord's Day Observance Society is one of industry and helpfulness, as appeared from the particulars given at the annual meeting of the organization, which was lately held at St. James's Hall.

Rev. Dr. Peake said that it had been found necessary to call attention to the growing laxity manifested by various Government departments in regard to the religious observance of the Lord's Day. The opportunity afforded by the last Licensing Sessions had been used to press on the London County Council the inconsistent position in which it had been placed by its action in regard to the Sunday concerts at various places of amusement. Bye-elections during the past year had been utilized by the committee to invite the co-operation of the clergy and Nonconformist ministers in pressing this question on candidates for a seat in the Council.

Efforts to diminish the evils arising from Sunday excursions had been extended, and in that branch of their work they had secured the co-operation of a considerable number of shareholders, whose personal exercise of their influence with directors had already met with an encouraging degree of success.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. F. A. Bevan said that the diminishing observance of the Lord's Day must eventually have a most serious effect on the whole Christian life of the nation. They could not help observing, as they went to their various places of worship on the Lord's day, that there was a vastly increasing number of men and women who evidently had no intention whatever of going near a house of prayer. He felt that there should be an organized body of Christian men who should be for ever living witnesses to the sanctity of the Lord's Day, and who should watch most carefully everything that tended to desecrate it.

Subsequent speakers were Rev. Preb. Kitto—who said that the Lord's day was God's gift to man, and what God had given to humanity no man or any body of men had any right to take away—and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.

Christian Literature Society for India.

THIS Society, which had its origin just after the Indian Mutiny, in the wish of some to extend more fully to India the benefits of Christian education, held its annual meeting a few days ago, at Exeter Hall. Lord Northbrook, the president of the Society, was in the chair, and emphasized the necessity for the creation of a pure literature for India—books that meet the needs of the time. The provisions of books must, in the main, be the work of natives of the country, not of foreigners. But English writers, missionary and others, have shown the way, and native Christians are already beginning to follow in it. To stimulate and encourage such efforts is the useful field which the Society seeks to occupy. What has been, and is being, done is shown by the fact that in 1898 the Society published 1,240,305 volumes,

IN THIRTEEN LANGUAGES.

It works, as yet, upon slender means, and cannot overtake all the good work which lies to its hand. Contributions amounted last year to £3,242, and over £7,000 was realized by the sale of its literature in India.

Sir William Lee-Warner bore testimony, from personal and official inspection, to the great value of the Society's work in the Bombay Presidency. He alluded to the responsibility imposed on us by our position in India as the imperial power; and instanced a touching case of a little girl of six years of age, who had quite recently been murdered in Poona—that centre of advanced native opinion—as a human sacrifice at the dictate of a cruel superstition, in connection with the attempted discovery of some lost treasure. From this, he showed how great the need of India is in respect of such efforts as this Society is making.

Rev. H. Gulliford, of Mysore, spoke of the very friendly attitude of the Mysore (native) Government towards the missionaries. He laid great stress upon the newspaper as a very efficient means of disseminating Christian truth.

Soldiers' Christian Association.

THE operations of the Soldiers' Christian Association, especially in connection with the war in South Africa, have aroused a large measure of interest as a result of the thoroughness with which the spiritual and social needs of the men have been met by the workers.

The annual meeting of the Association was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, Sir George Williams presiding.

Mr. A. H. Wheeler, the general secretary, who has lately returned from South Africa, was to have reported on the work done among the troops there; but he has been invalided, and his report was read by Colonel G. Philips. Mr. Wheeler stated that the Association had now on the scene of war each accommodating 250 men. There were twenty-two qualified workers in the field, besides several giving part of their time. Two tents had been sent to Bloemfontein, and Lord Roberts himself had opened the one and chosen the best site for the other. One had been erected at Kimberley within a fortnight of the raising of the siege. The tents were used as clubs by day, with free stationery, &c., and at night for Gospel meetings. They had also been used on emergencies as hospital depôts, as temporary hospitals, and as quarters for the general and staff.

EIGHT LARGE TENTS,

OFFICERS OF EVERY RANK

had united in praising the work. The demand for writing material and literature was continuous, and nearly 250,000 supplies of notepaper and envelopes had been given. On one occasion thousands of men were thus helped who had not had a chance of writing home for a fortnight. Sir Redvers Buller, like other officers, had given the work every encouragement and facility, and a tent had been pitched in the Public Square of Ladysmith. Hospital visitation was another feature of the work; and Mr. Wheeler described a hospital where enteric patients lay in their marching uniform, with only a blanket between them and the ground, and with neither nurse nor doctor, but only an orderly to attend them. Many letters had been written for the sick and wounded by the Association's workers, most of whom had been themselves invalided at one time or another. Colonel H. G. Macgregor and Mr. T. A. Denny were among the subsequent speakers.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

OF late "Jack" has been exceedingly popular; and it is to be hoped that some of the enthusiasm on his account may solidify into substantial support for this and kindred missions concerned with his highest interests. Thursday last brought several engagements in connection with the fifty-fourth anniversary of this mission—a noon devotional meeting at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. with an address by Mr. W. H. Seagram; an afternoon meeting at Exeter Hall, when Revs. J. Morgan Gibbon, W. R. Mowll, and others spoke; and an evening gathering in the same place, brightened by the genial presence of Sir George Williams, as chairman. There were a good many sailors in the gallery, at this last meeting, evidently taking close interest in the proceedings. Choruses were given at intervals by a band of lady singers; also solos and duets by Mrs. A. Taylor and Misses Goddard and Dew.

Rev. James Spence, of Chelsea, led in prayer; and then the Chairman spoke a few words expressive of lively and prayerful interest in a class of men who help their country right nobly and well. Very gratefully did Rev. G. J. Hill, secretary of the Society, acknowledge God's goodness in the restoration to health of their honoured president now in the chair, whose desire it was that all men should come to know that Saviour who has been the strength and joy of his own long and useful life. It was to its president's generous help that the Society largely owes the London Dock headquarters of this work. Here thirty services are held every week, including the preaching of the Gospel to in their own languages. The past year had been a prosperous one in the conversion of men, who will thus carry to other lands the influence of a Christian life. The Society maintains missionaries, sailors' institutes, rests, Bethels, coffee-bars, and boats in London, and on various coasts throughout the United Kingdom; it missions about forty ports on the coasts of England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Isle of Man; and it seeks the conversion of British and foreign sailors, accomplishes a large temperance work, and ministers to the welfare of seamen, fishermen, and boatmen in every possible way. Last year's Bethel services and other meetings, ashore and afloat, numbered 5,388.

The newly-appointed treasurer, Mr. H. W. Maynard, of the Union Castle Line, introduced the financial statement, remarking that not a week passes without something definite being done for the souls of men through the agencies of this Society. Expenditure for the year had exceeded income (£3,226) by £135, and this, added to previous deficits, made the adverse balance £858.

Rev. Canon McCormick spoke of the arduous toil and peril that attends a seafaring life, and of the material benefits brought to us by our ships. Consideration of these points indicates some grateful return in the way of Christian sympathy and help for men engaged in the sailor's calling. His experience went to show that Christian work among sailors demands a knowledge of their habits and ways of thought, thus favouring the principle of distinct and special missions to various classes of the community.

Rev. J. G. Train having delivered a brief address, Rev. John Wilson, M.L.S.B., said that the aim of this Society is essentially Christian. Dr. Kennedy and Rev. F. W. Townshend (Christ Church, Stepney) also addressed the meeting.

The Bible League.

SINCE this League was instituted, in 1892, the spread of opinions and teaching calculated, if accepted, to weaken confidence in the Divine inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures has increased the necessity for firm and continued effort to counteract the baneful effects resulting from neo-critical and unhallowed treatment of the Word of God. Side by side with the large success which, by God's blessing, has attended the operations of the League, the evil fruits of the so-called Higher Criticism are only too apparent, in the bewilderment, doubt, and unsettlement of mind and heart experienced by those who come under the fascinations of its novelty, positiveness, and seeming foundation in fact.

Among leading Christian workers considerable interest was shown in the annual meetings of the League last Friday at Exeter Hall, particularly in the afternoon conference upon "The Higher Criticism, and How to Meet it." Lord Kinnaird presided, and consideration of the subject was opened by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who has become hon. sec. pro tem. He traced the rise and progress of the criticism referred to, showed its evil effects upon the Church generally, exposed its fallacy, and exhorted Christians to rally to the defence of God's Word against attacks which are terribly mischievous from the prominent position of their authors, who speak in the name of learning and with the authority of religious teachers. Rev. J. Gosset Tanner testified to the value of the work done by the League, and urged hearty support. Among other speakers, Rev. Archibald G. Brown dealt especially with showing how the Deity of our Lord is bound up with the integrity of the Word of God, and how the New Testament explains and substantiates the statements of the Old. Rev. John Tuckwell declared that for four years he had studied the first chapter of Genesis in the light of the various sciences touched by it; and, as a result, he challenged anyone to point out a single mistake in the whole chapter. One practical outcome of the discussion was that, at its close, a goodly number of persons came forward to join the League; and a similar procedure on the part of others, may well be recommended as going far to answer the question that was under consideration. By the way, the office of the League is at 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

At the evening meeting, reference was made by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch to forty-five meetings held in various parts of the country during the past year, opened up, seventy new members added to the register, limelight lectures, the issue of an occasional paper, and the prospect of extended usefulness for the League if financial limitations are removed.

NEW CENTRES OF INTEREST

The balance sheet, as presented by the treasurer, Lieut.-Col. Corry Smith, dealt with the modest sum of £368.

Mr. T. B. Miller, who presided, related incidents illustrating the value of godly lives as a Christian evidence, the way in which investigation enhances the magnificence of the Bible, and the lack of finality in science.

The need of the Holy Spirit's teaching for right understanding of the Bible, was one of many strong points in an eloquent and intensely earnest address by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton. Apart from the practical test of life, we can never know the value of the Book. The faculty of reason is to be exercised to the full, but must not over-ride faith.

Rev. F. S. Webster (Langham Place) enforced the unique inspiration of the Scriptures, and the necessity for reverence and fairness in dealing with them.

A Gospel Partnership.

Mr. J. R. D. McAUSLAND, Gospel Singer, and Mr. Rowland D. EDWARDS, Evangelist.

WHEN the great wave of revival was passing over this country in 1874, there can be no doubt that, while the hearts of very many were moved through the preaching of Mr. Moody, there was another great company to whom the spiritual impulse came through the singing of Mr. Sankey. Solo singing in Gospel work was not entirely new even then, but ever since it has been recognised as one of the great forces for the arousing of the careless.

The narrative of the steps by which Mr. McAusland was led into his present position is a very interesting one. Born of Highland parents, who were for a short time resident in England, his childhood and youth were for the most part spent in Paisley, and he is a Scotchman in every fibre. After gathering experience for five years, he began business on his own account in the silk trade; and he was doing well for himself when a meeting with the Marchioness Ciccolini, in 1894, while on a business trip to the Continent, changed the whole course of his life.

The Marchioness—probably the greatest living authority on the training of the human voice—having heard something of his powers, appealed to him to undergo a special course of training under her personal supervision, adding: "If you were an Italian we should compel you to train your voice, for voices like that are only found now and then."

At first Mr. McAusland declined all advances in this direction, but the maternal influence was enlisted on the other side, and ultimately he returned to Scotland only for the purpose of winding up his affairs and bidding good-bye for a time to the home circle. He was received as a son into the Ciccolini household, residing mainly at Arnheim, with occasional visits to Milan, and was thoroughly trained as a tenor for Italian opera. His mother had said from the beginning that she could never think with satisfaction of his appearing on a stage, and that during his absence her daily prayer would be that he should turn out another Mr. Sankey In the words of her son, she was "the most godly woman he ever met;" and, although he had undergone no decided spiritual change, he attributes entirely to the influence of her early example and teaching the fact that, through these years spent among worldly people, he was preserved from being caught in the swirl of gaiety. When the period of training was regarded as practically complete, he was one evening walking along the banks of the Rhine, and his mind turned on spiritual things. Written and spoken words of his mother came back with such power, and were so used of the Holy Spirit, that his whole being underwent the great change, and he went back to his temporary home determined to consecrate his talent to the service of God.

Losing no time in making known the change which had come over his life and plans, he was ridiculed and laughed at. He did not quarrel with the circle to whom he had become much endeared; but shortly after left them on good terms, and came home with a determination to throw himself into aggressive Christian work.

During his years of absence, Mr. McAusland had got out of touch with Scottish affairs, and so found himself in Paisley about two years ago, not knowing exactly where to turn. A fellow townsman offered him an introduction to friends in Glasgow. He was asked to sing at a meeting in the Christian Institute (we believe the annual gathering of the Progressive Union in 1898), where, among others, Lord Overtoun was deeply impressed with the great and evident possibilities for good in such a life, and said, "Will you sing at Mr. McNeill's coming meetings at the Albert Hall, in London?" The answer was a frank and ready one: "I will sing the Gospel anywhere." No time was lost in completing arrangements, and in June, 1898, he and Mr. McNeill worked side by side in what is still spoken of as one of the greatest evangelistic efforts of modern times. From the West End to the East End is an easy transition for the Christian worker, and Mr. McAusland next appeared, by Mr. Charrington's invitation, in the Great Assembly Hall, with visible fruit in souls born again.

During last summer, Mr. McAusland visited Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Dundee, Aberdeen, and other Scottish towns. Then followed a period of rest, until with the month of October came the opening of the Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign, and he undertook to sing wherever the committee wished during the six months. North, south, east, and west he went over the whole city and surrounding district, singing the songs of the better land and of the higher life, and bringing to many through them the news of a salvation which they have been enabled to receive. Over and over again he has been stopped on the streets and in railway stations by persons who wished to shake him by the hand, and to assure him that his singing was the instrument used in leading them out of darkness into light. One railway porter had only time to jerk out a few words when passing with a load of luggage, and an engine-driver at a country station was interrupted, after not more than a sentence or two, by the whistle which peremptorily recalled him to duty. But in each of these, and in many more cases, the outstanding fact is that God has used his servant to bring wandering souls into an experimental knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Our musical readers will be interested to learn that the range of Mr. McAusland's voice enables him to reach C sharp above the ledger line, and to bring out the notes even then with silvery clearness, which we believe is altogether phenomenal. His voice fills the largest halls with ease, and those who have made particular inquiry say that every syllable is heard distinctly in the remotest corners. Singing from the depth of his heart, he feels the force of every word, and loses all personality.

For part of the present summer Mr. McAusland has returned to London by invitation to take part in the great Tent Campaign, where he will work in company with Mr. Rowland D. Edwards, evangelist; and in the autumn the two fellow-labourers hope, in the providence of God, to set out on an evangelistic tour round the world. Beginning in America, they will afterwards proceed as they may be led, probably to the Australasian Colonies, and returning to Europe viâ Japan, China, and India.

Mr. Edwards is as thoroughly English as Mr. McAusland is Scotch. A native of Devonshire, he was converted about twenty years ago. A week later he was himself preaching the glad tidings, and ever since has been busily engaged in active work for Christ. In 1885 he heard the call to abandon his profession as a lawyer, and with it a lucrative practice, that he might devote his life wholly to the quest for souls. For nearly eight years he preached up and down through the home lands. Then he began to go further afield, and twice already he has been round the world, besides paying long visits to the West Indies and South Africa, being greatly encouraged in all his travels by the rich blessing which accompanied the Word. For the last two years he has been labouring again with much success and acceptance in many parts of the United Kingdom. Mrs. Edwards, her husband's true helpmeet in the Gospel, hopes to accompany the evangelists on their journeyings.

Principal Fairbairn, D.D.

THE second son of an Edinburgh miller, Dr. Andrew Martin Fairbairn derives his two Christian names from his maternal grandfather. He was born November 4, 1838, and was educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Berlin, and the Evangelical Union Theological Academy, Glasgow. When he was twenty-two, he was ordained minister of the Evangelical Union Congregational Church, Bathgate, West Lothian, and for twelve years remained pastor of this church. In 1872, he received a call to the church in St. Paul's Street, Aberdeen. He had been for some time engaged in writing "Studies in the Philosophy of Theology and History"—a book which, in the opinion of many competent critics, contains his best literary work. It was published in 1876, and gained an immediate recognition for its author as a deep thinker and a profound student of both philosophy and history.

In Aberdeen, Dr. Fairbairn gathered around him a congregation of hard-headed men and intellectual women, who discerned the genius which, at that time, had no wider sphere than the city of Aberdeen in which to manifest itself. But Aberdeen has always been a good judge of genius, and the city's verdict on Mr. Fairbairn was verified in later years by all parts of the country. For five years he remained the pastor of the church, wielding each year increasing influence. He left the church at the pressing invitation of the Committee of Airedale College to become its Principal, in 1877. It must not be imagined, however, that Dr. Fairbairn has relinquished what may be termed pastoral duties, although for the last twenty-three years he has been mostly concerned with College work. He magnifies the office of pastor with both his pen and his voice; and, although he has a high conception of a minister's proper scope of activity, he has also a deep belief in the personal and social influence which the true pastor always wields.

The University of Edinburgh appointed him Muir Lecturer in 1878, and in the same year honoured itself by honouring Mr. Fairbairn with its D.D. degree. For the next nine years Dr. Fairbairn was engaged as Principal of Airedale College, inspiring many students for the Congregational ministry in the most potent and lasting manner. His personality, full of the humility of a true scholar, linked with the compelling spirit of a man of will, has left an ineffaceable impression on the ministers who were students of Airedale under his principalship.

He found time to complete his "Studies in the Life of Christ" and two other books, "The City of God" and "Religion in History and in Modern Life," while he was at Airedale. He was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1884; and the subject of his first address from the chair was "Christianity in the First Century." As a logical sequel, his second address was entitled "Christianity in the Nineteenth Century." This covered, as may be imagined, a wide area of thought and history, and made a complete survey of the highest value. Needless to say, Dr. Fairbairn's addresses were heard with the deepest interest by the crowded assembly, and enhanced the importance of the spring and autumn meetings of 1884.

All this while, Dr. Fairbairn was preparing, by the various experiences through which he had passed, for the great life-work to which he was called irresistibly in 1886. There had been for some years in the minds of many influential men the idea that Congregationalism should be represented in the University of Oxford by a college which would gain by its position the great advantages appertaining to this ancient city of learning. The way was gradually cleared for the institution of Mansfield College by the transference of Spring Hill College, Birmingham, in 1886, to Oxford. The College takes its name from the family which originally gave the endowments to Spring Hill. It is purely theological and non-residential. All its students, even when graduates of other universities, must become members of the University of Oxford. In the arduous preliminary work of founding Mansfield College, the late Dr. Dale took a leading part, overcoming all difficulties with the indomitable zeal which characterized him in all important matters. Generous gifts by families, who have laid many claims to the gratitude of Congregationalists, prepared the way for the erection of the beautiful buildings which are such a credit to the architect and all concerned.

Dr. Fairbairn took up his residence in Oxford before the stately pile was even started. Although he was new to the atmosphere and life of Oxford, he adapted himself with marvellous tact to the new conditions of life, and was welcomed for his own sake, as well as for the cause he represented, by the leading members of the University. One who knows intimately the circumstances of those early days says that, considering the conservative traditions of Oxford, it was nothing short of marvellous how Dr. Fairbairn managed, from the earliest days of his residence, to gain a position which has ever since become more sure. He owed much to the generous friendship of Benjamin Jowett, Master of Balliol, and Edwin Hatch, both of whom lived long enough to see Mansfield College sustaining their hopes for its reputation and success.

The ceremony when the foundation-stone of Mansfield College was laid was exceedingly impressive, for not only were there present the leading men in the Congregational denomination, but also several of the most influential men in Oxford University life. Even more remarkable was the function when Mansfield College was opened in 1889. Speeches that were then delivered by Prof. Jowett, Dr. Hatch, and others, not only voiced the generous sentiments of those wide-spirited men, but bespoke for Mansfield a place in Oxford, which it has striven worthily to fill. As to how Dr. Fairbairn acquitted himself at the opening, the following letter from Dr. Dale to him will explain: "With all my heart I thank God for the grace that was given you. You will have heard much from others about its power and brilliance; but for me these were not its chief merits. It would have been so easy to make a mistake. Some fault of temper was almost inevitable—but there was none. It was more than all those that love you best, and care most for Mansfield, hoped for. And now I trust that in the quieter work the same full and abundant blessing of God may rest on you."

Since Dr. Fairbairn's residence at Oxford—despite the many calls on his time—he has managed to publish a revised edition of his "Religion in History and Modern Life," "Christ in Modern Theology," "Christ in the Centuries," "Catholicism, Roman and Anglican," and other literary works. Then he was Gifford Lecturer to the University of Aberdeen, which conferred on him her honorary degree of LL.D. in 1892, and Lyman Beecher Lecturer at Yale University, which gave him another D.D. degree. In 1898, Dr. Fairbairn went to India in order to deliver the Haskell Lectures, and conferred an even greater benefit than he himself received on the students and learned men of India by his presence and words.

He saw a good deal of the student life which is such a feature of certain Indian centres of education, and made what he had long desired to make, a study of various forms of religion which he had only hitherto been able to judge from a distance. His impressions of his Indian visit were exceedingly interesting, and formed the subject of various speeches and articles which created a great impression in this country—not the least being his glowing tribute to the self-sacrifice of the missionaries. He served on the Royal Commission on Secondary Education from 1894 to 1895, and there are many other useful services to the cause of education which he has rendered.

The foregoing facts may have created some true impression of the strenuous life of Dr. Fairbairn. He has been a man who, from the first, has used every moment of his time for thinking and doing. Yet it must not be imagined that he has excluded from his sympathies the social gifts which are sometimes lost in a scholar. No one who has seen the Principal of Mansfield College at home, in his beautiful library, full of valuable and rare volumes, can doubt that Dr. Fairbairn is, above all things, a scholar. He has been dragged, sometimes against his will, into the glare of publicity, but at heart he is happiest when lecturing to his students on the great verities of religion and history. Few men of his day and generation have united such deep scholarship with such practical businesslike ability. He regards the smallest detail as important; and that may be taken roughly to sum up his whole character. Oxford has grown to know and revere his strong personality; and students all over the world recognize in Dr. Fairbairn a man who has gained a right to a high place among living thinkers.

The Relation of the *Ministry to Missions.

By Dr. C. CUTHBERT HALL, New York.

ACCORDING to the New Testament standard, the passion of a Christlike love for human lives is a greater thing than eloquence, knowledge, or faith. "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy and know all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have faith so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing." The passion of a Christlike love for human lives develops in the soul of a Christian disciple from the presence in himself of powers and activities that reflect the mind of Christ. These are:—clear vision of the world, deep feeling towards the world, actual effort for the world.

Our Lord saw all human life clearly. He saw the world as it is. No mists of optimism deceived Him—no veils of pessimism blinded Him. While taking note of every local interest, while loving and toiling for the individual, yet ever with clear eyes He saw the world, loved of God, cursed by sin, groaning and travailing for redemption. And with this clear vision of all human life, our Lord joined the deep feelings of perfect appreciation and divine compassion. What He saw He felt. Upon his own holy soul He bore the griefs and carried

THE SORROWS OF HUMANITY.

The sighing of the prisoner came up before Him, and the cry of the oppressed was in his ears. "When He beheld the city, He wept over it." "He had compassion on the multitude, because they were as sheep without a shepherd." With unwavering faith He turned towards Jerusalem that He might be lifted up and draw all unto Himself.

And to this clear vision of the world, and this deep feeling towards the world, our Lord added actual effort for the world. His sorrow was not the impotent lament of one who fain would do, yet cannot. His burden was not the crushing burden of pessimism. It was the weight of the sacrificial cross. It was the mediatorial burden. "For the joy that was set before Him, He endured the cross, despising the shame." He came not to lament, but to redeem. "He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." And out of his clear vision of the world, his deep feeling towards the world, his active effort for the world, issues the passion of his love for human lives, "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge"—the love which for us to know is for us to be "filled with all the fulness of God." No conception within the range of human intelligence is so magnificent as this—the love of Christ for man, the boundless, fathomless, deathless love of the Son of God.

It is this conception that underlies the theme which engages our attention. We are attempting to answer this question: "How can we fire the young men of the future ministry with the missionary passion and make them leaders of missionary churches?" The minister of Christ must have the Spirit of Christ, or "he is none of his." Without the missionary passion they are not able ministers of the New Testament; they are disabled, deficient, half-equipped—they lack the fulness of the Spirit of Christ. The problem of the divinity school is this—not how to train an occasional man for the foreign field, but in every man that passes through the school, that he may thereby become an able minister of Christ. This conception of the life of the divinity school, as a life transfused and saturated with the spirit of missions, is founded upon two practical needs:—(1) The need of the man who may possibly have the gifts for service abroad. (2) The need of the man who shall enter the pastorate at home.

1. As to the man who may possibly have gifts for service abroad, it is his need, it is his right, to have an atmosphere about him that shall promote the deep self-discovery which may lead him to volunteer, or that shall establish, strengthen, and settle the purpose formed in college days to do his life-work upon the foreign field. The divinity school should be hot with the zeal for evangelization. It should be radiant with the appreciation of missionary heroism; it should be alert and eager for contact with the living workers; it should be charged with solemn anxiety for the world's condition, so that no man can live within its walls without facing for himself the vital issue: "Is it Christ's will for me that I go forth to serve Him in the regions beyond?"

2. As for the man who shall enter the pastorate at home, he cannot be an able minister of the Lord Jesus until his torch has been kindled at this altar, his lip touched with this living coal. Deny him this access in the days of his ministerial training; fail to provide him with the world-wide interest; neglect to teach him how to lift up his eyes and look upon of the world; omit to conquer him with the missionary idea, and he goes forth to his life-work lagging behind the eager spirit of his time, shackled with disadvantage, condemned in an age of catholicity to lead a life of provincialism. If he has not found within his training school the atmosphere that feeds the missionary passion, if in his immaturity and inexperience he has been suffered to pass through and pass out into the active ministry ignorant of the mighty world of missions, he has been robbed of his birthright.

Four great functions belong to him who, in the Christian pastorate of these latter days, expresses the relation of the ministry at home to missions abroad.

(a) It is his to overcome the resistance of unrestricted prejudice. It requires effort to realize that in any Christian heart there can be resistance of foreign missions. Yet such resistance on the part of some has come within our observation—a resistance negative rather than positive, born of misapprehension and the lack of knowledge. God grant that the vast influences radiating from this Christian gathering may help to dissolve the last vestiges of that strange unreasoning antagonism.

(b) It is his to awaken the attention of apathetic minds, which, content with

of Christianity, are blinded by local religious interests to the larger questions of the world's evangelization. This apathy can be broken. The same keen interest that springs to the realization of political events can be awakened towards the facts of the Kingdom of Christ. But the man who thus conquers must himself first be conquered and set on fire of God.

(c) It is his to educate the Church's intelligence. Knowledge is the true and substantial basis of an interest in missions. Vague perceptions of duty may help a flagging interest to survive, but the zeal that endures, the zeal that grows, the zeal that rises to the level of consecration, is the zeal that is according to knowledge. The educational function of the missionary pastor cannot be overstated. He must mediate between a great but little known literature and a community of minds not likely to come under its influence except through his leadership.

(d) It is his to raise at home supplies for the Church abroad, to find the means that shall maintain the work of God. The far-off workers at the front depend upon him to co-operate with them by maintaining their supplies. He is a missionary as well as they, for the effects of his influence are telling on the maintenance of evangelization. By his acceptance of the pastorate he accepts an implied obligation to co-operate with those who are face to face with heathenism. To place a man in the pastorate in whom there is not the missionary passion is a twofold disaster; it breaks faith with those who have gone to the front, believing that the leaders of the Church at home will keep pace with their advance; it occupies the place of a better-equipped man who, having that passion, might stir a whole community to acts of sacrifice.

THE STUDY OF MISSIONS

is slowly rising to the rank of theological discipline. That it has not done so sooner, is not altogether so strange as at first appears. The literature of missions is comparatively a modern literature, and recognition of its importance has not been unduly delayed. The Church is making her modern evangelistic history so rapidly and abundantly, that it is but time to begin to feel the thrilling effects of that history reacting upon the divinity school. At many points that most salutary reaction is taking place, and the study of missions is finding its while the opulent and splendid literature of missions is pouring into the library. It will soon be impossible, in all the divinity schools that seek to keep pace with the times, for a man to pass through his course of training without having the world-wide point of view, without seeing the world-wide vision, unless he rejects it for himself, and shuts his eyes against it.

The contact of living missionary workers with the divinity school life must become frequent and intimate. The realism of missions must demonstrate itself to many who have had but a speculative interest therein. The philosophical aspects of missions must appear in the light of the modern literature, and the whole subject of missions in its largest and noblest relations must take its place in the curriculum beside the study of ancient languages, of Church history, of the doctrines of Faith.

But the study of missions in the routine of the divinity school cannot by itself bring to pass that setting on fire of the future ministry with the missionary passion. We need

A NEW CONCEPTION OF THE MINISTRY.

It must attract towards it many of the most gifted and consecrated of our young men. The college and the seminary are drawing closer together. The study of missions in the colleges is bringing out a type of manhood which is full of heroic beauty, enthusiasm, and faith. The undergraduate is studying the world to-day as never before, is feeling in his fresh young heart the thrill of the new conceptions of applied Christianity, is realizing Christ's love and Christ's present salvation for the world in terms of reality. And in many a college to-day are found the very flower of our youth, to whom the ministry appears not as a reserved and gloomy world of ecclesiastical technicalities, but as the King's own highway to joyful and abundant service.

I see a spirit developing among our young men that portends a vast accession of missionary enthusiasm for the ministry of the future. The Lord Jesus Christ is manifesting Himself in his absolute Godhood, in his availing atonement, in his enlightening word, to a great company of our most educated and most gifted youths. Personal consecration for personal service is a conception of living that grows more and more attractive to a multitude of our finest minds. And out of this class of minds shall be gathered

THE MINISTRY OF THE FUTURE.

It shall be a ministry devoted to the highest scholarship and the most fearless search for truth, looking upon the culture of the mind as no foe to the spirituality of life.

It shall be a Christ-filled Ministry beholding the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, worshipping Him with the enthusiasm of an absolutely fearless affection, and presenting Him the only name given under heaven whereby man must be saved. It shall be a Biblical Ministry "holding fast the faithful Word," and preaching that Word as the one great sufficient message and revelation of God to man.

It shall be a Missionary Ministry full of passion to redeem, clear-eyed to discover the on-going of Christ's work—faithful in its stewardship at home and abroad, apostolic in its eagerness to spread far and wide the Gospel of the risen and ascended Lord, apostolic in its blessed hope that that unseen and crowned Saviour shall surely come again.

* Notes of an address delivered at the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, New York.

Great Missionary Conference.

ECHOES FROM NEW YORK.

HOW strange that sinful men who have proved the saving power of the Gospel of God, should be so slow to bring to other sinful men the knowledge of that good news which became to them the power of God unto salvation, as soon as they united themselves to it by faith. The ages have rolled on since the Apostles' days, and only within the last century-and-a-half has the missionary era dawned upon the world. Not until there has come a general expectation of the Lord's return, and we almost hear the sound of his chariot wheels, have the followers of the Lamb begun in earnest to carry into the dark places of the earth the light of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ.

But the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, at New York, bears witness that the Church in all her branches is now awaking, if not yet fully awake, to the responsibility and privilege of her great commission. That Conference does not stand alone. It is the fourth in succession of those which were held in Liverpool in 1866, in London in 1878 and 1888, each of which has made manifest an increasing force of conviction and response to the great duty to evangelize the world.

Dr. HARFORD-BATTERSBY, of Livingstone College, London, in the very interesting and informing paper which he read at the Conference, gave several incidents in proof of the valuable aid rendered by to the spread of the Gospel, even in Mohammedan lands. One of the most remarkable was that in Bida, a prominent Mohammedan city of the Central Soudan, of about 80,000 inhabitants, he was admitted even to treat their chief women, and was welcomed at a time when the feeling of the king, and of his princes, was anything but favourable to the British.

"In the Church Missionary Society," continued Dr. Battersby, "the Medical Department has been practically developed since the meeting of the last International Conference," held in London in 1888. This may be regarded as typical of the great advance made in the missionary enterprise generally, in all departments, in the past dozen years: an advance continuous through the century, with accumulated momentum and accelerated speed."

One of the most important discussions of the Conference was on Missionary Comity.

Rev. Dr. H. M. KING, chairman of the American Baptist Missionary Union, read a paper on the "Spirit and Limitations of Missionary Comity," and Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND, secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church in Canada, presented a general summary of the existing situation. He suggested some helpful methods of achieving the desired results.

In the first place, in promoting the spirit and practice of comity, there are certain things which should be studiously avoided, such as: (a) The unnecessary overlapping of fields of labour. (b) Encouraging or persuading converts or native workers to forsake one mission and join another. (c) All unfriendly criticism of the missionaries of sister churches or their methods of work. Nothing will more quickly or surely poison the spirit of comity and render co-operation impossible. A safe rule to be observed is this: Of our brethren let us speak nothing but good.

In the second place, there are certain things to be carefully cultivated. The spirit of comity needs to be cultivated among the missionaries. The same spirit needs to be cultivated among members of the societies at home. Very many of them now favour comity and co-operation in the abstract, but are hardly prepared for it in the concrete. But, to speak more definitely, methods like the following would be found helpful: (a) Conference between representatives of home societies, as to the lines on which comity and co-operation are especially desirable. (b) Instructions from their Committees to the missionaries, not only to cultivate assiduously the spirit of comity, but, by conference with other missionaries, to promote the policy of co-operation in mission work. (c) The formation in each foreign field of a committee of consultation and reference, composed of representatives from each mission willing to co-operate; such committee to consider the larger questions of practical comity, such as amalgamation of small congregations, occupation of new fields, and the establishment and maintenance of printing presses, hospitals, and dispensaries. The judgment and recommendation of said committee to be embodied in a report and sent to the home societies for approval or otherwise.

It goes without saying that a universal acceptance of such suggestions as I have made is hardly to be expected in the immediate future. Indeed, some may consider the whole thing as visionary and impracticable; but I submit that nothing has been suggested beyond what ought to be done, and I cherish the unwavering belief that what ought to be done can be done, and in the not distant future will be done.

The Present Situation.

BISHOP DOANE, of Albany, N.Y., in the course of an address on the claims and opportunities of the present situation, said:—

May I invert this order in what I say, because, while the two are mutually interdependent, the outlook depends for its hopefulness upon our recognition and discharge of the demands. And the first demand, I think, is that we should recognize each other as servants of Jesus Christ at work for Him. Differing, also divided, in external things, we are agreed in this.

I deplore the difference, I deprecate the divisions, but I accept them as the present condition of Christendom. God can use them, God can fuse them, when He will. Nothing is gained by ignoring them, no good comes out of feigned and forced alliances.

I believe that earnest Christian men, not magnifying difficulties, must pray at once, in the spirit and in the words of the prayer of the Divine Master, that He will bring about such oneness as is between Himself and his Father, entire, real, visible. And, meanwhile, that each must loyal to his convictions in the place where God has set him to serve.

The sum of our differences is large, but the sum of our agreements is larger still. As thinkers and students we must examine our position and assure ourselves that it is right, and as preachers and teachers we must proclaim whatever there is of principle in the things wherein we differ. Criticism and condemnation of one another's convictions are ill-mannered and idle and ill-advised.

This age demands that we shall look for, and dwell on, and proclaim, and thank God for points of agreement among Christian believers, and not be rummaging about, like ragpickers in a heap of street dirt, for differences and disagreements. Apart from our divided worship and our discordant confessions, we look each other in the eyes and take each other by the hand in a thousand human ways to-day. There is no passing by on the other side of any representative of suffering humanity. Is it a question of organized charities, of social elevation, of political reform; is it a question of tenement house improvement, of breathing places in the slums, of the relief of the poor; is it an appeal for the care of orphans or the aged or helpless—instantly the commonness of our Christianity asserts itself. All names are forgotten but the Name of Jesus.

Industrial Training.

Rev. JAMES SMITH, of Ahmednagar, India, made a plea for an industrial training of natives, which should develop their latent powers. He said in part: I do not propose to raise the general question of the value of industrial training in the education of the youth of Western lands. As a missionary to India I confine my remarks to education in India, and in the first place I challenge the assumption that what was good enough for us is good enough for the pauper children of India.

Why do some of our most brilliant pupils turn out useless, or worse? As pupils they were a success. As men and women they are misfits. Why? Because they were made for something for which our schools and colleges have not prepared them.

Now, who is to blame in such cases? The pupil, who has neither taste nor ability for the tasks imposed upon him, and who is told by his teachers that he is a dunce because he failed? or the man who is trying to make armour plate out of watch springs, and when he does not succeed says that the steel was bad? Who is to blame? What are schools and teachers for if not to insure that boys and girls shall not turn out

DUNCES AND FAILURES?

Would it not display more wisdom and modesty on our part if we confined our efforts in education to developing what we find in our pupils, and meddled less with the work of the Creator? Is it ignorance of the province of the educator or presumption which leads the teacher to try to make parrots out of pupils that were created for architects, engineers, or machinists?

I make my plea, then, for an education which develops latent powers. I wish to recognize and respect the work of the Creator. There have been no mistakes in the work of creation, no misfits or accidents, but every man and every woman has been created for a definite object, to do a definite work, to fill a definite sphere; and, depend upon it, if we who profess to educate do our part, every such man or woman, when trained, will be able to do his appointed work better than any other man or woman. The work of the teacher is to discover the natural bent of a pupil's genius, and make the most of it. Nature's so-called misfits are really good material spoiled, by raw apprentices, in the moulding.

Some people plead want of versatility as their excuse for treading in the old rut. They were not educated for anything definite themselves, and they doubt whether they were created for educators. What!

IS NOT TEACHING A CALLING?

How dare any man or woman stand at the sacred desk of the teacher, and undertake to mould the character, shape the intellect, decide the calling, and cast the destiny of an immortal soul, who has not been called and trained for that work? The desk of the teacher is as sacred as the pulpit of the preacher! This, then, is the general argument upon which I base the demand for industrial, or manual, or hand and eye training. It affords a most efficient mental discipline to all, and it is the only means by which large numbers of our pupils can be trained at all.

We have in India traditional educational methods, venerable and hoary. These may be characterized, in a word, as devices for cramping the intellect, and preventing pupils from thinking. Our schools are veritable oases in the desert. No ray of light, civilization, or knowledge shines in the home, the street, the field, or the town. When our pupils leave their schools, they plunge into intellectual darkness. In our own experience how different it has been! Most of us owe the smallest, and least valuable, part of our culture and preparation for life to the school and the college. How important, therefore, that there should be something in the curriculum of our Indian schools which cannot be merely committed to memory, and that we deal with things rather than with words and sounds.

The Evangelist Abroad.

One of the sessions was devoted to the consideration of evangelistic work. Bishop THOBURN, American Methodist Episcopal, of India, opened the subject. The evangelist's calling, he said, is a gift. It is also an office in the New Testament dispensation. Philip was the first Christian evangelist. We notice two peculiarities in his preaching: First, in his theme—it was simply salvation through Christ; second, in the power which attended his word. The evangelist has a different work from that of the pastor—a simpler work. Evangelists are not cranks, and the best evangelists eschew all sensational methods.

With rare exceptions, they preach Christ with power sent down from heaven.

In heathen countries the successful evangelists of the future will be men who come from the people—men even who cannot read and write. Their work is effective, though rude. In matters of religion we are like the printer, and inclined to follow copy. We have much respect for precedent, forgetting that precedent was first an innovation. We must therefore expect to

DEPART FROM SOME OLD METHODS.

If the women of India are to be reached, the work must be done by women.

In the great outlying regions beyond the confines of Christendom, multitudes may be found who understand the outlines of the Christian religion. Many millions of the people of India have advanced beyond paganism, and more or less tacitly admit the truths of Christianity. Account for it as you may, in all the mission fields we find the state of things nearly as bad as in English and American cities; that is to say, a great many baptized Christians who are worldly in their thoughts and aspirations and lives, and they mingle with the true believers. We need men there to do a work, such as was done here by Moody among the professing Christians.

Then there is a great mass who have never heard the Gospel at all. How are they to be reached if not by the native evangelist? Many good workers can be found among the class of people who might be called illiterate. Where are the reapers? In the recruiting of our evangelistic force, perhaps we have clung too much to our own ideals, and rejected too many of the little ones of the kingdom.

Woman's Day.

Thursday, April 26, was chiefly devoted to Woman's Work. Two thoughts, like silver threads, ran through the whole of that section of the Conference:—(1) No nation can rise above the condition of its women; and (2) woman can only be saved by Christianity.

One-half of the world's motherhood lives in seclusion, despised, degraded, buried in intellectual darkness and ignorance; but, degraded though she may be, the woman has, from time immemorial, exercised, and will continue to wield, her influence over the destiny of mankind. So long as the Oriental woman is not freed from the bondage of sin and destitution, so long can there be

NO REGENERATION OF THE EASTERN MAN.

In three mass meetings, one held in the morning at the Central Presbyterian Church, and two at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon and evening, thirty addresses were delivered before audiences, much exceeding the comfortable capacity of the buildings, and rapturous with enthusiasm from the first moment to the last.

The topic under discussion at the morning meeting was "Woman's Work" in Foreign Missions. Among the speakers were Mrs. J. Fairley Daly, of Glasgow, on the work of Female Education in India and South Africa; Mrs. Howard Taylor, of China; and Miss Corinna Shattuck, of Turkey, a missionary of the Congregational Church, and an heroic worker during the time of the massacres.

The address of welcome to the workers of every denomination was delivered by Mrs. Harriet Todd, of Boston, representing the mother of women societies. She thanked God for all the work done by daughter societies in every clime, and also for the help that has come from that land where a Christian woman has reigned for so many years. Hearty responses followed from ladies of Great Britain, Australasia, and Spain.

Mrs. Moses Smith, of Chicago, then spoke of "The Value of Women's Societies among Evangelizing Forces," referring to the beginning of the nineteenth century, when, under the Pentecostal power of the Spirit, the Church wrote on her banner: "The World for Christ," when the century became vibrant with new forces and higher education as a new factor, reaching even woman, and so allowing her to return to her Eden-birthright—a helpmeet for man. After characterizing the awful degradation of women under the Oriental system, she concluded by saying that, as only woman can break the bread of life to women, this work cannot be given a secondary place in the Church of Christ, for it is dear to the heart of our Redeemer and should be cherished by every Christian.

Mrs. M. N. Waterbury, in her address on "The Results of Woman's Work in the Home Churches," pointed to the greatness of the present women-organization, which, counts fifty Women's Boards, with an army of 1,500,000 women, constituting the greatest international woman's club in the world. Nearly a million of children are being taught and trained to love this work and also systematic giving.

Mrs. W. M. Baird, of Pyeng Youk, Corea, spoke of "Methods and Opportunities." The evangelistic part in mission work being both delicate and difficult, she urged that missionaries, previous to their leaving for foreign fields, should be trained in definite personal work for Christ until they reach the point where they are willing to be all things to all men, if thereby some may be saved. Moody's methods were recommended, the thorough mastering of native languages laid stress upon; also that the presentation of the Gospel should be, as far as possible,

IN CONFORMITY WITH NATIVE CUSTOMS.

A physician's opportunities for getting hold of the fine-footed, graceful Brahmin, as well as the Pariah woman, are wonderful, as was demonstrated by Dr. Ida Faye Levering, of India.

In speaking of the importance and best use of missionary literature, Miss Irene H. Barnes, of the C.M.S., said that literature of the right kind has proved, and will prove, the best ally and instrument of a missionary society. Its standard must be raised higher and higher; it must continuously filter into the households of the nation without undue anxiety for immediate results. If we do not give information, we cannot expect to gain interest. In order to reach those outside the social circles where foreign missions are a topic of conversation, there must be outlay which is speculative; but the investment is sure ultimately to produce high dividends. The missionary society, which expends the most upon production and distribution of its literature, is known to be the one

WHICH HAS THE LARGEST INCOME.

At the close of the meeting, Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, drew a contrast between the women's meeting held in London during the Ecumenical Conference in 1888 and the present gathering of more than 5,000. She then said that the best had been kept for the last. She would introduce the missionaries present, and wished the audience to rise and WAVE A CHAUTAUQUA SALUTE.

This was done, with much enthusiasm, and the march of 400 lady-workers began, each bowing to the audience when passing the front of the platform. Mrs. Gordon seemed familiar with the life-history of each of them, and many an incident concerning the person just introduced caused outbursts of applause, especially as the veterans of the mission field, or the scions of martyrs who had died for the cause of Christ, passed by. Finally, men and women all over the house joined hands, singing, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

The subject for the evening was "Woman's Task to uplift Women."

A paper from the pen of Mrs. Bishop, entitled "A Great Need," was read by Mrs. Cook. It gave a vivid picture of the degradation and debasement in which the Eastern countries are plunged. "The corrupt tree of the degenerate faiths of Asia brings forth corrupt fruit from the Black to the Yellow Sea. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint, and for the grievous hurt there is no balm in Gilead and no Physician there."

Missionary effort has but touched the fringe of this darkness. One thousand and fifty millions of our race are still unchristianized, and 800,000,000 haven ever even heard Christ's name. During this century 4,000,000 persons have been baptized into the Christian Church; yet there are now more than 100,000,000 more heathen and Moslems in the world than when the century began. Of this Christless population, over 500,000,000 are women. Mrs. Bishop, in her travels all over the world, had been frequently the unwilling guest of harems, zenanas and anderuns. The inmates of such places combine with dwarfed and childish intellect a precocity on a gigantic scale in the evil passions of adults—hatred, envy, jealousy, sensuality and greed. On more than fifty occasions the English lady had been asked by women for drugs which would kill the reigning favourite or her boy, or make her ugly or odious. These illiterate, ignorant women are steeped in superstition, idolatry, and impurity, and though denied to have souls and despised in theory, yet they wield an enormous influence over the rising generation, and that against Christianity.

Mrs. Duncan McLaren, in dwelling upon the "Responsibility of Women," emphasized what had been said before. The influence of womanhood is all-embracing, for it is one of the strongest touches of nature which makes the whole world kin; that she who rocks the cradle rules.

"The Power of Educated Womannood" was the theme of Miss Thoburn, which she represented to her sisters as the power of skilled service: We are not in the world to be ministered unto, but to minister. We are not greater than our Lord, whose feet were washed in loving gratitude by women. Power is not manifested by the quality of the work we undertake, but by our success in the undertaking. The world is full of need, and every opportunity to help is a duty. Preparation for these duties is education, whatever form it may take or WHATEVER SERVICE IT MAY RESULT IN.

In a family where all are loving, and naturally helpful in consequence, where one has the course of training in nursing, while all are as devoted, their uneducated hands lack the skill of hers, and therefore the power. Love, great as it is, has not the power of skill.

We know now that this instruction of little children is the most important thing in the whole course of education. The kindergarten system has shown us the far-reaching result of skilled teaching, a service so delightful and so important now, that Miss Wiggins well says that "no one who has had an opportunity to be a kindergartner would ever want to be an angel." All the way up, the training which means the educated mind and hand will find a way to power. We have found use for every faculty, natural and acquired, that we possess; we have found ourselves pioneers upon paths unknown and reformers to make crooked ones straight.

It is cruel to the work and to the worker to send her to such labour without preparation. We have learned this. Boards are beginning to learn this, and to realize the importance of the missionary training school. No college can make up for it. The well-trained mind is the quickest to adapt itself to circumstances, bu it will also feel more acutely failure due to its ignorance. We do poor work if it does not become self-propagating, if it does not inspire others to go and do likewise.

THE NEED OF ONE IS THE NEED OF ALL.

In these days, when the ends of the earth are met together, the need of one is the need of all. You have no cause here which does not touch some vital part of our work in India. Intemperance, divorce, degrading amusements, impure literature—these are our troubles there, and we must know how to meet them.

I heard Mr. Moody say last summer that the principal heresies of to-day are being led by women. The necessity is to see to it that the higher education which our Eastern sisters are asking for is a Christian education, and that we give them the best training within our means for the development of the power that will be theirs for good or ill. Only yesterday Miss Singh was asked if she wouldn't take training for the stage, and the teacher offered to assist her. Similar offers are made to our young women in Calcutta.

Let them go from our schools to be the best they can be. "For Thee for truth, Lord of my life, I go."

Miss Singh, a graduate of the Calcutta University, where, with four other Hindu women, she had carried off the highest honours amid a class of 700 men, followed. She pleaded for skilled labour, of which there was such a need in India, feelingly referring to the medical work by Lady Dufferin at the instance of Queen Victoria, which has been the means of supplying all the large cities in India with hospitals and doctors. It was the mission girls, she said, who proved most able to profit by the

COURSES OF MEDICAL INSTRUCTION.

One authority states that nine-tenths of the girls in the medical schools have received their preliminary training from the missionaries. She felt great satisfaction in the career of a schoolmate of hers who for fifteen years had conducted with great success a large hospital in India, and who had men on her staff as subordinates who were in school at the same time. She also told of an Indian mother and daughter who had started a large orphanage with the breaking out of the famine, and of the Daughters of India Association starting a school which was as well managed as those of the missionaries. Miss Singh closed by quoting the battle hymn of the Republic and singing an Indian song.

Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, of Rochester, N.Y., then talked of the opposition to the work from critics at home who know but little about mission work, and that such criticism need not to be feared.

Mrs. S. L. Keen, of Philadelphia, who led the closing exercises, brought to the front of the platform a group of native Christians from Japan, India, and other countries.

A Moslem woman, said to be the first of her tribe ever converted, spoke in her native tongue. Another convert, a young Indian woman, also said a few words in English of the work in the Indian girls' schools.

The Famine in India.

Nothing done by the Conference commended itself to a warmer public confidence than the proceedings with reference to the famine in India. Bishop Potter voiced the public sentiment of the whole country when he said that the remarkable public interest in the Conference should crystallize into some material aid for the millions now starving in the Far East. The enormous and appalling character of the distress was pointed out by many missionaries familiar with the situation, and at the close of the evening the make-up was announced of the Conference's Indian Famine Relief Committee. On the committee are some of the wealthiest men in the country. As accentuating this, a collection amounting to 1,400dols. was taken on the spot.

Jottings by the Way.

Mr. Henry Richards thrilled his hearers with a number of most interesting instances, setting forth how, near to the Congo, in Africa, superstition, fears, sorcery, and all the elements of barbarism had been overcome, and how converts had suffered, willingly, persecution and death. In the construction of churches and chapels both men and women joined, carrying materials very long distances, and taking the greatest interest in the worship of the house.

One of the speakers, in a vigorous manner, emphasized the need of special evangelists among the women. "Four hundred million in India and China," he said, "depend upon women evangelists. Men are not listened to. The customs of the country demand that they should listen only to women. In this regard they are exceedingly peculiar, and evangelistic work is arrested unless women take the field. Notwithstanding the privations, perils, and untold inconveniences, women have been found to go among their sisters in India."

A missionary from India pointed out that English rule is so thoroughly well-established that the evangelist's life is safe in any part within the British dominions, and perhaps a little safer than in the streets of New York or Chicago. Notwithstanding all there is of privation and peril to the evangelist, most of the missionaries abroad are evangelists, and will continue to be so.

Surely it is by evangelistic work that the greatest good has been accomplished, if we refer back to the results already obtained. A member of one of the highest families in North India, lost title, social caste, and all that he held dear. Brains and other endowments, however, soon advanced him to the highest position in the gift of his Church in India. He was a leader among leaders; as an evangelist he won thousands from heathenism and barbarism. Suddenly removed by death a few months ago, he left a record for ability, discretion, devotion and integrity, second to neither American nor native.

A delegate remarked on the need of going in a conciliatory spirit to other people, and not assuming that all is error. He should recognise the good that is to be found in every cry; nor must be assert his foreign superiority in any sense—dress, social and domestic customs. He must cease to be English, American, or German, at once when he steps into the country he has gone to convert.

The musical arrangements of the Conference were in the hands of our old friend Mr. G. C. Stebbins. On Laymen's Night, however, Mr. Ira D. Sankey conducted, and special hymns were sung. Mr. Sankey not only rose to a great occasion, but lifted the meeting into a bracing atmosphere by the spirited singing of spiritual songs while the eager, anxious throng of business men were gathering. In the hymn "Some day the silver cord will break," those in the uppermost gallery were asked to sing the chorus alone:

> And I shall see Him face to face,
> And tell the story, saved by grace.

The effect was thrilling; and as the words were repeated very softly, it seemed to us below as if those hopeful words were being sung at the gate of heaven.

Interesting Conference Statistics.

Delegates present, about 2,800; missionary boards and societies represented, about 150; countries and colonies represented, about 60; Protestant denominations represented, about 40; days on which the Conference was in session, 9; number of meetings held (not counting overflow), about 60; daily average attendance, about 15,000; expenses of the Conference, about 41,000dols.

The Sea of Galilee.

Sweet, lovely waters, 'midst the mountains grand,
A gem of sapphire blue, clear, crystal sea!
These hoary hills, like sentinels they stand
To guard thy sacred shores—sweet Galilee!
Upon thy bosom one sweet day we spent,
Where his dear feet so often came and went.

Mount Hermon rises, clothed in glory white,
Eternal snow adorns its lofty head.
Fair cities once were gladdened by thy sight,
They now remain, the cities of the dead.
Here on thy bosom one sweet day we spent,
Where his dear feet so often came and went.

Here, once Capernaum, and Bethsaida, stood,
Great in their glory, haughty in their pride.
Now lying fallen in their widowhood,
Where lawless Bedouin and Arab hide.
Upon thy waters one sweet day we spent,
Where his dear feet so often came and went.

His works of healing, and his words of grace,
Were on our hearts all through the sacred day.
And everywhere we saw his gracious face,
And o'er our wills He held supremest sway.
Bright gem of waters, clear, crystal, inland sea,
Loved by our blessed Lord; sweet Galilee!

Protestant Education in Canada.

Rev. A. B. DEMILL, of the College, St. Catherine's, Ontario, is leaving England on June 7. After a stay of several months among us, he returns to his work. He has been most kindly received in various centres of Gospel effort in Great Britain and Ireland, and many friends have given substantially in aid of the fund to liberate from debt the large institution on whose behalf he has pleaded.

As our readers are aware, the Demill Ladies' College was established to intercept the Convent patronage of Protestant parents, who fail to realize the terrible danger of allowing the Sisters to unsettle the minds of their daughters on Bible truths, and instil into them the dogmas of the Church of Rome. The snares of Rome are laid with care, and one of the inducements offered is good education at a cheap rate. The Demill College makes a like bid for patronage, but, in order that it may succeed as an institution, it must be rendered free from the incubus of debt. The property is vested in trustees for its noble purpose, and the undertaking has the endorsement of all who know its origin and work, as well as its esteemed founder, both in Canada and England.

Mr. Demill has raised over £700; he wanted considerably more. A lady promises him £100 towards an additional thousand. He goes back to Canada with a certain reluctance, for he is still expecting to hear from many friends upon whose support he has counted. He desires us to say, however, that it will give him great pleasure to know that gifts are sent to him to the care of the publishers of The Christian.

The Gospel in Eastern Europe.

There are neglected and almost forgotten lands and nations in the eastern parts of Europe bordering on Protestant Germany, and within easy approach of Great Britain—lands which have been for centuries held under the dominion of Rome and her rule of darkness and ignorance; the people being deprived of the Word of God and ruled by human tradition.

The martyrdom of thousands of Protestants in the time of the noble Reformer, John Huss, in Bohemia, has left its cruel mark on the character of the people. Only lately they are beginning to wake up to the fact of their oppression by Roman priests, and the desire for freedom from their yoke is making itself heard in many parts of the Austrian Empire. The numbers of Roman Catholics leaving their church system is increasing; yet, strange to say, they have met with little encouragement on the part of Protestant churches, the accusation that political motives are causing the secession being spread by Roman Catholic priests.

From my own observation, I am convinced that the Los von Rome movement is simply caused by the over-pressure of priestly tyranny, and it deserves all the support of Protestant Christians who value their own freedom. America has set a noble example in Bohemia and Austria by drawing many hundreds of the Roman Catholic Czechish and Slavonic people, by the teaching of the Word of God, into the liberty wherewith Christ sets his people free.

It is my intention shortly once more to visit the eastern parts of Europe to seek fellowship with the few scattered labourers in the Gospel in Slavonia, Croatia, Hungary, Bosnia, &c., distributing New Testaments and Gospel tracts as far as they are available. I shall be grateful for every remembrance in prayer, hoping to leave by the end of May, viâ Bâle, Zurich, Innsbruck, Villach, Budapest, &c.

Some of the labourers in the Gospel are very limited in their means, and isolated; any fellowship for the supply of their needs would be greatly valued. F. W. Baedeker.

THE MISSIONARY AT WORK.

PERHAPS there is no month in the whole year so interesting to Christian workers as the month of May. But why? you will ask. Because it is the time when the numerous religious societies formed for helping forward the kingdom of Christ in all parts of the world hold their annual meetings. Workers in the home land, and in foreign fields, tell of their doings—their hopes and fears, their discouragements and successes. Crowds assemble in Exeter Hall, Queen's Hall, St. James' Hall, and other places, to hear the stories these toilers in the Master's vineyard have to tell of God's wonderful works amongst the children of men.

I hope those of you who live near London attend some of these "May Meetings" with your parents or friends? It should be a grand time for boys and girls, as well as adults. The workers of the future are the young people of to-day. The Church of Christ is looking to the youth of the new century to take the places of their fathers in the years that are to come in all kinds of Christian service.

So I thought I would take you to China, and give you just a glimpse of how the missionary really sets about his work. You will not suppose that the proper missionary wears a tall, shiny hat, a suit of black clothes, a big white tie, and takes his stand under a spreading banyan tree, and there waits till the people assemble who want to become Christians. Then he opens his Bible and preaches for thirty or forty minutes on some brief text, or talks of the sin of worshipping idols. No; that is not his method at all. A picture like that would be utterly false.

Look at the pioneer missionary in Central China. He has found a suitable place in a narrow crowded street for open-air preaching. In his hands he holds a bundle of Christian tracts and Gospel portions translated into the Chinese language. He calls out to the passers-by that he has "good books" to sell at a very small price, just as if he were a common stall keeper. The sight of a foreigner selling good books soon attracts a crowd.

What a crowd it is! Scholars and shopmen, coolies and merchants, a sprinkling of farmers from the country, all jostle each other to get a near view of the stranger. There is the carpenter with his tools, the water-carrier, who has left his pails of water; the scholar with, perhaps, the pale, pasty face of the confirmed opium smoker, and a host of small boys and girls who jostle each other as if they had been born in England and not in China. How attentively many of the throng listen, it is all so strange. The missionary tells his wonderful story of God and his love, of Christ and his cross, of salvation from sin, of rest and joy. Many other things are talked about which you have known as long as you can remember, but which these people, most of them, are hearing for the first time.

Then comes question time—for very often the people put all sorts of curious questions to the speaker. If he were not quick and shrewd he would be at a disadvantage. After a time he gets into personal conversation with some of his hearers, and induces them to buy some of his books. Sometimes the missionary will chat with folk in a tea-shop by the wayside or in a boat on the river, wherever he can seize an opportunity.

In Hankow the missionary goes regularly to one of the preaching chapels, and the people from the streets, who go in to have a good look at him, stay to hear what he has to say. If a man is interested he will attend the chapel day after day and spend hours in conversation with the preacher. Thus many learn the great truths of Christianity, line upon line, "here a little and there a little," until the light of the knowledge of Jesus Christ breaks in upon the soul. Then, idolatry is given up, the convert is baptized into the Christian faith, forsakes his sin, and seeks to follow your own Jesus.

There are now in the three cities of Hankow, Wuchang, and Han Yang about a dozen of these street chapels, where the preaching of the Gospel is carried on almost every day. You will, I am sure, be astonished and glad to learn that in this way more than ten thousand Chinese hear the Gospel every week. Many are coming to know that idolatry is false, and that there is one only God, and Jesus Christ, his Son, whom He has sent to be the Saviour from sin of all who trust in Him.

Are you not thankful, therefore, that in these bright May days Christian people in England throng to hear of the progress of Christianity throughout the world, and to renew their consecration to this glorious work?

Sweetening Mary.

"I VANT a drink," said Baby.

"Go to the kitchen. Mary will give you a drink," said mother.

"I don't want to," Baby demurred. "Mary is cross."

"Why, what made her cross?" asked mother.

"I dess I did sumpin' to her," said Baby.

"Then if you have done something to make her cross, you would better go and do something to sweeten her," said mother.

Baby thought over it a minute, and then trudged to the kitchen. "You are a sweet Mary," he said, "and I want to hug you!"

Mary stopped her work and stooped, and he threw his arms about her neck and kissed her, and said: "I love you two hundred bushels."

When he came back, smiling, mother asked: "What did you do to Mary this time?"

"O, I sweetened her, I dess," was the reply.

Two Ways of Giving.

"If I could find a dollar,"
Said little Tommy Gill,
"A-layin' in a pig's track,
Or rollin' up a hill,
I'd send it to the heathen
As fast as it could go,
For they are needing money—
My teacher told me so."

"I can give a penny now,"
Said little Willie Pool,
"And that will buy a paper
To start a Sunday school,
I'd better give a penny,
And give it right away,
Than wait to find a dollar
To give another day."

So Willie gave his penny,
A wish gave Tommy Gill;
Now which saw his dollar first
Go rolling up the hill?

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR MAY 27.

Have Patience (Matt. xviii. 21-35).

THE religious teachers of that day taught that four times was the extreme limit of forgiveness. Peter exceeded this in his estimate; but how far he fell short of the Divine ideal. What comfort there is here! for if God expects man to forgive his brother thus, how may we not count on Him? Seven was the Jews the number of perfection, so that no expression could more forcibly convey the impression of endless, ever-renewed, eternal repetition than "seventy times seven."

The parable shows the awful wrong we do ourselves when we fail to forgive. Here was one who owed 2,000,000 sterling. Such is our position before God. We are absolutely broken in finances, in credit, in every kind of asset; but because of what the Lord Jesus did for us on Calvary, God is able to forgive. On the ground of satisfied justice he extends to us the golden sceptre of a frank pardon.

No parable can be carried to its furthest particulars in every item; so here our Lord, for the sake of the one impression He desires to leave on us, infers that the man was not softened by the remission of his own great debt. As a matter of fact this can hardly be repeated in our case, because when we are really forgiven the state of heart which is susceptible of forgiveness is very pitiful and tender. However, we can all understand our Lord's meaning, when He describes the forgiven man as going straight from his master's presence and laying violent hands on an unfortunate fellow-servant who owed him less than a five-pound note. He is deaf to the reasons which had filled his own mouth immediately before, deaf to everything except a promise to pay, and that instantly. We are all tempted to abuse the forgiving love of God, and to be censorious, imperious, vindictive, implacable, and unforgiving. If you want to be the reverse of this, consider how much you have been forgiven. Sit down and count up your enormous debt to God, and how freely He has forgiven. Remember that his love has covered all your mountainous sins beneath the waves of its deluge, and surely this will dispose you to give as freely as it has been given to you.

The thing became known to the king. No one is so unimportant or sinful that God will stand by and see him wronged. The story will get to Him, as certainly as that He is God, and He will not be slow in taking measures on behalf of the downtrodden. The king revoked his pardon and delivered him to tormentors; the assumption was that he had some treasure buried somewhere, which he would disgorge. But the main point is that his want of forgiveneness led to his being unforgiven. Only the forgiving are forgiven. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

Suppose it be granted that all of us are affected by the death of Christ—that as the second Adam He became the propitiation for the sins of the whole world—does it not become clear from this parable that a man may neutralize, so far as he is concerned, all the benefits of the Saviour's death, and contract himself out of them? If we are unrelenting, slow to recognise merit, quick to observe faults, cherishing ill-will and resentment for injuries inflicted years ago; and if you cling to and nourish this spirit, be sure that you have never been forgiven.

How are we to attain the state of mind which forgives so often, and gains by love the most wayward? Ah, this parable teaches us that we must receive God's pardon in a right spirit, that we must think justly of our own failures and sins, and that we should be willing to cast the mantle of forgiving love over the sins and failures of those around us.

C.E. NOTES.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has promised to speak at the Convention on the evening of Monday, July 15.

Special trains are being arranged from all parts of the kingdom. Glasgow is the latest of these.

THE FORTHCOMING CONVENTION.

Your readers are doubtless aware that the Christian Endeavour World's Convention is (D.V.) to be held at the Alexandra Palace from July 14 to 18, when some 25,000 Endeavourers from all parts of the world are expected to attend. But perhaps they have not realized the fact that this large army of young Christians has to be entertained. As this arduous, yet most delightful task has been entrusted to the Hospitality Committee, may I, as its convener, be allowed to make an earnest appeal to the Christians of London to remember the Apostolic injunction (Hebrews xiii. 2) and help us all they can? Our guests are paying for hospitality, so we are willing to pay; but where free hospitality is given, the guests' payment (made in every case to the Convention Committee) will be regarded as a contribution by the host towards the very heavy expenses of the Convention. Offers of hospitality will be thankfully received by Mr. C. J. Page, hon. sec. of Hospitality Committee, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., or by yours faithfully, Montagu Holmes.

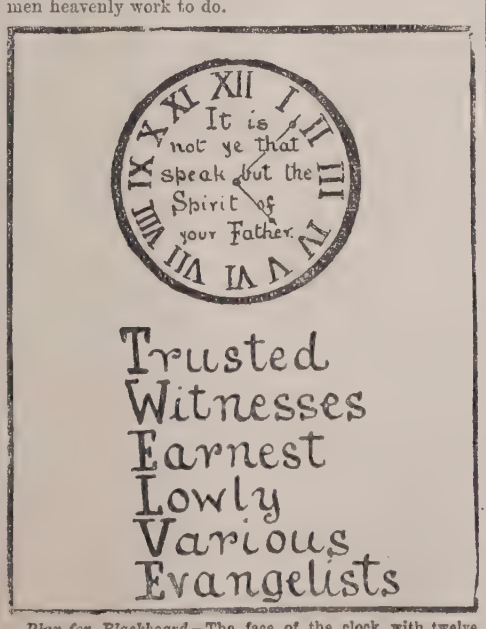
The Twelve sent forth (Matt. ix. 35 to x. 8).

Golden Text.—"It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. x. 20).

Introduction.

FOUR lists of the names of the Twelve Apostles are given us (Matt. x. 2; Mark iii. 16; Luke vi. 14; Acts i. 13). All begin with Peter; all end (except Acts) with Judas Iscariot. Christ puts the Twelve Apostles and the twelve tribes of Israel together in Matt. xix. 28. It is interesting to note how this number runs through the Bible. Twelve brothers (Gen. xlii. 13); tribes (Gen. xlix. 28); precious stones (Ex. xxviii. 21); memorial stones (Jos. iv. 3); gates (Rev. xxi. 12-21); foundations (Rev. xxi. 14).

Moses says, "I took twelve men of you" (Deut. i. 23), and in our lesson, Jesus called twelve men (1). Moses took them for a purpose, so did Jesus (36). He was sorry for the people; He could see souls longing to know more about Him, and so He gave these twelve men heavenly work to do.



Plan for Blackboard—The face of the clock with twelve numbers shows us that the face is no good without the hidden power of the works behind, neither could these twelve men do anything of themselves alone (see Golden Text). The Holy Spirit working in them makes them what they are as given in the six words below, for proof of which study the Book of Acts, which is the Book of the Holy Spirit's power.

Trusted.

Christ trusted these men (5-8), trusted them with a great work. He had been training them all the time they had been with Him; and in the Acts, where they did greater works (Acts ii. 8-11; v. 40-42), we find all but one, Judas Iscariot, another having been put in his place (Acts i. 25, 26), preaching the Gospel as Christ wished them to do.

Witnesses.

They were able to say, "We have seen," "We know." They must begin to-day (7) in a small way, and afterwards grow into faithful witnesses of the Saviour of the World (Acts ii. 32; iii. 15; v. 32; Luke xxiv. 48). See the testimony of three of them: James—James i. 1; Peter—2 Peter i. 1; John—1 John i. 1, &c.

Earnest.

They must learn that, to be the Master's trusted witnesses, they are to be very earnest and whole-hearted in their work (8). They had begun earnestly (Luke v. 11); forsook all to follow Him (Mark i. 17-20); straightway—at once. And so it must be the aim of every Christian to be in downright earnest (Phil. iii. 7, 8).

Lowly.

They were men of lowly position, see what some of them were in their daily calling:

Peter and Andrew, brothers, fishermen (Mark i. 16).
James and John, brothers, fishermen (Mark i. 19).
Matthew, a tax-collector (Matt. ix. 9); and so on.

But not only were they of lowly position; lowliness must be a part of everyone's character if they are to do anything for Christ (Matt. xi. 29).

Various.

These men were various in their characters, but Christ can make use of all sorts if they are only willing to obey Him. Peter, impetuous and energetic. Andrew, eager to bring others to Christ (John i. 41-42; vi. 8, 9; xii. 20-22). John, quiet, full of love for Jesus (John xxi. 20). Philip, practical (John xiv. 8, 9; vi. 5-7). Bartholomew or Nathanael, without guile (John i. 47). Thomas, the doubter (John xx. 24-25).

Evangelists.

They were to take the Gospel pure and simple to the people without forms or ceremonies, they were to preach Jesus Christ, and they did it (Acts v. 42; iv. 2).

Lessons We Learn.

Christ can use anyone, never mind their position, if they will be faithful witnesses (Matt. xxv. 21-23) for Him; not working themselves, but letting the Holy Spirit use his power through them. Christ wants labourers (37) to-day as much as He did in the long ago when He called twelve to do his work; the only condition is—whole-hearted willingness to be nothing, that He may be all (Matt. xxviii. 19). "Go, teach."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Queen has graciously accepted an address from the City of Dublin Association. In the course of their address the members say: "Your Majesty's tender sympathy with reference to the many Irishmen who have recently given their lives in battle, or are now doing their duty under the flag of their Queen and country in South Africa, is deeply appreciated. The earnest prayer of the Association is that your Majesty may long be spared to continue your wise and beneficent reign over a united and attached people."

News is to hand of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Oatts in Western Australia. Mr. Oatts, representing the English National Council, has already visited the principal Associations in India; he will spend some months in an endeavour to develop and strengthen the movement in Australia and New Zealand. He will proceed thence to Canada, where he will make a short stay en route for home. A fortnight has been devoted to the city of Perth, a week to Fremantle, and ten days to the goldfields. An enthusiastic welcome has been given to Mr. and Mrs. Oatts at all the centres they have visited. Mr. Oatts is one of the principal speakers at the twenty-first anniversary meeting at Adelaide, and it is hoped that the co-operation of friends in this city with those at Sydney and Melbourne may render possible the appointment of a permanent Association travelling secretary for Australasia.

The annual report of the Oxford Association has been issued in the form of an attractive illustrated booklet, which gives a pithy account of the good work which has been accomplished. Spiritual undertakings are well to the fore. At the P.S.A. held in the large hall, missionaries on furlough, visitors from other lands, members of the university, and the ministers of the city have addressed the men, and the study of the Scriptures has received an impetus from the various Bible classes and also through the Bible and Prayer Union.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCE AT HEIDELBERG.

THE German branches of the Evangelical Alliance had very happy Conferences on May 9 and 10 at Heidelberg. Continual wet and cold hindered our enjoyment of the outward beauty of the place, but within the Conference, and in the hearts of the attendants, there were light and warmth. Professor Dr. Lemme, the president, and Evangelist Kaiser, the secretary—in connection with a local committee—were able to arrange admirably for the reception and comfort of guests. Hospitality was specially cared for by Stadtmissionar Ruprecht. Count von Bernstorff and Dr. Dalton were the delegates from Berlin and the North German branches. The Conference had before it the maintenance of Evangelical Alliance Principles and Dispositions, and also the advancement of spiritual life in the soul. It was my privilege to address the conference five times on the two subjects before us. Noble orations by Dr. Dalton and others warmed our hearts, and many a soul found enlargement and direction. Hamburg was designated for the union of German branches in 1901, and Frankfort for the Ecumenical Conferences of 1902.

AT PARIS EXHIBITION.

From Heidelberg I came to Paris to help in securing among English-speaking exhibitors—of whom there are about 1,000 from Great Britain, her Colonies, and the United States—the maintenance of our English tradition of no work and no active exhibition on the Lord's Day. The attitude of the British Royal Commission makes this difficult for the English and Colonial exhibitors. America is so backward in preparation that no judgment can be formed as to their conduct in this matter, but both President M'Kinley and the Hon. Mr. Peck, the Commissioner here, are in favour of abstinence from Sunday exhibition; and the United States Pavilion is not opened on that day. Canada is more complete than most nations, and is very determined on showing an admirable example. Of those sections I have visited about 100 stands. Of the 600 British exhibits, I have visited about 120. There were on Sunday many notable instances of entire closing, everything being covered, and no attendants being present.

Large numbers of exhibits are without attendants altogether. They are in air-tight glass cases, their only cover, and are "on view" the whole season, and require only to be dusted. Many others have canvas covers which, in most instances, are removed every day—Sunday included. Many attendants have their day spoiled by one or two Sunday visits. The action of the British Commission in formulating their nineteenth regulation, touching being "on view" on Sunday, is deeply to be regretted; and although, in the present inchoate state of the Exhibition, they have not enforced the regulation, there are signs that they will soon begin to do so. Unhappily every exhibitor has accepted the regulation and signed his acceptance of it, so that by unwillingness to commend men to break an engagement. It is a case in which moral obligation and religion seem to be in conflict. Dr. Peake, who has already done good work here, is expected back soon to carry it on. I have seen several friends of the Lord's Day since I arrived, and have tried to facilitate steps to be taken on his arrival.

The Salle Evangélique, in the Rue Labourdenais, is in an admirable position, and will soon be completed. I was present this morning at the daily meeting, and felt that the brethren who joined me in prayer, are the very men whom the Lord will bless. The committee require larger funds, to finish the building and carry on the work till October.

Paris is in sore need. She seems to "sit a queen"; the city is en fête—a city of joy, but alas! there is much terrible sin and wrong; and the messengers of God, who are comparatively few, know too surely how much of unrest, and even of despair, is covered up by flags and tinsel, and how many a groan is drowned in the hurry and music, and drink and noise, which make day and night one long cry, and which make the Sabbath an absolute terror to Christian hearts. It is a real joy to do anything for the evangelization of this beautiful and needy city. JOHN GRITTON.

Miss De Broen's Work in Paris.

I HAVE had the happiness of calling Miss de Broen my friend ever since we met in Scotland in 1873. I did not visit her in Belleville till 1881, but since that time I have very often been an inmate of her house. I am now again in Belleville after an absence of some months, and I am thankful to be able, through your valuable paper, to convey to friends at home my impressions of this well-known mission.

The day after my arrival here in April, I went to the iron room, and found it filled with men without work, whom during the cold weather, Miss de Broen had invited to this place. I found her distributing bowls of soup, with bread, to about 300 men. A French lady was struck with the kindly welcome they received, to a warm room, where they could sit and rest; and she remarked this was so different from other places, where soup is given away to those standing in the muddy streets, under the eyes of the passers-by.

Miss de Broen read a few verses of the Bible, and spoke earnestly and forcibly. The men were perfectly quiet and attentive. On the following Sunday I saw a number of them present at the usual service. I ask the prayers and material help of Christian friends for Miss de Broen in her work for God in Paris. It comprises many branches; the soup kitchen has been an extra work during the winter. There are many opportunities of selling the Scriptures and of distributing tracts, and Miss de Broen would be grateful for any number, in French, Italian, and German.

I trust that many who are coming to the Exhibition may remember to visit Miss de Broen at Belleville, and see for themselves how greatly this work is needed.

A Faith Mission.

ALTHOUGH the history of the Londonderry South American Faith Mission covers only a few years, its existence has been attended with many definite results. It may be remembered that when Mr. and Mrs. Logan took up their work in Olavarria, there was no Protestant place of worship. At the present time they have a hall in one of the main streets of the town, a congregation of 200 regular worshippers, a large and flourishing Sunday school, &c. Twice have the meeting places been changed in order to accommodate the number of worshippers, and extensive additions are now being made to the premises. A service was recently held for the purpose of sending out the first missionary from the church. This young man was one of the first to profess faith in Christ, after being educated as a spiritualist. He has now dedicated himself to the service of the Gospel, and has gone to Patagonia as its witness. Further information respecting the mission will be gladly forwarded by Mr. R. Roulston, Stroud, Londonderry.

The Gospel is everywhere concise, simple, original, animated, interesting, dignified; its precepts important, its morality perfect, its sentiments sublime, its views noble and comprehensive, its sanctions awful!—Bishop Porteus.

In Central China.

THE OPENING OF HUNAN.

IN a recent communication from Central China Dr. Griffith John relates how, after years of stern and bitter opposition, the district of Hunan has been opened for the reception of the Gospel. This the writer ascribes to the persistent and vigorous efforts of the London Missionary Society. "Hunan," says Dr. John, "has a population of more than 20,000,000, and no part of the Province is so thickly populated as the Valley of the Siang, and nowhere are the people more capable or cultured. The Church of the future will find in this Valley some of the sturdiest converts, most earnest evangelists and efficient pastors.

"It is now twenty years since I sailed down the Siang for the first time, and it has been my ambition to plant the cross in its every city and town. I have waited long, but the time to favour Hunan has come at last. One of our great needs now is a strong staff of native evangelists. These can be supported in the valley for £10 a year each. Another evidence of the progress made in Central China is the opening of the High School and Theological College. The former has been established on a self-supporting basis, and promises to be a useful adjunct to the Society's organizations. The Theological College supplies a long-felt want, and its students give much promise of becoming valuable helpers of the Mission.

"The increase in the church membership is also a matter for deep thankfulness. During the year no fewer than 637 persons have been baptized at Hunan and Hupeh alone, while at various stations hundreds anxious to be admitted to Church fellowship have awaited the missionary visits in order to be baptized.

"The united circulation in the district of the Central China Religious Tract Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland amounted to 1,209,647 PUBLICATIONS.

"The missionaries are few," says Dr. John; "but the tracts and Gospels are many, and are finding their way into quarters to which the missionaries have no access."

ENCOURAGEMENT, DISAPPOINTMENT, AND PROGRESS.

"I could give many incidents bearing on these three points. I could tell of drawbacks and failures, of backslidings and apostacies, of the coldness and worldliness of some, the inconsistencies and falls of othere. There is both a bright and a dark side to our work. The missionary is often tried, and the more optimistic and enthusiastic he is, the greater his trials. It is not the pessimist who suffers; it is the man of strong faith, large hopes, and burning enthusiasm, who feels the keenness of disappointment, and the bitterness of failure."

Dr. John refers to the loss the mission has sustained in the death of Pastor Chu, for many years a useful, devoted worker. At the time of the Taiping Rebellion he was forced to leave his native province. After a time, the disturbances having subsided, Mr. Chu laid his claim to the estates to which he was heir before the Guild of the Province, who decided that the property was his, but added, "before we can help you to get it you must give us a promise that you will cease worshipping the foreigners' God." The native teacher replied that the property might go, for, believing in Jesus, he would worship Him all the days of his life. The mission also laments the death of Mr. Wei Teh-Sheng, the senior evangelist in the district of King Shan, who passed away at Hankow Hospital. His beautiful, exemplary and consistent Christian life will not be easily forgotten by those who have known his life and witnessed his joyful and devoted service in the cause of Christ.

Dr. Griffith John may be addressed at Hankow, China.

A Changeless Love.—Christ has the same love in his heart now as He had when He was nailed to the cross; He has not changed his heart; though He has changed his state, and changed his place, yet his heart is still the same.—Romaine.

The May Meetings.

Church of England Zenana Missionary Society.

A LARGE and appreciative assembly came together on the occasion of the annual gathering of this important Society, which was held in Exeter Hall a few days ago.

The account of the work given by Rev. G. Tonge went to show that a large measure of blessing has accompanied the labours of the missionaries. During the past year nineteen new workers were accepted, and sailed for the foreign field; to those might be added Miss F. Smith, the first lady sent out by the Church Missionary Association of New Zealand to work in connection with the Society in India. The nett total of missionaries in home connection was now 231, against 220 on the list last year. Besides those in home connection, and standing to them numerically in the proportion of about four to one, they had a of workers, who as missionaries in local connection, assistants, Biblewomen, teachers, nurses, and dispensers, were fellow-helpers unto the Kingdom of God.

The present difficulty of adequately meeting the cost of an increasing European staff, together with the obvious consideration that those born in the country were best fitted alike by Nature and Providence to be the evangelists of their own people, suggested that the attention and efforts of the Society's missionaries might be even more specially directed than heretofore towards the selection and training of daughters of India and China for the Master's work; and it might well be commended to friends of the Society, as a definite subject for prayer, that the same Spirit which constrained British women to offer themselves for work abroad might be poured out abundantly on their Christian sisters in foreign lands, that they might be led to volunteer in larger numbers.

It would be safe (the speaker went on) to say that in connection with missions at least 7,500 Zenana pupils had been under instruction; 10,000 girls had been on the rolls of their schools; 2,700 in-patients had been received in the hospitals; and not less than 200,000 out-patients had been treated at the dispensaries. The women in at least 2,700 villages had had the opportunity of hearing the Gospel. In several stations the missionaries had had the joy of harvest. At Baranagore, for instance, since Easter last year six women had been enabled to confess Christ openly in baptism. Miss Rainsford Hannay was also able to report the baptism, at Trinity Church, Calcutta, of two converts from Howrah. Not much could be recorded in the way of new work, beyond the special effort among the deaf and dumb, to which Miss Swainson had been led in a way that could scarcely be regarded as otherwise than providential.

Speaking from the chair, Colonel Williams said that although they had had a larger income given them, it had been heartbreaking to the Committee to have to say that the work must be curtailed, and that some of the schools, one of the most promising features, would have to be given up. It had been bad enough for those at home, but what must it have been for those devoted workers out in the foreign field, face to face with an

and with the great wealth of Christian England behind them, to receive word that they must retrench? They were called upon to take up the work, but they were not called upon to take up what was beyond them. The work was enormous. They could not hope to evangelize everybody. But with the means placed at their disposal they must do their best to carry on the work and make it as efficient as possible. He referred to the Training Home for assistant missionaries in India which was now rising from its foundations, and said he looked upon it with very great pleasure and with very great hope.

Subsequent speakers were Miss A. R. Driscoll, of Sukkur, Punjab, and Miss A. B. Cooper, of Won Buang, China, both of whom gave earnest addresses, the latter observing that one evil which they had to fight against was the terrible opium traffic. She could tell of young wives who were sold in order that their husbands might satisfy their craving for opium.

Among Deep-Sea Fishers.

EXETER (LARGE) HALL presented a picturesque and busy scene on the occasion of the Fishermen's May Meeting, on Wednesday afternoon last week. Flags and bunting adorned the auditorium, and, the ladies being in very large preponderance, there was a diffusion of colour not often seen between these walls. The usually quiet traditions of the building also gave way in response to the enthusiasm with which Mr. Frederick Treves, F.R.C.S., was welcomed back from his sojourn among our soldiers at the front, and "He's a jolly good fellow" was uproariously sung. But the smiling, weather-beaten faces of the honest fellows in blue, assembled behind the speakers, were excuse all sufficient, and formed a plea for the Mission more eloquent than the most impressive of the speakers.

Sir Wm. Willis, who presided, sketched the scope and purpose of the Mission, his address being supplemented by Mr. G. Andrew Hutchison. The figures are sufficiently significant to indicate the excellence of the work. Eleven thousand and twenty-five patients had been treated during the year, 9,085 missionary visits paid, 2,709 services held, and 1,243 copies of the Scriptures disposed of. The weight of literature freely distributed was fifty-one tons six hundredweight. As many as 1,630 helpers, mostly ladies, had kept up correspondence with 2,500 of the fishermen and boys. After referring to Lord Strathcona's generosity in connection with the new mission vessel which bears his name, Mr. Hutchison said that the new hospital ship Alpha, which one donor had given at a cost of £12,000, was now on view off Billingsgate. He urgently appealed for increased support. The accounts of the Mission show an income in 1899 of £20,234; the expenditure—£21,550—including £11,235 for the maintenance of fourteen mission vessels and of institutes on shore.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton, gave one of his genial speeches, and seemed to feel quite at home with his nautical friends, albeit but a "land-lubber," as he described himself. He gave them a very appropriate exhortation in the shape of an acrostic on the word Anchor, that they should hold fast to the anchorage of Christ's Atonement, Name, Care, Hope, Omnipresence, Return. Mr. Treves drew upon his recent experiences at the front in South Africa, as he urged that, while we admire the pluck and endurance of our soldiers, we must remember that the fishermen of the North Sea are of the same flesh and blood, and are not a whit lacking in heroism as marked as that which has made our army famous. Nor was the audience slow to appreciate the triteness of his comparison.

Other speakers followed, and Lady Dunboyne presented good-conduct stripes to the smacksmen amid rounds of applause.

On Friday a dedication service was held on board the Alpha, conducted by the Bishop of London, and attended by a goodly number of the sympathisers and helpers of this good work.

English Theatrical Employees in Paris.—Through the kindness of Dr. and Mrs. Anderson, Mr. William Forbes was able to hold, at their residence, in the Avenue des Champs Elysées, on Friday last, the first of his meetings for English ballet girls. About fifty were present. After tea, solos and hymns were sung, and kind and sympathetic addresses were given by Miss Johnston, Dr. Anderson, and the (English) Congregational, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan ministers.

Strangers' Friend Society.

THIS venerable institution held its 114th annual meeting last week at the office, 121, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., under the chairmanship of Mr. J. H. Anderson. Afterwards a large gathering took place in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, presided over by Mr. Henry Swaffield, J.P., who said he had been closely associated with the Society for over forty years, and he almost looked upon the institution as one of the marvels of the century, when the continuity of its work throughout that long period is remembered.

Many telling instances were related by several speakers of the good effected during the past year by the aid rendered to the sick poor of London from the funds, through the 157 voluntary agents, who are constantly engaged in helping in numerous ways, not only the "outlander" in our midst, but also our own kith and kin from the towns and villages of our land, when finding themselves stranded and friendless in the loneliness of this great city, through misfortune, accident, or other adverse circumstances.

The report referred to sights encountered by the visitors during the closing year of the century as sad as any their predecessors could have witnessed during the 114 years that have elapsed since the Society initiated its system of visiting and relieving the sick poor at their own habitations. The condition of many of the poor to-day causes the despair that often relaxes the industrious hand and makes a clean place wherein to starve a matter of indifference, and some it sinks into a state of filth that shocks the eye and appals the heart. The visitors, who have very aptly been compared to a Red Cross Brigade on the battle-field of life when on their mission of mercy, not only act as the almoners of man's charity, but also are active and earnest in making known God's willingness to save to the uttermost.

The many special funds claiming public attention just now, through the war and other calamities, have unfortunately tended to divert contributions from established charities, and thereby the financial difficulties of this, as well as others, are greatly increased.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

PERMANENT and regular assistance of the Lord's aged poor has been the worthy object of this Society for more than ninety years; and judging by the largely attended anniversary meeting held in the spacious Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House last Monday afternoon, much interest is felt by Christian people in this ministry of mercy. The proceedings, however, disclosed wide scope for extension, if only means are forthcoming.

Old age, poverty, and the grace of God in the heart were mentioned by the secretary, Mr. J. E. Hazelton, as the sole qualifications for participation in the benefits conferred by the Society. Within the limits of scriptural and Protestant truth, the institution is undenominational. No less than 1,493 pensioners, living in all parts of the United Kingdom, are now upon the books, and the sum of £10,941 has been distributed among them in pensions, ranging from £5 to £10, during the year. All the pensioners are over sixty years of age, and 180 of them find comfortable dwelling in the four homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill respectively.

Lieutenant-General Sir W. Stirling said that the record of last year's work by the Society was and showed how his aged servants, who had experienced the mercy of God as well as the roughness of life's way, value their small pensions.

Thanksgiving to God for prospering this cause was expressed by Rev. Dr. C. H. Wright, who urged that personal blessing is always reaped by the doers of merciful deeds done for Christ's sake. It is a disgrace to the Church to find a single Christian in the poor-house.

Rev. W. Sinden, Regent Street Chapel, City Road, regarded his subscription as well invested in a Society which is maintained by God's evident favour upon its sound basis and faithful administration, and whose claims never grow old.

After connecting the almost parental claims of poor aged Christians with the Fifth Commandment, Mr. B. Densham gave a practical turn to previous talk about doubling guinea subscriptions. If 500 subscribers are induced to take that course within a year, he will give 1,000 guineas to the Society, or the same sum in instalments of 100 guineas, from time to time, for every fifty subscribers who double their guineas. Several other influential speakers followed.

Coalies and Carmen.

SELDOM has the Conference Hall at Mildmay been the scene of a happier and more enthusiastic gathering than at the celebration of the anniversary of the Mission to Coalies and Carmen. This event took place on Tuesday of last week, and was attended by its wonted festivity and joy. The men, with their wives and families, were entertained to tea, which was followed by the usual meeting. The Conference Hall presented a festal appearance with the bright, happy faces of the toilers; trim and neat, decked with spring blossoms, the gift of the Mildmay Bible Flower Mission, and displaying beautiful Scripture cards. No better interpretation of the efforts of the missionaries could be obtained than the genuine appreciation of the assembly, and the warm-hearted testimony borne by the speakers, many of them coalies or carmen, who have been led, through the influence of the Mission, to seek a nobler life, and are now rejoicing in the assurance of being accepted of God. With steady, earnest plodding, inspired and crowned by Divine grace, the missionaries have pursued their useful efforts to subserve the highest welfare of coalies and their fellow-workmen. The past year has been one of much encouragement to the missionaries, and their zealous labours have been abundantly fruitful.

The chair on Tuesday was occupied by Mr. Fred Tite, who pleaded for the co-operation of the men, in order that a sixth missionary could be appointed.

Colonel Morton, in a few cheering words, welcomed his guests to Mildmay, reminding them that it was their natural home.

Mr. G. C. Locket, J.P., made touching reference to several sudden deaths of workmen which had recently occurred, and earnestly exhorted his hearers to prepare for the life beyond.

An earnest address, followed by Mr. S. Munns, who urged the advantage—spiritual, moral, and physical—of taking the abstinence pledge.

Messrs. J. Chopping, A. Creek, and J. Jefferies, in simple, homely terms, related their experiences, and urged in earnest their fellow-workmen to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. W. Prentice, one of the missionaries, sang, with impressive earnestness, "Him that cometh," and followed his Gospel song with a fervent invitation for the acceptance of Christ.

The Phonograph.—The Church Missionary Society has shown wisdom as well as enterprise in adopting the phonograph as a means of instruction. Some missionaries who went to Tripoli to learn the Hausa language took a phonograph with them. After having mastered the language they spoke the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments into the phonograph and sent it home, so that intending missionaries should, before leaving England, be able to acquire the native pronunciation. It will thus not be necessary for them to proceed to Tripoli for that purpose preparatory to leaving for West Africa. Efficiency is gained at a minimum of expense, and a great saving of time. In Uganda, King Toro, known to his friends as Daudi Kasagama, has been presented by the same Society with a typewriter, which has pleased him immensely, and of which he has rapidly made himself an adept. The Church Missionary Society is to be congratulated on its adoption of the latest mechanical inventions in furtherance of its own ends.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Homes for Working Boys.

ON Monday night, celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of these Homes was combined with a triennial festival dinner at the Queen's Hall. Instead of inviting persons interested in the Society, the committee gave the dinner to the 340 boys now sheltered in the seven Homes. To a house in Queen Square, Bloomsbury, it is now proposed to transfer the work of "Rossie House," hitherto carried on elsewhere. The Home bearing that name has been continuously full, and at times many boys have been refused admission for want of room.

The boys will thus have a far more commodious and a brighter home; but the taking and fitting thereof, including premium, alterations, fixtures, furnishing, and the sum to be paid for dilapidations in the old house, will involve a cost of at least £1,500. In addition to this it will be necessary to raise, in the course of the present year, about £1,000 for maintenance of the seven Homes which are nearly always full of boys just old enough to work and earn wages. A large number of them come from Poor Law or Industrial Schools; while others, having no parents in London, have heard of the Homes through their employers, or have seen one of the advertisements which are placed in cocoa rooms and similar places.

It is invariably sought to conduct these Homes on distinctively Christian principles. There is no religious test for admission, but the boys have to attend family worship every evening, and Divine service on Sunday. Every endeavour is made to lead them to know Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

An organ recital was given by Mr. George Denham; and after the young guests had done full justice to the ample meal provided, the chair was taken by Lord Kinnaird, in the unavoidable absence of the Earl of Aberdeen (President of the Homes). Among others on the platform was of Ladysmith; and after the hearty cheers which greeted his appearance had subsided, the proceedings were opened with the National Anthem. The treasurer, Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, mentioned that one boy found his way from a Home to Ladysmith, and another to West Africa, where he superintends a Christian mission to the heathen. Here, and at other intervals during the evening, the boys sang, under the direction of the organist already named, Stanley Osborne (a resident of one of the Homes) acting as pianist.

The Chairman spoke, from personal knowledge, of the good work done by the Society, as seen in boys he had come across at home and abroad. He warmly commended the work as one that is well worthy of prayerful and sympathetic interest and support.

The nobility of work was eloquently enforced by the Dean of Norwich, who also acknowledged God's sparing mercy to the distinguished man whose presence made this meeting so interesting. To the boys he commended the virtues of pluck, perseverance, and prayer, amid opposition and difficulty, particularly in relation to religion.

General Sir George White addressed the boys, and evidently soon gained great favour with them. He spoke of the practical value in life of that discipline which is exercised in the Homes, and, following the alliterative example of the preceding speaker, he asked friends present to "Pay, pay, pay Pelham, Putney." Rev. Marcus Rainsford and others followed with sound Christian counsel to the lads.

A Gospel Wagonette. — The Open-air Mission is seeking to enlarge its scope of operations among the needy villages, hundreds of which are reached annually through its evangelists. A wagonette, capable of seating several evangelists, and of storing literature, harmonium, &c., is to go forth into the darkest corners of our land, and to bring the Gospel message to thousands of isolated villagers who seldom if ever hear it. Who will help in this glorious enterprise, and enable the committee to send forth a band of devoted evangelists on their joyful errand without delay?—Frank Cockrem, Secretary, 11, Adam Street, Strand.

About Books.

THE JEWS IN HISTORY AND PROPHECY.

THERE are many books about the Jews and their place in history and prophecy, but we know of nothing that can compare for comprehensiveness of outline with Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff's little work, The Branches and the Branch. Dedicated to all who seek the good of Israel, it brings before us the people whom we all know as Separate, Scattered, Persecuted, and Preserved; and it exhibits these several features and experiences in the light of Holy Scripture. The Jew in prophecy brings up questions of interpretation, and stands related to the hope of the Church and the revealed future of mankind at large. These, therefore, are among the important subjects which Mr. Scott Moncrieff studies in his very readable little book. A specially valuable section of the work deals with the persecutions suffered by the Jews from century to century since the Crucifixion. As a historical summary it is a veritable triumph of succinctness. Another chapter sets forth in an impressive manner prophecies concerning Israel that have been fulfilled or are in course of fulfilment; and yet another tabulates predictions that have not so far been accomplished. The little book deserves many readers. (1s. nett. Morgan & Scott.)

The Fourth Monthly part of the Friends' Quarterly Examiner (1s. 6d. West, Newman, & Co.) has several good things. James Backhouse writes on "Seventeenth Century Copies of John Bunyan's works;" and William Tallack contributes a deeply interesting article on "The Bristol Friends of Fifty Years Ago."

The Free Church Year-Book is a substantial volume. It contains an official report of the Fifth National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, held in March last at Sheffield; and gives lists of secretaries of the councils throughout the country, with other official information that will be of service to many. (2s. 6d. nett. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.)

Love's Victory: Memoirs of Fanny Woodman, 1888-1895. By her Sister. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Here we have deeply interesting letters by one who will long be remembered for her work among soldiers at Lichfield, and who for a time served the Lord in China. There is spiritual profit in the pages, and we trust they will have many readers.

In his book, Principles of Church Defence, Rev. Harri Edwards deals with Regeneration, Baptism, Pædobaptism, and Ritualism. (2s. T. H. Hopkins, 16, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.) One feature of the work is that it presents facts and arguments admitted by those whose principles and practices are subjected to criticism. There is hope of growing goodwill and enlarged understanding among Christians when controversy is conducted in such a dispassionate and respectful manner as in these pages.

British Foreign Missions is the title of a valuable addition to Messrs. Blackie & Son's "Victorian Era" series (2s. 6d. each). The work of Revs. R. Wardlaw Thompson and Arthur N. Johnson, M.A., the well known secretaries of the London Missionary Society, it covers the sixty years from 1837 to 1897. A full index makes the large amount of information conveyed in the volume easily accessible to students and inquiring readers. The work is comprehensive in scope and admirably arranged.

In these days, when Rome is active and Romeward tendencies find ready patronage, serious attention should be given to a work published by Mr. C. J. Thynne, entitled, Revelations of Modern Convents; or, Life in Convents on British Soil in the Closing Years of the Nineteenth Century (2s. 6d.), by S. J. Abbott, Secretary of the Convent Enquiry Society. The book is a strong constructive appeal for the inspection of the institutions into which many throw themselves so readily, and with such lamentable results. It is time something were done by way of responding to such an appeal.

In Old Testament Types and Teachings, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gives us a series of Bible readings, designed to show the progressive development of truth and experience in the books of the Old Testament. (5s. Nisbet & Co.) To indicate the inner sense of Scripture is the object of the chapters—twenty-three in number. The result is a volume rich in thought and practical wisdom. Mrs. Smith is very successful in indicating, by New Testament passages, the "key notes" of the various Old Testament books. Her general task in this substantial volume has been executed with great ability; and many Christian people will count her a friend and helper after perusing the pages.

The following extract from the PREFACE will speak for itself:—

THE preparation of my father's Biography has been undertaken as a sacred trust. Early in the spring of 1894 he was asked by an old friend for permission to issue a Biography with his approval. This my father declined to do, and, on that occasion, expressed the wish that I should assume the task when his life work was ended. . . . Whatever diffidence I have felt in executing this trust, it has been undertaken as a filial duty, and esteemed to be a great privilege. . . . My father lived solely for the glory of God and for the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the earnest prayer of his family, that in this record of his career, his life's purpose may be conserved.

A RELIGIOUS REVIEW and BIBLE EXPOSITOR

THE RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK contains articles each month by leading Christian teachers and workers on themes of general religious interest. In addition to these contributions, among others the following departments are regularly sustained:—

The Mid-Week Bible Class

Conducted by

ROBERT E. SPEER.

Beginning in January, and continuing through the year, in a study of the Apostle Paul, as shown in Acts and Pauline Epistles. This course is specially designed as a basis for Union Bible Classes.

Thoughts for the Quiet Hour.

Each day of every month, starting out with a message from God's Word, and a brief commentary on the same by some well-known Christian writers, the magazine aims to be of help and comfort all the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year.

Religious Thought and Activity.

The interest of the readers is called to the Christian labour which is being carried on in all parts of the world, by brief extracts each month from contemporary religious publications, and a general survey of Christian activity.

The Heart of the Lesson

By

Rev. C. I. SCOFIELD.

The underlying thought of the International Sunday School Lessons for each month, is presented here in concise form by one of the most eminent Bible teachers of the day. He treats the lessons, not so much in the line of general application, as in the emphasis of a central truth in each one.

For the benefit of English friends, a number of sample copies have been consigned to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, who will send free a sample copy to anyone forwarding two penny stamps to cover postage.

One copy monthly will be sent post free for 5s. per annum.

Postal Orders to be made payable to MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The London Tent Campaign.

CLAPHAM.

THE Tent at Clapham was opened on May 16. A large number attended the first night, and Mr. LEONARD WEAVER with other helpers led the meetings until Sunday.

Sunday was a day of great blessing. In the afternoon Mr. HENRY VARLEY spoke upon the importance of Salvation, a large number of people expressing their determination to accept the salvation of Christ.

In the evening Mr. NEWCOMBE GOAD preached the Gospel very clearly. In response to an invitation from the platform, in the space of a few minutes more than twenty persons left their seats, kneeling on the sawdust round the platform, many in tears, seeking the Saviour. Who can tell, too, what spiritual good came to on-looking Christians who up to that time had not realized their responsibilities as followers of Christ?

One feature in this district is the lack of sufficient Christian workers to deal with inquirers. Rev. D. M. CAMERON might have been seen in one spot with quite a number of persons around him, dealing with them collectively, as they, in a most solemn manner, were repeating after him Isa. liii. 5, substituting the personal pronoun, "He was wounded for my transgressions; the chastisement of my peace was upon Him, and with his stripes I am healed." The Lord seemed to open many eyes, as the words were repeated.

Mr. BRADBROOK, who had been singing the Gospel, reports a number of Christians around him seeking to get a blessing to their own souls, that they might have the necessary power given to them to deal with those who are anxious. One little group showed five lads of the Carter Home professing to rejoice in their newly-found Saviour.

ILFORD.

In the same way we report from Ilford very much blessing during the week. On Monday and Tuesday Mr. VARLEY preached to an interesting crowd, large numbers standing in the tent to express their sense of need and blessing. Good times have been experienced since then. On Sunday the Brothers WEAVER commenced work. A crowd of men on the one side and women on the other side of the platform in the after meeting sought the Lord. They expressed their thankfulness, or, to use their own words, "astonishment" at the power of God manifest in the meeting.

EDMONTON.

Mr. VARLEY followed on Thursday at Edmonton and had a reaping time. The great feature at Edmonton this week has been an indication from Christians that they wished to seek the power of God for a more consecrated life themselves, they with the inquirers also standing in groups until late in the evening, speaking of the things of God. So the interest in the work progresses; all are indeed thankful for the manifestation of the power of the Spirit of God in working upon men's hearts.

OTHER TENTS

will be opened (D.V.):—Saturday, May 26, at Harlesden, near Willesden Junction Station; Wednesday, May 30, at Fulham; Saturday, June 2, at Stratford (West End Lane); Saturday, June 2, Wimbledon (Queen's Road).

The committee, workers, and friends earnestly ask the Lord's people to pray God's blessing on the work.

Rev. Joseph Martin, of the Congregational Church, Bingley, Yorks, writes that "Rev. JOHN JAMESON has just concluded a ten-days' mission there. The mission was made a great blessing to many. Attendances were very large, and the lecture on the last night was a most impressive service.

A correspondent writes:—"A fruitful mission was held at Winnal, near Winchester, on May 6-13, conducted by Mr. Edward Hurditch, of the Evangelistic Mission. Some of the unconverted have been brought to Christ, and others also have received blessing. The Bible readings and prayer meetings were instructive and much appreciated by the hearers. One poor man especially is full of joy at his new-found happiness, and the testimony of his wife is 'home is a happy one now.'"

A Mission conducted by Mr. William Olney in the Lighthouse Church, Bow, E., has just been concluded. The preparatory work of the church, extending over many months, has been crowned with abundant blessing. Many scholars in the Sunday school and a large number of young people have been led to Christ. Outsiders have been reached, the gambler and drunkard converted, and backsliders restored. The revival had commenced before the mission began.

Notices.

A correspondent would like particulars of a poem beginning—"O eyes that are weary, and hearts that are sore!" Also of another, opening—

"There's nought on earth to rest upon,
All things are changing here."

Inquiry is also made as to the publisher of "The Heart Book," translated from the German by Miss Clara Lowe many years ago.

Another correspondent would be glad to know where to find a correct and complete copy of Mary G. Brainard's hymn, "I know not what awaits me."

We have also an inquiry for some verses beginning—

"Faith is a very simple thing Though little understood."

Where are the lines to be found?

The Tramps Mission.—During last year many doors of usefulness were opened to this Mission. The walls of casual wards and cells, decked with text cards, Scriptural rolls, &c., bear silent testimony to the quiet, unostentatious ministry of the workers. Over 12,000 Bibles, Testaments, &c., were distributed in unions and lodging-houses, and received with eagerness by the homeless casuals, many of them having been seen afterwards reading their treasure by the roadside. Altogether 492 unions have now been furnished with literature from the Mission. Through the efforts of the committee, the Church Army Labour Homes have furnished many tramps with temporary shelter and useful employment, and provided an opportunity of recovering an honest independence. The hon. secretary of the Mission is Miss Susan E. Barnett, 2, Eldon Villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

Youths' Institute, Nottingham.

THIS Institute celebrated its seventh anniversary on Sunday week by special services in the Albert Hall, the scene of many successful Gospel campaigns, where our dear old friend Richard Weaver, Messrs. Henry Varley, Charles Inglis, Jas. Flanagan, E. P. Telford, and others have so mightily moved the masses, and reaped harvests of precious souls.

The services were very enthusiastic, and it was an inspiring sight to see so many young men brought under the influence of the Youths' Institute, many of them giving evidence of a new heart by a changed life. The orchestral band and male voice choir, under the careful and skilful training of Mr. A. Healey, who is also secretary of the institution, contributed largely to the success of the meetings.

The past year marked a new epoch in the history of the Institute, new and commodious premises being secured in Shepperdson Street, and a network of agencies organized for the moral, physical, and spiritual well-being of the young men. In addition to the work carried on in the new buildings, the Lecture Room of the Albert Hall is used every Sunday for special Gospel services. The whole work is splendidly organized.

Dr. Cuyler has well said: "There can be no substitute for living men, in whom Jesus lives by his personal Spirit." Church machinery is good, and mission organization necessary, but it is not self-driving; and, when driven, the godly man has the promise of the Spirit, and not the machine nor the organization. In this Institute it is the devoted, Spirit-filled life of the president, Mr. W. S. BUCKOLL, that is the chief factor in this work. He has gathered around him a number of godly business men, who bear unmistakably the stamp of his own individuality.

THOS. M. WINTLE.

Death of Rev. William Fleming.

MANY will hear with sorrow of the death of Rev. Wm. Fleming, LL.B., which took place on Sunday at Christ Church vicarage, Chislehurst. From 1845 to 1854, Mr. Fleming was in the 45th Regiment, and went through the first Boer war under Sir Harry Smith, being present at the battle of Boemplats. He was awarded the Kaffir war medal. On leaving the army, he went to Cambridge, where he won a scholarship at St. Catharine's College just as his brother, Canon Fleming, was leaving Magdalene College. He took a First Class in the Law Tripos in 1857, and was at once ordained by Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester, to the curacy of All Saints', Brighton. From 1858 to 1862 he was junior chaplain to the Home and Colonial Training Institute, and in the latter year he was appointed by the Bishop of London to the vicarage of Christ Church, Crouch End, where he stayed for ten years. In 1872 he became vicar of Christ Church, Chislehurst, and in 1880 added to his parochial work the office of secretary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. A consistent evangelist, Mr. Fleming discharged a faithful ministry, for which many are thankful to God.

Dr. Barnardo writes to say that he will be very grateful to those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who can send him old stamps, either used or unused, of all descriptions, excepting the common English stamp in present use—that is of no value. He adds:—"Old British Colonial stamps (used or unused), early unused English stamps, also old American stamps, and current foreign stamps from any European country will be thankfully received. Needless to say, South African stamps will be greatly prized. There is no need to cut the stamps from the envelopes, as many collectors prefer them on original envelopes or papers. My object for asking for these stamps is to turn them into money to support the great family under my care. Many collectors now write and ask me for sets of stamps, which we sell to great advantage; but no doubt there are many collectors who are readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and are in sympathy with God's work in my hands, who would spare some of their stock to help my children. All gifts of this kind will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to me, with name and address of the donor, to 18-26, Stepney Causeway, London, E."

Church of England.

A new church at Creswell, erected by the Duke of Portland, at a cost of £4,500, was opened for public service on Thursday by the Bishop of Southwell (Dr. Riddings).

In connection with the question of inculcating the young with Protestant principles, Mr. Edmund S. Hanbury recently called attention to the useful character of Trent College, which, he said, is rapidly becoming a power for maintaining Protestant education among the upper classes.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Chavasse) has promised to preach at the Cathedral Church on the afternoon of Sunday, June 3, when he will deliver his first sermon as Bishop of the Diocese. His first public appearance in this capacity will be at St. Luke's Church at a confirmation on the preceding afternoon.

Mr. J. A. Kensit recently attended a service at Retford Parish Church, and after the "elevation of the host," cried out, "This is idolatry and blasphemy." Mr. Kensit and some of the Wycliffe preachers were subsequently charged with riotous behaviour, and sentenced to pay fines. Notice of appeal was given.

Canon Rogers, who has held the vicariate of the parish of Great Yarmouth for nearly eight years, has accepted the living of Walcot, Bath. Among the works associated with Canon Rogers's name at Yarmouth are the establishment of several new mission churches, the restoration of the organ, and the building of new vestries at St. Nicholas' Church.

Congregational.

Mr. F. Lenwood, of Oxford, has been appointed to take charge of the Queen Street Congregational Church, Wolverhampton, vacant since the death of Dr. Berry, pending the election of a permanent pastor.

Baptist.

Rev. C. James Jackman, of Thornton Heath, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Dean Street Church, Liskeard, Cornwall, and hopes to commence his labours on June 3.

Rev. Allon Poole, whose health, four years ago, made a sea voyage necessary, has returned from New Zealand, and enters upon the pastorate of the Old Southgate Church the first Sunday in June. He has fully recovered.

In connection with the church at New Wells, Montgomery, mission services have lately been conducted by Miss Ingram, of Troedyrhiw. Since March last Mr. Withers has been labouring in the district as pastor. The cause, which has been in a low condition, shows evident signs of revival.

At the annual meetings of the Pioneer Mission, lately held at Ramsden Road Chapel, Balham, Rev. A. G. Brown preached in the afternoon, and a public meeting was subsequently held. The report stated that, in all, sixteen new Baptist churches had been instituted, fifteen others aided, and eighteen men introduced into the ministry. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, Mr. B. J. Greenwood, and Revs. E. A. Carter (the founder and hon. director), G. T. Bailey, and other friends.

In the Century Fund campaign, Rev. W. Cuff has addressed an enthusiastic meeting in the old Baptist Chapel, Twickenham Green (Rev. S. Jones), the gathering having been preceded by a prayer meeting. £85 16s. was promised. Dr. Clifford spoke at Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington (Rev. G. P. McKay), and although the church had recently expended £1,400 in renovations, &c., the promises, with amounts already received, reached £250.

Dr. Maclaren and Rev. W. Cuff took part in the opening services of Earlsfield Church. Mr. Cuff referred to the fact that three years ago he preached the opening sermon in the iron building, and went on to say that one thing was now needed by the church—not money, nor social status, nor intellectual greatness, though all of them might come in the train, but what was supremely needed was the fulfilment of the words of the risen Lord, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you."

Methodist.

The Liverpool Synod of the Wesleyan Methodist Church has acceded to the request of Rev. Charles Garrett to recommend him to the ensuing conference at Burslem as a supernumerary, after fifty-one years of labour, of which twenty-eight have been spent in Liverpool. By a standing vote the Synod placed on record its high appreciation of Mr. Garrett's services.

The list of applications for the appointment of Primitive Methodist ministers beyond the three years' limit is now published, and is longer than in any previous year. For some time past the tendency to relax the three years' limit has been increasing in the Primitive Methodist denomination, until this year the number of such cases has reached nearly 200.

At the anniversary of the United Methodist Deaconess Institute, the secretary, Rev. T. J. Cope, stated that the thirty-five deaconesses included evangelists, district visitors and nurses, and that 106 special missions had been conducted. Pimlico Church, which had been placed in the charge of the Committee, was prospering both in attendance and membership.

At the last Wesleyan Conference a committee was appointed to ascertain whether some economy could not be effected in the working of the colleges by a policy of centralization. The committee are not prepared to recommend the giving up of any one of the four colleges, but to relieve the strain they suggest the appointment to each college of an additional classical tutor, and in the case of Didsbury, in the near future, one ministerial tutor less.

Presbyterian.

The amalgamation of the congregations of Westbourne Grove and Notting Hill is under consideration. The former occupies an unfavourable position, while in the case of the latter further extension is required, but the site, being small, does not admit of this being carried out.

Society of Friends.

A mission for the deepening of religious life, conducted by William Hobson, has been held at Swansea. The attendance throughout was good. At the ten Bible-readings much blessing was given; and in the evening meetings several young people gave their hearts to God. Swansea Friends are encouraged. The new meeting-house gives much satisfaction. A lecture on "George Fox: His Times and His Missions," was well attended.

At a meeting held in the barn at the Manor House, Northfield, near Birmingham, attended by over 100 members and associate members of the Society of Friends and about seventy Sunday-school teachers, the chairman, George Cadbury, spoke on the importance of work among the young, and Mrs. Cadbury gave an address specially to the teachers, on the best methods of teaching, and on the necessity of striving to win the scholars under their care to Christ.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. THOMAS CHARKE, who had been since 1894 pastor of Horbury Congregational Church, Notting Hill Gate.—Rev. B. SACKETT, pastor for the last twenty years of Ebenezer Chapel, Watney Street.—Rev. J. BARTON DODD, Congregational minister, of Dunmow, Essex.—At Stavanger, PETER SUNDE, aged seventy-eight years, a lifelong Friend by conviction, although not in membership, and an attender of Friends' meetings, greatly honoured and beloved.—Aged seventy-nine, SAMUEL HARE, of Darlington. He was for a long period a minister of Society of Friends.—Mr. JOHN D. BAINBRIDGE, second son of Mr. G. B. Bainbridge, of Espley Hall, Northumberland. He had joined the Imperial Yeomanry, and was the first of his company to fall in connection with General Hunter's recent action beyond the Vaal River, in South Africa. —At Portaferry, Mrs. DUNLOP, wife of Rev. Samuel Dunlop, Methodist Minister.—At Holywood, Mrs. Devers, widow of Rev. R. Devers, Methodist Minister, aged ninety years.—At St. Paul's, Minnesota, U.S.A., Mr. THOS. WORKMAN, of Belfast, aged fifty-six years.—Dr. WM. WARBURTON, Dean of Elphin, a devout and earnest Christian minister, who lived under seven bishops, aged ninety-four years.—Rev. A. P. WARING, late Rector of Upper Cumber, co. Derry.—Mr. HEATH MILLS, the esteemed musical director of the Wesleyan West London Mission, who had laboured in connection with the organization from its inception. Mr. Mills was walking in a country road, with his son, when, consequent on an attack of heart disease, he suddenly fell, and expired.

Personalia.

Rev. SYDNEY JONES, late of the East London Tabernacle, has returned to England, after a stay of three months in Spain and Portugal.

Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, of Brighton, who returned from South Africa on Saturday, is lying ill at Shirley Hospital, Southampton, suffering from an attack of typhoid fever.

Mr. JAS. MONTGOMERY, at present general secretary to the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A., has resigned his position in order to devote himself more entirely to Evangelistic work.

Rev. HOWARD M. WEBB-PEPLOE, curate of St. Paul's, Onslow Square, has been accepted for service as Army Chaplain, and will proceed to South Africa almost immediately.

Rev. J. D. KILBURN expects to be in Finland during June and July, and requests that during that time all letters, &c., sent to him, be sent to Sordavala, Finland, instead of St. Petersburg.

After fifty years' devoted service, Rev. F. W. BOURNE, one of the representative men of the Bible Christian Connexion, will ask to be superannuated at the ensuing Conference. His place as editor will require to be filled.

Rev. WALTER BRADBURY, missioner, is holding Bible readings and giving addresses in Montreux and Vevey, Switzerland. On a recent Sunday the chaplain was ill, and Mr. Bradbury officiated in the English Church. There were 120 communicants.

We regret to hear that, as a result of a bicycle accident, Rev. E. A. STUART has broken his arm. The occurrence prevented Mr. Stuart from speaking at the recent Presbyterian Missionary meeting at Queen's Hall, and Rev. F. S. Webster kindly took the place of his brother minister, at short notice.

Rev. C. S. MASON, one of the best known ministers on the Pacific coast, who is a delegate to the forthcoming C.E. Convention in London, will be free to accept engagements for evangelistic work during his stay in this country. He may be addressed care of Messrs. Cook and Son, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

Rev. ARTHUR WOOD, who at present has charge of the New North Road Mission, London, N., has accepted the invitation of the committee of Liverpool Mission to become Mr. Garrett's successor, and there is little doubt that the Wesleyan Conference, when it meets this summer, will officially confirm the invitation.

Mr. G. W. POPE, of the North Africa Mission, writes from Algiers respecting the missionary needs of the country, especially in the large province of Oran, which comprises a third of Algeria, and which he describes as without a missionary. Mr. Pope desires to rent a hall as a centre for evangelistic work. He may be addressed 17, Rue Daguerre, Algiers.

Notes from New York.

REV. C. M. SHELDON, of Topeka, Kansas, has received 5,000dols. as his profits for the week during which he edited The Capital. The Indian famine sufferers received 1,000dols. of this sum, and the remainder was distributed among local and other religious and educational operations.

The British steamship Quito left this afternoon for Bombay, with 200,000 bushels of grain, purchased with funds collected by the Christian Herald, the proprietor, Dr. Louis Klopsch, having already proceeded to India to superintend the distribution of this food. The vessel was chartered by the United States Government. The services this afternoon included addresses by Rear-Admiral Erben, Dr. Theodore Cuyler, Rev. A. C. Dixon, Rev. Richard Winsor, of India, and Rev. S. T. Willis, of this city.

A Committee of One Hundred, recently formed to assist in relieving the famine sufferers in India, has held a meeting at the Chamber of Commerce, at which Mr. William E. Dodge was elected permanent chairman, and Bishop Potter gave an interesting address. An Executive Committee of fourteen members was appointed, with Dr. Chamberlain as chairman. Mr. Dodge said that he had two subscriptions of 1,000dols. each to the fund to turn in.

The Three Papal Roses.

THIS is the time of roses, at least in Southern Europe, and it has roused the fantasy of the Papal Church to moralize on the subject. The Pope thinks of his golden rose, and his officials think of Papal ones. The following is the posy which Monsignor de Ségur offers to the world for acceptance, as reported in the Labaro:—

"I offer you a bouquet composed of three beautiful roses. My first rose is love of the Pope, the Vicar of Jesus Christ. My second rose is love of the Holy Virgin; a beautiful rose my second one is, like a true child of God. My third rose, all beautiful and vermilion, is love of the Holy Mass. The perfume of the first rose is faith, the humble submission of faith. It is pure and immaculate, because the Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman faith, of which the Pope is the sovereign depository, is immaculate. Let us plant very deep in our hearts and in our spirit this magnificent flower, that a profound love for the Vicar of Jesus Christ may be the first characteristic of our life and of our Christian piety. This I am able to affirm without fear—devotion to the Pope is a sign of predestination."

The editor of the Labaro, Rev. Ugo Janni, of San Remo, one of Count Campello's pastors, makes this short pithy comment on this rhapsody:—"Very good! Thus the Pope has the first place, the Madonna the second, and Jesus Christ, as supposed to be manufactured in the Mass, the third."

Notes & Comments

WE would ask the many kind friends who send their gifts to us, to state explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied. We also beg to remind them that our list is made up for the printers about midday on Monday, so that gifts received later will appear in the succeeding week's number of The Christian.

Speaking at Liverpool a few days ago, Mr. Long, M.P., assured the Licensed Victuallers' Defence League Conference that the Royal Commission on Licensing had "killed Local Veto and established the principle of compensation for licences," and he is credited with having added:

> Was it likely that, as licensed victuallers yielded £35,000,000 annually to the national revenue, the Government would be foolish enough to kill the goose that laid the golden eggs?

Mr. Long, of course, found it convenient to ignore the force behind the Government, the power of educated public opinion, which is rapidly being made up as to the costliness to the nation of the revenue from the drink traffic, with its dread accompaniments of poverty and crime; and as to the injustice of requiring the sober citizen to compensate the manufacturer of the drunkard, the pauper, and the criminal.

Dr. Parker made the interesting announcement last Thursday that upon that day he completed twenty-six years of the Thursday noon-day service at the City Temple. This is a very remarkable record—indeed, it is entirely unique. Of late years, the Doctor has been most emphatically evangelical and evangelistic in his preaching, and his audiences have never been larger. Men always predominate in his congregations, and it is impossible for them to listen to such remarkable preaching without great good being effected. Dr. Parker is now seventy years of age, but his vigour seems in no way abated.

An important debate occurred in Parliament on Monday evening, raised by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., upon the abuse of the voluntary schools and training colleges of this country, and the extent to which these institutions are used for stamping out the faith of the Reformation, and as a means of Romanistic propaganda. It was stated as undeniable that thousands of Nonconformist children are forced to attend teaching which violates the principles held dear by their parents. The time was not an opportune one to bring the matter before the House, and the most was made of this by Mr. Smith's opponents; nevertheless, some strong and influential speakers supported him. The evil is one which, if ignored or flippantly treated by the authorities, will, ere long, arouse an irresistible storm of popular indignation.

A noteworthy action was taken at the annual meeting last week of the Church Reform League. It adopted a draft bill affirming the power of the two Convocations of Canterbury and York to reform their constitution, and to prepare schemes for the formation of Houses of Laymen in connection with them, not merely, as at present, for purposes of consultation only, but with full joint executive powers. The Bishop of London has now become a convert to the proposed reform, and a number of the bishops, including those of Salisbury and Rochester, who may be regarded as representing a somewhat advanced section, have thrown themselves into the movement. If successful, it will give to the lay element in the Establishment a fair and proper share in the government and administration of the Church.

Those who regard with growing dislike and suspicion the actions and attitude of the extreme High Church party (and who that has the interests of true religion at heart, does not entertain that feeling as to the sacerdotal movement?) may find, in the satisfactory results which have followed the adoption of a similar joint clerical and lay constitution of the Irish Church Synod, a ground for assurance that such a reformed Convocation as that which it is now intended to ask Parliament to sanction, would find the lay representation of incalculable value in its deliberations.

Evangelical Churchmen are waiting to see the attitude of the bishops towards those clergymen who propose once more this year to observe the illegal festival of Corpus Christi. This feast, as is well known, is a purely Roman Catholic celebration, but for years past it has been the chosen day of the Ritualists for emphasizing the doctrine of the Real Presence. At St. Alban's, Holborn, the "Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament" has met for a number of years on Corpus Christi day, and the performance has resembled in nearly every particular what one may see in a Roman church. Will their lordships be firm and forbid this illegality? It is in their power so to do; is it not also their duty?

When the bishops recently forbade incense and the carrying about of lights as part of Divine Service, we were informed that the clergy of St. Alban's, Holborn, had "submitted" to the order. The "submission" has apparently been short-lived, for a correspondent who visited the church last Thursday (Ascension Day) found that the old ritual had returned. Incense was freely used, "Gospel" lights were carried about, and part of the Communion service was omitted. Is the Bishop of London secretly approving this sort of thing? He must know that it still exists.

Day by day the leading laymen in the Roman body are rushing into print, and, in regard to most of them, the Pope must be earnestly wishing to be saved from his friends. The latest of these, Mr. W. H. Mallock, the novelist, in dealing with "Doctrine and Doctrinal Disruption," has produced a volume which, a critical contemporary suggests, must have been written and in the press before the excommunication of Dr. Mivart, as the writer seemingly holds similar opinions to those which proved so offensive to Cardinal Vaughan. Mr. Mallock, in contradistinction to the Jesuit Father Clarke's dictum (that if the Pope proclaims a new doctrine, it is one which Christ entrusted to his disciples during the forty days, but which has not before been made known outside the Apostles and their descendants, the Popes), asserts that "it is the world of ordinary believers that has imposed its beliefs on the priests." In other words, the laymen invent the dogma and enforce it upon the priests, who, in their turn, impose it upon an infallible Pope! Verily, if the blind lead the blind, shall not both fall into the ditch?

Another promising candidate for excommunication, Mr. Richard Bagot, recently received a gentle warning from the Vatican upon the publication of some of his articles in Il Popolo Romano. In the current number of the National Review, Mr. Bagot, however, refers to "the extent to which the art of equivocation is practised at Rome," and alludes to the "cynical falsity" of the Vatican, and the time > when in a happy hour this country finally emancipated herself from the political dominion of the Papacy, and successfully triumphed over the insidious attempts on the part of the latter to crush her at the hands of foreign foes.

Not content with this, Mr. Bagot again asserts that Romanism is not only making no progress in Great Britain and her colonies, but has during the last few years been losing ground. We may reasonably ask how the writer of such words can remain in the Roman Communion, when in face of the Romish movement for the "conversion of England," he can suggest that

> Those who have the welfare of the British Empire at heart may well pray, when they look beyond the English Channel at the plight to which those countries are reduced, the internal politics and intellectual social life of which have been poisoned by the miasma of clericalism, that England may never again submit to its yoke.

Some thoughtful words spoken by Canon Scott Holland, in a recent sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral, define clearly the frame of mind in which the progress of events during the unhappy war should find and leave us—that of thankfulness to God, and a full acceptance of the huge responsibility of our position as a nation.

> Victory releases us from the cruelty of panic, and it sets us free to be generous, kindly, warm-hearted, and forgiving. . . . It prepares us for a better day. We are now strong with the dreadful responsibility of strength. . . . We are Englishmen, and we begin to yearn for the peace and liberty which are the true English heritage. In our thankfulness to God, we should pledge ourselves to remember that we are fighting those who are yet to be brethren in a common life, free men in a free commonwealth, with equal rights and honour. In that memory bitterness and anger and evil speaking would die away, and we should pray together that never again should Dutch and English need the agony of another Mafeking.

Still, we have to distinguish between the ambitious and intriguing Governments and the people who have been the victims of their machinations.

The English people are slow to move, but when they do move they are in danger of moving too quickly. The pent-up feelings of many months have found almost riotous expression over the relief of Mafeking. No patriot could help being jubilant at the release of General Baden-Powell and his brave men. But the nation must mind and not lose its head over the affair. A proposal is on foot to erect a "Hall of Heroes" by way of commemorating the present war. It is suggested that an immense monument of remembrance to the soldiers who have fallen should be built by the public. A number of leading men have endorsed the idea. But one leading man wisely replied :

I heartily approve the scheme, providing the names, not only of soldiers, but of philanthropists, firemen, lifeboatmen, nurses, and all who devote their lives to the service of their fellow-men are recorded.

Quite so ! A nation's heroes are not always found on the battlefield. A scheme of this kind needs considering when the people's heads are cool, else it is likely to be a very one-sided affair.

The rapid development of militarism in Great Britain under the pressure and influence of recent events may well cause anxiety to those who day by day pray for peace, and who believe that the existence of large armaments tends to bring about great wars. A special value, therefore, attaches to reliable and careful studies of the effect of militarism upon national life, and it is noteworthy that a capable writer in a monthly contemporary goes strongly against the idea of the advantage of service in the army as a moral force. With much reason the writer asks :—

Why should we suppose that a life on the one hand of monotonous and mindless drill, with intervals of apathy, and on the other hand of desperate effort to destroy human life in some visionary and uncomprehended quarrel, can make any man better than he would have become under the normal human discipline of toil and trouble ?

A Socialist writer—who, unlike many of his colleagues, deals calmly and thoughtfully with pressing questions affecting the welfare of the working classes—has found only too much ground for a forcible attack upon the "cruel cheapness" which is one of the most potent causes of much of the poverty around us. He urges, and the thought deserves the careful consideration of every Christian man and woman, that an article is cheap or dear, not according to the price paid for it by the purchaser, but according to its cost.

Looked at in this light, the matches which can be obtained at 2½d. per 800 are not cheap, but dear, because to that price must be added the cost of the boys driven to crime by neglect, the girls driven to the streets, the children dying from preventible diseases in the slums, and a host of other things, to say nothing of the cost of a fraction of the Cabinet Ministers' time spent in arguing that "you cannot interfere with the freedom of contract," or "tamper with the economic balance between producer and consumer."

Mr. W. J. Corbet, M.P., has just published a pamphlet, entitled "Lunacy—the Rising Tide," in which he utters some plain and unpleasant truths. An experience of thirty years in connection with the Irish Lunacy Department gives weight to his words. He shows that there has been a real increase in the number of the insane since the year 1872, the increase being at the rate of one per thousand. Mr. Corbet considers that the chief cause of continued and augmented madness is heredity. Seventy-five per cent. of the cases can be accounted for in this way. Their ancestral stock is corrupt, and the progeny is made to suffer for it. These facts call for serious consideration. Far too many people become parents who have no right to deliberately increase the number of the afflicted. Upon the matter of parentage there is grave and crying need for some radical and distinctly Christian words to be spoken. How few who marry regard themselves as agents for perpetuating "a godly seed" !

We have often urged the wisdom of treating offenders with less severity, and it is pleasant to find the Recorder, at the opening of the Central Criminal Court a few days ago, not only calling attention to a steady diminution in crime, and to the less serious nature of the offences with which prisoners were charged, but also attributing the striking improvement to the fact that justice now is more frequently tempered with mercy. Seeing that the Central Criminal Court has jurisdiction over 6,000,000 people, and at times over part of the population of the home counties also, this pronouncement may be taken as decisive ; and it is encouraging to all those who have for long protested against sentences which literally closed the door of hope against the erring.

Many persons have found in the Agnosticism of such men as Mr. Herbert Spencer an immense obstacle to their own belief, while others have been puzzled to account for the fact of so shrewd a man assuming towards religion the attitude he has. A flood of light has just been shed upon this matter by Mr. Hector MacPherson, who writes an appreciation of Mr. Spencer—the man and his work. Mr. MacPherson says :—

In conversation I once asked Mr. Spencer if, like George Eliot, he had first accepted the orthodox creed, then doubted, and finally rejected it. His reply was that to him it never appealed. It was not a case of acceptance and rejection : his mind lay outside of it from the first.

The whole secret is exposed in that last sentence. We know now the exact value of Mr. Spencer's criticism of religion. It is the criticism of a man who admits that his mind never entered into the subject he deals with. It is a pity this information was not given to the world earlier.

A similar admission was made by the late Mr. Charles Darwin. In the latter part of his biography will be found certain letters which passed between him and the president of a celebrated American University. Mr. Darwin, in response to the president's request, declared that his own study of religion had not been sufficiently serious to warrant him in giving an opinion upon it. Yet, in a later letter, after he had been pressed to state his whereabouts, he wrote : "I suppose I must be classed as an Agnostic." A man of less eminence would have been promptly and sharply pulled up, had he ventured upon such an amazing piece of contradiction.

It is well that these facts should be widely circulated, so that the world may know that these eminent scientists did not reject religion because they had, through study, discovered its falseness. On the contrary, according to their own confession, their minds lay outside of it ; and yet they thought it a wise and honourable thing to pronounce upon it !

God is sometimes hidden from his people—He is never absent from them. It is important to mark the difference between the terms ; yet in the hours of grief and overwhelming sorrow we are apt to mistake the one for the other. Clouds pass over the face of the soul as they pass along the face of the sky ; but the sun, although hidden, is ever shining. The office fulfilled by clouds in the physical world is a merciful one—nor the earth nor men could bear uninterrupted sunshine. One day we shall see that the temporary hidings of God's face behind the clouds were not capricious, but most kind and needful for our life. But whether realized or not, He is always with us : clouds only conceal ; they do not banish Him.

*A Cruel Wrong to Childhood.

TESTIMONY OF BARMEN AND PUBLICANS.

"'THAT'S THE WAY DRUNKARDS ARE MADE,' said a publican to me the other day, as a child of eight or nine tottered out of a bar with a pint jug full, that his mother had sent him to fetch. I had dropped in," writes a Westminster Gazette representative, "to find out his opinion about serving children with liquor, and he quite agreed that it was a sin and a shame. 'But what are we to do ?' he added ; 'we can't afford to lose our custom. You see, the parents would only send the children to the house round the corner.'"

LOTS OF SUCH CUSTOMERS. "Now, you watch those children. They'll drink half that beer before they get home, and their mother will scold me for not giving a good pint, and I've given nearly a quart," said the bar-tender the other day, referring to two little girls of six and eight, thinly clad, who came for a pint of beer. The reporter did watch the little ones. They had scarcely got outside the door when the one that carried the tin can lifted it to her lips and took a draught. Then her companion enjoyed a few swallows. A little further on they entered a tenement house half-way, and both again took a sip. "I have lots of such customers," said the bar-tender, when the reporter returned to the saloon. "Half the children who come here drink. Few carry a full pint home. Sometimes two or three come in together, and if you'll watch them you'll hear one begging the one who carries the can for a sip. We must sell it, however, when their parents send for it. We are bound to do so. Business is business. We don't keep a temperance shop."—New York Herald.

A PUBLICAN'S VIEW.—Seldom have better arguments been advanced against selling drink to children, than those of "Licensee," in a letter to the Manchester Guardian. "Having been connected with the sale of drink for many years, it has long been clear to me," he says, "that children should not be sent for intoxicating drink. My experience is that a child of any age is likely to taste a little on the way. Much of the drink carried by children is consumed by drunken mothers and their cronies, and children are frequently kept from school to trot for gin, rum, and ale."

UNFIT PLACES FOR CHILDREN.—"Licensee" further says : "I have a good deal of sympathy with some of my brothers in the trade who pay two rents, although the money can ill be spared, rather than bring their children up at the shop ; and I am not altogether averse to that large number of working-men who fetch the drink themselves, rather than send their children for it. Average men and women are capable of bad words and coarse talk, and it is next to impossible to keep them within the bounds of polite language while they are drinking. As long as children can buy intoxicants freely for anybody and everybody, so long will some of the worst features of our present licensing system continue."

Such testimony, and from such a source, should surely dispel all the doubts of those who have hesitated to support the Children's Bill.

* From "Facts and Opinions on the Sale of Drink to Children." (1d. Band of Hope Union, 66 Old Bailey, E.C.)

Our National Responsibility.

DURING the past six or seven months we have shown ourselves to be a nation capable of doing great things.

We have transported 200,000 men 7,000 miles within seven months, for our national honour, pouring out blood and treasure like water. What may we not do for those sixty to eighty millions of our fellow-subjects in India, many of whom are our fellow-Christians, beleaguered as they now are by famine, pestilence and plague? It is not only our duty, but our interest to haste to the rescue. Bubonic plague and cholera are following hard upon the heels of famine. Are not these dread judgments—the SWORD, FAMINE, and PESTILENCE—upon us because of our national sins? To mention but two—(1) Our licensed drink traffic—that Moloch, to which annually thousands of our little children are made to pass through the fires of destitution and death—to say nothing of the mothers, ill-used, beaten, and done to death through this accursed national idol. And as if the desolation wrought at home were not enough, our fire-water is introduced to native races in Africa and elsewhere, by which they are turned into demons; dying in their drunkenness, ruined, body and soul, by our British-made, British-licensed spirits, and all for revenue!

(2) Our Government-grown and Government-manufactured opium is forced upon the Chinese, and now systematically imported, by which millions have been, and are being, ensnared to their temporal and eternal undoing, all for the sake of revenue! These national crimes are surely enough to call down upon us the just judgment of God.

Famine, pestilence and war are indescribably terrible, and would be appallingly more so, were we personally involved in them; but how infinitely greater would be our national degradation and ruin were our long-suffering God to utter the awful sentence:

"BRITAIN IS JOINED TO HER IDOLS—let her alone." Happily, in these judgments there is room for hope; were God despairing of us He would cast us off as good for nothing, and leave us in our sins. But no! He is taking trouble with us. It is for us to see his hand of love and mercy in these chastisements, to kiss the rod, and Him who has appointed it, recognising that this is the day of our merciful visitation.

We do well to provide material comforts and spiritual consolation for the wounded and dying on the field of battle, food for the famine-stricken, and to do what in us lies against the recurrence of such calamities. But if we would enjoy the continued favour and blessing of God, if we would esteem it our highest privilege to be used by Him to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth, it behoves us now to humble ourselves under his mighty hand, to repent of our national sins, and to turn away from them that He might turn away his judgments from us.

For the past 300 years God has treated us as if we were his peculiar people, blessing us with an open Bible, and numberless other distinguishing favours; placing us at the head of the nations, fitting us to be his servants to the feeble and down-trodden peoples of the earth. If, therefore, we can transport 200,000 men with the munitions of war to South Africa in a few months, ungrudgingly, at an enormous cost, largely for the honour of the country, what might we not do for the glory of God and our Lord Jesus Christ in the spread of that Kingdom, which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, were we inspired with like zeal, our hearts right with Him, and all that He has entrusted us with at his disposal?

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Mr. ROBERT MCCANN sends us the following from Mr. G. W. BLAIR, of Godhra, Panch Mals:—

"Every morning a crowd of 500 or 600 people gathers before my door. Some of them have that hungry, woe-begone expression which we see now wherever we go. We have a little open space inside our house where we can seat about 250 people packed like herrings in a barrel. When we open the gate the crowd rushes in. The majority are clad in rags, with bodies filthy and dirty. Amongst them we have Bheels, Kollis, and other Jungle people. Some are blind, some lame, some with foul ulcers. Every morning we gather such a crowd in two small relays into the seats, and when we get them quieted we preach to them and tell them of God's great love in Christ Jesus. In this way the Gospel has been sounded in the ears of hundreds who seem to listen to it with eagerness. Already the Name of our Master and the story of his life, death, &c., are known by hundreds who would otherwise never have heard. We distribute to each person a tin of roasted Indian corn. To-day we received an orphan called Sonee. She is a dear little girl of about eighteen months. Her father and mother died recently, and her aunt brought her to us as she said the child would only die if we did not take her in. We took her, of course."

A TERRIBLE PICTURE.

Writing from Poona under date May 10, Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE says "The consignment of famine foods will prove of great value. Meanwhile, the terrible calamity advances with deadly strides. The weather is at its hottest now; the sky is a great, glowing, dazzling vault, the earth a charred and scorching desert. Streams and water-stores, supposed to be perennial, have dried up. The destruction of cattle has been beyond all precedent. The number of persons on Government relief has exceeded 5,500,000, and is increasing. The Raipur District, in the Central Provinces, reports 500,000 on relief out of a population of 1,500,000. Men of substance, who never handled a spade before nor carried a hod-basket, are now working as coolies on relief.

"I wish I could picture to your readers the gaunt forms, the drawn faces, the feeble voices, the appealing eyes, and the starving multitudes who stagger hither and thither ready to die! The terrors of cholera are now being added to those of famine. At Godhra, in Gujarat, in one day 150 corpses were removed from the relief works. Other parts of the famine districts are also affected, and the hurried flight of the survivors from the scenes of such fearful mortality is likely to spread the disease far and wide.

"Our missionaries are working heroically. Gladly relinquishing their much needed and hardly-earned rest in the hot weather, eschewing all thought of personal danger, embracing the sorest discomfort, they are battling with death. Let it be remembered that the rains alone will not relieve the need. What can the rains alone do for a debilitated people, just saved from starvation, without farming implements, cattle, or seed to sow? What India wants now is money to relieve and save the sufferers, to clothe their nakedness, to supply them with coverings (for the nights are raw and chill, and exposure makes them liable to dysentery and and other sicknesses), and to furnish them, when the rains come, with cattle, and implements, and seed."

The following account of affairs at Medak, Nizam's Dominion, is by Rev. C. W. POSNETT, of the Wesleyan Mission in that town:—"Our famine camp has now no water, no food, no grass; we are blinded by the hot sandstorms, and scorched by the blazing sun, while smallpox is raging around and amongst us. Everywhere you turn you are met by this loathsome scourge, and even among the wealthy the usual wedding or harvest song has given place to the cry of famishing children and to the dirge of the dead. A messenger has just come from Burgapully seeking help for one of our oldest members and his little children, who are in the last stages of starvation—or speak. In another hamlet, whilst stealing some tamarinds, a starving father fell from the tree and died. To recoup the theft the owner has seized the widow and children, and will hold them till the debt and the exorbitant interest be paid. Around Waltour we found the children eating the flowers of the jungle arack plant, and thus producing a semi-intoxicated stupor. The lady doctors wrote from their medical touring camp:—'We have just seen a band of little out-caste children tottering from door to door with their small earthen pots—they had scarcely a vestige of clothing, and the skin just hung from their skeleton forms. Wailing and beating themselves, they begged for food. One woman, standing on tiptoe, and dreading the polluting touch of these out-caste little ones, poured to them the water in which she had washed her rice, and in gratitude for such miserable stuff the little crowd fell at her feet in the dust. We are building a home for the forty destitute children whom we have rescued.' Even when the rains come, where will the Christian out-caste find seed to sow, or cattle to plough, or food for himself and his children till the Christmas harvest is cut?"

SUPPLIES FOR THE FAMINE.

Last week, as already announced, we sent out another consignment of foods, freight free (through the kindness of the P. and O. Company), per s.s. Parramatta, as follows:—Thirty cases of biscuits (Messrs. Carr and Co., Carlisle); 118 cases ditto (second donation from the same firm, half of which was contributed by their employés); twelve cases of biscuits (Miss Carr); thirty cases of Quaker oats; nine cases of malted milk (Messrs. Horlick and Co.); one case of Nestlé's food and one case of milk (contributed by three ladies in Geneva); two cases of Allen and Hanbury's milk, and a quantity of food paid for by a gentleman in Gibraltar.

The contribution of one ton of Amylaceous food from Messrs. Crawford and Son, of Belfast, was not ready for shipment last week, but will, we expect, go per s.s. Arabia on the 7th prox., together with any other goods that may come in.

As an instance of the value of milk in India at this time, a correspondent writes that an official in charge of the relief operations in one district told him that no less than twelve children were born in one night; no milk was obtainable in the villages, and, there being no maternal nourishment, they all died.

ILLUSTRATED FAMINE LEAFLETS.

We have gone to press with a second large edition of this leaflet. It is being extensively used in all parts of the country at meetings held in the interests of the Famine Relief Funds, and is also well adapted for private distribution.

These leaflets can be obtained from our publishers at the following rates, post free: 100, 2s.; 500, 8s. 6d.; 1,000, 15s. They will be found very useful for distribution, either privately or at meetings, and cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of all into whose hands they may come.

In response to the recent offer of our correspondent, "M.," to contribute £2 towards the expense of erecting a small orphanage, if nine others would give similarly, we have received that number of donations for the purpose, and shall be glad if our correspondent will remit, according to her kind promise.

The Union Hall Mission.—A steady continuous evangelistic work is maintained at the Queen's Park Hall and Union Hall in connection with this mission. The earnest sympathetic preaching of the Gospel has reached the conscience and touched the heart of many an indifferent listener, and while conversions are not severely tabulated, decisions for Christ have been witnessed, the penitent carefully watched and tended, and the truth of their profession confirmed. The continuance of the work calls for prayer and patience, as there is a possibility of its progress being hampered by reason of the insufficiency of its resources. The address of the hon. treasurer is Mr. William Holmes, 156, Alexandra Road, N.W.

The Twenty-first Bouquet.

OH, Auntie, what a clearance! What will Ferguson say?" And Marion Lester, standing in the doorway of the conservatory at Easlaw Manor glanced from the rifled plants to the basket full of bloom, which her aunt was carrying away in triumph.

Mrs. Laurie smiled at her niece with a very untroubled face. "He won't like it, dear; but Ferguson and I understand each other. He has found out that I must have my own way where the hospital is concerned. That is the Master's work, you see, and in it I allow no interference, not even from my gardener! I must confess to a little extravagance to-day," she added, "but the matron pleaded for twenty bouquets, come and help me to arrange them, darling." And the two were soon busily employed in grouping and tying up the sweet-faced flowers that were going forth with their eloquent message of a Father's love to weary sufferers.

Marion Lester had recently come on a visit to her aunt, and her keen girlish observation had already found ample scope in contrasting the home she had left with the one in which she was now a guest. Her mother and Mrs. Laurie were sisters, and there might have been consequent similiarity of tastes and pursuits; but, years before, they had taken different paths in life; or rather, Mrs. Lester had simply continued to "turn to her own way," whilst Mrs. Laurie whilst yet a young girl had heard the Saviour's voice, and with her whole heart had chosen Him as her Guide; and so her course had been ever upward.

The married life of each had been one of material prosperity, Mrs. Lester's, however, seeming the richer in sources of enjoyment, for she had bright, clever children, and her kind husband still lived; whilst Mrs. Laurie was left a widow in a beautiful but childless home. And yet people wondered, and Marion most of all, at the sunny peace and keen enjoyment of life on the part of the bereaved woman, as compared with the unrestful and careworn countenance of her apparently more favoured sister. It was the OLD PARABLE IN A MODERN SETTING.

"He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again," &c., and Marion Lester was laying the object lesson to heart.

"Twenty-one bouquets," she announced at length, "that is one too many. I will put this one in a glass on your toilet-table, Auntie," and she selected a lovely Gloire de Dijon nestling amidst sprays of maidenhair. "No, let them all go," Mrs. Laurie said, adding with a smile, "there will be a needier niche than my dressing-table to receive No. 21."

A needier niche indeed! Just a hovel without the very commonest comforts of life, or even of its necessaries; and on a wretched shake-down in one corner lay a man who had, it seemed, come to the end of life, and found it an utter failure.

It was his own fault, but none the less sad for that. Ralph Winston was only reaping what he had recklessly sown, and the harvest was a bitter one. He had practically, though not in the eye of the law, killed a good wife by his cruel neglect; his children had left their comfortless home, and gone out into the world; and now, his own days shortened by intemperance, he was slowly dying, being only kept from the workhouse by a small allowance from one of his sons and the kindness of a neighbour through whom it was administered.

Nothing could seem much more cheerless and hopeless than poor Ralph's lot; and yet in the background there were the prayers, offered long ago, of a mother and a wife, both now in heaven; and along the track of that poor lost sheep the footsteps of the patient, pitiful, unwearying "Good Shepherd." And in that soul so stained by sin there had been of late strange stirrings and questionings, very troublesome to his own conscience. He would gladly have driven them away by intoxicants; but that was impossible, for he was now too weak to go out, and his neighbour was steady in her refusal to bring him any.

On the same day that we have seen Mrs. Laurie and her niece arranging their flowers for the hospital, poor old Ralph Winston, lying so helpless and hopeless in his dreary room, thought of himself as a child at his mother's knee, and of the lessons he learned there, only to spurn and forget them in later life; then of his wife, of her brave, patient, forgiving spirit through all his ill-usage, and of her dying words of holy triumph.

Then he thought of the God he had so long defied; began to wonder if there really were no God, as, in his foolish heart he had so often said; and finally, with a sardonic smile at the absurdity of the idea, he determined to seek a sign. "I feel a bit drowsy, so I'll just settle down for a sleep if this pain will let me; and then, if when I waken there should be a flower on that table, I'll believe that poor Mary was right, and that there is a God that cares."

But I am afraid that the challenge ended with an oath as he sank into a troubled slumber.

Was he still dreaming? He rubbed his eyes to assure himself to the contrary, and gazed with a very wide-open stare at his grimy sheet; for on it, close to his hands, there lay a Gloire de Dijon rose, with its veil of maidenhair! And then everything became confused, for he could only see the flower through the mist of tears; and with the tears—the first that he had shed for years—there came to the old man's heart the solemn conviction that God was in the place, and there was a low, penitent cry—"God be merciful to me a sinner."

How did it all happen? Very simply, for I am telling a perfectly true story, as it was told to me by friends who knew the circumstances. Ralph Winston's dwelling was near the hospital in S——, and the good matron had often had kindly-troubled thoughts about the old sinner who lived there. She had heard of his illness, and had wondered, with considerable shrinking of feeling, whether it was her duty to visit him; and that day, when Mrs. Laurie's hamper arrived, and the twenty-first bouquet was counted out, she was irresistibly drawn to take it to him, and, finding him asleep, she noiselessly withdrew, leaving it on his bed.

"A wonderful fashion of teaching He hath!"

A Word to Workers.

"Of His Fulness" (John i. 16).

We must receive, ere we can give,
Or poor our work will be;
Of unction void, to husks allied—
A formal ministry.

We MUST receive, ere we can give!
By nature nought have we;
Our one supply but from on high—
Our power for ministry.

We must RECEIVE, ere we can give,
Or fruit we ne'er shall see;
But oh, how blest of strength possessed—
A Christ-owned ministry.

We must receive, ere we can give!
Then be our earnest plea:—
O Lord, invest our souls with zest—
Our—else void—ministry.

The Church Army "Blue Book."—The eighteenth annual report of the Church Army will repay careful perusal. It forms a comprehensive record of the society's many-sided work during the year. In common with all similar organizations, its philanthropic operations have been influenced to a great extent by the present war in South Africa, and a number of evangelists are assisting the military chaplains among the troops and in the hospitals, the entire expense being borne by the funds of the society, estimated to cost not less than £2,000. During the year 116 trained workers were added to the staff, making a total of upwards of 1,200 parochial evangelists, missioners, &c., trained by the society. An idea of the social side of the Army may be gathered from the fact that during the year upwards of 24,000 cases have been investigated and dealt with. Copies of the report may be obtained from the Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

The Work of the Spirit.

(Eph. v. 18.)

THOU blessed Paraclete, we would obey
The exhortation to be filled with Thee,
For we are ever conscious, day by day,
That Thou art our one great necessity.

True worship, fellowship, and service, each,
Can only be as Thou art pleased to bless,
Come, then, in all thy fulness, we beseech,
As our deep need of Thee we now confess.

We thank Thee for the power which first did speak,
To these dead hearts of ours, and worked within A sense of our lost state, and made us seek
The Christ who died a sacrifice for sin.

We bless Thee for the help Thou dost afford,
For guidance in the daily path we tread,
For clearer knowledge of our glorious Lord,
In resurrection power, our living Head.

For all the growth in grace that we have made,
For power to overcome our inbred sin,
For any likeness to our Lord displayed,
For strength and help the victory to win.

We sorrow for the times we've grieved thy love,
Resisted thine appeals when Thou hast sought
To draw us nearer to our Lord above
By sweet entreaties, each with mercy fraught.

We mourn that we such listlessness have shown,
To search the Sacred Word which Thou didst write,
And make its blessed promises our own,
And let its precepts guide our lives aright.

Our weakness and our failure we avow,
Our impotence to touch the hearts of men;
In humbleness of spirit now we bow,
Oh! grant the power which lies beyond our ken.

We need thy help to teach us how to pray,
Thine inward intercession, else we fail;
Be Thou our blest instructor, so we may Learn how to plead for others, and prevail.

Oh! come in all thy plenitude of power,
Exalt the Christ in these cold hearts of ours,
Create an ardent love that, hour by hour,
Shall guide, control, and govern all our powers:—

That heart, and mind, and will, in one accord,
Shall be subservient to thy gracious sway,
So shall we glorify our dearest Lord,
And all thy wise and blest behests obey.

Oh! come, in all thy Pentecostal might,
Revive the life Thou didst Thyself beget,
And by thy power equip us for the fight,
'Gainst all hell's forces which our paths beset.

Teach us to serve, or quietly to wait,
To witness, or to suffer if his will;
The Gospel Truth declare, though men may hate,
And Satan try our utterances to still.

Revive and energize each fainting soul,
Remove all hindrances, dispel all fears;
Help us to run the race, and reach the goal,
Though way be rough, and eyes be dimmed with tears.

Co-equal with the Father and the Son,
The source and sustenance of life divine,
Without thine aid we feel ourselves undone,
But led by Thee our lives for Him shall shine.

Now empty, cleanse, and fill each longing heart,
Abandoned to Thyself we fain would be,
Let spirit, soul, and body, every part
Of our whole being, now be claimed by Thee.

True Consecration.

Studies of John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

He must increase, but I must decrease (John iii. 30).

FROM the Jordan Valley our Lord returned to Galilee and Nazareth. The marriage feast of Cana, his return to Jerusalem, the cleansing of the Temple, and the interview with Nicodemus, followed in rapid succession. And when the crowds of Passover pilgrims were dispersing homewards, He also left the city with his disciples, and began a missionary tour throughout the land of Judæa.

During all this time the Baptist was continuing his preparatory work in the Jordan valley, though now driven by persecution to leave the western bank for Ænon and Salim on the eastern side, where a handful of followers still clung to him. "John was not yet cast into prison," but the shadow of his impending fate was already hanging over him.

Tidings came of the work that Jesus was doing in Judæa, and drew them into a discussion as to the comparative value of the two baptisms. It was acknowledged that Jesus did not Himself baptize, but it was done by his disciples, at his direction, and with his countenance; and therefore it could be reported to the Baptist by his disciples, who came to him with eyes flashing with indignation, and faces heated with the excitement of the discussion: "Rabbi, He that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou hast borne witness, the same baptizeth, and all men come unto Him." But there was which such sparks as these could kindle. Nothing but love dwelt there. He had been plunged into the baptism of a holy love, which had burnt out the selfishness and jealousy, which were as natural to him as to us all. It was as when a spark falls into an ocean and is instantly extinguished. Thus his reply will ever rank among the greatest utterances of mortal man. The Lord said none born of woman was greater than John; and, if by nothing else, by these words his moral stature and superlative excellence were vindicated. He seemed great when his voice rang like a clarion through Palestine, attracting and thrilling the mighty throngs; great when he dared to tell Herod that it was unlawful for him to have his brother's wife, uttering words which those palace walls must have been startled to hear; great when he baptized Him for whom the world was waiting, and who was declared to be the Son of God with power: but He never seemed so great as when he refused to enter into those acrimonious altercations and discussions, and said simply, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven."

I.—John counted Influence and Position as Divine Gifts. What startling differences obtain among men—Peter and John, Calvin and Melanchthon, John Knox and Samuel Rutherford, Kingsley and Keble! Each of these has left his imprint on human history, each so needful to do his own special work, but each so diverse from all others. We are sometimes tempted to attribute their special powers and success to their circumstances, their times, their parents and teachers; but there is a deeper and more satisfactory explanation. Adapting the words of the Forerunner, we may say—They had nothing that they had not received from heaven, by the direct appointment and decree of God. It was thus that the Baptist reasoned.

This is a golden sentence, indeed!—"A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven." Hast thou great success in thy life-work? Do crowds gather around thy steps and throng thy audience-chamber? Do not attribute them to thyself. They are all the gifts of God's grace. He raiseth up one and setteth down another. Thou hast nothing that thou hast not received; and if thou hast received it, see to it that thou exercisest perpetually the faculty of receptiveness, so that thou mayest receive more and more, grace on grace.

Hast thou but one talent, and little success?—yet this is as God has willed it. He might have given more had He willed it so; be thankful that He has given any. Use what thou hast. Envy not one more successful and used than thyself, lest thou be convicted of murmuring against the appointment of thy Lord.

Here, too, is the cure of jealousy, which more than anything else blights the soul of the servant of God. To an older minister, who has passed the zenith of his popularity and power, it is often a severe trial to see younger men stepping into positions which he once held and has been compelled to renounce. He is mightily tempted to disparage their power, condemn them by faint praise; or, if he praise, to which undoes the generosity and frankness of the eulogium.

How much misery, heart-burning, and disappointment would be saved if, at the beginning of life, each of us inquired seriously what that special work in the world might be to which he was called, and for which he is fitted. Then, instead of being poor imitations, we might be good originals. Instead of spending our time in going off on side issues, we might bend all our strength to the main purpose of our existence. God has meant each of us for something, and will equip us with all material that is necessary for its realization.

Every name is historic in God's estimate. The obscurest among us has his place in the Divine plan, his lesson to learn, his work to do. The century opening before us can no more dispense with us than an orchestra with the piccolo. A pawn on God's chessboard may take a knight, or give check to a king. "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God has before prepared (R.V.) that we should walk in them."

II.—John caught sight of a Fuller and Richer Ideal than his own. Tidings had, without doubt, been brought to him of our Lord's first miracle in Cana of Galilee. He would learn the full details of that remarkable inauguration of this long-expected ministry. How startled he must have been at the first hearing! He had announced the Husbandman with his fan thoroughly to winnow his floor; the Baptizer with his fire; the Lamb of God, holy, harmless, and separate from sinners; but here He opens his ministry among men by mingling with the simple villagers in their wedding joy, and actually as He turns the water into wine! The Son of Man has come "eating and drinking"! What a contrast was here to the austerity of the desert, the coarse raiment, the hard fare! "John the Baptist came, neither eating nor drinking." Could this be He? And yet there was no doubt that the heaven had been opened above Him, that the Dove had descended, and that the Voice had declared Him to be the "Beloved Son." But what a contrast to all that he had looked for!

Further reflection, however, on that incident, in which Jesus manifested forth his glory, and the cleansing of the Temple, which immediately followed, must have convinced the Baptist that this conception of holiness was the true one. His type could never be universal or popular. It was not to be expected that the mass of men could be spared from the ordinary demands of daily life to spend their days in the wilderness as he had done; and it would not have been for their well-being, or that of the world, if his practice had become the rule. It would have been a practical admission that ordinary life was common and unclean; and that there was no possibility of infusing it with the high principles of the kingdom of heaven. Consecration to God would have become synonymous with the exclusion of wife and child, of home and business, of music and poetry, from the soul of the saint; whereas its true conception demands that nothing which God has created can in itself be common or unclean, but all may be included within the encircling precincts of the Redeemer's kingdom.

John saw, beneath the illuminating ray of the Holy Spirit, that this was the Divine Ideal; that the Redeemer would not contradict the Creator; that the Kingdom was consistent with the home, and the presence of the King with the caress of woman, and the laughter of the child, and the innocent mirth of a village feast. This he saw, and cried in effect: "That village scene is the key to the heart of his ministry. He is not only Guest at a bridegroom's table, but the Bridegroom Himself. He has come to woo and win the chosen race. I as his friend am sent to negotiate the match, privileged to know and bring together the two parties in the blessed nuptials, blessed with the unspeakable gladness of hearing the Bridegroom's voice. Do you tell me that He is preaching, and that all come to Him? That is what I have

WANTED MOST OF ALL.

This my joy, therefore, is fulfilled. 'He must increase, but I must decrease.'"

III.—John had enlarged perception of the true Nature of Christ. He believed in the heavenly origin and divinity of the Son of Man, and in the unique and divine source of his teaching. He believed in his copious endowment with the Holy Spirit. He recognised that when God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit there was no limit, no measuring metre, no stint. He believed in his near relationship to God, using the well-known Jewish phrase of sonship to describe his possession of the Divine nature in a unique sense, and recalling the utterance of the hour of baptism, to give weight to his assurance that the Father loved Him as Son. Lastly, he believed in the mediatorial function of the Man of Nazareth—that the Father had already given all things into his hand; and that the day was coming when He would sit on the throne of David, yea, on the mediatorial throne itself, King of kings and Lord of lords, the keys of death and hades, of the realms of invisible existence and spiritual power, hanging at his girdle.

To that creed the Baptist added a testimony, which has been the

to myriads. Being dead, he yet has spoken through the ages, assuring us that to believe on Jesus is to have, as a present fact, eternal life, the life which fills the Being of God and defies time and change. Faith is the act by which we open our heart to receive the gift of God; as earth bares her breast to sun and rain, and as the good wife flings wide her doors and windows to let in the spring sunshine and the summer air. Ah, reader, I would that thou hadst this faith! The open heart towards Christ! The yielded will! Thou needst only will to have Him, and He has already entered, though thou canst not detect his footfall, or the chime of the bells around his garment's hem. And to shut thy heart against Him not only excludes the life which might be thine, but incurs the wrath of God (v. 36).

There are two concluding thoughts! First: The only hope of a decreasing self is an increasing Christ. There is too much of the self-life in us all: chafing against God's will, refusing God's gifts, instigating the very services we render to God, simulating humility and meekness for the praise of men. But how can we be rid of this accursed self-consciousness and pride? Ah! we must turn our back on our shadow, and our face towards Christ. It has been said that "the woman who loves thinks with the brain of the man she loves;" and surely if we love Christ with a constraining passion, we shall think his thoughts and feel his joys, and no longer live unto ourselves but unto Him.

> Love took up the Harp of Life
> And smote on all its chords with might;
> Smote the chord of self, that trembling,
> Passed in music out of sight.

Second: we must view our relationship to Christ as the betrothal and marriage of our soul to our Maker and Redeemer, who is also our Husband. "Wherefore, my brethren," says the Apostle, "ye also were made dead to the law through the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 3. Psalm cx.

IF the previous psalm testifies "beforehand of the sufferings of Christ," this tells of "the glory that should follow." From beginning to end it is full of the glories of the Messiah-King, whom God has set at his own right hand. The victories which David had secured over Edom (Psa. cviii. 10), Ammon, Syria, typify our Lord's glorious victories over his and our foes; and the reigns of David and Solomon over the vast extent of territory, which accrued to them by the gift of God, typify his reign, which is as sure as the Throne of the Eternal. He must reign till his foes are his footstool. Few psalms are oftener quoted in the New Testament than this, and its reference was clearly pointed by our Lord (Matt. xxii. 41-46. See also Acts ii. 33, 34; Heb. i. 13, &c.).

The invitation of Jehovah to the Son of Man to sit at his own right hand, was given once more in the Ascension, and accepted. We are told that "the Lord Jesus . was received up into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God" (Mark xvi. 19). The right hand is the seat and symbol of operative energy. If a child is snatched from the runaway horse, or a drowning man drawn out of the waves, it is by the right hand. Jesus sits there to-day, that He may be able to succour and help us to the uttermost. The day is not far distant when drink, impurity, war, and every evil thing which exalts itself shall be made his foot-stool.

The results which this psalm teaches us to expect are everywhere accruing. People are giving themselves to Him as freewill offerings; the young, in the prime of life's morning, are yielding their lives to Him, as dewdrops besprinkle the lawns in their untold myriads; whilst the beauties of holiness, the garments of the priests, adorn the souls that truly believe and obey. Jesus is, like Melchizedek, King as well as Priest, and this for ever. The Aaronic priesthood has passed away before the radiance of an older and more enduring type.

MONDAY, June 4. Psalm cxi.

This and the following have been called the Hallelujah Psalms. They are precisely similar in construction, both being alphabetical, and having the successive Hebrew letters at the beginning of the successive clauses. The first is a hymn of public praise to Jehovah for his mercy and righteousness to his people, and the second describes their blessedness.

Notice the repetition of the pronoun his—his work, his covenant, his hands, his people, his name. All is of God. Should not we be happy, since He is so deeply pledged? Can anything befal us without awaking his quick interest and enlisting his powerful aid? His work is honourable and glorious; it would be dishonoured if He let you slip. His wonderful works would lose some of their intrinsic interest, if it could be shown that He allowed you to be forgotten. He will ever be mindful of his covenant, not only to the Church as a whole, but to you as an individual. He wants to show you the power of his works, and to give you your heritage. His covenant and his praise alike endure for ever. You may sin and wander, but you cannot get beyond the circle of his care.

Let us take pleasure in God's works, and seek them out. The scientific man does this in his laboratory; the naturalist in the realm of nature; and the historian in the rise and fall of empires, and the gradual evolution of God's schemes with respect to man. Let not the child of God be backward in the great quest. Great works were wrought by God in the choice of Abram, in the deliverance from Egypt, in the death of the cross, and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Let us seek them out, and dwell on them with holy fervour and delight, extolling them. But the most interesting study of all is God's work in our own life. Here is a universe, indeed, of holy interest and wonder!

TUESDAY, June 5. Psalm cxii.

In the previous psalm the fear of the Lord was declared to be the first principle of all true wisdom. Here it is commended as the source of all true happiness. "To fear God" is sometimes thought to be a deterrent conception of our attitude towards Him; but with these holy men, who thought deeply and accurately, it is the spring of delights. "He who feareth the Lord delighteth greatly." God's service, so far from being a hard one, is the only blessed one.

Take this as a true portraiture of a holy man. His seed—i.e., his spiritual children—exercise wide and blessed influences. The blessing which rested on him descends to after generations. He has a sufficiency of this world's goods, and a treasure in the heavens that fadeth not away. When darkness broods over all others, he has light in his dwelling, as the Israelites in Goshen. He guides his own affairs discreetly, and is able to lend a helping hand to others. When involved in conflict with litigious adversaries, he emerges from it unharmed, and is able to show mercy to the poor, and lend to the needy. Surely godliness has promise for the life which now is, as well as for the next.

Oh for that fixed heart, which is not afraid! Moses had it by the Red Sea (Ex. xiv. 13); Jehoshaphat, when confronted by hordes of Ammonites (2 Chron. xx. 12, 15, 17); Asa, before a thousand thousand and three hundred of chariots (2 Chron. xiv. 9-12). How bold the three young men before Nebuchadnezzar, and Stephen before the council!

WEDNESDAY, June 6. Psalm cxiii.

This, with the five following Psalms, forms the greater Hallel, or grand hymn of praise, specially sung at the Passover Feast; and it is supposed that some portion was sung by our Saviour and his Apostles, as their hymn, before they went out into the Mount of Olives.

The Name of God is his nature and character, as revealed and manifested before his people. To all time, and in all places, God's Name shall be held high in honour. Dr. Edersheim describes the temple service as responsive, and says, "Every first line of a Psalm was repeated by the people, while to each of the others they responded with Hallelujah." Similarly all through our life, as one disclosure after another is made of the nature and character of God, we should break forth into Hallelujah.

> Praise to the Holiest in the height,
> And in the depth be praise;
> In all his words most wonderful;
> Most sure in all his ways!

Notice the vast contrast of the psalm. God is so great that He has to stoop to behold the things that are in heaven; but so lowly and gentle that He is continually visiting the down-trodden. If a child of his is there, He will go in search even to a dunghill. Ah, we are all there by nature! How corrupt our original condition! How much that is loathsome we have gathered in our sinful lives! We had never been able to rise by our own efforts, but He has lifted us up, and made us kings and priests unto God. We are now heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ.

Think, too, ye who have had no spiritual children, of the suggestion given here. What God did for Sarah, Rachel, Hannah, and Elizabeth, He can do for you after a spiritual sort.

THURSDAY, June 7. Psalm cxiv.

"Nothing is too hard for the Lord!" Dost thou think thy circumstances desperate? Remember when Israel came out of Egypt, the mighty power that God put forth for his people. And He is the same for ever.

On one occasion Dr. Martin Luther was very despondent about the outlook for the cause of the Reformation. It seemed as though he could not throw off the heavy weight that lay on his soul. Knowing that it was useless to argue with him, his wife went through the house, pulling down the blinds, and darkening the windows. On her husband asking what she was doing, she said that they must go into mourning, since evidently God was dead. So striking a reproof rebuked his melancholy, and lifted him back to buoyant faith. O troubled soul, do not dwell on your difficulties and discouragements, but on the mighty deeds of God.

We sometimes dwell amid people who cannot understand or speak the language of Canaan. All day long we hear words which strike no tender chords in our hearts. But when the time has come, and our cry has entered into God's heart, He will bring us forth. In the meanwhile let us remember that our heart is his sanctuary, and our life for his dominion. What though insuperable difficulties lie before us? Seas will flee, rivers be driven back, mountains will skip like rams, and little hills like lambs—the very earth will tremble. Yes, and when supplies run short, and water fails, remember that from the most unexpected sources He can supply all our needs.

FRIDAY, June 8. Psalm cxv.

Still we must sing this old psalm! We want God to help us, not for our deserts, but for his glory's sake. So great has been our unfaithfulness and backsliding, we can only cry, "Do it, do it, for thy mercy and truth's sake, that men may not be able to charge Thee with carelessness of thine own."

What sublime scorn for the idols of the heathen! Mouths that give no counsel to the worshippers; eyes that see neither the anguish nor need of the distressed; nostrils that smell no fragrant scent; hands that cannot help; feet that cannot hasten to rescue. No word of comfort in the throat. And man at last becomes like his bestial deities. We, too, have the visible image of Deity! "The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ!" But his mouth is lovely, his eyes fill with tears, his nostrils love the scent of alabaster boxes filled with frankincense and myrrh, and when He speaks the heart is quieted and blessed. And they who behold Him are changed into the same image from glory to glory.

The responsive character of this psalm is very apparent. The Levites would chant v. 9; the people v. 10; and all together v. 11. Again all would chant the first clause of v. 12, the Levites the second, the people the third.

As one singer after another passes from the church on earth to that in heaven, we need to redouble our songs. True they have joined the choir invisible; but earth sadly misses them. "The dead praise not the Lord." But let us take up their song, and go on singing, until for us, too, silence falls on tongue and harp, and we enter on the life which is one long glad Hallelujah.

SATURDAY, June 9. Psalm cxvi.

Yes, this is all true of me. I, too, have been bound by the cords of death, and have felt the pains of Sheol. I lay in a very deep pit of my own sin and folly. But He inclined, stooping down unto me, to hear my cry. I have tested Him, and proved Him to be very gracious, very merciful, a very present help in trouble. For He has delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.

My soul has been like Noah's dove, wandering from her resting place. With weary wing she has traversed the watery waste. But now she comes back to the safe nest. Men are deceitful, the hopes that rest on money and power are vain, but God never fails. He is for ever the same tender and unchanging Friend.

And now what can I render unto the Lord? I have nothing that He has not first given me. Here in my heart there stands the cup of his salvation, filled to the brim with love and grace. I will take it in my hand, and drink it to his praise. I will confess that it is his own, because He has given it me for my salvation and blessing; but He will return it to me, as though it were only mine. It is the best thing I have as it is his gift.

And now let me devote myself as never before to my Saviour. He has loosed my bonds, therefore I will be his servant for ever. He has set me free from all the power of the enemy; therefore, as I am free to choose, I will be his slave for ever. I will never more be thankless, mine shall be the sacrifice of praise. I will never be ashamed, but will pay my vows in the presence of God's people. My life shall be too short to tell all I feel, all I owe, all I love.

The Scottish General Assemblies.

AFTER the Lord High Commissioner (the Earl of Leven and Melville) had held the customary levée at Holyrood Palace, the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland was opened last Thursday by a service in St. Giles's Cathedral. Rev. Dr. Pagan (Bothwell), the retiring Moderator, preached from Exodus xiv. 15, applying the command to "go forward" to the Church of the present day. "It must," he said, "while maintaining the truth of God, place before it, as its constant aim, that it should be an increasing blessing to the world, and should make itself a power increasingly felt in the hearts and lives of men. It should go forward (1) in Christian service, and (2) in the Christian graces. The part of the Church is to provide instruments and channels of service fitted to the times in which we live. The Church that will stand, and that alone will stand in our time, must be a living Church—a Church that lives not for itself, but for the glory of God."

The Assembly was afterwards constituted, and Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod (Inverness) unanimously called to the chair for the current year. The Queen's annual letter was presented, and Lord LEVEN AND MELVILLE made touching reference to the vacant place left in the Assembly by the death of General Wauchope (at Magersfontein), announcing at the same time that Her Majesty had sent, in addition to her usual gift, a second £1,000 to be applied to the propagation of Christian knowledge in the Highlands and Islands. This, he suggested, should be used in aiding young men to qualify themselves for preaching the Gospel in Gaelic.

SABBATH SCHOOLS FALLING OFF.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools reported that they were arranging a syllabus which would provide religious instruction in stages corresponding to Board-School standards, with a senior course leading up to a class for young communicants. The convener (Rev. A. WALLACE WILLIAMSON, Edinburgh) referred to the decrease in male teachers as the most serious point in the report, the falling off being 237, leaving 7,000 as compared with 13,500 female teachers. The decrease in the membership of ministers' Bible classes was 2,300. The number of classes was 300 greater than in 1890, yet in twelve months there had been a falling away of seventy-three.

In the report on Army Chaplaincies it was mentioned that, of the ministers who volunteered for service in South Africa, Rev. Rudge Wilson (Witon) had been accepted. Letters were read from Senior Chaplain Robertson indicating advances of Gospel truth among soldiers in the field.

FREE CHURCH.

As was natural on account of the advanced stage of the Union negotiations, a special interest was manifest among the members of the Free Assembly. Dr. STEWART, of Lovedale (as retiring Moderator), chose as the text for his opening sermon, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem;" and pointed out with satisfaction the present friendly attitude of the Scottish churches towards one another. If this approaching union should be used for the peace of Jerusalem, and be thankfully received, they might expect the blessing of God to go with it; and in that case it would be better if they engaged in no movement that would disturb the friendly feeling that might very well exist between all the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland. About the immediate future, some might not be very sanguine as to days of peace; yet, after all, there need be no consuming anxiety. "Christ cares for his Church with a wonderful care. Individual churches, like individual races, tribes, nations, and men, may come and go, while the stream of human life rolls on; but the true Jerusalem abides for ever."

Dr. Stewart proposed as his successor Rev. Dr. Walter Ross Taylor (Glasgow), a nomination which was seconded by the Earl of Moray, and received with cordial unanimity. At the close of his inaugural address, Dr. ROSS TAYLOR referred to the death roll. Thirty ministers had been called from their midst, and the loss of Dr. J. R. Macdougall (Florence) had been much felt at home as well as in the Free Italian Church, whose burden he had so long carried on his shoulders. Among the elders he singled out Professor Sir Thomas Grainger Stewart as a man eminent in science, widely-read in literature, far-famed as a physician, a humble believer, and a devoted Christian worker.

INCREASES AND DECREASES.

The report on statistics, presented by Rev. Dr. HOWIE (Govan), showed 1,112 congregations, with 296,085 members, of whom 29,117 were in the Highlands. Last year the membership had increased in all the areas excepting Lowland Presbyteries, which have neither large towns nor mining districts. While during the last four years the membership of congregations had grown by 12,554, Sabbath schools and senior classes had fallen off by 12,348. The number of paid agents engaged in home mission work was 277.

SUCCESS AMONG THE JEWS.

Dr. J. G. CUNNINGHAM reported that good work was being done among the Jews. At Buda-Pesth, Constantinople, Tiberias, and Safed the medical work had afforded forty thousand opportunities of presenting the Gospel to individual patients. More than a thousand children are being instructed in the schools, where a few of the elder scholars give hopeful evidence of conversion. Hundreds of men and women come to public worship, and at every station inquirers are seeking guidance from the missionaries. Several baptisms are reported as directly traceable to the missionary influence, although they took place in connection with the National Hungarian Church. The following baptisms at the stations are reported:—Buda-Pesth, 1; Constantinople, 20; Breslau, 3. Rev. W. Affleck (Constantinople) asked for a better church, a larger school, and a small hospital.

Scottish Notes.

AN adjourned meeting of the Conference on Christian Unity was held in Edinburgh a few days ago, when lay and clerical representatives were present from the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, and Scottish Episcopal Churches. It was unanimously resolved that, towards the close of the present year, a statement should be issued to the Christian public of Scotland, with a view to taking steps for the appointment of a day (early next year) of prayer and intercession on behalf of Christian unity.

Several notable gifts were acknowledged last week by Mr. William Quarrier. A friend who had been looking critically into some of the deficiencies of the Orphan Home Village, sent £1,000 for the purchase of a fire-extinguishing apparatus, and a like sum for the erection of a fire station. A lady friend added to former donations one of £1,000 for the work among consumptives. The largest legacy since the beginning of the work was also paid—£5,000 from Mr. William Houldsworth, Rozelle, Ayr, who during his life had been among Mr. Quarrier's most generous supporters.

The Synod of the Original Secession Church is always among the most interesting among the smaller church gatherings of the year. Professor Spence (Auchinleck), who was elected moderator last week at Glasgow, in the course of his opening address took a retrospective glance over the nineteenth century, and pointed out the tendency manifested among Protestant Christians to draw closer to each other, and to cultivate a more intimate fellowship. He declared one unsatisfactory feature of the approaching Presbyterian union to be that it was not wider, including themselves among others. The membership is 3,719, with 1,547 adherents.

On Wednesday of last week the nineteenth annual demonstration in connection with Carrubbers Close Mission Gospel Temperance Association was held in the Music Hall, Edinburgh. There was a large attendance, presided over by Professor A. R. Simpson, M.D., who spoke with satisfaction of the great spread of temperance work on the Continent of Europe, and of the increased interest which medical men there are taking in the subject. The report, submitted by Mr. G. A. Barclay (vice-president), showed that a gratifying amount of progress has been made during the past twelve months.

At the annual meeting of the Sabbath Alliance, held in Edinburgh last week, notice was taken of the favourable reception given by the Edinburgh Town Council to a deputation from the Presbyteries on the question of petty trading on the Lord's Day, and to the earnest treatment the subject received in the Convention of Royal Burghs. In the report the hope was expressed that the result of the action now being taken would be "the granting of powers that will enable the authorities to restrict the temptations to open profanity."

Irish Notes.

IN the decade now closing, the number of families in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church has increased by 3,935; the number of communicants by 3,746; the number of Sabbath-school teachers by 199; and the number of Sabbath-school scholars by 3,088.

Rev. D. H. Dolman, head of the Hibernian Home for Inquiring Jews at Hamburg, has been addressing meetings at Enniscorthy, Wexford, and other places in the South of Ireland.

The sum of at least £4,780 has been raised last year in the diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore for the Church Missionary Society. This is an increase on the income of the previous year of about £1,360. Offers of service in the mission field have been received from five candidates.

The disused University boat club at Ringsend, Dublin, has been turned by Rev. Maurice Day into a Labour Home for those out of employment, in order to give them a fresh start in life, and try to influence them to live Christian lives. No inmate can remain in the Home longer than four months at a time, and each inmate is paid for his labour at the same rate as he would be paid for similar work outside. Each one is also charged six shillings a week for board and lodgings, and given a shilling a week for pocket money. The balance of his earnings is laid apart for him, and is handed to him when he succeeds in getting employment, in order to provide him with clothes and a suitable outfit. The Home has been about six months in existence, and is doing an excellent work.

Recently a Dublin evening paper made an attack on Irish Church Missions, and declared that no one seceded from the Church of Rome except for gold. Rev. P. Johnston took up the challenge, and held a public meeting, to which he invited the writer of the article in the journal referred to. That person, however, did not accept the invitation. Several gentlemen were present at the meeting who had been formerly Roman Catholics, and they indignantly repudiated the insinuation that money was the ground on which they had left the church in which they had been brought up.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin, Sir Thomas Pile, Bart., has inaugurated a new movement, at least in modern times, in connection with the Dublin Mansion House, and has opened a fund in aid of the sufferers from famine in India. He has also publicly avowed himself to be a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks.

The Belfast Sailors' Home is doing a good work. It has now been in existence fifty years, and during that period about 30,000 sailors have passed through it. Last year it sheltered 554 boarders, including twelve shipwrecked men.

Red, White, and Blue Institute.—The Christian work carried on by this agency in Cumming Street, London, N., continues to make progress. The services of a Bible woman have been secured, and her ministry of visitation has been blessed among the poor. New premises are being got ready for the mission.

A Moorish Disciple.

WRITING from Laraish, Miss Jennings, of the North Africa Mission, says:—"I returned on Easter Saturday from a nine-days' mission to our poor little out-station of Arzila—which lies on this Atlantic coast about half-way between Tangier and Laraish, and whose people heard the Gospel, and saw Christ, by and in the lives of two of our devoted pioneer missionaries who are now both with the Lord. I mean Misses Herdman and Caley.

"There is one poor widow woman, Sofia, a believer, there; and on Sunday morning, as taught so many years since, she breaks and eats her coarse black bread, and drinks vinegar made from grapes, in remembrance of her Lord. Sunday week, she and I, in her almost bare cottage, the only seat my small camp stool, with the black bread on the mat on the earth floor, and vinegar in a tiny glass, we had communion with our Lord—the first time in the thirteen years I have been out here, I have had this joy with a native woman. Oh! that ere long there may be many more of our poor Moorish sisters within the fold!

"Others, I believe, are trusting in Christ, but persecution and terrible difficulties confront them—were they to declare themselves his—in this Mohammedan land."

A Broad Field in Turkey.

WRITING to an English friend, Miss Hall, who is a co-worker with Dr. Barnum at Harpoot, East Turkey, gives an encouraging account of the efforts made for the rescue and protection of destitute children.

"In our field we are caring for over a thousand orphans—in Harpoot alone over 400. The Government will not allow us to build an orphanage, but we have hired six houses. We have, on an average, sixty-two in each home. The majority of the children go to school, but the elder boys are taught various trades, and attend an evening school. The children are happy and grateful, and it is a constant sorrow that so many little ones are still left out in the streets. We have ranging from the Kindergarten up to the graduating class."

The general missionary work among the Armenians shows many signs of advancement. In Dr. Barnum's own words, few families are to be found who do not possess a Bible. "I have seen an immense change since I came to the country, forty-two years ago. From the first we have urged even adults to learn to read, and there has been an almost among the Armenians to own the Bible. With this there has been a general breaking down of superstition. Almost every door is open to us, and we are welcomed to many churches. We urge upon the people the one duty of repentance, pointing them to the history of the Jews in the olden times, with the assurance that if they return to God He will return to them. Many of them are in danger of infidelity on account of their trials and the freedom from punishment of their persecutors."

Dr. H. R. Barnum may be addressed, Hooraput, Turkey.

A Missionary Farewell.—At a drawing-room meeting held on May 22, at the residence of Councillor J. C. Robertson of Glasgow, leave was taken, on behalf of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, of Rev. and Mrs. Maurice Frater, who are shortly to proceed to the New Hebrides, and Dr. Agnes Robson, who sails for India next month. Addresses were given by Revs. Donald Fraser, recently returned on furlough from Livingstonia; Dr. J. C. Young, of Aden; William Ewing, late of Tiberias, and others. The work of the S.V.M.U. is advancing in Glasgow.

D. L. Moody's Conversion.*

MR. Edward Kimball, of Boston, young Moody's Bible-class teacher, thus relates the story:—

"I determined to speak to him about Christ and about his soul, and started down to Holton's shoe store. When I was nearly there I began to wonder whether I ought to go in just then during business hours. I thought that possibly my call might embarrass the boy, and that when I went away the other clerks would ask who I was, and taunt him with my efforts in trying to make him a good boy. In the meantime I had passed the store, and, discovering this, I determined to make a dash for it and have it over at once. I found Moody in the back part of the building wrapping up shoes. I went up to him at once, and putting my hand on his shoulder, I made what I afterwards felt was a very weak plea for Christ. I don't know just what words I used, nor could Mr. Moody tell. I simply told him of Christ's love for him, and the love Christ wanted in return. That was all there was. It seemed the young man was just ready for the light that then broke upon him, and there, in the back of that store in Boston, he gave himself and his life to Christ."

From the moment that Moody accepted Christ, his whole life changed. The merely passive religious life that suffered the restrictions of the moral law suddenly became a life of joyful service. Whereas church attendance had been observed simply because it was a duty, from this time forth for nearly fifty years he found his greatest joy in the service of his God.

"Before my conversion," as he himself used to express it, "I worked towards the Cross, but since then I have worked from the Cross: then I worked to be saved, now I work because I am saved."

Bread cast upon the waters returns again, and the Bible-class teacher received a blessing in his own household seventeen years later, in the conversion of his own son. Mr. Kimball's eldest son was visiting an uncle in Worcester, Mass., while Mr. Moody was conducting a mission in that city. After one of the services young Kimball introduced himself to Mr. Moody as the son of his old Bible-class teacher.

"What! are you the son of Mr. Edward Kimball, of Boston? What is your name?"

"Henry."

"I am glad to see you. Henry, are you a Christian?"

"No, sir; I do not think I am."

"How old are you?" "I am seventeen."

"Henry, when I was just seventeen, and you were a little baby in the crib, your father came to me and put his hand on my shoulder, and asked me to be a Christian, and he was the only man that ever came to me and talked to me, because he loved my soul; and now I want you, my boy, to be a Christian. Henry, don't you want to be a Christian?"

"Yes, sir; I think I do," said the boy.

They sat down together, and Mr. Moody opened his Bible, the boy listening attentively to the words that impressed him more and more, till at length they brought him to where the speaker had been himself led so long ago.

In May, 1855, young Moody presented himself for membership in the Mount Vernon Church, from the records of which the following minute is taken:—

"No. 1,079. Dwight L. Moody. Baptized. First awakened on the 16th of May. Saw himself a sinner, and sin now seems hateful and holiness desirable. Thinks he has repented; has purposed to give up sin; feels dependent upon Christ for forgiveness. Loves the Scriptures. Prays. Desires to be useful. Religiously educated. Been in the city a year. From Northfield, this State. Is not ashamed to be known as a Christian. Eighteen years old."

With the South Sea Islanders.

THE school which was opened in 1898 at Isis, in connection with the Queensland Kanaka Mission, continues to make steady progress. The Christian boys are now becoming useful as teachers. Some have been led, in answer to prayer, to make agreements with employers in places hitherto untouched by the missionaries, and have gathered together numbers of lads in the neighbourhood, where classes are regularly conducted. So successful have been these efforts that it has been necessary to erect a log building at Gin Gin, some forty miles from Bundaberg. This they have done at their own cost. This immediately proved too small, the result being that a schoolroom, capable of seating 150, had to be erected.

The thirteenth annual report of the Kanaka Mission records advance in every department, and describes noble efforts for the evangelization of the 2,500 islanders in the district. The hon. sec. is Miss C. E. Young, Queensland Kanaka Mission, Bundaberg.

MISSIONARIES AGENTS OF GOD.

REV. CHARLES WILLIAMS, ACCRINGTON.

THE missionaries do not go out as social reformers. If they do, they will fail to effect social reforms. They go, not as agents of civilization, but as agents of God. There is a close relation between missions and the peace of the world. The Gospel preached by the missionaries makes peaceful men out of warriors.

There is no greater hindrance to the spread of the Gospel in heathen countries than the fact that Christians are warlike. Let us appeal to Jesus, the Prince of Peace; not to Mars, the pagan of war. We should make the question of peace prominent in our missions. If Evangelical Christians are true to their fathers, two nations, at least, will very soon take the lead for peace—the United States and Great Britain.

MASSES AND CLASSES.

REV. D. S. SPENCER.

In this industrial age the problem of making the masses harmonize with the classes is one which the missionary also has to encounter. The work of teaching Christ does not at first involve a question of bread and butter, but very soon it is a matter, not only of a change of light, but a change of life for the native convert. One cannot imagine naked natives being converted, and continuing naked. They must have clothing and civilized abodes, and must learn the means and ways of providing them.

The Sabbath is an important question. The heathen have no Sabbath, and work seven days a week. A complete new mode of life must be opened up to them. One of them never got an idea of the eternal life that he did not also get a new idea of this life. China is to become industrialized, but her vast population must not become industrial slaves. Japan is making almost superhuman efforts towards a high place in the world of industry and commerce, and it remains to be seen whether she will produce devotees of modern materialism, or those inspired with the hopes of Christianity.

THE CLAIMS OF THE HEATHEN.

REV. W. T. A. BARBER.

Mighty religious systems have had sway for centuries in the distant East. What claim can have more weight than the utter failure of those systems to elevate those races? Think of the claim of China. An ethical system, the most practical that man has ever attained to, has had unchecked opportunity for more than two millenniums. But there has been one all-fatal blow. There is no thought of a personal God in its midst. The fountains of justice are poisoned at their source. Moral strength is absent; untold abominations abound in the brains of high mandarins; opium-smoking, the child of England's greed and China's sensuality, nearly claims more victims, and there is no power to redeem.

What are the claims of Africa? In the north and centre, Mohammedanism sends forth its missionaries with a success numerically greater than that of Christianity. Too often its surface conversions have but stimulated fierceness and warfare; too often where civilization and barbarism have met, the worse of the two systems alone has survived. In the west, the drunken savage bows down and worships the empty bottles that have contained the fiery spirit sent him by so-called Christian nations. In the south, the Old Testament fatalism of the Boers has, till recently, denied the subject black the right of marriage, and even now the possession of a bit of soil in this world or a soul in the next. On the Congo, severed hands and bodies mutilated for lack of precious rubber, are too often the only proof the African has of the meaning of Christian rule.

The time would fail to tell of the vast South American continent, where the dull light of an effete Romanism only makes darkness visible. In Japan, Western civilization has been copied and adopted like many a patent improvement, but the religion which gives vitality to Western civilization is looked askance at. In the days to come the Chinese and Japanese must be mighty factors in the commercial, and therefore in the social and religious, history of the world.

The inevitable growth of political and commercial control by which new races are brought under the influence of the Christian nations of the West, not only demands that we should send merchant princes, governors, and military commanders, but claims that the supreme unselfishness of Christian missions should add its saving salt.

PRESENT OPPORTUNITIES.

REV. DR. MALTBIE B. BABCOCK.

The Christian opportunity is an obligation. Christ said—go into "the uttermost parts of the earth." There are but two things with which I charge you—fidelity and fairness; fidelity to the Lord, and fairness to your brother. If you fail to do what Christ has bidden, you are not his child. Christ said: "Go ye into all the world," and if you do not believe in foreign missions you cannot believe in Christ. The Jews did not believe that anyone but a Jew could be saved, and that is why God took away their candle, and left them in darkness, and they have been in darkness ever since. Christ bids you now take the light of his Gospel into the darkness of heathen lands that they may see, and believe and be saved.

There are millions to-day on earth who have just as good a right to know of Him as you and I. Why don't you tell them? Think of the black night in which they live, and yet you will not send them the light. I am convinced that there is no other way in which the Church can reach the thousands of unbelievers in our lands than by an enormous foreign missionary movement. You have prayed for open doors; they are open. Why don't you go in? Korea has spurned Buddhism. The ancient faiths are tottering in India. The door of China is open to America as it is to no other nation. Go to poor, lame China, and say: "Arise, take up your bed, and walk." We can never be the same after this conference. Your duty has been set before you in no uncertain terms. Will you go or send a substitute? If you cannot go yourself, give your money that some one else may go, and God will bless you and your substitutes.

EVILS OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

REV. DR. T. L. CUYLER.

Four years ago the Christian Chief of Bechuanaland visited London on an extraordinary mission. He went there to tell that he had made a prohibitive law for his tempted subjects, who are negroes, and he said that the principal difficulty he had with it was the smuggling in of liquor by British subjects, and he implored Her Majesty to second his efforts to make prohibition successful. Think of it! A converted African savage on his knees before a Christian Queen, imploring her people not to poison his own nation.

We have something nearer home than that. Of all the honoured heads of mission work who have been here upon this platform, none has been looked upon with more reverence than John G. Paton, of the New Hebrides. No one, since Livingstone went from his knees to God's throne in Africa, has been more reverenced than he. My old friend Dr. Paton came here a few years ago. What for? To implore the American Government, yours and mine, to prohibit the importation of whisky and firearms among the new Christians of the New Hebrides. The Cross had saved them from cannibalism, but the question now was, Could they be saved from the importations of Christian America?

I am coming home closer than that. All political subjects are properly quarantined in this Conference, and you may be certain that I am not going to handle the hot-potato Philippine problem in any of its political aspects; but whatever the future rulers of our country shall be to those multitudes of human beings, we are now, before God and before man, responsible for their condition as much as any mother in that gallery is for the child that she kissed good-night in the crib. If there is anything a true American adores next to his Bible it is the blessed old Stars and Stripes. But, mark ye! it is a most terrible truth that that flag, Old Glory, as it is called here, floats to-night over about 400 American drinking dens—slaughter-houses of body and soul—in the town of Manila. (Cries of "Shame, shame!") "Yes, shame, shame, shame!" thundered Dr. Cuyler, as he continued; "then for heaven's sake hang it at half-mast."

What is to be done? Abraham Lincoln once by a single stroke of his pen swept away the darkest blot on our national escutcheon. That same pen can be found to-day in the President's mansion, and our honoured President with the same dashing stroke should extinguish this most terrible stigma on our character and our Christianity.

Eight years ago sixteen nations, our own among them, I am happy to say, enacted a treaty forbidding the introduction of alcoholic drinks into the Congo country of Africa. All right. That established a principle. Now, what we want to do is to make an enlargement of it. This Conference should ask, should implore, the Christian nations of the earth, in the name of a common humanity, out of pity for the weak races God has bidden us to treat as our brethren, for the principles of Christianity and the glory of God, to pass such legislation as shall sweep out of existence this terrible curse of humanity, this destruction of God's children.

SOCIAL REFORMS.

REV. MAURICE PHILLIPS.

Up to the beginning of the last century, missionaries in India were looked on as interlopers. In 1813 Wilberforce and others prevailed upon Parliament to insert a clause in an Act of Parliament that missionaries might live and labour in India, and with that the period of antagonism passed.

Now the Government gives us every possible facility. We get grants for school-houses; we are consulted as to the best books to be used in the schools, and we are given places on the boards of the principal colleges. A prominent officer of the Government said some time ago that it was his fixed opinion that Christian missions had done more lasting good in Indai than all other agencies combined. All this was not gained by cringing servility to the Government officials, but by agitations instituted for the purpose of having wrongs redressed.

Not long ago the practice of suttee—burning the widow on the funeral pyre of her dead husband — was common. The missionaries agitated, and this was stopped. Not long ago the crime of infanticide was common. Agitation by the missionaries brought about the necessary reforms. The same was the case with the immolation of pilgrims who cast themselves under the wheels of the car of Juggernaut. We have agitated, watched, and petitioned, and our labours have been crowned with success. We have difficulties enough with the people, without having the Government put any in our way.

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

REV. DR. GEORGE WASHBURN.

Whether a college can be considered as an auxiliary to the mission work depends upon what sort of a college it is. No one knows better than we, who are engaged in the work of education, that neither knowledge nor intellectual training, by themselves, can make good men. We have two American colleges in Constantinople; one for girls and one for young men. Both claim to be Christian colleges.

Robert College was the first of such institutions founded by Americans in mission fields, and it has served as a model for others. It was founded in 1863 by Christopher Robert, a merchant of New York City, and Dr. Hamlin, a missionary of the American Board at Constantinople. It was chartered in the State of New York and is under the Board of Regents. It also received a charter from the Sultan of Turkey, granting it all privileges belonging to educational institutions in that country. It has never received any money from any missionary society, but is an independent institution, governed by a board of trustees in the City of New York. It has now 300 students, representing fifteen different nationalities, and almost as many religions.

It is not a theological institution, and we do not trouble our students even with the results of Higher Criticism. It is not a sectarian institution, and we are not much concerned with the conventionalities of religion. The majority of our students are members of some one of the Oriental Churches, and we do not seek to make them Presbyterians or Congregationalists. We do not even ask them to become Protestants; we simply seek to make them true Christians, honest, spiritually-minded followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are involved in the difficulties and perplexed by the same questions which are now agitating the educational world as to what means are best adapted to develop the faculties of the mind. In general, our theory is to carry out such a course of study as will best develop the different mental faculties. We have heard that the primary aim of missionary work is to make Christ known to the world; this is not simply a matter of preaching or of teaching the Scriptures, but most of all of personal influence. The missionary, whether he be a teacher or a preacher or a writer, must be full of the Spirit of Christ in his own life, or he will never win men to the service of his Master.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT.

REV. DR. W. R. LAMBUTH.

Every church which has been Scripturally and wisely planted not only possesses a missionary conscience which responds to the demands made upon it, but will demonstrate, by its fruitage, its divine origin and its right to live. The missionary body throughout the world has come practically to be agreed in accepting the principle of self-support as fundamental, and the native church during the past decade has shown a marked growth in the sentiment of self-respecting maintenance of an aggressive missionary spirit.

India has been for over a century the arena in which Christianity has met the strongest forces of heathenism and won some of its greatest triumphs. The key-note from this great field is one of encouragement. "The ideal of establishing a native pastorate, supported apart from foreign funds, has been practically realized, so that our twenty-three pastors find their support entirely among the people," says Dr. J. P. Jones, of the American Board in that country. It is a singular fact that the adoption of a definite policy of self-support in the mission of the American Board at Harpoot, Turkey, grew out of the necessity for retrenchment due to the breaking out of the civil war in the United States, and the timely offer of a Christian muleteer to board a young helper. The opportunity was seized upon by the missionaries to create among the people a sense of obligation to support and to extend the Gospel.

THE CLOSING WORD.

GENERAL HARRISON.

I have spoken before many great audiences. I have seen the political spirit in this country kindled to a white heat. I have in this very hall addressed great political assemblages, but I have never been associated with a political campaign where the interest was sufficient to fill this hall, and three or four overflow halls and churches, three times a day for ten days.

It is a revelation to the City of New York, to the United States, and to the world. Men had not taken account of these things. They are taking account of them now. There is scarcely a business house or office in New York where they have not been talking of these great meetings. This has not been a mere intellectual feast. It has failed of its purpose if it has not touched your hearts, as it has mine, with a deeper sense of obligation to help in the evangelization of the world.

At the close of the meeting the ex-President of the United States was long prevented from leaving the hall and taking the carriage which awaited him, by the eager throngs who crowded about him to shake his hands, not only those who had sat on the platform, but many more clambering to the platform to give a hand-shake or view the ex-President at closer range.

Other Lands.

Our Sisters in India.

FROM among that down-trodden and despised class, the women of India, God is raising up a people to call his Name blessed. He is also calling and influencing British Christians to uphold their hands in prayer.

I want to relate in brief the story of three Indian women whom the Lord has called, qualified, and tested, and into whose hands He has put a fruitful work of faith in bringing others to a knowledge of his great salvation. The first of these is who has been working with the Lord in India for eleven years, the Lord also working with her, "with signs following." Beginning with an educational institution at Poona for high caste widows—an institution generously supported by her friends in America—Ramabai has now also a large evangelistic mission at Khedgaon, forty miles from Poona, where 300 young widows, gathered from the famine of 1897, are being trained in industrial pursuits and instructed in the Word of God. To these have been added 280 more from the present famine; and they are still coming at the rate of 30 per week, till it is thought there may be 1,000 before the close of the present famine. A number of intelligent young women from the 1897 famine are in training for Gospel work, and already go out into the villages around to tell the story of Jesus. Ramabai has called this place at Khedgaon, "Mukti," i.e., Salvation. The whole of the funds for this branch of the work have been given her by God in answer to faith, prayer, and obedience. To those who know the story from the beginning, this work seems to be one of the most wonderful of present-day miracles. The second of the three women is

SOONDERBAI H. POWAR.

Unlike Ramabai, she is not a convert from Hinduism, but the child of converts. In her infancy she was sick nigh unto death. Her mother promised the Lord that if her first-born were graciously spared to her she should be given, like Samuel, to his service. The prayer was answered, and the daughter, as she grew to womanhood, accepted fully her mother's vows. This has been the controlling circumstance of her life. She is now forty years old, and has never married. Trained under an English Mission in Bombay, Soonderbai early gave herself to the work of visiting Hindu and Mohammedan homes with the Bible. When we first knew her in Bombay she had as many homes open to her as she was able to visit, and the superintendence of a dozen Sunday schools beside. She is known in Britain for her visits here in protest against the deadly opium traffic. When asked to make the second of these visits, she recalled her mother's vow, and said, "I do not desire the journey, but if I refuse I may be like Jonah; so I will go."

For seven years Soonderbai lived and worked with her friend, Pundita Ramabai, taking no salary from the school funds, and devoting a portion of her time to her beloved "own work" of zenana visiting, and Sunday schools. Since the subsidence of the plague at Poona, widely open doors for this work have presented themselves, and Soonderbai has been led out to desire to give her whole time to visiting and to training specially selected young girls for the same work. She has gone forth in faith with a small beginning, trusting in the Lord to make the "little one a thousand." Her own needs have for many years been supplied in answer to prayer. When she left her last Mission employ she was kindly told that she might apply to the Mission if ever she should be in need. She replied, "If God fails me, I shall come to you!" Since then she has consistently declined to receive a salary, feeling that, whatever others may do, God has called her to trust Him for her needs, and also for the needs of any work to which He calls her. The third woman is who is a graduate of Calcutta University, from which she holds the degree of M.A. Five years ago she occupied a lucrative post in a Mission school. Her mother, a Bengali widow, also held a salaried position in the same city of Allahabad. But they felt that the Lord would have them go out into the villages to the women unreached by the Gospel, and do the work of evangelists, trusting Him for their simple needs. They thus desired to set an example, and influence other Indian Christians to take some responsibility in the spread of the Gospel in their own country. They instituted a society called the "Daughters of India Association," and had had some blessing on their work when the famine of 1897 set in right at their own doors. Trusting the Lord for means, these devoted women took in fifty-two orphan children to be trained for Jesus; and the Lord, in answer to prayer, supplied the means for their support. The deepest distress of the present famine has not reached Allahabad, and our friends, feeling their hands full, were inclined to remain satisfied with the responsibilities already incurred. But this was not the Lord's thought for them. Supplies began to run dry, and they were shown that they were to enlarge their borders and gather in more starving little ones from the present famine. This they commenced to do, and before it was known to their friends, the Lord ratified the decision by renewing the supplies.

It has been impressed on the minds of my husband and myself that we should make some special effort to and we feel that God would have us spread the knowledge of what He is doing by and for them among Christians in England. After waiting upon the Lord, it seems to us that the best way to effect this will be to institute a "Prayer Union." Ramabai's work has been long before the public. The Ramabai Association in America was reorganized in 1898, and it was thought at the time that an English Association might be formed to co-operate with it. Ramabai visited England on her return journey at that time, but the way seemed closed for such a project. Other plans on the same lines have failed. Ramabai's own desire is now for a Prayer Union to keep the developments of her work in the minds of the Lord's remembrancers, and to bind together those who by their gifts have already a partnership in the concern.

We propose, therefore, to link these three separate developments of women's work in India under the head of the SISTERS OF INDIA PRAYER UNION.

We will undertake the responsibility of keeping those who may be led to join it informed of the developments of each undertaking, also of special subjects for prayer in connection with them. Having seen with our eyes the marvellous results in answer to prayer in the conversion to God of so many of the children rescued from the last famine, we feel that the present crisis needs earnest prayer. The future also needs prayer, for we know how readily public interest subsides when the acute stage of famine is passed.

These works are all works of faith, and we desire to undertake the Prayer Union in the same spirit. Therefore we do not ask for any stated fee of membership from those desirous to join in this ministry of prayer. While postage and stationery will cost money, we are sure that, this concern being in right ordering, all needful expenses will be met.

Decision.—The intercession of Christ at the right hand of God ought to make us decided, undaunted, and zealous in the profession of his Gospel. Too many bear his name who neither wear his image nor keep his commands.—J. Thornton.

Christ's Mission, New York.

THE work carried on by Rev. James A. O'Connor at Christ's Mission, on Twenty-first Street, New York, is unique of its kind in America. While a general mission work is conducted, it is specially designed for Roman Catholics, many of whom have been brought out of the darkness of Romish superstitions into the light of God.

A peculiarly interesting feature of the work has been the reception of priests into the Home of the Mission; no fewer than sixty, who have gone there for advice and instruction, having left the Roman Church. These men are now engaged as pastors, teachers, missionaries, or members of useful professions. The Mission building is worth about 30,000dols., and was purchased nine years ago. A few days since there was a mortgage balance of 2,000dols. due on it, but nearly half this sum was either given or promised at the anniversary services on April 29. The property is held by a board of trustees, members of Evangelical Churches.

The head and founder of the Mission, Rev. James A. O'Connor, has undoubtedly been raised up by God to do his special and important work—a work the value of which cannot be over-estimated in view of the immense political power that can be, and is, controlled here by men who are the avowed servitors and agents of a foreign prince. He was educated for the priesthood in the Sulpician seminaries in Paris and Baltimore, and in 1871. He withdrew, however, from the priesthood seven years later, because he lost faith in the doctrines of the Church as well as in many of the religious acts performed by himself and other priests. He was not converted at that time, and began the study of medicine. In the following year, however, he did "see Jesus," and he has been busily engaged in introducing sinners to the Saviour ever since.

The twenty-first anniversary was marked by something of a celebration, and two prominent pastors, Dr. R. S. MacArthur and Dr. D. J. Burrell, who have known the Mission for a long time came, and gave greetings in the afternoon meeting at the Masonic Temple; while in the evening, testimonies from friends who had been converted from Romanism were reinforced by interesting addresses by Mr. R. Cope Morgan, of London, and Mrs. Morgan. Dr. Burrell spoke of his first acquaintance with Father O'Connor, and of sympathy with his work. He felt that one way of describing that work was to set it forth as getting priests and others to

of the people—to get away from a position between them and God. He also emphasized the value of human help and sympathy in soul-saving work.

Dr. MacArthur's political — or rather, patriotic — views often pervade his pulpit utterances, and he has pronounced and well-grounded apprehensions of the menace to the American body politic, contained in the Roman Catholic system. He told of a conversation with an educated Hindoo in Benares, who said that if Tammany Hall was an example of the working out of Republican principles, he was glad to belong to an Imperial country, and if that organization's actions were the outcome of the Christian religion, he thanked all the gods he knew that he was a pagan. The doctor drove home his point by the startling announcement that Tammany Hall was "the Catholic Church in municipal politics," and he related one or two incidents connected with one of our Tammany mayors that would have been amusing if they had not been so serious.

Among the speakers in the evening was Rev. Dr. McFaul, who was the first priest to come to Father O'Connor, and who had travelled from a distant city to be present. He is now a Methodist pastor, who has seen great success during eighteen years of labour. Dr. A. B. King strongly urged the claims of the Mission for financial support, declaring his perfect satisfaction with the results achieved.

In the Hyderabad District.

THE seven circuits constituting this district of the Wesleyan Methodist Missions continue to give evidence of steady advance on every hand. Here, in the heart of rural India, the beauty of the Gospel of Christ is being unfolded to the blindest and most depressed of its serf population. The periodical visits of the native minister, and the devoted attention to their needs of the missionary, interpret to them the love of One to whom they have never been taught to look for salvation. In every circuit the progressive spirit has prevailed, and during the year there has been every evidence of Divine blessing upon the efforts put forth. The native Christian community now numbers over 5,000. During the year there have been from heathenism. Each year also marks a better organized effort for the systematic religious instruction of the people. The system of leaving the training of Christian workers to the discretion and opportunity of each circuit minister has been superseded, and the scheme is now complete for a central Theological Training Institution, in every way suitable to the long-felt needs and the capabilities of the students.

From Secunderabad, Revs. W. Hunt Soper and N. David furnish reassuring reports of the progress of the year. The class for women has been well attended, and has proved a means of so often in danger of being neglected by reason of the excessive care and drudgery of domestic duties. The five schools continue to flourish. In the Alver circuit converts have been received from an area extending over thirty villages. In one of these the catechist is a son of the soil. His force of character and originality combine to make him an ardent Evangelist. Endeavours have been made to secure his services as a schoolmaster, but his evangelistic proclivities have made his schoolmastering a melancholy failure.

Joseph seats himself in front of his class, and teaches, placidly enough, until he discovers a strange face in the street. Down go lesson book and cane; and, seizing a hymn book, he sallies forth to meet the stranger. In two minutes he is singing a hymn; five minutes later he is in the middle of an address, with a crowd about him. Here he stays, oblivious of his school, until his voice is tired, and he can talk and sing no more.

The Karim Nagar circuit, in which, fifteen years ago, there were not nine followers of Christ, has now divided into fifty-three congregations, with eighteen pastors. The Boys' Boarding School and Theological Institution had, at the end of the year, fifty-three Christian boys, six Mohammedans, and six Hindoos, who are reaching the necessary educational fitness for service as village teachers or preachers.

From other circuits the reports are equally gratifying, and the unsparing and tireless labours of the missionaries to India's heathens are being followed by the prayerful and practical sympathy of God's people.

The address of Rev. Benjamin Pratt, Chairman and General Superintendent of the District, is Secunderabad, Deccan, India.

Antwerp Sailors' Rest.—In a letter to a correspondent, Miss Smith, who opened the Sailors' Rest here, writes:—"Many Americans come over on the cattle boats, and, the boarding masters having taken all their advance notes, they land here without a penny, and no Home will take the sailors in without a week's board in advance. They go to the American Consul, but he will not do anything for them; he says that as they came in English boats, they must go to the English Consul, and the English Consul sends them away, as they are American citizens! The consequence is, they walk the streets until, through hunger and cold, they get ill, and have to go to the hospital. We give a night's lodging and food as often as we can, but there are no cheap places as in England."

In Aid of Indian Orphans.

A SCHEME inaugurated by the esteemed widow of Colonel Robert Tytler, in the interests of the orphans in India is being accorded much sympathetic support. Mrs. Tytler is about to establish a Protestant institution, to be known as "Our Saviour's Orphan Home." Many similar institutions already exist, but when it is considered how vast is the number of helpless children, deprived of parents as a result of plague and famine, it will be acknowledged that this timely project is deserving of every encouragement.

The Home is to be entirely self-supporting after the first year, by the sale of farm and garden produce, and the work done by the inmates. The orphans will be taught various trades, and both boys and girls will be instructed in domestic duties. By means of the knowledge acquired of different handicrafts they will be prepared on leaving the Home, to earn an honest living among their own people. Miss Josephine Eltzholtz, M.D., has proceeded to India for the purpose of collecting orphans for the Home, which is to be located between the military station of Umballa and Kalka.

The entire cost of the orphanage is to be £2,000, towards which £500 has already been subscribed. Mrs. Tytler's address is Bonnie Morn, Simla, India.

Evangelical Society of Geneva.

THE General Committee of this Society have delegated Pastor Thomas Vernier to visit Great Britain with the object of awakening a deeper interest in its work. The Society makes the evangelization of France its principal aim, and employs fifteen pastors and evangelists, and seventy colporteurs. The field of activity embraces forty-four departments, extending over one-half of France. During the summer French services are held in various localities of Switzerland, visited by strangers, including Interlaken, Ragatz, Baden, Thun, Beatenberg, Lucerne, &c. The Society has founded a permanent station at Cairo, of which Pastor Perrelet has charge. The Theological School receives young men from Belgium, France, Italy, and Switzerland. Several of the former pupils are now labouring as missionaries in Africa.

Communications to Pastor Vernier may be addressed to the care of Miss Ryffel, 50, Burlington Road, St. Stephen's Square, Westbourne Park, W.

Roman Catholics of Argentina.

WRITING from Buenos Aires, Mrs. Charles Torre gives some encouraging particulars of the Spanish meetings and other services amongst Roman Catholics in the Argentine capital: "Some eight years ago, friends in England and Ireland contributed sufficient money to enable us to buy and erect on a piece of land, a small zinc and wood-lined hall. We were very thankful for this building at that time, but it has now become altogether inadequate in accommodation for the numbers who are coming to hear the Gospel. Our converts are mostly poor, but such is their desire to have a new permanent brick building that they have decided to try and raise about £5 monthly towards this object." The day-school connected with the Mission continues to flourish, and children will soon have to be refused on the plea of "no room." By means of the printing press, given by friends in Dublin, 24,000 monthly periodicals are issued and circulated in every province of the Republic. The Mission gives every promise of success, although unfortunately hampered by reason of the present inadequate accommodation. Mrs. Charles Torre may be addressed: Quilmes, Buenos Aires, South America.

The Messengers of the Gospel are not sent to the houses of the rich, or the palaces of the noble, but to the highways and hedges, where misery mourns, where poverty pines, and where baseness hides its head.—A. Swanston.

THE LATE

Fraulein von Weling.

COMMUNICATIONS from Blankenburg inform us that the death of Fräulein von Weling, which we announced in our last issue, was remarkably sudden. Though she had been ill for some weeks, the end was not expected. It came without suffering, for which the friends at the Allianzhaus are very thankful to God.

FRAULEIN VON WELING was the daughter of a Scotch lady, attached at one time to the present Queen of Sweden. Her father was a German baron. Through this connection with Great Britain, the young German girl came over to visit relatives, at the time when Reginald Radcliffe, Grant of Arndilly, and Brownlow North were holding their Gospel meetings; and beneath the burning words of the first of these she was brought to the Saviour. He did not know of it till years afterwards, when attending a conference at Siegen, near the Rhine, presided over by the late Professor Christlieb. She was then emboldened to tell him of the way the Lord had led her.

During the Franco-German war, Fräulein von Weling nursed the wounded, and amongst them a young soldier from the Prussian province of Saxony, whose life she saved by her skilful and assiduous care. Out of gratitude his parents invited her to visit them year by year, and in one of those visits she became interested in a boy, whom she adopted. That incident decided her after-life. She became interested in orphans, though she waited still further for divine guidance on her path.

In the meanwhile, an aged homœopathic physician was living in the little town of Blankenburg, in Luther's Land, and was praying that God would direct the steps of some consecrated worker to Thüringia. Fräulein von Weling heard of this godly man, and was ultimately brought into contact with him. She felt that to purchase the house with her little patrimony, and settle down to do what she could for the town and district. She sank all she had in the purchase, and ever afterwards lived a life of entire dependence on the care of God, making her wants known to Him who cannot fail his children, though He may sometimes test them, as He often tested her.

Her orphan family steadily increased, until she had over a dozen children, of several nationalities, dependent on her. Some of these, greatly to her joy, have given themselves to God, and turned their thoughts to service in the mission field. The work grew in several other directions, and an evangelist was sent forth into the mountain districts. He has preached the Gospel in those villages, in which the well-known German dolls are made. Various meetings for the townsfolk and their children were organized, and two papers were started—a Gospel weekly, Für Dich ("For thee"), and a fortnightly, the Allianzblatt, a German counterpart of THE CHRISTIAN.

Though these operations have brought the name of Fräulein von Weling before a large Christian public, a still more general interest has been taken in the conference which she was privileged to summon from year to year since 1886. Commencing in a small way, this gathering has grown remarkably, hundreds of Christians from various lands, pastors and teachers, as well as men and women of varied occupations, assembling to hear addresses on life and godliness. The arrangements have ever combined practical wisdom with the principles of faith. All visitors have been treated as guests. Their beds are engaged in the town and paid for by the hostess of the convention, and all meals are provided at her cost in the houses and the adjoining hall. Barons and countesses, generals and pastors, and quite ordinary people, sit at the same tables partaking of the simply prepared food. The gifts of the visitors have always covered the outlay.

From the first, Fräulein von Weling enjoyed the counsel and help of Dr. Baedeker; she also had the assistance of Dr. Ziemann and Mr. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, both of them now with God. From time to time the Spirit of God has moved mightily on the crowded gatherings, during the addresses, the prayers, and especially the singing. The convention has ever been held in the name of the Evangelical Alliance, which also gives the name of Allianzhaus to the little settlement. At length has been taken away. Many mourn a sad loss; but they do not sorrow as those without Christian confidence. It is a pleasure to learn that the work is to be carried on as hitherto, an executive committee having been constituted, consisting of Dr. Baedeker, Baron von Thümmler, and Herr Ernst F. Hoyer. In a letter to us, Herr Hoyer says: "The death has been a great shock to the household. Will you ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray much for the work, and especially for the bereaved orphans, doubly orphaned now?"

A TRIBUTE BY DR. JOHN GRITTON.

"Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates" (Prov. xxxi. 31).

The tidings that our beloved and honoured friend had "gone home" came as I was finishing my reading of the Book of Proverbs. Unlike the "virtuous woman" of the passage quoted above, Anna von Weling had no husband to "praise her," and no children of her own to "call her blessed," for the Lord alone was her husband and the orphans of other women her only children. But she shall be praised by many; and scores of helpless orphans in Germany and Turkey arise to bless her name and her memory.

I first met the departed heroine—for such she was—and became acquainted with the beauties of her Thüringian home, in September, 1892, when I attended the Blankenburg Conference as a delegate from the Evangelical Alliance. In that and the intervening years I made some eight visits to Blankenburg—attending four conferences, and spending weeks at a time among the beloved community of the Allianzhaus, engaged in Bible readings, and often giving addresses at morning and evening worship. It was heart-stirring to watch the growth of things from year to year. In 1892 there were two houses, within which all found a place; and the attendance at the conference numbered about seventy. In 1899 the houses had increased to three—the stately "Heim" having been added, and on the hillside above the "Heim" stood the Allianzhalle, seating 800, and holding nearly 1,000. In 1892 one room sufficed for meals; while in 1899 we were separated into four halls, and even then were pressed for room.

It was my happiness to be at the laying of the foundation of the Conference Hall in June, 1898, and again at the opening of the Hall in September of that year. The languages used at the stone-laying were a testimony to the marvellous influence and wide extent of Miss von Weling's work. German, English, French, Telugu, Tamil, Turkish, and Armenian were all heard, telling out verses of the Divine Word—while one day, when we counted up languages spoken by those at table, they amounted to sixteen, the very number in which, at the wonderful Bâle International Congress of the Y.M.C.A. in the same year, we pronounced the benediction at the close of a prayer meeting.

Who may tell of the extent, variety, and world-wide influence of our departed friend—boarding-house, orphanage, convalescent home, literary work of editing and publishing the Allianzblatt and the Für Dich; organizing and sharing in evangelistic efforts in the Thüringiawald; the Bible school, the Bible readings, the Conference, with all its toil, and provision, and direction; the charge of sixty or seventy Armenian orphans in Turkey, and of nearly two score Armenian widows in Egypt! Certainly the Lord greatly honoured our sister, showing in her case how much may be effected by a wholly-devoted disciple. I do not mean that all could do as much.

In sending Anna von Weling into his field of labour, our Lord Jesus commissioned one whose intellectual power and versatile genius far exceeded the average ability of his servants, for she was very richly endowed. Linguist, poet, preacher, organizer, journalist, translator, director, housewife! The love of Christ constrained her, strengthened her for work which would have crushed others, and made her a mighty power in Germany, Russia, Sweden, Great Britain, and other lands. She was indeed of "price far above rubies. . She did good and not evil all her days. . She considered a field and bought it. . She stretched out her hand to the poor; yea, she reached forth her hand to the needy. . Strength and honour were her clothing. . She opened her mouth with wisdom. . Favour is deceitful and beauty is vain, but she feared the Lord and shall be praised." Oftentimes the recipient of her kindness, I was proud of her friendship, and am thankful that I knew her. Let all the glory be to her God!

The Last Hymn.

(Matt. xxvi. 30.)

THE feast is o'er; the gracious words are spoken
Which bid us thus remember Christ our Lord;
"Until He come," this is the precious token,
With truest comfort stored.

But listen now! The quiet room is filling
With heavenly melody, the sweet refrain
Led by the Lord, its tender pathos thrilling
Again and yet again.

At length it ceases, but its echoes linger,
Like chords which softly vibrate, long and low,
Or as the soothing touch of Christ's own finger
Upon the fevered brow.

The Saviour knows what anguish He is meeting,
Yet speaks of hope, and peace, and joys above;
And in the precious hour, so swift and fleeting,
Reveals the Father's love.

The Great Assembly Hall.

MR. F. N. CHARRINGTON AND HIS WORK.

THE record of the well-known Great Assembly Hall at Mile End shows that for nearly 9,000 consecutive nights evangelistic services have been conducted in connection with the Tower Hamlets Mission, either in the present building or its predecessors. Nor is there any sign of falling off in interest. On the contrary, the work shows continued signs of SPIRITUAL PROSPERITY.

The vast hall may be described as a poor man's cathedral. It is thronged every Sunday with plain work-a-day people, who are attracted, not by ornate ceremonial, for there is none, but by the earnest and feeling delivery of the Gospel message.

The story of the work is inseparably associated with that of its founder, Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON, whose action in renouncing his partnership interest in the great and lucrative brewing business which bears the family name gave so severe a blow to the liquor traffic, and afforded such stimulus to the causes of religion and philanthropy in East London, and, indeed, throughout the world. The value of the possessions which Mr. Charrington abandoned for conscience' sake was assessed by the legal adviser of the Charringtons at a million and a quarter pounds sterling.

The step was taken as a direct result of conversion. Mr. Charrington felt a divine call to labour for the teeming and godless multitudes of the East, and realized that a drink-seller, preaching the Gospel to the lapsed masses, would seem as one that mocked. Mr. Charrington first became spiritually impressed during a visit to the Continent in the company of Mr. William Rainsford (son of the late Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of Belgrave Chapel). While studying John iii., in accordance with a promise made to his friend, Mr. Charrington believed unto salvation. Proceeding to look for suitable work in which to engage, the young "converted brewer" first conducted classes for rough lads. At that time the streets of the Whitechapel district were infested by gangs of young roughs, who had early become proficient in vice and crime. Yielding to Gospel influences, many of these forsook evil pursuits and were helped to start life afresh. The work had a remarkable effect upon the adults of the neighbourhood. The lads' parents, amazed at the change in the home behaviour of their children, crowded to the meetings to learn "how it was done." It became necessary to do something for these interested inquirers, and, happily, the late Mr. Pemberton Barnes built a suitable hall to seat 500 persons, and gave it for the purposes of the mission. The next step was to hire a convenient site on the main thoroughfare, Mile End Road, and erect a large tent thereon. In this canvas tabernacle, a band of converted soldiers, lately transferred from Dublin to London, were greatly used of God. Although inexperienced, their earnestness impressed the people, and many rough characters became converted. Nearly all these young military fellows subsequently became evangelists or missionaries, one of them being Mr. W. R. Lane.

So the mission went from strength to strength. The site on which the present hall stands was purchased, and a large circular tent erected, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presiding at the opening. Later, a portion of the iron building used by Messrs. Moody and Sankey was substituted, and, ultimately, the Great Assembly Hall was built. The week-night hall, Mr. Charrington recalls, was opened by Sir S. Arthur Blackwood; the foundation-stone of the imposing frontage was laid by the great Earl Shaftesbury, and the buildings opened by Lord Aberdeen. The hall itself was completed in 1886, and opened by Mr. John Cory. Nor did the work flag on being so admirably housed. Any tendency to "settle down" was successfully combated, evangelistic fervency being maintained. To-day, as in times past, the Gospel is preached with simplicity and fearlessness, and a large body of workers find joy in leading sinners to Christ. It is a striking testimony to the attractiveness of the message that this, probably the largest mission hall in the world, situated in a district bristling with difficulties, is crowded to the doors Sunday by Sunday, while the Saturday evening prayer meeting is seldom attended by fewer than 1,000 persons.

As to the widespread effects of the work, testimony was recently borne by Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelization Society, who said that he was continually receiving letters from correspondents from all parts of the globe, containing intimations of blessings received, in some cases personally to their own souls, at the services they had attended in the Great Assembly Hall, in other cases, by others with whom they had come into contact.

The Book Saloon and Coffee Palace are useful adjuncts of the work, and various undertakings of a social character have grown up around the central mission; but the chief feature of Mr. Charrington's work is, as of yore, a prayerful and sustained effort to declare the good tidings of salvation to those who are beyond the reach of regular church influences, and who usually regard religion with feelings of indifference or contempt. It is "the man in the street" whose welfare is sought.

It is important to observe the effect upon the morals of East London. Squalid and vicious as parts of Bethnal Green and Mile End may be, the district shows a great improvement as compared with its condition twenty or thirty years since. This result is traceable not only to the elevating influences, but to the direct action of Mr. Charrington and the band of workers who have rallied to his support. In endeavouring to call public attention to the evils of the drink traffic, Mr. Charrington has had to face many attacks. Certain objectors hired bullies at £5 per head, with instructions given to "finish" the evangelist. While carrying on open-air work outside music-halls and the gin-palaces, many riotous scenes were caused by the action of drunken and excited roughs. Mr. Charrington became the butt of cartoonists and satirical writers, eager to support the powerful drink traffic, but he pursued his course unfalteringly. On one occasion, the police stood three deep around a platform inside one of the mission halls, while a troop of mounted constables waited near by, in order to assist in quelling the violence of a horde of paid ruffians. On another occasion, whilst speaking outside a music-hall, he was arrested on a false charge. He spent a night in the cells, but was discharged in the morning.

The haunts of vice, with which the neighbourhood was infested, were also dealt with, and a remarkable reformation was brought about. The once notorious "Rogues' Walk," which was to the East what midnight Piccadilly still is to the West, no longer exists. The story of the reformation is a marvellous one. Hundreds of infamous resorts were closed, and the character of entire streets became changed, until the cry of "Charrington is coming!" sufficed to turn the evildoers to flight. It is remarkable, however, that some who lived by the nefarious traffic in vice turned to Mr. Charrington for help and counsel, and became humble and consistent followers of Christ. As for the women who were rescued, they were received into a home, and subsequently placed out in situations.

The present position of the Tower Hamlets Mission, and of its many social and philanthropic offshoots, so far as spiritual matters are concerned, excites the gratitude of all who are anxious for the reclamation of the masses and the prosperity of the Evangelical cause. A great regiment of Christian workers has been raised up to witness for the truth, and at the indoor services, and in the open-air work, an has been experienced. Mr. Charrington has just completed the fiftieth year of his age, and in recognition of this "jubilee" his coadjutor, Mr. E. H. Kerwin, is endeavouring to raise a fund of £5,000 towards the extinction of the building debt. Such a consummation is devoutly to be wished, so that Mr. Charrington may be freed from financial anxiety, and enabled to devote still more time and attention to the great work of evangelization.

"Ye Are . . . that ye May . .!"

THE eleventh annual Conference at Birmingham, for the deepening of spiritual life, was held last week, and the words quoted above (taken from 1 Pet. ii. 9), by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan in one of his addresses, tersely set forth the purpose of the gatherings.

Whatever, by the grace of God, we are by way of attainment in the Christian life, it is in order that God may be glorified and the world blessed. The same thought was presented under another aspect by Rev. Walter Hackney, when he urged that the purpose of fruit-bearing is not for the benefit of the tree.

Thus there was throughout the Conference a strongly practical tone, which should yield result during the ensuing months in increased activity for God in the salvation of the lost. The meetings, which were held in the Town Hall, were very well attended on all occasions, but those in the evening were crowded even to to the entire orchestra accommodation.

The speakers, too, were numerous, including Revs. Dr. Elder Cumming, Walter Hackney, Wright Hay, E. W. Moore, Campbell Morgan, R. Middleton, J. G. Mantle, J. Sloan, F. S. Webster, H. D. Williamson; with Captain Tottenham as chairman. These formed a strong platform, and their words were both weighty and wise.

A deep impression was made on Thursday evening, and a large number rose, in response to Mr. Morgan's invitation, to indicate their desire or determination that the Conference should bear very real fruit in their lives.

Friday afternoon and evening were devoted more especially to the work and claims of foreign missions, encouragement in this direction having been given in former years by the acceptance on the part of some of the call to go forth and preach the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. "Ye are . . . that ye may!" May this fact constitute a call to many others to show forth, at home and abroad, the excellencies of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light. Workers in Nottingham.

WHILE staying for a few days in this Midland city of world-wide fame for its lace goods, I took the opportunity of calling upon a few well-known Christian workers, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, and, like their Divine Master, are ever seeking to save the lost.

It was very gratifying to hear of the steady, though none the less real, work being done, and the encouraging signs of the coming revival on every hand. One brother quaintly said, "It's coming; though at present it seems no larger than a man's hand, yet faith sees in that little cloud the long-looked-for and much-needed blessing."

Mr. J. Savidge, the veteran missionary of the

had a most interesting story to tell of the work of God amongst the poor, the cabmen, and the railway employés, but bemoaned the fact that, though the population of Nottingham is upwards of 250,000, the funds of the City Mission will not allow the committee to employ more than two male missionaries and one lady, the time of the latter being largely occupied at the police-court. From what I saw, the need is very great, and there should be a dozen missionaries, and half that number of ladies at least, effectually to work this great industrial population.

THE UNITED GOSPEL MISSION.

This Mission is doing excellent work at their large and well-arranged Mission Hall in Circus Street, and reports increased prosperity under the superintendence of Mr. W. A. Kerr, who became their Pastor a little over twelve months ago.

POLICE COURT MISSION.

This Agency is under the direction of the Southwell Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, who had the good fortune to secure the services of Mr. W. Lightfoot as police court missionary; he is a wise, sympathetic and indefatigable worker, and has the confidence of the magistrates and police officials. During the six and a-half years Mr. Lightfoot has been in Nottingham he has rescued a number of lads from a criminal life, and they are now doing well. Miss Nunn, of the Nottingham City Mission, has charge of the female branch of the police court work.

THE DISCHARGED PRISONERS' AID SOCIETY.

The committee of this Society have just issued their seventeenth annual report; it is interesting reading, and shows a good, though quiet and unobtrusive work, through their zealous agent, Mr. S. Pollard. The Society has a wood-chopping yard in Church Street, but the agent experiences great difficulty in obtaining permament employment for discharged prisoners.

OPEN-AIR WORK.

Regular open-air meetings are held in the most populous centres of the city by the Circus Street Mission workers, under the direction of Mr. J. T. Jones, the local inspector of the N.S.P.C.C. Mr. Jones is a good organizer, knows the city well, and has the happy faculty of attracting others to him. He is convinced that the open-air services in Nottingham are bearing much fruit.

I was pleased to hear that Mr. James Dupe, in spite of his advanced age, still continues his testimony for God, in the market place. I called twice at his place of business, but was not fortunate enough to find him in. Mr. Dupe has for upwards of forty years gone on his way through evil and good report, and, according to the testimony of some that know him well, has done a work in Nottingham which no one else has attempted. My limited stay in the city did not permit me calling upon others who are doing equally good work, and are endeavouring to seek and save the lost. The work of the Youths' Institute, which had just held its annual meeting, I referred to in your last issue.

An Historic Ragged-School.

ALTHOUGH it may not be very generally known to explorers of London, Dove Row, Haggerston, is a poor and industrial neighbourhood, in which a school was opened in the forties, when Lord Ashley was the leader of the then new Ragged-School movement. The spacious and conveniently-arranged building, which was opened a few days ago, at a cost of over £2,000, is in itself a striking proof that such operations as are carried on are not only not obsolete, but actually need to be extended. In former days a far-reaching work was carried on, the cost being mainly supplied by friends at Hackney, a once favourite suburb from which the best families have since largely removed farther away into the country. Surrounded as it is by gas-works, factories, saw-mills, and wood-yards, the school still needs some searching for before it is found.

Mr. W. H. Brown presided at the opening meeting, and Mr. W. Gibbs Cotsford made a statement regarding

THE NOW COMPLETED ENTERPRISE.

They were deeply thankful that they had been able to raise the building. The work had been commenced by Mr. Kelsey as a day and night school. In consequence of the School Board, there were not now so many voluntary workers in night-schools as there were. The work was taken over by the Church, and it increased so that they had to seek for new premises; and then Mr. Charles Cox came as a God-sent man to Dove Row. It was explained how in course of time the managers succeeded in buying the freehold of the school and of the house adjoining. The Committee resolved to build on that site, and some large gifts had been received. The total cost was £2,150, leaving a debt of £208.

Rev. W. Marshall, the former pastor of Cambridge Heath Church, had promised to collect £500 for the building fund, and until that was done he offered to lend £350 free of interest. They had been greatly indebted to the Ragged School Union, to the London Congregational Union, and to Rev. J. R. Richards, of Cambridge Heath Congregational Church. Mr. John Lowles, M.P., said he was grateful to see the new building, as he knew that the lives of the people were lightened by its operations. Other addresses followed.

Overworked Young Women.

THE object of the Y.W.C.A. convalescent, sick aid, and holiday department is to minister to the physical needs, and to vary the monotony of the lives, of the women and girls who, day after day, year after year, plod on at their very often uninteresting work.

Miss Butler, hon. treasurer, writes:—"Perhaps many who take their yearly holiday as a matter of course cannot realize what it means to these girls. The following case is an example:—A servant girl, who had been overworked, underpaid, and whose health had entirely broken in consequence, was sent free to a home at Eastbourne. It was her first visit to the sea. The morning after she arrived the other girls in the home took her down to the beach, making her shut her eyes. When told to open them, and she beheld the broad blue expanse of water, the poor girl burst into tears, and during the remainder of her three weeks' holiday her one wish was just to sit and gaze at the waves. Most of the cases who apply for holidays are those suffering from anæmia or from general debility. We would fain do much more for the army of women-labourers, and we feel sure, if friends knew of our great need of free beds, especially at the seaside, some might offer rooms in lodges and cottages, such free invitations having been a source of much pleasure and benefit in past years. There are, however, many toilers who, through home circumstances, are unable to take a holiday, and it is for them we plan the 'Saturday Afternoon Expeditions.' On that day factories and workrooms generally close by 1.30 p.m., and the women and girls eagerly join us at a railway-station to avail themselves of a kind hospitality provided in some private park or garden. Very great pleasure is derived from these outings, and they have proved red-letter days in the lives of many. Other friends may be glad to throw open their grounds for the enjoyment of such parties." Miss Butler's address is—care of Miss F. E. Cole, 25, Redburn Street, Tedworth Square, S.W.

The May Meetings.

Army Scripture Readers' Society.

THOSE friends of the soldier in whose minds the thought of his eternal welfare is uppermost, will be much interested in the records of this Society during a period covering the outbreak of war upon a scale never anticipated. General A. H. HUTCHINSON presided over the annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday week; and the secretary's statement referred to fresh exertions on the part of the Society, necessitated by the special duties of the past year, together with unfeigned gratitude to God for the noble way in which the work has been supported.

Immediately upon the beginning of the war in South Africa, the Society fully recognized the importance of Readers accompanying the troops, and issued a special appeal to the public for funds to cover the additional cost. The response was speedy and large, so that it was at once decided to send out six Readers. The War Office provided free passages, also arranging for extra field pay being issued by the Army paymasters (chargeable to the Society), and that the Readers should be taken upon the strength, and provided with free rations. Subsequently, six more Readers were sent out to meet urgent demands; and the Society is now seeking additional suitable men, Lord Roberts having cabled his willingness to receive more.

Reports from Readers at the front, and of their work from others, are most encouraging. Eternity alone will reveal the blessings and comfort these men have brought to our soldiers; and the result of this campaign, as far as human knowledge goes, is that hundreds are growing into thousands of those who have passed into the kingdom of Christ. One worker writes: "If the blessing continues at this rate, it will be one of the greatest revivals ever known in the annals of the British Army." The value of Readers' labours among the wounded in the hospitals has been frequently referred to, and it is hoped that more men may presently be available for this branch of the work.

Reader LENNOX FRASER, attached to the Black Watch, writes: "We carry on the work in a large marquee, and every night the so that we have to lift the sides of the tent all round to allow of those outside joining in our services. The soldiers assemble for hymn singing an hour before the meeting." The Society's Readers are stationed as follows:—England, thirty-four; Ireland, nine; South Africa, twelve; elsewhere abroad, four. The general fund shows an excess of income over expenditure of £1,057. There is also a balance of £998 at the bank, upon the South African Fund; but the charges for field pay, messing, &c., payable to the War Office, have not yet been claimed. The reserve and benevolent fund has a balance of £433, and has provided pensions for four Readers.

After referring to the way in which God has humbled us for our national pride, the CHAIRMAN said that, despite the prevalent dallying with Rome, and the existence of our drink curse, and other evils, the Lord is raising us up as a people to do his work. The Society is finding many open doors for its operations, and needs prayerful assistance in order to enter them with God's Word at a time when He speaks loudly to men through the solemn circumstances of war.

Rev. E. J. KENNEDY expressed his conviction that the Society is well worthy of all the support that can possibly be given to it. A most remarkable characteristic of Christian work in this century, and one attended by much blessing, is the specific application of effort to the different classes and callings of men. With so little recognition by the Press of God's claims in connection with the campaign in South Africa, it was indeed refreshing to find one so exalted as Lord Roberts writing home and saying, and of the brave soldiers, he had overcome the enemy; and the speaker told how pulpit mention of that utterance had led an artisan hearer to trust Christ as his Saviour. There is great success lying ahead of such a work as this, but God depends upon us to do our utmost for its support. Soldiers will very often unburden their minds to Readers rather than to ministers, because the former know the difficulties of a military life; and it is the constraining love of Christ that keeps the Readers at work among the horrors and miseries of the front.

"BY THE HELP OF GOD"

A graphic and touching description of the need for Christian ministrations in camp, on the field, and in hospital, was given by Major TREEBY, who came home wounded from the relieving force before Ladysmith. Tommy Atkins, he said, is not much regarded in times of peace, but his soul is very precious to the Saviour. Some results of this Society's work in days gone by were realized at the front, as never before; for while the camp was ringing with the praises of God, men were found under conviction of sin, making reference to the prayers going up for them from dear ones at home. The scenes witnessed by the speaker made him feel that the need for Christian work among soldiers is far beyond all that has been done for them.

The Christian Community.

THE varied religious, benevolent, and social agencies associated with the Christian Community were duly recognised and warmly appreciated at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Monday of last week. There was a numerous attendance, and the tone of the proceedings was one of fervent praise and thanksgiving for the many tokens of Divine favour through the labours of another year. Abstracts of the annual report were read by the secretary (Mr. James Atkinson), who enumerated briefly the many channels through which the poorest are reached and ministered to, both in spiritual and temporal considerations.

Founded in the year 1685 as an undenominational and voluntary society, the Christian Community has united, in one common object, representatives of all evangelical bodies. It is essentially a home missionary organization, its members seeking the salvation of the lost, and the relief of the distress of the poorest classes in London. Every candidate is required to be a member of a church, and must pass an examination before being finally accepted.

The Chairman (Mr. F. A. BEVAN) sounded a note of heartfelt gratitude for the steady progress which had been made. Notwithstanding the numerous demands made upon the generosity of the public, he was pleased to announce that there is a substantial surplus of income. The workers were prompted in their voluntary service by love for Christ and love for the souls of men. Speaking of the change which had taken place in the chairman attributed this to the zealous and devoted labours of the workers.

Rev. M. H. LE PLA pleaded for larger sympathy and wider support for the Society in order that its workers might be increased, and the Gospel be taken to the millions who were perishing for the want of the knowledge of Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

Rev. JOHN E. WAKERLEY, speaking as a guardian of the poor, said it was a joy to witness the heartiness with which the inmates of their workhouses enter into the simple Gospel services conducted by the workers. The labour was heroic, but it was a luxury to LAY HOLD UPON SINNING MEN.

Rev. STANLEY TAPE, in the course of a brief, earnest address, counselled the workers to cultivate four qualities essential to successful labour among the poor:—Grace—gracious affability of disposition and demeanour; Gumption—sanctified common sense—a sense of what is fitting to the time, the man, and the occasion; Grit—some people talk so long about their plans that they have no time to take part in active service. They must also have Go—"The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up." If they could but secure these four horses to the chariot of their personal salvation, what progress would be made in the future in the work to which they had dedicated themselves! A few closing words of encouragement from Dr. GRITTON concluded a very happy and profitable meeting.

Friendless and Fallen.

IT seems to follow, as a cruel nemesis on the advancing prosperity of a great nation, that increased power and affluence bring with them increased opportunity for the practice of social sin. To stem this flowing tide of immorality is the work of the Christian believer and the true philanthropist, whose active missions should include the offer of mercy and rescue to every erring woman treading our streets, and whose labours should extend to the watching of every development of unchastity, both in half-concealed obscurity and in public display. In this two-fold mission, to seek and to save the lost, the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution has continued to work upon the lines of prevention as well as of cure.

Sir HENRY H. BEMROSE presided at the forty-third anniversary, held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week. Great blessings attending the efforts put forth in connection with the institution, side by side with the evidence of much remaining to be done in a field ever ready for the harvest, were points of the statement made by the secretary, Mr. WM. J. TAYLOR. The Society maintains five homes for its rescue and preventive work, and also has an open-all-night refuge at 37, Manchester Street, King's Cross. In these six establishments 177 inmates can be accommodated. As regards the preventive work, 211 respectable but friendless young women were aided in various ways last year; and at the all-night refuge 468 were dealt with. Over 20,000 women and girls have been admitted since the refuge was opened. Much thought and time were devoted to help and advice in maternity cases.

The spiritual work of the Homes is continually kept in view, it being felt that reformation, based only on expediency, or even morality, fails to produce that which the Divine Spirit alone can accomplish, and which will be effective and lasting in its results towards God and before man. Voluntary workers, numbering 227, of whom seventy-five are ladies, have been associated with the Homes in conducting services and similar work. The income was £5,802, and expenditure left a balance at the bank; while loans have been partially repaid, so that the indebtedness upon the institution is reduced to £1,600.

In commending the Christlike work of the Institution to prayerful sympathy and adequate support, the CHAIRMAN said that, while details of the social evil are dealt with in theatres and novels, it is inconsistent to shrink from dealing with the subject in the spirit of the good Samaritan, whose merciful ministrations brought him into actual contact with suffering.

Rev. Prebendary Kitto voiced gratitude to God for the measure of blessing vouchsafed upon difficult work, which the speaker had watched with interest and sympathy from its very beginning. Christian men cannot allow their active compassion for the lost to be restricted by the statement that there will ever be a certain average of wickedness. The power of God, exercised through his people, is the only remedy for so-called hopeless problems.

Mention was made by Mr. Henry Varley of honoured names prominent in rescue work of various kinds among young and old who had done more to minimize crime than the whole police force of the country. From his own experience among men, he deduced strong encouragement for individual effort on behalf of the tempted and erring.

Religious Tract Society.

THE foreign work of the Religious Tract Society received cordial recognition from representatives of the great missionary societies, on the occasion of the recent breakfast held at Cannon Street Hotel.

The attendance was large, and the proceedings were of an enthusiastic character. Professor G. Sims Woodhead, M.D., who presided, made some introductory remarks, in which he described in appreciative terms how the Society provided the

for those actively engaged in the mission field. Following Professor Woodhead came Rev. Ch. Merle D'Aubigne (Agent-General of the Central Protestant Evangelization Society of France), who said that a notable change has come over France. Literature, which was formerly confined to towns, is now read even in the smallest villages, influencing the minds of the peasantry, who are the backbone of the country. After reference to some of the pernicious effects of the the speaker went on to describe the havoc caused by the immoral literature with which France is flooded. In Paris alone there are fifty papers which exist solely by purveying obscenities. Many of the best men of France are stirred with anxiety as to the present position of affairs, which needs to be met and remedied by a far-reaching effort of a counteracting character.

Rev. Henry Gulliford, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society at Mysore city, was the next speaker. He gave a review of the religious condition of India. Creeds and philosophies are being forsaken, and men's minds are in a state of unrest. In spite of the ignorance of masses of the people, literature has always exercised a powerful influence upon the country, and there is at the present time an urgent need for the printed Word, for supplies of healthy and instructive Christian literature.

A representative of Madagascar next spoke, in the person of Rev. W. E. Cousins (L.M.S.), Chairman of the Malagasy Bible Revision Committee, who expressed his appreciation of benefits received—especially in the matter of printing paper from the R.T.S.—describing the printing and publishing offices at Antananarivo and their varied undertakings. For many years a has been sent forth, which has penetrated into all parts of the island. Some of the early tracts have survived twenty-six years of opposition. The faith of the persecuted Christians has been nourished and upheld by such publications. As to the present requirements, a generation of native workers is growing up, quick to appreciate literature. Romanist pretensions have to be exposed, and the demand for good commentaries has to be met.

Some account of the recent Ecumenical Conference was next given by Rev. R. Lovett, one of the Society's secretaries, who said that its dominant note was its aggressiveness. It made no apology for missions, but rather busied itself with the question, How long will it be before the world is evangelized? It revealed the fact, too, that there are as many loyal and consecrated men and women waiting to go out as are already in the mission field; and the Conference adopted as its watchword, "The world for Jesus Christ in the twentieth century." The enthusiasm and desire for advance which had been shown must needs result in increased demands upon the Religious Tract Society, and to meet that demand strenuous efforts would be put forth.

Further stimulating words came from Miss Bartlett (C.E.Z.M.S.) of Amritsar, the sacred city of the Sikhs, who made special reference to the value of the and described how an illustrated tract had been the means of blessing in the Punjab villages. Subsequently, Rev. J. Wall, of Rome, told of good work in Italy, and the last speaker, Bishop Johnson, of the Niger, acknowledged the indebtedness of the native churches on the West Coast of Africa to the R.T.S. In the Yoruba country the Pilgrim's Progress and the Peep of Day have been translated into the vernacular of the district, and have proved most helpful in enabling the people to understand the Christian religion. Bishop Johnson believes in the power of native agency, but the natives need to be educated and trained, and in that important work the R.T.S. has assisted. The speaker concluded with an eloquent plea for increased interest in the land he represented, which, he pointed out, is being swamped by Mohammedanism and by liquor importations from Europe.

Mr. Marshall Broomhall (C.I.M.) held that tracts are to the missionary what ammunition is to the soldier. He went on to observe that the large demand for such supplies in China has given rise to a number of local tract societies, which issue quantities of useful publications. The parent society in London has greatly aided the work, and one result of its help is found in the fact that the missionaries are able to sell the tracts at half-price. Valuable aid had also been received from London in the issue of the Chinese annotated paragraph Bible, published at a price which renders it generally accessible.

The Peace Society.

THE Peace Society continues to prosecute its aims in spite of much discouragement. At the annual meeting, which was held in the Friends' Meeting-house, Bishopsgate Street, on May 22, Dr. W. Evans Darby presented the report, which stated that, notwithstanding the unfavourable incidents of the year, especially the war, and the inevitable consequences which had followed, substantial progress in the cause of peace was to be recorded, and the fact was to be noted that out of ten incidents of arbitration during the year, Great Britain had been a party to eight, which number of arbitrations to set against one war was significant. Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., speaking from the chair, said that there was no reason for discouragement because the effects of the Hague Conference had not come immediately.

The Dean of Ripon, who followed, desired the speedy cessation of the war and "the establishment of peace on a righteous and sound basis which alone will secure the union, happiness, and prosperity of the races forming the South African population." The Dean said he was glad the report did not call on them to judge all the details of the strife. They were unable, he was unable, to say that one side had been wholly right and the other side wholly wrong. Addresses were subsequently given by Miss P. H. Peckover and others.

Walworth Creche.—The fifth annual report of this useful institution speaks of continued work in the interest of poor mothers and their little ones. "Twopence only is charged for twelve hours' care of an infant, inclusive of good and nourishing food, combined with kindness, cleanliness, well-ventilated rooms, and fresh air." A removal will have to be made shortly, as the premises are to be taken down; but the workers hope to be able to buy or build a fresh home. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. F. Kinghorne, 26, Dagmar Road, Camberwell.

Protestant Women in Conference.

WHILE it is manifestly evident that the majority of Ritualistic clergy have as yet no intention of yielding their advanced and unscriptural practices, it is also certain that no efforts are being spared to ensure the success and ultimate triumph of Protestant principles. Of the various agencies seeking to uphold the Reformation Settlement in the Church and Constitution, the Women's Protestant Union has received the warm sympathy and support of an ever-widening circle of advocates of the cause it seeks to advance.

This was abundantly obvious at the three-days' Missionary Conference of the Union, held at Exeter Hall last week. The anniversary celebrations commenced on Wednesday afternoon with a and other workers, when the subjects discussed included "How to Increase the Influence and Usefulness of the Union," "How to Start and Maintain a Branch," &c. The meeting in the evening was presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, when addresses were delivered bearing upon "The Sacramental System versus the Gospel," by Rev. H. Lindsay Young; "The Evangelization of Ireland," by Miss J. Jameson, of the Irish Church Missions; and "The Romish Controversy in the Light of the Science of Rhetoric," by Rev. James Neil, formerly incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem.

On Thursday there were three meetings, at which various aspects of the conflict with Roman Catholicism and Ritualism were dealt with. In the afternoon, Mrs. Augustus Spencer, of Guildford, in the absence, through indisposition, of the president (Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot), gave an account of the Union's work during the year. There has been an addition of 1,037 members, besides seventy-one male associates. The junior divisions, the Girls' and Boys' Protestant Unions, had also grown in numbers. The sphere of the work of the Union was specially among women and children. The converts to Romanism were made not so much by Romish priests as by Sisters of Charity and other women under their direction and influence; and it was most desirable that women should seek to counteract the errors that women had done so much to spread.

In the evening there was a large and enthusiastic gathering, presided over by who delivered a vigorous address. There were two sides to the question with which they were brought face to face—the secular, or political aspect, and its spiritual side. The only chance of bringing before the Government this session his motion on sacerdotal teaching in voluntary schools had been taken from him. The Government had no pressure of public business, for they were going to adjourn the House a day sooner than usual—the day before his motion was to have come before them. There seemed something like a

UNIVERSAL CONSPIRACY

to hush up the question, and the children of voluntary schools were meanwhile having their minds perverted from Evangelical truth. The main object of one of the text-books issued by the National Society seemed to be to depreciate the work of the Reformation, and to teach that the Church of England had been the same for the last 1,200 years. It was not a book of Christianity, but of Churchianity, and by the Church was meant a sacerdotal body of priests. Mr. Smith went on strongly to denounce the practice of the Reservation of the Sacrament. The whole argument in its favour turned upon the question of the power of the priest to perform a miracle. There are, he admitted, mysteries which the human reason cannot fathom. There must be a reasonable degree of opinion regarding the differences of doctrines of their common faith. But there is no agreement that the power of working miracles abides in priests, and no possibility of reconciling such a theory with the fact that man has to go direct to Christ for forgiveness of sin. We lament that this country should show signs of returning to the

a religion which does not develop the spiritual life of man. The battle they had before them as Protestants was indeed a hard one. "We need a great spiritual movement throughout the land similar to the time of the Reformation, that will break the fetters and chains the sacerdotal party are now imposing upon the country." Mr. Smith closed with expressing his firm belief that God would, in his own time, interpose to prevent this country from falling back to that state of darkness which existed before the Reformation.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, in a thoughtful and practical address, reviewed the national and religious life of Ireland at the present time. There are two distinct kingdoms in Ireland—one of Her Majesty the Queen, and one of the Pope. Irish disloyalty was clearly shown to be the result of the teaching of Rome, for, with the Roman Catholics, the Pope's laws were held to be superior to those of Great Britain. The scheme for the endowment by the Government of a Roman Catholic University for Ireland was strongly denounced.

Some encouraging facts were related by Mrs. W. P. Lockhart. She has recently returned from work in the district of Turin and other localities, where Evangelical truths are only too seldom proclaimed.

spoke of the condition of Brazil as the result of the predominant influence of Romanism—the laxity in commerce and education, and the low moral standard which prevailed, and the association of every phase of impurity with outward profession of religion.

On Friday morning the Conference reassembled, when there was again a good attendance. The chair was occupied by Dr. Robert Anderson, Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, who in the course of an earnest and forcible address remarked that he could not understand the moral, any more than the intellectual, position of clergymen who break the law by ritualistic practices. When he found men who were not only pledged to support the Protestant principles of the Bible and of the Church of England, but who hold benefices and draw incomes upon the promise of upholding those principles, frequently betraying them and openly opposing them, he looked upon such men as a lower class than those who were frequently sent to gaol for stealing our property.

The closing meeting of the Conference, on Friday evening, was a hearty and enthusiastic gathering. The chair was occupied by Dr. Barnardo, who said it had been a weakness in [illegible] tantism that women, prior to the formation of this Union, had not been banded together as an organized agency to repel Romanism. We have to meet Rome in many guises, and also disguises. We have to meet the foe at the threshold of our homes. The Church of England is becoming the stalking-horse of Rome's work in this country. If ritualism sweeps the Church of England into the net of forms and ceremonies, it would mean the supremacy of the priest, the arrest of all true progress, a subjected press, a closed Bible, and the predominance of all those dark retrogressive influences which were summed up in the one word "Rome." Dr. Barnardo closed with a timely warning as to the dangers attendant upon the practice of sending young people to Continental towns for the completion of their education, and urged the members of the Union to raise their voices whenever possible against practices fraught with danger to home and family.

Rev. F. J. Hamilton, D.D., Homerton, followed with a thoughtful discourse on "True Patriotism," by which was meant love to our country. Many encouraging features of the work among the Roman Catholics in Dublin were given by Miss Carter, of the Irish Church Missions. Their labours were becoming more favourably regarded by employers, many of whom were kindly disposed towards the workers who sought to bring their servants under the influence of Protestant teaching.

Rev. James Wall, of Rome, related many instances bearing upon the progress in Italy of the spreading of the Gospel. He had received more than a thousand into his own church, after public confession of faith. A few words of testimony from Rev. W. H. Jacob, vicar of Shirley, brought the conference to a close.

Ratcliff Highway. At the Strangers' Rest, High Street, St. George's, E., a working party is to be started after Whitsuntide, on behalf of the very poor women of the neighbourhood. It will be held every Friday, from 2.45 to 4. Ladies who can help in cutting out are especially needed. Communications should be made to Miss Cleaver at the Strangers' Rest

The Houses of Rest.

FAR from lessening as the years go by, the stress and strain of life appear to increase in these feverish times. The pressure of many demands tells heavily upon various sections of the community, and amongst those who have to bear the weightiest burdens are those whose lives are devoted to practical service for the Master in the home or foreign missionary field.

This being so, such undertakings as those of Miss Mason's well-known Houses of Rest at St. John's Wood and at Eastbourne become more and more useful. Miss Mason, it may be remembered, commenced her labour of love on behalf of those weary in, but not of, the work so long ago as 1866. Her useful aims have been more than attained. Workers of all denominations find a happy haven of rest in the Homes, and, at the same time, the spiritual gatherings, which are regularly held, have come to exercise a widespread influence. Many a tired worker suffering from the despondency which is apt to attend bodily weakness, has returned to his labours

QUICKENED AND ENCOURAGED.

Here is a word from one who toils in a difficult field:—

I am always thankful that I ever knew your Home; it is when we go back to work, and as I am here, away from all spiritual influence, that we appreciate the comfort and help of such a Home. May God grant to you the needed strength, and give you much blessing in the new year, and supply all that is required for the work.

A clergyman's wife, too, wrote:—

Scoffers may say that the power of Christ's religion is gone, but a visit to such a work as yours would, I think, make them see differently. I felt more really than I have for years, how strong and powerful is the bond that unites God's own people, and maybe the Spirit is making this more manifest in these days, when so many have a "form of godliness, but deny the power thereof."

That branch of the work in which the needs of aged workers are met continues its useful ministry. One lady who benefits thereby has attained the age of eighty-five, and almost all are considerably over sixty. Each is able to tell of long years spent in evangelistic or other mission work. One who for more than forty years worked in various parts of London and the provinces as Biblewoman and visitor among the sick poor, lately wrote:—

What a boon is this Home to us aged ones; what a rest after years of weary toiling to find such a halting-place where one is able to look back over the road left behind, and see the goodness which granted or denied various prayers and aspirations.

Another, who had been for more than thirty years engaged in Ragged School and Bible-woman's work, writes:—

It is with much pleasure and thankfulness that I wish to say how very much I appreciate this benevolent provision for aged workers such as myself. I do thoroughly enjoy the teaching and Christian fellowship in addition to my domestic comforts and blessings. I thank my Heavenly Father for putting this thought into your mind, and ask Him to abundantly bless you.

The annual gathering in connection with the Houses of Rest was held on Friday afternoon last in the parish room which adjoins the St. John's Wood premises. As usual, a large number of friends and sympathizers assembled, and representative speakers bore testimony to the value of the work. Rev. F. B. Meyer drew encouragement from the record that "the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail." Where God sends a prophet, He sends the provision also. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, referring to the proper anxiety manifested by the public for those who have suffered on account of the war in South Africa, called for an increased measure of concern as to the welfare of those who fight the battles of Christianity. Next came Rev. F. S. Webster, who expressed thankfulness for the stimulus afforded by the institutions, and then Miss Weston gave a breezy address in which she reviewed the position and needs of the Homes. Her Majesty the Queen recently expressed the hope that the war funds would not interfere with the needs of Christian work, and Miss Weston made this kindly wish the basis of some remarks as to the financial needs of the Houses of Rest.

The last speakers were Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who referred to his long acquaintance with the work, and that tried supporter Col. Oldham, who spoke of the blessing which had attended the operations of the year.

The Racecourse Mission.

THE result of the meeting held in the Parlour of Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon must be the awakening of a deeper interest in the operations of the Racecourse Mission, and a wider sympathy with the object of its workers. Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and in a few words of encouragement expressed his pleasure to see that this branch of Christian service, once spoken of as outlandish and absurd, was no longer so regarded. The trammels were being broken off by Christians, who are now concentrating their energies for the accomplishment of work at one time considered above their calling. He heartily wished the evangelists "God-speed," urging them to seek in all things the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

The president of the Mission (Mr. W. Hodson) said he had attended many assemblies of spiritual refreshing, but never had he so experienced the divine presence and power as while preaching the Gospel at Epsom. Referring to the various classes of visitors attending race meetings, Mr. Hodson said there were Sunday-school teachers, clergymen and church members congregated together, who were astonished at the sight which they witnessed. To these, as to others, the tent was

AN ASTOUNDING TESTIMONY.

Many were arrested by the sight of the tent alone, before an opportunity of speaking to them had presented itself.

Mr. A. E. Sidford related his experiences at Ascot. Accosting a young man in the act of placing his bet, in one instance, he elicited the fact that he had left a godly home. His father was a local preacher. Having embezzled a sum of money of his employer's, he had made for Ascot, there to be brought under the influence of the Gospel and its converting power, to seek forgiveness, and to be restored to his parents.

Mr. Herbert Leng (secretary of the London Christian Police Institute) testified to the joy of witnessing for the Master on the course. He considered himself a scout, and when their force was in a "tight corner" the singing of some Gospel melody would often prepare the way for proclaiming the Truth. The distribution of the Word of God was the secret of the success of the Racecourse Mission.

Mr. O. L. Heatley, secretary, in a few appropriate remarks, expressed his gratitude to God that the labours of his servants had been blessed to the enlightenment of many dark and sin-stained hearts. He pleaded for the practical sympathy of all interested in the welfare of the mission, and asked for prayer for the continued success of the work. In addition to Epsom, arrangements had been made for campaigns at Ascot, Doncaster, Newton Abbot, &c.

Mr. Hodson announced that through the kindness of Mr. Walters some 50,000 Scripture Portions had been provided for distribution at Epsom. The meeting concluded with prayer, led by Mr. R. C. Morgan.

Friends' Foreign Mission Association.

A full gathering in the Friends' Meeting House, Bishopsgate Without, on Monday night, evidenced much interest taken in the thirty-third annual meeting of the above Association. The proceedings were opened by Henry Stanley Newman with the reading of a few verses of appropriate Scripture and with prayer. Thos. Pumphrey moved that ninety-seven men whom he spoke of as possessed of weighty judgment and spiritual judgment should constitute the Board of the Association, and this was unanimously voted.

Joseph Storrs Fry, treasurer, presided, and also presented the financial statement. Receipts during the year had been sufficient to meet current expenditure, but this result had only been attained by using special and extraordinary income for the purpose. Terrible famine in India called forth practical sympathy from Friends and others in this country, and the missionaries were thankful to have means to succour starving people around them, as well as for grants to other societies working in districts more needy than their own. It is necessary, however, to state that the general income during the first four months of 1900 shows a comparative decrease of £850. It is the desire of the Association to go forward in faith, under the Lord's guidance, and that the end in view—extension of Christ's kingdom—may not be hindered through lack of financial aid. The Chairman further expressed the earnest wish that the devoted labourers of the Association may be cheered by the cordial sympathy and earnest prayers of Friends at home.

A recently returned representative of the Association in the central provinces of India, Joseph Taylor, gave some details of the sufferings of the people under and described the tender ministrations of the missionaries in the measure of relief they are able to give. In some degree they had also been privileged to see the native Christian Church becoming self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating. Lads of the Christian Endeavour organization are starting Sunday schools under the trees of the market-places. It was desirable to go beyond the present agricultural sphere, and seek to influence the reading class of the population by means of Christian literature.

India was further represented by Katherine Dixon, recently returned from Hoshangabad, who described how the people have come under the influence of the Gospel as a result of the famine. They had seen the practical results of Christianity, and had cast in their lot with the missionaries; but many more are needed to come out and teach these poor souls. At a time when the people are losing faith in their idols, friends at home may well ask what the Lord would have them to do, either with their substance or with themselves.

As numerous names of missionaries were now mentioned, they stood up as representatives of work of God in India, Madagascar, Syria, China, and Ceylon. One friend present defrayed the cost of sending to labourers now in the various mission fields of the Association

THE TELEGRAPHIC MESSAGE,

"Meeting sends greeting sympathy."

Tissington Tatlow, general secretary of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, commended to the Friends here assembled the watchword or motto of the Union, "the evangelization of the world in this generation." He showed that this is no new idea, but that it embraces the spreading-out into the whole world of the various evangelistic, educational, medical, and other missions, at present operating only in a limited portion of the earth. He proceeded to deal with the Scriptural nature of this aim, the reasonable possibility of its accomplishment, and the desirability for the acquirement of more individual knowledge about missionary operations, and personal activity in dissemination of that knowledge.

One of the "Friend" missionaries, Adam W. Davidson, who is returning to China in the autumn, said that the terrible spiritual darkness of that land is enough to make strong men weep. Mr. Bishop expressed wonder that any Christian worker is willing to go a second time to face Chinese hatred and suspicion; but he cared not if he never saw England again, could he but do something towards bringing the people into spiritual light.

Watson Grace, Secretary of the Association, recently returned from the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York, spoke of some of its results in widening and deepening missionary interest among "Friends" in America, who had also contributed £540 for the Indian Famine Relief Fund.

South Devon Bible School.

IN these busy days of rush and hurry, it is good to see such gatherings of Christian people as assemble every Friday morning and evening in Plymouth to listen to the lucid expounding of the Scriptures by Mr. George Soltau. Young people also, to the number of about 400, attend his meetings on Monday evenings, and God's blessing is seen and felt.

Mr. Soltau has the gift of making his meaning clear in few words, and in addition to the thorough explanation of the subject chosen, his practical hints are most valuable. Meetings are held also in Exeter, Torquay, and Newton Abbot, with an attendance weekly of about 3,500, and interest grows.

In Plymouth Corn Exchange every Friday, morning and evening, the meetings continue until July 6.

"A Village Maiden's Career."

THE many thousand readers of this remarkable autobiography are invited to join in thanksgiving to God that the village evangelization, so successfully carried on by its author, Mrs. Sydney Watson, has now taken more permanent shape.

At Vernham Dean, ten miles from Andover, Mrs. Watson has, at her own expense, provided a piece of freehold land, and erected a mission hall, to meet the needs of the much-neglected population in this out-of-the-way district.

The opening services were held on May 19, 20, and 21, when Mr. F. W. Pitt, of Bramblebury Hall, London, dedicated the buildings to God, and gave some helpful addresses. The meetings were well attended, and there were evident tokens of blessing.

On Monday, the 21st, the hall was crowded to hear Mr. Pitt's interesting lecture on the "Tabernacle," and the large model was a source of delight and wonder to the inquiring audience. The prayers and help of God's people are desired for the extension of the work, and the salvation of many souls.

From Lord Radstock.

DEAR SIR,—There are many things which make us fear that godliness in the nation is decaying. Certainly drunkenness and desecration of the Lord's Day, and worldliness are, it is to be feared, on the increase. Shall we "faint in the day of adversity"? Rather let us seek to be more wholehearted in the conflict. In the name of the Lord, let us "set up our banner."

I would specially ask prayer for the Belgravian and Pimlico district. The Believers' meetings at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, on Fridays, at eight, are a time of refreshment and renewal of power. On Sundays in June I shall seek, by the Lord's help, to speak to believers at 3.45, and to preach the Gospel at eight; and I would ask for prevailing prayer for the power of God, that his people may be strengthened for the battle, and souls for whom Christ died be converted to God.—Yours, R.

Daily Prayer Union. The annual meeting of the Daily Prayer Union and Worcester Tract Society, was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, May 23, Rev. Canon Christopher, presiding. From the Report of the Committee, read by Rev. H. L. Harkness, it appeared that, during twenty-one years, the Society had issued and circulated upwards of nine million publications, relating to the Holy Spirit in forty languages. It had enrolled 110,000 members. Its missioners had conducted 100 missions in the United Kingdom, Canada, and the United States of America. The cost of the work had been £15,000. Addresses were given by the chairman, and by Revs. Philip Norton, J. W. Atkin, and others.

Nursery Parables.

I.

MARGIE was only six years old, with no experience of pain and trouble, when she gained her first knowledge of suffering. A merry game was going on in the nursery, when suddenly a cry of anguish rang out; in creeping from under the table, Margie had put her chubby knee right down on to a needle which stuck upright in the carpet. In a frenzy of fear and pain she screamed and struggled so violently, that the efforts of her mother and nurse to draw out the needle were entirely unavailing—it only went further in, and there was no help for it, the doctor must be called.

In due time he arrived, and found it necessary to probe deeply in the hope of extracting the needle, now firmly embedded in the tender flesh. The shock of pain to the childish mind was intense, and Margie screamed until her mother's heart was wrung with grief. The search proved vain, however, and had to be repeated a day or two later.

"O Miss Margie," said her nurse, as she carried the shrinking little figure downstairs, where the doctor waited, "do try not to scream as you did last time, or you'll make your mother ill."

Hopeless advice! How could the child bear the pain silently—patiently?

And yet she did! And this was the secret. As she was placed on the chair, and the dread ordeal was about to begin, her father came, and, standing by her side, took her trembling, shaking little hand into his strong clasp. In the restfulness and strengthening of that father's keeping, the frightened little heart beat more calmly, the pain was bearable, and no sound escaped the lips which such a short time before were quivering with fear.

. . . . . .

"I the Lord will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not!"

II.

"Farvie, will you buy me a dollie in the town?" The wistful little face, surrounded by a halo of sunny curls, was enough to touch a less susceptible heart than a father's, and now the request, often repeated since her mind was first set on this object of desire, meets with a reassuring response.

"Yes, my little girl, I will!" he answers, catching her up in his arms, "and I will bring it back with me at dinner time."

A good-bye kiss, and he went away, leaving his small daughter in a state of anticipation that knew no shadow of doubt.

"When I wake up Farvie will be back again wiv my dollie," was her sleepy remark as she cuddled down on her pillow, and mother tucked her up for her midday sleep.

Now mother was troubled by a certain lurking fear lest the radiant confidence of her baby girl might be doomed to disappointment. Remembering that "Farvie" had much important business to occupy him, and knowing, moreover, by experience that human memory is never infallible, she had sundry misgivings, and questioned within herself whether it would not be well to warn Essie of the possibility of disappointment. But all such efforts were in vain. "Farvie said he would," was the child's reply. The idea that her father could promise and not perform was literally incomprehensible to the little heart that trusted him so implicitly.

And when she woke at dinner-time, Farvie had come—and dollie!

Oh, how pleased she was! And what a source of delight the longed-for doll proved to be. But she was not surprised: "Farvie said he would"!

"How much more shall your Heavenly Father give good things to them that ask Him." Only let them "ask in faith, nothing wavering."

III.

Baby was being prepared for bed. Snowy robes were removed, and warm flannels and cosy night-gown replaced them, put on by gentle, loving hands. But baby's face expressed anything but satisfaction during the process! A look of positive fear came over the tiny features, and the little arms and hands waved wildly as she tried to catch hold of something—anything—to save her from falling. Every day the same thing happened; every day baby struggled in the effort to keep herself from the danger which her baby-mind evidently feared.

But she never fell!

She did not know how strong was the power that kept her, nor how watchful the love that guarded her.

And what did her anxiety avail her?

Absolutely nothing—she was only a few weeks old, how could she help herself?

The fact was, her knowledge of her protector was so small that her faith was equally small.

How often, and of how much comfort, have Mistrust and his companions robbed Little Faith since the day that Bunyan's Pilgrim first heard his story! "Underneath are the Everlasting Arms."

Are they not strong enough? L. M. C.

Is It Right?

WHEN you think, when you speak, when you read, when you write,
When you sing, when you walk, when you seek for delight;
To be kept from all wrong when at home or abroad,
Live always as under the eye of the Lord.

Whatever you think never think what you feel
You would blush in the presence of God to reveal;
Whatever you say, in a whisper or clear,
Say nothing you would not like Jesus to hear.

Whatever you read, though the page may allure,
That his smile is upon you be perfectly sure;
If not, then dismay would be seen in your look
If God should say unto you, "Show me that book."

Whatever you write, in haste or with heed,
Write nothing you would not like Jesus to read;
Whatever you sing, in the midst of your glees,
Sing nothing his listening ear could displease.

Wherever you go, never go where you fear
That the great God would ask you, "How camest thou here?"
Turn away from each pleasure you'd shrink from pursuing
If God should look down and say, "What art thou doing?"

Personal.

Uncle Tom's Cots.—I would like to remind my "nephews and nieces" of "Little Hannah and Rosy" at Southend (see article which appeared on our page on May 10.)

Prizes and Certificates.—I am glad to have so many letters acknowledging the receipt of prizes and certificates, and to know that they have given pleasure and satisfaction. There are so many notes, it would take me too long to answer all personally.

M. PENNY, MASSE PIBEL, MARGERY SMART, and others.—When asked to complete a text, you are supposed to write the whole sentence in which the words given are found. If you only give the word which comes before or after, it is not accepted as correct.

VIOLET WALKER, FRANK WILSON.—I wish you every success in your coming examination.

WINNIE RICHARDSON.—I shall be glad to welcome Evelyn as a "Searcher," and hope she will find the study interesting and useful.

HELEN FORBES.—I was very sorry to hear of your recent bereavement.

FRANKY SIMMONS, CHRISTABEL BATH, BERTIE WALLS, GORDON WINN.—I am sorry to hear you have been ill, and hope you will soon be quite well again.

FLOSSIE THOMPSON.—Papers cannot be received after Wednesday afternoon.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 3.

How to be a Good Neighbour (Luke x. 25-37).

THE lawyer who asked this took an interest in religious subjects, and probably asked in no critical or captious spirit. Christ's answer put before him the impossible standard of the perfect keeping of the two tables of the law. There is no doubt that, if we could love God and man perfectly, we should inherit eternal life, because life is love and love life. If you want to live, love; if you want eternal life, love with God's love. But our Lord knew that, in lifting this high standard before the lawyer and all others to the end of time, He was demanding the impossible of our fallen race, and was therefore driving us, as afterwards Paul his converts, to that Cross and perfect obedience which are imputed to all who believe in the name of the Lord Jesus. This is what St. Paul calls being shut up unto Christ. Do not you realize how unable you are to love like this, and how inevitably, therefore, you must forfeit eternal life? See to it then that, by faith, you are joined to Jesus Christ; that through Him you may fulfil the law, and from Him receive that baptism of perfect love which will enable you to love as God loves.

By this parable our Lord teaches that love, which is a spirit of mercy and self-sacrifice, finds a neighbour in every one who is in need and can be helped; that love will do what mere officialism and religious formalism will not do, and become keen sighted in detecting a neighbour in the most unlikely quarter. Misfortune, sorrow, pain, call for the manifestation of love, and discover it wherever God has implanted it.

The priest represents the religious official. A soldier wounded on the battlefield will hail it as unusually fortunate if the first man that comes up is the surgeon of his own regiment, and when this wounded Jew saw the priest come into sight, he was glad to think that he was the very man who was most likely to show him sympathy; but the priest was the official, not the man. This lonely road was outside the precincts of expected duty; he was prepared to fill his office in the Temple, but not here. How many of us will do our duty in the Church, the Sunday school, or the Christian Endeavour Society, because we are expected to! but we hesitate about the work which calls outside these boundaries.

The Levite came and looked on him, but felt that he need not do what the priest had left; that it was not wise to linger on such a lonely road; and that it was unwise to become involved in a matter which would bring him under suspicion. Altogether, personal considerations outweighed the need of the wounded man, and so he passed away. Let us take care. We have no right to pass that lost child crying in the street, although it is awkward to be seen leading it home; we must not excuse ourselves from helping the man or woman lying on the pavement because we like to suppose that he or she is drunk, or that it is no business of ours.

The Samaritan was neither an official nor fellow-countryman, he was moved by the compassion of his noble heart. Probably he had suffered abuse and scorn from the hand of the Jews: "Thou art a Samaritan and hast a devil;" but over all these love triumphed. He did not ask, What claim has this man on me? but What does this man need, that I may do it for him? And when he took his case in hand he left nothing undone which the tenderest considerations could devise—raised his head, cleaned his wounds, mollified them with oil, bound them with strips of linen, greeted his return to consciousness with joy, tended him in the inn, and saw that his need would be met afterwards. Christ counts as sin not only the wrong we ought not to do, but the omission of the right we can and should do. It is not enough not to do wrong, it is a crime not to do the right that lies within your reach. And remember in doing good, to do it with the grace, tenderness, thoughtfulness of the good Samaritan. Do you lack these traits? Ask of God, He giveth to all men liberally.

C.E. NOTES.

From India comes the news of the first vernacular Convention, held at Fatehjerh, by the North-West and Oudh Provincial Union. Most of the fifty-three societies were represented, thirteen of which had been added since the last report. It was a thoroughly helpful good time.

Arrangements have been made to increase the number of Endeavourers, both young men and women, who will encamp in tent at the Alexandra Park to 3,000, and this number may yet be augmented if the tents can be secured.

Sunday afternoon at the encampment is to be devoted to separate meetings for young men and young women.

Death of John the Baptist (Mark vi. 14-29).

Golden Text.—"Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18).

Introduction.

WE have a sad story to study to-day. The great Forerunner is killed through the hatred of a bad woman and the weakness of a bad man. A bold girl is the tool of her wicked mother for a wicked deed. It is three against one. And is it not often thus? The Christian has to stand alone frequently; and in many cases has this story repeated itself, the one against three.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The big letter to each name gives also the character of each.

Herod.

Herod was a king, and although he held such a high position, he had been warned by John of his sinful and wicked life; but he had taken no heed, and now, for a woman's wish (17-24), he beheads John. How weak, how like Felix (Acts xxiv. 25) and Agrippa (Acts xxvi. 27, 28). They all hear, but take no heed of what they hear.

Herod, too, was hasty to vow such a vow as he did (22), and afterwards (26) he was afraid of what the people would say, although it was such an awful deed he had to do, and so he carried it out. Yet his conscience was not quite dead, for when he heard of Jesus he thought (16), "It is John whom I beheaded."

John.

John the Baptist, the great forerunner of the Messiah, we read, was "a just man and holy" (20). What a beautiful character! With it must have been Christ's own deep joy, for joy always goes with holiness. John seemed under a cloud, perhaps; but a life such as his could not possibly be without joy, and certainly he entered into the "joy of the Lord" in its deepest sense when he was so cruelly killed by King Herod (John xvi. 22; Matt. xxv. 21).

Herodias.

Herodias was both heartless and hard. Her womanhood had faded far away in the distance; she stands before us a base, cruel, wicked woman. She in her heartlessness had laid the whole plot. She hated the good man John; it began with "an inward grudge" (see 19 margin), and this grew to murder (24, 25). Christ had a solemn lesson to teach on this in his Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 21, 22; 1 John iii. 15). How hard Herodias was! She meant to have what she wanted; she never shuddered when the fearful act had been performed, and the head of the Baptist was handed to her (24, 28).

Salome.

Salome, the daughter of Herodias, was a bold, shameless girl, and so self-possessed that she never flinched to make the request her mother demanded, nor seemed to care in the least to carry the dish with its dreadful contents to her (22-28).

A wicked mother, a wicked daughter. Let us thank God for good mothers.

Lessons we Learn.

Our Golden Text gives us one of the lowest degrees of misery, and it was probable Herod had descended to this. It also gives us one of the highest degrees of happiness, "filled with the Spirit." John had ascended to this, and so we can contrast the two characters, taking a warning from one and a lesson from the other.

From Herodias and Salome let us learn to check the first thought of hatred, and to be modest and quiet, subduing all boldness and forwardness in our characters.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE fifty-third anniversary meeting of the Islington Y.M.C.A. was held in Barnsbury Hall on May 21. There was a large audience, chiefly composed of young men, and the proceedings were of a helpful character. Mr. John McCall occupied the chair; and the speakers were Revs. Ossian Davies, H. Elvet Lewis, and Dr. Barlow. The work has recently been entirely re-organized, and is now under the direction of Mr. W. C. East, who presented an encouraging report.

The quarterly Conference of the North-Eastern District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations was recently held at Stockton-on-Tees. Mr. Frederick Robson presided, and delegates were present from eleven Associations in the district. A proposal for the formation of a Teeside Sub-District was cordially approved, and Mr. R. C. Mayes, of West Hartlepool, read an instructive paper upon "The Relation of Young Men to Bible Study, and the Place of the Subject in Association Work."

Mr. C. R. Irving, who has been appointed as successor to Mr. William M. Oatts in the secretaryship of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., is expected to take up the duties of the office on July 1.

The annual conference of the Dumbartonshire District of Y.M.C.A.'s has been held at Kirkintilloch, Mr. D. MacBride (Dumbarton) presiding. Addresses were given on "The Possibilities of Y.M.C.A.'s in Towns and Villages," Mr. D. Sinclair (Kirkintilloch) dealing with the question of buildings, and Mr. D. Bulloch (Kirkintilloch) with that of work. A profitable discussion followed.

The reports to hand from the Brussels Y.M.C.A. indicate encouraging development in all branches of the work. To the already existing French, Dutch, and German sections an English section has been added; each week Bible classes have been conducted in the three first-mentioned languages; evangelistic meetings, social gatherings, and evening classes have also been held; the rooms placed at the disposal of foreign young men have been constantly occupied; and the number of members in the Association itself has been considerably augmented.

Blind Girls in Jerusalem.—The annual report of the Home and School for Blind Girls at Jerusalem is a record of a quiet and useful agency. Established a few years ago, its career has been one of steady progress. There are ten girls in the Home at present. Arabic Braille is taught the elder pupils, while the younger girls are taught Arabic and English. Everything is done to make these afflicted ones happy, and their lives, otherwise isolated and dejected, are brightened by the instruction and employment of the Home and School. The hon. treasurer is Rev. J. R. Longley Hall, C.M.S., Jerusalem.

Summer Camp for Poor City Boys.—As the summer advances many poor lads of Manchester are looking forward with eager expectation to a week's holiday under canvas on the camping ground at Birkdale, Southport. Last year no fewer than 1,725 boys enjoyed the advantages and benefits of a week's holiday. The undertaking is a branch of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester. It is intended to open the season this year on Whit Monday, when some 150 boys will take possession of the camp. The hon. secretary is Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester.

Letters to the Editor.

The Coming Revival.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have read with intense interest and profit all that has appeared in The Christian relating to revivals of religion in England and elsewhere. Most thankful was I to see the two letters published in a recent issue. Does not Mr. Jewell's letter, telling of the profound conviction in the hearts of Christians in Chicago that "something very remarkable" is just ahead of them, come as an answer to the many prayers of the thirty brethren, who "continued all night in prayer to God" in an upper room at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street?

I have been in my present parish nearly eight years, and have tried to keep before my people the need of a revival, and the willingness of God to "pour out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." As yet we have only experienced a few drops of the coming shower. But we are as sure of this as we are of our own existence, that when "the set time" to favour Zion is come, Jehovah shall appear in his glory.

Next to the Word of God, our faith, our hope, our inspiration is drawn from such narratives of revivals as Robe's, Jonathan Edwards', Brainerd's, Burns', McCheyne's, Whitefield's, and any letters describing "the wonderful works of God" that may, from time to time, be printed in your paper.

It is a great comfort and help to us to know that many dear brethren in the Lord are asking similar "mercies of the God of heaven," and that, though unknown to one another, we are fulfilling our Epaphras ministry (Col. iv. 12), and share the like conviction that, ere long, God will give us an abundant answer to our prayers, and a rich harvest of souls, regenerated and sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

I humbly pray that your efforts in this direction may be owned by God to the assistance of many others, situated, like myself, in a lonely and responsible position.—I am, yours faithfully, A Grateful Reader.

The Archbishops on "Reserve."

Dear Sir,—I am a member of the Protestant Reformed Church of England, and have been a communicant for more than seventy-two years. I ask your permission to make a few remarks on the article on the Archbishops' "opinion" on the reserve question, which they have recently made known. The Archbishop of Canterbury's observation which you quote is worthy of observation. Can you explain why their delay of ten months occurred? By an ordinary lay member of the Church, the question could have been answered at once by a reference to those very passages in the Prayer Book upon which they have proclaimed their opinion or judgment.

The first time I read the report I was struck by the words "at present." Have you noticed them? What do they mean? Have they not led to the delay? Have they not been fostering the hope that they should have been able somehow to reconcile the delinquents for the present, in the prospect of a change far more favourable to themselves in the near future? The fundamental question you suggest is, to me and many others, already answered by the Communion Service: Its recipients truly penitent and believing; its administrators "ministers," not priests; the elements "bread and wine" from first to last; symbols and signs, not wafers changed into flesh and blood; and the elements to be partaken of by all the communicants, and all to be consumed and not reserved.

As to neither party being satisfied, I think that the Evangelical Church papers and magazines prove the contrary. Their only explanation is that both Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury have helped the evil forward by advancing the party to chief places in the Church of England.—Yours, &c.,

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD has found time amidst the general excitement both to hold and attend meetings during the past week. We notice first the farewell gatherings at Wycliffe Hall to Dr. Chavasse on Tuesday and Wednesday. It is the close of one chapter of the history of the hall and the opening of another. Nearly 100 old students were present, and some twenty of the present members of the Hall, were still up. The only cloud over the proceedings was the indisposition of Dr. Chavasse, which prevented him from being present at more than one meeting.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., presided at the meeting in the library to bid farewell to the Bishop, and to welcome Mr. Grey, the new Principal of Wycliffe. A presentation of carved oak furniture and plate was then made to Dr. Chavasse by the former members of the Hall. The late Principal's reply was in every way characteristic. His closing words were—and may they live in all our minds:—"This Rogation Day, looking forward to Ascension Day and Whit Sunday, suggests these two lines of prayer:

Spirit of Truth and Holiness,
We cry not "Enter" but "Possess."

Archdeacon Diggle gave a series of addresses in St. Giles' Church. That on "Holiness" was in many ways remarkable. "Never forget," he said, "the 'con' in consecration: it refers to human co-operation with the Divine work.' There can be no consecration until the will awakes. A man may be ministerially holy (set apart) without being consecrated by his own conscious co-operation.

"When we yield ourselves unreservedly to the Holy Spirit, to go where He pleases, to be what He desires, to say what He teaches, then we shall be men of truth and holiness."

Dr. Wright, of the Protestant Reformation Society, preached two sermons on Sunday in St. Aldate's, and lectured on Monday on "The Papal Claims." His sermon on Sunday evening, on "Justifying Faith," was a helpful defence, or rather, we should say, declaration of the article of a standing or falling Church.

Professor Margoliouth presided on Monday evening over a meeting held in connection with the Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews. Referring to the fascination which superstition had for the mind of the Jew, he referred to his father, who was a Jew in the early part of his life, and how he looked back sorrowfully on the superstition which his training had engraved on his mind, while rejoicing in his conversion. Canon McCormick, one of the deputation, gave some helpful addresses. That in the afternoon, on the "Awakening of the Jews," made us all realize there was a real "shaking among the bones."

Canon Gore was the chief speaker at a meeting held in the Hall of Exeter College on Sunday evening to promote the claims of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta. The aim of his address was, as he himself put it, to extend the enthusiasm of imperial affairs now sweeping through the country into the region of missionary obligation. The former was felt by most; the latter, he feared, was very imperfectly realized. Yet, he urged, the one involved the other. The responsibility for empire meant the responsibility for Christianizing that empire. The address was a masterly use of a national crisis for the highest ends—the wider imperialism, the reign of Christ on the earth.

The claims of the Church Army Labour Home were also pleaded on Wednesday afternoon at a meeting convened by Dr. and Mrs. Sanday in their garden at Christ Church. The Earl of Stamford and Rev. Wilson Carlile were the chief speakers. The reports showed what a useful work these social centres are doing. The writer is closely connected with the Labour Home in Oxford, and knows of not a few cases in which men have been reclaimed from criminality, inebriety, and vagrancy to Christ. The fact that the authorities of the Oxford prison have made a grant of £20 to the Home, is a proof of the good work done.

Points and Outlines.

Sorrow and Joy.

(John xvi. 20.)

As in this verse so in human life, sorrow and joy are closely joined. (I.) Present Sorrow: It is the lot of all men, Christ's people not excepted. (II.) Prospective Joy: The Gospel order is—sorrow first, joy afterwards. (III.) Sorrow and joy are connected; one yields to the other and intensifies it. Sorrow will be transformed into joy—"turned into." At last we may find that sorrows were but joys in disguise.

Conditions of Blessing.

1. Humility.—2 Chron. vii. 14; Psa. xix. 12, 13; cxxxix. 23, 24.

2. Prayer.—Matt. vii., 7; Mark ix. 29; 1 John v. 14, 15.

3. Faith.—Heb. xi. 6; James i. 6, 7; Matt. xvii. 20; Luke xvii. 6.

4. Obedience.—Mal. iii. 10; John xiv. 23, xv. 7; Acts v. 32.

5. Agreement.—Matt. xviii. 19; 1 Peter iii. 7.

The Jews as Witnesses.

(Rom. xi. 22, 23.)

This passage testifies to us of three things, expressed in the language of the New Testament:—

I. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. x. 31).

II. "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (Rev. iii. 11).

III. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound" (Rom. v. 20).

The Bible in System.

If a Bible student would construct a satisfactory system round which to arrange Bible truth and history, he needs, not a circle with one centre, but an ellipse with twin foci, and those foci the two Advents of Christ—his Incarnation and his Second Coming. To both these all Scripture, history, prophecy, and vital practical truth are correlated; and they need both foci to give them consistency and harmony.

Dr. A. T. Pierson.

The Constraint of Love.

(Heb. xiii. 13.)

Love's resolve—"Let us go forth."
—— object—"Unto Him."
—— place—"Without the camp."
—— burden—"Bearing his reproach."
—— reason—"Therefore (see v. 12). J. B.

The Divine Shepherd.

(John x. 14, 15.)

1. Here is a Perfect Shepherd. He (a) leads his sheep; (b) has pastures for them; and (c) gives them protection.

2. Here is a Perfect Knowledge. He knows his sheep (a) as to number; (b) as to name; (c) as to disposition; (d) as to need.

3. Here is a Perfect Sacrifice. (a) Voluntary—"giveth;" (b) precious—"his life;" (c) vicarious—"for his sheep" (v. 11).

Christ's Present Advocacy.

(Heb. vii. 25.)

First, consider A Great Fact—"seeing He ever liveth." Our Lord died; never one more utterly dead than He. Yet our Lord rose out of death.

Second, consider, based upon this great fact, A Mighty Ministry—"to make intercession." It is the intercession of (a) appearance in our behalf (Heb. ix. 24); (b) advocacy (1 John ii. 1, 2); and (c) sympathetic oneness of nature with ourselves (Heb. iv. 15).

Third, based upon the great fact and the mighty ministry, receive A Great Consolation—"He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him." Dr. Wayland Hoyt.

A Warning Against Idleness.

Cæsar by continual employment overcame two constant diseases—the headache and the falling sickness. Oh, the spiritual diseases that the active Christian overcomes! Among the Egyptians, idleness was a capital crime. Among the Lucani, he that lent money to an idle person was to lose it. Among the Corinthians, the slothful were delivered to the carnifex, saith Diphilus. Oh, the deadly sins, the deadly temptations, the deadly judgments, that idle and slothful Christians are given up to! Therefore be active, be diligent, be abundant in the work of the Lord. Idleness is the very source of sin. Standing pools gather mud, and nourish and breed venomous creatures; and so do the hearts of idle and slothful Christians. Thomas Brooks (Puritan).

The London Great Tent Campaign.

IT is evident on all sides that God, in his grace, is pouring out a spirit of hearing and anxiety upon the people in the great tents now partially surrounding London.

In the districts of Ilford, Clapham, Clapton, and Harlesden, there is now evidently considerable awakening among the Christians to a sense of the reality of the Gospel message; and the scenes witnessed in some of the tents have been heart-melting, so deep is the impression left upon those present.

The work that Mr. L. Weaver and his associates are carrying on evidently shows that there is to be no hanging back and partial declaration or assent to the Gospel, but a clear and definite confession seems to become general.

To any but those hardened against the Gospel some of these scenes are simply overwhelming. From the tall man of more than six feet to the young child of twelve, God has seemed to give the spirit of anxiety in seeking Christ and the salvation of their souls.

The tents have been well lighted. The singing is very hearty. Most of the preaching may be characterized as in dead-earnest, or, as a friend described it, "Straight Talking about the Reality of God and Eternity."

The feature of this movement seems to be in most places very marked by

of all denominations, only to be understood by the fact that all are seeming to recognise God's Hand in the work, the presence of the Spirit, and the nearness of the Saviour. No words can express the blessing that is coming through God's glorious Gospel upon the masses of the people. Christians, why not arise to carry the work further? Why only in the tents? Why not more also in the churches?

An esteemed worker reports that some inquirers coming forward in these meetings seemed to do so with a determination to find Christ; and although many of them seemed to be in the dark they were easily directed to put their whole confidence and trust in Christ.

A little incident that bespeaks much:—Last week Mr. Charles Inglis had spoken to four girls. On Sunday one of them was seen with a bright face in the meeting again. The worker spoke to this young person, inquiring about the other three, who had professed faith in Christ. "Yes," said she, "they are here," and immediately led him across the tent where the other three young people were, together with an elderly friend, rejoicing gladly in the Saviour they had found a few nights before. And so from point to point, some of those spoken to referred to the week previously at Ilford, when

THEY FIRST REJOICED IN CHRIST.

We very solemnly urge those Christians who wish to know what becomes of converts, to take a list of some of the names on their own account, that they may afterwards be able to report upon the faith and endurance of these young believers in Christ. Some who have done this have been well repaid, although at first a little unbelieving as to the mighty power of the Gospel in other people's hearts. In these days of blessing may God save his children from unbelief.

The local secretary of one of the tents reports a blessed work on Sunday last. He mentions one poor fellow, who said, "I have not courage to go forward to the platform." He was directed to ask the Lord to give him courage thus to confess Him before others. After a few moments' prayer, he started off hurriedly to the front. Many people were in tears, and several children also found their way to the Saviour.

Following the report of the work by the Brothers Weaver at Ilford, we might mention that on Thursday and Friday the preaching of our brother Inglis was owned of God, as many as forty in one meeting leaving their seats and passing to the side of the tent to be spoken with as inquirers. It was noticed that some of Dr. Barnardo's elder girls were seeking the Saviour with many tears, while others of them were leading anxious ones forward.

A marvellous outpouring of the Holy Spirit was witnessed at the great tent at Ilford on Sunday afternoon, May 27. Nearly 2,000 were present, and such power did the Lord give with his own Word, that at the invitation for anxious ones to rise and come forward for prayer, 150 went, and knelt with the Lord's people, asking them to pray for them. Such a scene of weeping and rejoicing over anxious and saved souls had not been seen in Ilford for many years.

The secretary of the local committee of the London Tent Campaign (Mr. McRae) got up at the evening service and publicly stated that it was a fact that that number came forward for prayer in the afternoon.

In the evening the tent was crowded to overflowing, and again the mighty power of the Holy Spirit was manifested, and a large number professed faith in Jesus Christ. "To God be all the glory."

The fifth tent was opened at Harlesden, near Willesden Junction, on Saturday evening. Mr. G. S. Baker was in the chair, and accompanied on the platform by many of the local ministers and a number of evangelists and soloists connected with the work. The congregation comprised a large number of Christian workers from the various churches, and a very hearty welcome was accorded to Mr. Weaver and his associates.

On Sunday, the evening meeting, which was the first mass meeting, was attended by crowds of people; in fact, all sitting room was occupied before the time announced to start.

LARGE NUMBERS STOOD OUTSIDE

the tent and listened to Mr. Leonard Weaver's address. The meeting itself was a great success, many prominent Christian men expressing a view "that they had never seen anything like it." The speaker took up the text, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," and spoke for nearly an hour with great power; the people were moved to such an extent that one could literally feel the spirit of the thing had laid hold of all present. A very large number accepted the invitation to come forward, and many knelt in front of the platform for prayer. About forty gave in their names as having received definite blessing. It was indeed a time of great rejoicing.

Mr. Weaver also gave an address in the Baptist Tabernacle. The churches in the district are all interested in the movement, ministers and members are assisting in all parts of the work, visiting, singing, and helping at the after-meeting. The workers have arranged to have tea provided each Sunday, and everyone is looking forward to a most prosperous month's mission.

Young People's Meetings.

Great blessing is following the meetings for young people, conducted by Mr. Newton Jones, Mr. Bradbrook, and Mr. Van de Venter. Hundreds of children are in attendance, and scores are being dealt with. Last Tuesday, at Edmonton, fully 700 were present, and upwards of 250 remained to the after-meeting. Over 100 were dealt with above the age of twelve years, only such being invited to remain. The outlook for a great harvest of young souls is very encouraging.

We praise God for all these signs of his real salvation and grace. The committee would be glad of Christian workers who can join the tents at Ilford (High Road), Edmonton (Silver Street), Clapham (High Road), Clapton (High Road), Harlesden (Willesden Junction); also those to be opened this week at—Wood Green (Tram Terminus), Wimbledon, and Stratford (West Ham Lane).

On Wednesday last, the Weaver Brothers commenced a three-days' mission at the Edmonton Tent, but so manifest was the blessing that the committee decided they should stay until Tuesday. Sunday last was a day of rich blessing. At the men's meeting in the morning, it was touching to see five young fellows prostrated with a sense of sin and confessing Christ. In the afternoon there was a well-filled Tent for an address to Christians. At night the huge marquee was crowded, and the Holy Spirit was present in power. Over thirty souls boldly confessed Christ before the audience. There are signs of great blessing.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Hereford.

A ten-days' mission has been held in the Baptist Chapel, Commercial Road, Hereford, kindly lent for the occasion. The services were arranged under the auspices of the Hereford Free Church Council. Mr. W. R. Lane was the missioner, and his services as evangelist of the National Free Church Council were very useful in deepening impressions, and calling the undecided to definite surrender to Christ. Several were guided into the truth, and it is hoped will decide for the Saviour. Mr. Lane gave a limelight lecture on the "Pilgrim's Progress," which awakened desires to walk in the Christian's way from the city of destruction to the celestial city. On Monday, May 21, Mr. Lane spoke on the story of his conversion. The speaker was very earnest in his endeavour to lead souls to Christ. The Bible readings in the Wesleyan Church were greatly enjoyed, and doubtless were much blest.

F. A. Warrington,
Free Church Council, Hereford.

Mr. Josiah Nix is much encouraged this year in his work at Stornoway by the great willingness there is on the part of the fishermen to listen to the Word of God. There is an intensity about it and an earnestness that he has not noticed before; and God's people and the unconverted have received much blessing. Crowds attend the meetings in the open air, and the Drill Hall, which is the largest in the town, is too small to hold the crowds willing to listen; there have been several cases of sinners seeking the Saviour.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Messrs. Leonard Weaver, Varley, the Brothers Bewley and Frank Weaver, J. T. Vine, William Grove, and other evangelists are engaged in the Campaign.

Requests for Prayer.

That God's people may awake to the appalling need of sixty millions in India.

For services in the Mission Hall, Godmanchester, Whit Sunday and Monday, to be held by Capt. Baring and Mr. W. R. Lane.

That God's presence in special grace and power may be realized at the Conference on June 17, 18, at the Mission Institute, Neukirchen, Kr. Moers, Rhenish Prussia, Germany.

That openings may be shown for a gospel tent to visit Corfe-mullen, Lytchett-Matravers, and other Dorsetshire villages during the summer months, and that the people may be brought under the sound of Gospel truth.

Personalia.

Mr. William Crosfield, of Liverpool, has been elected chairman for the ensuing year of the Board of Directors of the London Missionary Society.

Rev. J. G. Watson, formerly assistant pastor to Dr. Berry to Wolverhampton, has accepted the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Wood Green.

Rev. E. W. Challenger, of Nottingham, is to be appointed colleague to Rev. James Flanagan in the Primitive Methodist Mission at St. George's Hall, Southwark.

Rev. Dr. Talmage wishes us to state that he will not preach in any place where charges for admission are made. He gives his services free of charge, and pays his own expenses, and admission in all cases must be free.

The Bishop of Saskatchewan and Calgary intends to leave this country for Canada on June 2, having completed his mission on behalf of the Calgary Bishopric Endowment Fund. A sum of over £1,000 is still needed.

The only son of Pastor and Mrs. Lopez Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, has recently had a severe attack of brain fever. Life was all but extinct, but, to the joy of his parents, the lad has recovered. An interesting item in the recent work of the Mission was the despatch of 10,000 Gospels to Government officials, many of whom, it is believed, have never before seen nor heard the Word of God.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WE are glad to announce that Professor White is expected back from America in time to resume his Bible Lectures this week at the times and places already stated. The committee would be glad if friends would make his return as widely known as possible.

It is a great pleasure to inform our readers that the missionaries in various parts of famine-stricken India write in hearty appreciation of the endeavours we have made to send prepared foods for distribution among invalids and children. Letters of a deeply interesting character from Revs. Dr. Colin Valentine and Dennis Osborne will appear in our next issue. Meanwhile, it is gratifying to be able to state that the Government has exempted such goods from duty, and efforts are being made to secure for them free railway transit to various parts of the country.

Dr. Colin Valentine makes another very important suggestion—that disinfectants should be sent, as they will assuredly be required on a large scale in the near future. Acting on this suggestion, we have communicated with some of the principal chemical manufacturers, with most encouraging results. Of these also we hope to give particulars next week. Those who feel for the woes of India's millions will rejoice to hear of measures which are calculated at once to meet present needs and ward off future consequences, attendant upon the calamity which has befallen our great Eastern Dependency.

It is the custom in many churches to limit the Sunday evening service during the summer months to one hour, because it is said that people prefer the open air to a stuffy building. But is not the latter circumstance a distinct call to the Church to revert to the Apostolic method of open-air preaching? Would it not be far better, in very many cases, to hold the entire evening service in the open air? In Wales this is frequently done, and in place of a few hundreds of people assembled in a heated church the open-air audience numbers several thousands. Vast numbers of people can only be reached in this way.

The truth is, however, that many professing Christians hold open-air preaching in contempt as being something infra dig.; hence it has been undertaken by a few earnest workers only. Such people need converting to a true sense of responsibility. On the other hand, there is need for open-air preaching to be raised to its true dignity. The best men available are needed for it. The uttering of platitudes and the advertizing of ignorance can do no good whatever. A man needs both natural and spiritual gifts of an exceptional order to arrest and detain a shifting, listless crowd. But there is no work more necessary nor more fruitful than this. The best preachers of all ages have preached largely in the open air: the Apostles did so, and chief of all, our Lord set the example. If every church would use its opportunity in this direction during the summer, what a harvest would be reaped!

A few days ago, Lady Henry Somerset, speaking at Wolverhampton, declared that the drink traffic had "no politics, no philanthropy, and no outlook, save the making of money." "The Trade" organ professed its astonishment at this charge, and demanded an explanation. Lady Henry Somerset has replied, reiterating her statement, and supplementing it with the following stinging words:—

> I am perfectly aware that individual members of the trade have given of their abundance large sums to hospitals, orphanages, and other charities; but to my mind not all the gold in the Rand, nor the diamonds in De Beers mine, could compensate to the nation for the loss it yearly sustains by the immeasurable evil of the drink traffic. . . . My gall rises at the rich brewers in Parliament and out of it, who plant these poison shops for the sake of their million-making trade, while probably their family are figuring somewhere as refined philanthropists, or devout Evangelicals and Ritualists.

In the June number of the Young Man Dr. Horton adds his final word in the controversy on gambling, commenced some months ago by a popular Manchester ecclesiastic. The latter gentleman told an enormous congregation of men that gambling was quite legitimate, and that a man might use his money according to his taste—it was his own affair. Dr. Horton was publicly challenged to disprove the truth of this position. In a series of papers he has done so, and now, in this closing article he remarks:—

> The commandment against betting is, after all, the old word of the Decalogue, Thou shalt not steal. . . . Betting may be defined as "theft by mutual arrangement," and as such the English law forbids it . . . The man who wins takes no notice of the loss of his brother. What is it to him that his brother who has lost plunges down into ruin and disgrace? He has gained."

But is it an extraordinary thing that an ecclesiastic should be in need of such elementary moral teaching? When the priest thus errs, what wonder that the people go astray!

The notorious Holywell Street is coming down to make room for County Council improvements. But the abominable books and prints which for years have been openly sold there, will, we presume, be transferred to shops elsewhere. The County Council would perform a public service if it put the law into motion and effectually cleared out the vile literature which, for a whole generation or more, has made this street a byword and a loathing. The authorities know perfectly well the kind of stuff that is openly sold—again and again has attention been drawn to it. Why is no action taken?

Germany has taken the lead in an endeavour to deal with the crucial question of plays and exhibitions which, without being openly immoral, have an impure and injurious tendency, the Bill now under consideration providing a punishment by fine or imprisonment of persons who display pictures, statues, and publications, or who give addresses, musical entertainments, or theatrical representations which, without being indecent or immoral, "seriously offend the sense of shame."

This example is worthy of imitation in our own country, for it is evident that in straining out the gnat of verbal indecency the Censor too frequently swallows the camel of immoral tendency, so that pieces are permitted which, however blameless their literary form may be, are decidedly injurious to public morals. The cry for free trade in dramatic and other representations, which has followed Mr. Samuel Smith's praiseworthy motion in the House of Commons, demonstrates only too clearly how far the poison has spread. The censorship needs strengthening, not abolishing, by everyone who is anxious to prevent a flood of immorality overflowing a large proportion of our places of amusement.

Even Punch distinctly lowered its tone by admitting in its pages the offensive caricature of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. To represent a man who seeks to banish from public representation plays which are emphatically immoral, as a person whose constituents are half imbeciles, reveals not only extremely bad taste, but also a woeful want of perception. Whoever tries to purify the life of the time deserves approbation and not the pillory. No doubt a vast number of men prefer attitudes and words which are spiced with indecency; but it is they, and not the promoters of morality, who merit reprobation. When will the papers learn to appreciate the country's true friends?

The extreme High Church party, fully alive to the importance of training the young, naturally were alarmed at the possible results of the motion which Mr. Samuel Smith intended to make in the House of Commons in regard to "Children's Eucharists," and which, unfortunately, could not be taken owing to the adjournment. The accuracy of the designation, "the Mass in masquerade," as applied to the services in question, to which they have taken strong exception, may, however, fairly be assumed from the admissions of their organ, the Church Review, which, in dealing with the proposed motion, refers to "the presence of children at Holy Mass," and goes on to say:

> The only grounds on which we care to defend "Children's Eucharists" are that the Mass is the one means of worship, in the strict sense of the word; that it is the duty of all Christian people—and, therefore, of all children of an age to perform any religious act—to assist on days of obligation at the offering of the Holy Sacrifice; and that in the Sacrament of the Altar our Lord is present in all the truth of his Sacred Humanity to receive his people's devotion and to give them his blessing, quite apart from the supreme gift of his sacramental indwelling in communion. Since this is so, to bring children to Mass is simply to fulfil the command of our Lord Himself: "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."

Mr. Arthur Galton's paper in the current number of the National Review, "Why I Entered, and Why I Left the Roman Catholic Church," is of singular value and interest to those who desire to know under what influences perverts go over to Rome, and when they get there fail, as Newman did, to find peace and rest (which we are frequently informed cannot be found out of Romanism). Mr. Galton says he thinks he has gained more than he has lost by acquiring a personal knowledge and experience of the papal monarchy; but he would have been saved much sorrow if he had not started with the papal theory of the Church, and had learned to regard Christianity as something quite separable from all sects.

As an analysis of a severe mental struggle, the article deserves careful study; it is pregnant with warning to Protestant and Romanist alike, for Mr. Galton urges that it was to a great extent "the recoil from Protestant misstatements" which drew him at last into Rome, and a similar recoil when he discovered the more serious extent and gravity of the Roman tampering with truth and facts that drove him out of it. He adds, with reference to Father Gallway, the Jesuit by whom he was "received:"

First, as far as knowledge goes, I certainly was not fit to have been received. I knew neither what I was leaving, nor what I was joining, except according to my own crude notions. Even then I felt he was ready "to compass sea and land to make one proselyte" at any cost. He should have compelled me, before I took any action, to have discussed the matter openly and heartily with my relations. His advice, however, was all in the opposite direction, in the direction of secrecy and surprise, of ill manners and foul play; and thus I was piloted into the Roman Catholic Church.

The absurdity of the "Apostolic Succession" claim of the Catholic party is at present receiving a novel and unexpected demonstration. It appears that a M. Villatte, whose own "orders" are valid, has been busy ordaining certain gentlemen to the office of the priesthood. Amongst others he has ordained the eccentric "Father Ignatius," who is now a "priest." But M. Villatte is neither an Anglican nor a Roman, and he is disowned by both parties; yet it is admitted that his ordinations are genuine, because He himself is in the true Succession, with authority to pass it on! The Roman papers were at first indignant about the matter, later they became contemptuous; but they are disquieted all the same at the complication, for "priests" are springing up whose orders are valid, and who, nevertheless, are outside their Communion. How foolish it all sounds!

The following paragraph appeared the other day in the leading Roman Catholic paper published in this country:—

Mary is the refuge of sinners. Before the birth of Mary, says Richard of St. Lawrence, we had none to be our advocate with the Divine Word. While the Israelites were passing through the desert they were protected from the burning heat of the sun by a miraculous cloud which the Almighty caused to appear in the heavens. Thus Mary, say the Fathers, like an intervening cloud, shelters sinners from the anger of God and the fury of temptations.

The Blessed Virgin is wreathed with various crowns; the apostles render sacred homage to her; the angels intone her canticles; Christ embraces her; the clouds are her chariot, Paradise her dwelling, where, decked with glory, she reigns amid the virgin choirs.

It is difficult to know how adequately to describe such revolting blasphemy. True Christians can give no quarter to a "Church" whose teaching so unmistakably undermines the fabric of Christ's true Church.

It seems likely that the centre of interest in French life will be shifted from the Exposition to the Chamber of Deputies. Some violent scenes have been enacted within the last day or two, and the Parliament has been once or twice like a pandemonium. The affaire de lutte is, of course, the inevitable demand of Captain Dreyfus for his rights. As one distinguished Frenchman said:—

If Captain Dreyfus really betrayed his country, no punishment is too severe for him; but if he is an innocent man, he cannot accept pardon for an offence he has not committed. He demands justification, and justification he must have.

The Dreyfus affair is, however, only a symptom; the cause of France's infelicity lies deeper than that, and only the blind can fail to see what it is.

It is remarkable how invariably the philosophies and systems suggested as substitutes for Christianity fail most miserably to supplant the religion of Jesus. The founder of the so-called "Religion of Humanity," Comte, asserted that in a little over a quarter of a century the world would be won over to his speculations; and yet in the Metropolis his avowed followers may be counted within half a hundred. The movement is a transient phenomenon only, built upon the shifting sand of its promise of a new life "without God or King," and inflated only with "the systematic worship of humanity." Greater and nobler philosophies than this have fallen into nothingness before the preaching of Christ and Him crucified, and this one too will fade back into the darkness whence it was drawn.

The Evening Parade.

IT is time serious attention was given to the crowds of people who throng the streets of all our towns and cities, night after night, when the day's work is done. This "evening parade" is becoming a national habit. In many towns, from 6 to 10 or 11 p.m. certain thoroughfares are crowded with people, mostly young, who, apparently without any real object, walk up and down, to and fro.

There is nothing necessarily wrong in this, air and exercise being in every way desirable to those who have been confined in business all day. But it is a pressing question for the Church of God: "What is being done to reach the souls of these nightly paraders?" In one town we know, a mission hall has been opened on the main thoroughfare, and earnest workers invite passers-by into Gospel meetings. But the effort is not a success. Further up the same thronged street, and at a special coign of vantage, an open-air meeting is held; but a few only are drawn to hear the glad tidings.

Is there not an opening here for a new ministry? We have our city missionaries who go to the homes of the people in the cities; we have our colporteurs who visit the homes in the country; set apart for direct personal soul-dealing upon these thoroughfares? The opportunities for such work would be various and abundant. Gospel tracts of course could be distributed, but only with the special end in view of individual converse. Think of the many young people belonging to the Sunday-schools who at night walk about these streets, and, like Dinah of old, going forth to see the sights, perchance to become at last a prey to all sorts of seductive temptations! Surely the Lord's own love-message should be spoken personally to them.

WHY NOT JUDICIOUS MISSIONARIES

Such a missionary, with his heart fired with the strong love of Christ for souls, would have to be at his post from six until ten, or seven until eleven, and in the Metropolis and a few other places later, every night of the week; and specially on bad nights, as some of the world's poorest and most miserable of lives are prowling about the streets those nights, and on such occasions might the more easily be influenced for good. The police are the constituted guard for the order of the public streets at night; but certain it is if the Church would rise in her zeal for Christ, and put some bright men of God along the streets too, not only would many souls be directly saved, but the very presence of such men would constitute a decided stem to the torrent of evil which can nightly be seen at many places, and the streets of our great centres would thus be more really claimed for Christ.

*A Cruel Wrong to Childhood.

II.

EVIDENCE of Miss H. M. Johnson, of Liverpool, before the Royal Commission:—

"11,998. Have you any remarks to make upon the way in which children are served, if they are served, in public-houses?—It was very general indeed in the streets in which I visited. Children were going continually backwards and forwards to the back doors especially.

"12,002. Have you ever seen facilities provided for the serving of children?—Yes, I have seen steps inside some public-houses for the very small ones to get upon who would be far too little to reach the counter.

"12,004. Is there any inducement given to the children to come to the public-house to fetch the beer?—Sweets are frequently given, and other presents, especially on Sundays."

After explaining the meaning of the "long pull," and showing the amount supplied as one pint under the system:—

"12,020. Is it very nearly double the quantity?—More than once and a-half, I should say. That is a general custom throughout Liverpool, and I believe it extends to Manchester also. One can easily see that it gives great facilities for a child to sip a certain quantity, and yet bring in something over a pint, where the quantity cannot be exactly verified by the parent.

"12,076. Have you known any families in which evil has resulted from this drinking?—Yes, where they have had boys or girls spending their coppers in drink as soon as they earned them themselves, and got in the way of being, you might say, habitual drunkards at a very early age."

EXAMPLES OF ITS DIRE EFFECTS.

Extract from testimony of Dr. More Madden at a Medical Conference, held under the auspices of the C.E.T.S.:—

"Case 2.—In an adjoining bed, we had at the same time another juvenile victim of alcoholism—viz., G. R., a newsboy, age 8. Before admission, this boy had been in the habit of going out to the public-house for his drunken mother's daily supplies of whisky, and on each occasion was rewarded by a sip of the ardent spirit, until its taste and use had become second nature to the unfortunate child, who then afterwards invested his own little earnings as a newsvendor in the same way.

"Case 3.—A still more pitiable instance of the consequences of alcoholism was in one of my beds in the same institution, in the case of a very attractive little girl, aged five and a-half years, who was brought in suffering from acute cerebral disease, the result of a savage blow on the head, inflicted some time previously by her drunken mother. During her raving in the course of the disease, and afterwards even during her convalescence, this poor child babbled continually, and craved earnestly, to use her own words, for 'a drink of porter from the gallon'; and, we subsequently learned, that from the time she could totter under its weight, she was sent to the public-house for a can of porter, out of which she was accustomed to take a little taste on each occasion."

Are not these painful facts enough to stir the conscience of every Christian to arise and demand the abolition of this terrible evil? No "trade interests" ought to be allowed to stand in the way of so vital a reform for the protection of tempted childhood.

The Life of Dwight L. Moody.

By Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, M.A.

ON December 22, 1899, the death of Dwight L. Moody closed one of the most remarkable lives of the nineteenth century. During this period—the most wonderful that has yet passed in the history of humanity—it has been given to few men so deeply to influence human lives, and so helpfully to touch vast multitudes. On the world's roll of fame space is very reluctantly given to an evangelist, to a man of whom, like his Master, it could be said "the common people heard him gladly," and heard him gladly not because he spoke to tickle their ears, or to voice their social and political aspirations, but because, with all the intensity of a fervent nature, he pleaded with them to become reconciled to God. And yet no competent observer can doubt that, whether the world recognises it or not, D. L. Moody will ever have a high place as one of the great uplifting forces of the nineteenth century.

It was inevitable and it was fitting that the story of such a life should be told, and told by one near enough to have full knowledge and complete access to all the necessary letters, journals, and memoranda of every kind. Already there have appeared several sketches of his life and work; but these have been either unauthorized, and of the kind that any competent hand could prepare from material already largely in print, or else avowedly brief estimates from the pen of personal friends. The preparation of the authentic life which has just been published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, in one handsome, well-printed and profusely-illustrated volume, was undertaken by Mr. W. R. Moody, the son of the great teacher and preacher, "as a sacred trust." Near relatives are not always the best biographers; but in this case readers of the fascinating story will feel that they have much for which to be thankful, and even if the desire to do so possessed them. "Father lived," he tells us, "solely for the glory of God, and for the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ." It is because this record is true, and because what D. L. Moody became and did were so manifestly the work of the Divine Spirit, that this promises to be one of the most helpful lives ever published. Surely a generation like ours—fond as it is of wealth, of culture, of selfishness, of the worldly spirit and of the life that now is—requires constantly to be reminded that after all the greatest need is to "seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." And even the nineteenth century honours the men who honestly strive to make it do this.

Mr. Moody owed nothing to early advantages of position, of education, of powerful friends. He was essentially a self-made man; or rather he was a man who allowed God to possess him and lead him whither He would. "Them that honour Me I will honour" has never been more strikingly fulfilled than in the career, so deeply interesting to all careful readers, outlined in this book. Few records in history surpass in human interest that told here. We see the successive stages by which the resolute boy, intent upon winning a competence and making his way in the world, when he surrendered his whole heart and life to God's guidance, became the successful teacher, and speaker, and evangelist, until at length and his influence one that can be measured only by the revelations of the Day of Judgment.

Though the home of his boyhood was poor and struggling, it was a splendid school. It was a New England home of the best type, and the central force in it was a Christian mother. "Mr. Moody could never speak of those early days of want and adversity without the most tender references to that brave mother whose self-sacrifice and devotion had sacredly guarded the home entrusted to her care." Like many another boy, D. L. Moody thought, when he got from the strict rule of the house, he would do as he liked and not go to church any more. "But I had got so in the habit of going that I couldn't stay away. There I first found Christ, and have often said, 'Mother, I thank you for making me go to the house of God when I didn't want to go.'" Mrs. Moody lived to the age of ninety, and died only a few years before her famous son. The sketch of these early days, though brief, is one of the best parts of the book.

That great event in life which we call conversion came to Moody while he was a lad working in a shoe shop in Boston. Through the influence of his Sunday school teacher, Mr. Kimball, he was led to study the Bible. Very characteristic was his comment when the teacher was enlarging upon the character and ability of Moses: "Say, Mr. Kimball, that man Moses must have been smart." Like many another lad before and since, Moody was religious, but not under the full power of the Spirit. He was brought to decision, as he himself afterwards was destined to bring so many, by the kind, sympathetic, pointed word of his teacher. Mr. Kimball tells us how he was impelled one day to go into the shop, place his hand upon the lad's shoulder, and plead with him to decide for Christ. "I simply told him of Christ's love for him, and the love Christ wanted in return. That was all there was. It seemed the young man was just ready for the light that then broke upon him, and there, in the back of that store in Boston, he gave himself and his life to Christ." Seventeen years later Moody was instrumental in bringing one of Mr. Kimball's sons, then about eighteen years old, to the Saviour he himself had found through the lad's father.

Much as we should like to dwell upon them, we are unable here to follow the steps which led Moody from Boston to Chicago, whither he went in 1856. At that time he was ambitious to excel in business, and he had every prospect of doing so. He was saved from many temptations by the energetic way in which he took up Christian work at a little mission Sunday-school, where they told him "that they would welcome him if he would provide his own class." This he joyously did from the "hoodlums," who abounded in that district. He found his wife, too, in one of the teachers of this school. This school was his true apprenticeship for the work of his life, and it was in dealing with the rough, fresh, very human denizens of this hard district that he gained his profound knowledge of human nature, his power of arresting the attention, his gift of forceful and direct Gospel speaking. From this school it was an easy stage to mission work in the same region; and upon one of the first occasions when he spoke, a hasty observer told him he would, in his opinion, "serve God best by keeping still." When he said, "I know I make many mistakes, and I lack a great many things; but I'm doing the best I can with what I've got." And then he carried war into the enemy's country: "Look here, friend, you've got grammar enough—what are you doing with it for the Master?"

The time came when Moody had to choose which way he would take—business and wealth, or religious work and such provision as he could obtain while devoting himself wholly to the spiritual welfare of others. It was a fierce conflict, for he was on the high road to fortune. "The greatest struggle I ever had in my life was when I gave up business," he used often to say in later life. The part of the biography which deals with these years is full of interest and instruction. From 1860 to 1872 he filled various posts, but always with developing power in Christian work and increasing skill in dealing with individual souls. During the great Civil War he did much service of many kinds in connection with the work of the Christian Commission and other forms of religious work in the Army of the Northern States. During these years, also, he steadily grew in position and influence in Chicago, and became known to ever-widening circles of Christian workers and of delighted hearers.

Such a man, trained in such a school, his heart aflame with love to Christ and love to his fellowmen, making the Bible the sole rule of life, willing to be led whithersoever the Spirit of God caught him—such a man, sooner or later, was certain to make his mark upon the generation to which he belonged. And, in God's own time and way, the larger service came upon him, and nobly was it performed.

The chief charm of this biography is the simple, affectionate, direct way in which the story of a great life is unfolded. There is no panegyric. There is much about Moody from the pens of those who knew him well, or who were his fellow-workers at different periods in his busy life. It is even possible that some readers may feel that it is largely a book about the great evangelist rather than a portraiture of the man as he was. This, if it be so, is inevitable, as Moody was to be able to spend much time in letter-writing, and there is no sign that he kept diaries. And yet the book does full justice to his ripe Christian experience, to his growth in the knowledge of the Bible, and his power to apply it to the ever-varying needs of life, to the singleness of his aim, and to his absolute freedom from all forms of self-seeking and self-interest.

We have referred above to his sacrifice of worldly prospects, and one of the most charming sections of the book tells how largely, under the influence of Henry Moorhouse, Moody came to realize the power of the love of God rather than the justice of God. This was one of the most important steps in the divinely-ordered training which fitted him so nobly for his many evangelistic campaigns in Great Britain and the United States. "I used to preach that God was behind the sinner with a double-edged sword ready to hew him down. I preach now that God is behind him with love, and he is running away from the God of love."

The book tells succinctly, but well, the story of his later years, exactly what most readers will care to know about Moody's evangelistic tours, about the vexed question of the hymn-book, about his methods of dealing with anxious souls. The natural growth of the various forms of Christian activity at Northfield is also fully set forth. But probably most readers will enjoy still more the attractive description of —his intense love of the country, his beautiful affection and reverence for his mother, the joy he took in his children and grand-children, and his never-failing interest in and desire to aid sinful and fallen and sorrowful men and women.

THE HOME LIFE AT NORTHFIELD

It is possible that at some later stage there may come a fuller study of this great life, and a more penetrative and closer analysis of a mind and heart that so profoundly moved vast multitudes. Meanwhile we can be grateful for a work in which there is not a dull page from beginning to end, which sparkles with much of Moody's own vigour and force and humour, which reveals so much in him that was tender and lovable, making us glad to get to know so much better, as we read its pages, the clean, helpful, strong life which it unfolds. If we were inclined to select from the many which offer that sentence which seems most aptly to sum up Dwight L. Moody's constant ambition and successful aim, it would be this: "I think one man with Christ in his soul is worth a thousand of those without Him." Few workers in this or any other generation have done more to enrich the world with men who have admitted Christ into their souls than the man who could face death with the jubilant words: "This is my Coronation Day! I have been looking forward to it for years." Men with this spirit never die, and Dwight L. Moody will continue to live in the hearts he blessed, and in the good works which he was privileged to begin.

The Gag in Dublin.—Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin, writes: "I have to thank you for inserting my letter in re the two members of the Salvation Army who were sent to jail for preaching the Gospel in Middle Abbey Street, Dublin. Their superiors in London have paid the fine, tendered bail for the men, and stopped the appeal to a higher court. Consequently, all sums received for defraying the cost will be returned to the donors."

In the King's Courts.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

OUR story brings us next to speak of the Baptist's relations with Herod Antipas, son of the great Herod, a contemptible princeling who inherited a fourth part of his father's dominions (hence known as the Tetrarch), ruling over Galilee and part of Perea.

It is of the collision between this man, whom our Lord compared to a fox, and John the Baptist that we have now to treat. We need only notice here that every great character on the page of history has had his vehement antagonist. Moses, Pharaoh; Elijah, Ahab; Jeremiah, Jehoiakim; Paul, Nero; Savonarola, the Medici; Luther, the Emperor Charles V.; John Knox, Queen Mary.

I. The Cause of the Collision.—All the world had flocked to see and hear John the Baptist. Every mouth was full of his eccentricities and eloquence. Marvellous stories were being told of the effect which he had produced on the lives of those who had come under his influence. All this was well known to Herod. His spies were present in every great gathering, and served the purpose of the newspaper of to-day; so that he was well informed of all the topics that engaged the popular mind.

For some months, also, Herod had watched the career of the preacher. When he least expected it, he was under the surveillance of the closest criticism. A fierce light, like that which beats about a throne, fell strongly on John's most secret actions. And the result had been perfectly satisfactory. Herod felt that here was a true man. He observed him, and was satisfied that he was a just man and a holy. Reasons of state forbade the king from going in person to the Jordan Valley; but he was extremely eager to see and hear this mighty man of God: and so, one day, Herod "sent for him."

We might wonder how it could happen that a man like Herod, who notoriously lived in a glass house, so far as character went, should be willing to call in so merciless a preacher of repentance as John the Baptist was—before whose words, flung like stones, full many a glass house had crashed to the ground, leaving its tenant

UNSHELTERED BEFORE THE STORM.

It must be remembered that most men, when they enter the precincts of the court, are accustomed to put velvet in their mouths; and, however vehement they may have been in denouncing the sins of the lower classes, they change their tone when face to face with sinners in high places. Such a scene is depicted in Old Testament history, when, at the solicitation of Jehoshaphat, Ahab sent for Micaiah, "The messenger that went to call Micaiah spake unto him saying, 'Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the King with one mouth; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good."

Another reason probably actuated Herod. He knew that the land was filled with the fame of the Baptist, and it seemed an easy path to popularity, and likely to divert attention from his private sins, which had made much scandal, to patronize the religion of the masses. At this point he probably entertained much the same feeling toward the desert-prophet that led Simon the Pharisee to invite Jesus to eat with him.

One interpretation of Mark vi. 20 suggests that the Baptist's first sermon before Herod was followed by another, and yet another. He "used to hear" (the imperfect tense) him gladly, and "did many things." It was a relief to Herod's mind to feel that there were many things which he could do, many wrongs which he could set right, whilst the main wrong of his life was left untouched. Ah! it is remarkable how much men will do in the direction of amendment and reform, if only, by a tacit understanding, nothing is said, or hinted at, which threatens the one sin in which the heart's evil has concentrated itself. But John knew that his duty to Herod, to truth, to public morality, demanded that he should go further, and on one memorable occasion he accused the royal criminal in the memorable sentence which could not be forgiven: "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife."

Every hearer stood aghast. A death-like hush fell on the assembly, which probably broke up in dismay. So paralyzed was everyone that no hand was laid on the preacher. We are expressly told that "Herod sent forth and laid hold upon John" (Mark vi. 17); from which we infer that the fearless preacher passed out through the amazed and conscience-stricken assemblage, leaving dismay, like that which fell on the roysterers in Belshazzar's court, when the hand of the Almighty traced the mysterious characters on the palace wall in lines of fire.

The first feeling of awe and conscience-stricken remorse would, however, soon pass off. Some would hasten to condole with Herodias, some to sympathize with Herod. Herodias would retire to her apartments, accompanied by her high ladies, vowing fiery vengeance on the preacher—thirsting for the blood of another Elijah! She would give her paramour no rest; and, perhaps one evening, when John had retired for meditation and prayer, his disciples being off their guard and the people absent, a handful of soldiers arrested him, bound him, and led him off to the strong castle of Machærus.

II. John's Imprisonment and its Opportunities. The castle of Machærus was known as "the diadem," or "the black tower." It lay on the east side of the Dead Sea, almost on a line with Bethlehem. The ruins of the castle are still to be seen, in great masses of squared stone, on the top of a lofty hill, surrounded on three sides by unscalable precipices, descending to such depths that Josephus says the eye could not reach their bottom.

On this impregnable site, Dr. Geikie tells us Herod had erected a great wall, enclosing the summit of the hill, with towers two hundred feet high at the corners, and in the space thus gained had built a grand palace. Detached from the palace was a stern and gloomy keep, with underground dungeons still visible, hewn down into the solid rock. This was the scene of John's imprisonment.

The Evangelist says expressly that they bound the child of the desert-wastes—with his love for dear liberty, sensitive to the touch of the sunshine and the breeze, to the beauty that lay over the hills, accustomed to go and come at his will—as though it were the last indignity and affront to fetter those lithe and supple limbs, and place them under constraint. What a contrast between the gay revelry that reigned yonder within the palace, and the slow torture which the noble spirit of the Baptist was doomed to suffer through those weary months!

Is there anything like that in your life, my reader? In many an old castle the attention of the visitor is directed to a haunted room, where ghosts are said to walk at night; but in how many hearts there are dark subterranean apartments, where lies imprisoned! Outwardly there is the gaiety and mirth as of a palace; but inwardly there is remorse, misery, unrest. In lonely hours there is a voice which pierces the thickest walls of your assumed indifference, and rings up into the house of your life, where the soul seeks to close its ear in vain. It is a sad, monotonous, heart-piercing cry which that voice repeats: "It is not lawful, not lawful, NOT LAWFUL!" And nothing can stay it but repentance, confession, restitution, so far as may be, and the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, which cleanseth from all sin.

From time to time it would seem as though the strictness of John's imprisonment was relaxed. His disciples were permitted to see him, and tell him of what was happening in the world without; but, stranger than all, he was summoned to have audiences with Herod himself. Well might the King be ill at ease, and swept to and fro by very different currents. First, he was deeply incensed, as he thought of the manner in which the Baptist had treated him, denouncing him before his court. Second, he feared John, "knowing that he was a righteous man and a holy." 'Twixt these influences he was "much perplexed" (Mark vi. 20, R.V.). When he was with Herodias, he thought as she did, and left her, almost resolved to give the fatal order; but when he was alone, the other influence made itself felt, and he would send for John. "Come," he might say, "you remember what you said. If you unsay that sentence, I will set you free." Such an offer must have presented a strong temptation to the emaciated captive, whose physique had already lost the elasticity and vigour of his early manhood, and was showing signs of his grievous privation. But he had no alternative; and, however often the offer was repeated, he met it with

THE SAME UNWAVERING REPLY.

John could do no other; but it was a sublime act of devotion to God and Truth. He had no thought for himself at all, and thought only of the choice and destiny of that guilty pair, from which he would warn and save them, if he might. Well might the Lord ask, in after days, if John was a reed shaken with the wind. Rather he resembled a forest tree, whose deeply-struck and far-spreading roots secure it against the attack of the hurricane; or a mighty Alp, which defies the tremor of the earthquake, and rears its head above the storm.

How many men are like Herod! They resemble the superficial ground, on which the seed springs into rapid and unnatural growth, but the rock lies close beneath the surface. Now they are swayed by the voice of the preacher, and moved by the pleadings of conscience, allowed for one brief moment to utter its protests and remonstrances; and then they that unholy passion, that sinful habit, that ill-gotten gain, and are sucked back from the beach, on which they were almost free, into the sea of ink and death.

You may be trying, my reader, to steer a middle course between John the Baptist and Herodias. Now you resolve to get free of her guilty charms, and break the spell that fascinates you. Oh that there might come to you the voice that spoke with such power to Augustine, and that like him you might now and here yield yourself to it, so that when the temptress, whatever form she may assume, approaches you with the whisper: "I am she, Augustine," you may answer: "But I am not he!"

III. Herod's Inevitable Deterioration. Again and again John was remanded back to his cell. Probably twelve months passed thus. But each time the King failed to act on the preacher's remonstrances; he became more impervious to his appeals, more liable to the sway of passion. Thus, when a supreme moment came, in which he was under the influence of drink and unholy appetite, and the reign of such moral nature as remained was greatly enfeebled, it is not to be wondered at that Herodias had her way; and, before her murderous request, the last thin fence of resistance broke down, and he gave orders that it should be as she desired.

The story does not end here. He not only murdered John the Baptist, but he inflicted a deadly wound on his own moral nature, from which it never recovered. Ultimately he had no thought in the presence of Christ than to see Him work a miracle; and when his desire was refused, set Him at nought with his mighty men, mocked his claims to be the King of Israel, did not scruple to treat Him with indignity and violence, and so dismissed Him.

Is it wonderful that our Lord was speechless before such a man? What else could He be? The deterioration had been so awful and complete. For the love of God can say nothing to us, though it be prepared to die on our behalf, so long as we refuse to repent of, and put away, our sin. We remember some solemn words, which may be applied in all their fearful significance to that scene: "There is a sin unto death; not concerning this do I say that he should make request."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 10. Psalm cxvii.

THIS is the shortest of the Psalms, but is honoured by being quoted by the Apostle Paul as a link in his chain of argument that God meant his salvation for the whole race (Rom. xv. 11). True that God's mercy was great toward Israel, that it might stream thence to the whole world of men, that all nations should praise Him.

When God entrusts special illumination and gifts to any individual or family, it is not for their exclusive possession or emolument, but that they should diffuse and spread its blessing. Some are gifted with the physician's insight into disease and knowledge of the curative art, not that they may keep their own body in health, but that they should fill their days and nights with labours on the behalf of others. So with insight into God's love and grace, so of all knowledge of the penalty of sin and the finished work of Atonement. All this is communicated to chosen vessels that they may bear the water of life to those who are pining away with thirst. The Jews abused their prerogative and misread God's purposes in election; and their city was overthrown, and themselves scattered. Always in the history of the world, the same fate has befallen those who have used for themselves God's gifts for the race. Where are now the sites of the early churches of Christianity? Ask the desolate ruins of Asia Minor and North Africa!

Note the combination of loving-kindness which prevails (as the word might be rendered), and of God's Truth, or Troth, i.e., his faithfulness. His love is always consistent with his Truth, and based on it; and not only are we saved in accordance with the promptings of over-abounding grace, but grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life. "Praise ye the Lord!" What reader of this psalm will go forth to teach the nations to praise our God?

MONDAY, June 11. Psalm cxviii.

This psalm was evidently a processional hymn, intended for temple use, and probably meant to be sung antiphonally, on some day of national rejoicing (v. 24). In the later times of Jewish history, after the return from captivity, verse 25 was the festal song chanted by the Priests and Levites, whilst the altar of burnt-offering was being solemnly compassed, once on each of the first six days of the Feast of Tabernacles, and seven times on the seventh.

It is interesting to note the structure of the psalm. The summons of the full choir to three classes (1-4); the song of the single voice (5-7); the answer of the choir, representing the experience of the chosen people; the individual experience resumed in verses 10-14; again the answer of the choir (15, 16); the single voice (17-19), where, perhaps, the procession had reached the temple; it is supposed that verse 20 represents the answer of Priests and Levites, who kept the doors, and laid stress on the character of those who would tread the sacred precincts; again the individual voice in verse 21; and again the full chorus (vv. 22-27); the single voice once more (v. 28); and the closing chorus of thanks.

One of my most favourite verses is the twenty-seventh. As soon as God shows you light, use it to lead you to fuller consecration. The altar is prepared, which sanctifieth the giver and the gift. Beside it, the priest stands ready. See to it that He binds you to it by the golden cord of love, the silvern of hope, the crimson of his self-sacrifice for you. Be willing to become a living sacrifice, which is your reasonable service. And the confession of a life thus yielded to God will be that He is good. Those who live half-hearted lives are those who misunderstand Him.

TUESDAY, June 12. Psalm cxix.

We need not explain the mechanism of this psalm; that it is an acrostic, and that the paragraphs are distinguished by the letters of the Hebrew alphabet. It was especially prized by the ancient Hebrews, and young people were expected to learn it. It is a blessed exercise, on our knees before God, to appropriate its prayers, and tears, and yearnings.

There is but one verse in which the law or will of God is not referred to. Under one phrase or another there is repeated reference to the Divine Mind, and the earnest desire of the holy psalmist is, that his will should be brought into blessed and unbroken union with it. We should not be far wrong if we substituted will for the various epithets by which God's Word is referred to.

It would be interesting to construct the biography of the psalmist from his various confessions. He had gone astray as a lost sheep, he was small and despised, he had many persecutors and adversaries, he was like a bottle in the smoke, but he hoped in God's salvation; he had taken God's testimonies to be his heritage for ever; he had accounted God's will and service more than food or gold; his one prayer which breaks in on the course of this noble psalm, like a refrain, was—teach me thy statutes. That God should shine upon him, that God should quicken him, that God would keep him from swerving to the right or left—this was his one passionate desire, and therefore these prayers and soul outpourings have been the mould into which saints of all ages have poured the molten metal of their own.

What precious nuggets there are amid these golden sands: "I am thine, save me;" "Thou art near, O Lord;" "Thy statutes have been my songs."

WEDNESDAY, June 13. Psalm cxx.

The first of the Songs of Ascents, sung by the devout Hebrews, as they gathered from the furthest parts of the land to the great annual feasts. Ah, ye now desolate hills and valleys of the Holy Land, how blithe ye were in those happy days, when successive bands of pilgrims joined from the adjacent valleys in the great accumulated multitude that swept up to the temple with their songs, to keep the feast!

The early stages in our journey towards the New Jerusalem are not always the happiest. We are beset with the persecutions of our relatives and associates. Our enemies are they of our own household. The father is set against his son, and the mother against her daughter; the brother against his sister, and the friend against her friend. There are, as the psalm indicates, lying lips, and a deceitful tongue; sharp arrows of sarcasm and hatred, with coals of juniper, which may stand for jealousy and spite. Woe is unto us then. From morning to night our ears are assailed with flouts and sneers, with taunting words, and venomous suggestions. We seem to sojourn in Meshech, and dwell among the tents of Kedar, who represent alien and hostile souls. How greatly we long for congenial and pious surroundings! We say that for too long our soul has had its dwelling with those that hate peace; and we hardly dare speak of peace lest we stir others up more vehemently to war.

In such circumstances, and in your distress, cry unto the Lord. He may not at once extricate you, because you may be needed where you are as his witness and confessor, but He will strengthen you with his grace so that you may be able to stand. He will make you a brazen wall, and an iron pillar, against which your enemies shall not prevail. And the most abandoned of these shall, one day, come and sue for mercy.

THURSDAY, June 14. Psalm cxxi.

This is the next phase in the story of the pilgrim soul. It had been accustomed to look up to the mountains, to the sources of its own strength and resolve, to the possible succour that might be expected from others. But it has been so often disappointed that it cries, Shall I look to these for help? (R.V., marg.) And it answers its question by resolving that its steadfast, expectant gaze should henceforth be fixed only on Him who dwells above the mountains, in the height of his heaven. "Henceforth, my help shall come from the Lord, which made heaven and earth." This is what the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews means, when he tells us to look away unto Jesus (xii. 1, 2)

How safe are they who derive their help from Jehovah! He will keep them from falling, and will not suffer their foot to be moved. He will keep them even in their dreams. He will suit Himself to every emergency.

Notice what the psalmist says about going out and coming in. Each day some of us have to go out to do our work, to fulfil the ministry with which God has honoured us, but He will go before us, covering our heads in the day of battle, conducting us through the valley where the wild beasts lurk. Each evening we come in, and perhaps there is more temptation amid the love and ease of the home than in the street or store. But there, too, He will keep us. Oh, what a blessed thought is the absolute keeping power of Jesus, not that He will keep us from temptation, but from yielding to it, from all known sin, from all that would bring grief to us and sorrow to Him. And He will do this by day when the sun shines, and through the moonlit or moonless nights, without break or intermission, till we are presented before his presence with exceeding joy.

FRIDAY, June 15. Psalm cxxii.

In the course of their journey, the pilgrims would at last come in sight of the city of their quest. The fair vision of Jerusalem would break on them, and they would cry, "Peace be within thy walls and prosperity within thy palaces." Similarly, in the history of the pilgrim soul, there comes a stage in which the possibilities and joys of Christian society first present themselves. Whereas it had been desolate and afflicted, sojourning in Meshech and dwelling among the tents of Kedar, it now comes unto Mount Zion and unto the city of God, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven.

Happy are they who are within reach of some godly church, whose convocations are sanctified by the sense of God's presence—compact in its unity, and ringing with thanks unto God's holy name. It is surely the duty of every child of God to join such a church, where there is an opportunity. It is a mistake to go to heaven alone. There may be a Jew-like Christian who can make the lonely pilgrimage; but it is better for most of us to go in company, under Divine direction.

Let us pray for the peace of Jerusalem. There are three reasons for this: first, because they who love her prosper; second, because of our brethren and companions; and third, because of the house of God. But we must do more than pray; our life must be one long endeavour for peace, resisting the bickering, jealous, fault-finding spirit, which too often manifests its presence among the people of God, and encouraging whatsoever makes for peace and concord. Mordecai's epitaph is that he sought the good of his people, and spake peace to all his seed.

SATURDAY, June 16. Psalm cxxiii.

All through our life, and especially when we have passed into fellowship with the professing children of God, we are liable to be put off from our quest by the inconsistencies of those who are not truly the children of God. Our soul gets filled with the scorning and contempt, with the pride of those who are at ease in Zion. If we show a little more eagerness in the things of God than they count to be necessary and becoming, they turn on us with their sarcastic jeers. Too often they have in this way succeeded in driving young converts back into the world, or, at least, setting back the clock of their experience.

At such times we must lift up our eyes to Him that dwells in the heavens. We must not turn away from Him, because some of his professing servants misrepresent Him. And we must keep them fixed on Him. The Oriental servant is apt at reading the least gestures of master or mistress. And for long intervals they will wait with their eyes intent for the first least sign. So let us live towards God, with our every faculty on the alert to ascertain the least indication of his holy will. And if He gives no sign, it is clear that He desires us to remain just as we are. Guidance is needed to indicate some new departure, but in the absence of any indication that you are to remove, stay where you are.

China Inland Mission.

CHEERING words of faith fell from the lips of Sir George Williams, presiding over the afternoon meeting of this Mission, in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week. It was a joy for him to meet again, at this thirty-fourth anniversary, all those who desire that the Chinese may be heirs with them of spiritual good things. As China opens under the influence of persevering steady Christian work, there may be a little trouble; but, in answer to believing prayer, God will overrule that trouble for good.

Mr. Walter B. Sloan, one of the secretaries, reviewed the year's work at considerable length. He opened with reference to the conviction that growth of the Mission and God's blessing upon it, is closely linked with the intercessory ministry of those who have joined the Prayer Union for definite supplication, founded upon information concerning the progress and needs of the work. Income last year in London amounted to £43,280; and in China, America, and Australia, to £9,916. These figures showed a decrease in the London income of £10,179, as compared with 1898, which was a year of abnormal prosperity; and an increase in the income from China, America, and Australia, of £1,798; or a total decrease of £8,381 for 1899, as compared with a total increase of £16,365 in 1898; but an increase for 1899 over 1897 of £7,983. On the whole, this might be regarded as satisfactory. Last year in the stations in China was 1,194, an increase of thirty over the previous year, bringing the total to 12,956 since the work of the Mission began. Of the 811 missionaries, 752 are on active service, thirty are on the home staff and not designated to stations, and twenty-nine are students in China. There went out of new workers during the year nineteen men and thirty women; and forty-six missionaries returned from furlough; so that there were ninety-five arrivals in China during 1899. Mr. Sloan had been privileged to visit friends of the Mission in Canada and the United States, and he found the work on the other side of the Atlantic distinctly cheering. The great Ecumenical Conference in New York was of the missionary movement during the past hundred years. The brotherly feeling among representatives from various parts of the heathen field afforded great encouragement in view of the future; and there was much to thank God for in the prevalent spiritual and evangelistic tone of the great gatherings. On behalf of all workers in the China Inland Mission, he asked constant prayer for protection and blessing amid the dangers and difficulties of their labours.

THE TOTAL NUMBER OF BAPTISMS

Dr. F. Howard Taylor, speaking of his experiences as a medical missionary in Ho-nan, declared that if he had a hundred lives, he would invest every one of them in the foreign field of labour for Christ. His wife (once known as Miss Geraldine Guinness) spoke of the present gladdening influence of familiar faces, far exceeded, however, by supported by much prayer at home. Mrs. Taylor further gave a vivid description of a riot in which she, her husband, and two other English ladies barely escaped with their lives from an infuriated mob, one of the party, Miss Ruth Brook, being severely wounded in the head. But before they left, nineteen converts were baptized in the same courtyard where the outrage took place.

Mr. H. C. Burrows had something to tell of interest, concerning what he had seen and done during some seven years' work for God in the south-east of Shan-si, in the way of attendance at fairs, preaching in the street "chapels," and in opium refuges. His testimony concerning the terrible evils of the drug just named, was uniform with that which is all too common to the friends of missions; and, alas, he mentioned that many of the opium-smokers go back from their Christian profession.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, said that he had come to share the joy of this anniversary, and to express the sympathy felt for the missionaries of the C.I.M. by those of his own Society, who have sometimes met their brethren and had pleasant fellowship with them. There is temporary anxiety as to the state of things in China, qualified by the knowledge that GOD IS BEHIND ALL TROUBLE.

Only a few days ago his Society received information that one of the chapels in the neighbourhood of Pekin had been burned down, that the native pastor was killed, and that all the native Christians were suffering violence at the hands of the Boxers. Ever since the Gospel had been introduced into China there had been no one year without persecution. There may be trouble coming, but it will be faced, for God will give grace and strength. Looking at what is done by our men in South Africa for an earthly sovereign, missionaries will not refuse to lay down their lives, if need be, in a still greater service; and as to Christian natives, the red rain of persecution will prove, as ever, the seed of the Church. The Empress of China will do well if she lays to heart the old story about Canute and the tide. Her advisers seem to encourage her in opposition to Christianity; but all the forces of Manchuria can no more stop the Gospel tide in China than Manchu bows, arrows, and matchlocks can contend against modern artillery. Amid unexampled opportunity for large and growing service, he was convinced that China is not to be evangelized by Europeans, but by converted natives, over whom we are privileged of God to have the leadership; and for this great work we have untold resources to fall back upon in our God. In a closing prayer Rev. J. J. Luce specially remembered Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and his wife, now in America.

THE EVENING MEETING

was very stimulating, Mr. John Colville, M.P., was chairman. He said that, amid the scheming of great nations concerning China, our one confidence for the future of that land must be in God. Among the speakers was a Swedish member of Council, Mr. Rinmann, who said Scandinavian missions in China owe much of their strength and inspiration to the C.I.M. In this great field the Word of God never rests; the simplicity of native faith is remarkable, and it is found possible to be kept fresh and bright in a crooked and perverse generation, when our springs are in God.

STRIKING INCIDENTS.

Miss Ruth Brook said that an old beggar-woman of seventy years of age, who had just received Christianity into her heart by faith, exclaimed "Why haven't you come and told us this sooner?" Afterwards, she was found kneeling side by side with the Biblewoman, saying, "Tell me his name; I've forgotten his name; how can I pray to Him if I don't know his name?" Being desirous of devoting her whole time to observance of the Lord's Day, the old lady asked God, in simple faith, to provide on the day before provision for the two days' needs. She would bring the biggest "cash" she received, and say that she wanted to give them to Jesus.

Mr. Marshall Broomhall told a somewhat remarkable story of a man, converted through an unsatisfactory member of a church, who gave up his spurious medical practice, which brought him a considerable income, and started to work for God among his own people, opening his shop to shelter them from the opium dens. He at length asked for a regular service to be established in the town. There were six baptisms in 1898, more last year, and the Christians have a place of worship, built with their own hands.

Mr. Rinmann met a Chinese woman who was prepared for the Gospel by hearing her grandfather read from a New Testament some forty years before; and though the book disappeared in some way, she never forgot the words she had heard. The Word of God never rests, but its work in the hearts of the heathen gives us continual joy.

Speaking of medical mission work, Dr. Howard Taylor observed that he had seen two thriving little churches in certain Chinese towns as the result of helping the people in regard to their ailments. Among those treated was a demoniac young man, whose case was evidently not amenable to medicine; but the sufferer found deliverance upon being taken direct to the Great Healer. Such cases are as common in China as they were in Palestine, in the days of our Lord. One woman patient was rapidly nearing the river of death when treatment was asked for her, and it was painful to find no time for telling her of Christ.

Mrs. Howard Taylor told of hundreds of women crowding round her to hear the Gospel, owing to a demoniac of their number having been cured. The preacher's voice failed, through long-continued speaking; she therefore, for the first time, asked a certain converted native woman to speak for her Lord. This was a novel and startling thing to the poor creature, and at first she shrank from it. But willingness to do anything for her loved Saviour led her to bow her head in prayer about it; and then she began to speak with singular power. She continued to testify for her Master from that day forward.

British Syrian Mission.

A MEETING in the interests of this Mission was held a few days ago at 83, Lancaster Gate, by kind permission of the Countess of Meath. Canon Tristram, who presided, said that he had known the work from its commencement, when Mrs. Bowen Thompson gathered round her the widows and orphans made desolate and homeless by the awful massacres of 1860. Beside the noble institution in Beyrout for training native girls as Christian teachers, &c., there are fifty-two schools scattered through the country, with a staff of twenty English lady missionaries and 128 native helpers—teachers, Bible-women, and Scripture readers. Canon Tristram remarked that the hardest task the pioneers of Christianity have is the conquest of Mohammedanism, and the citadel is in the Hareem.

It is not possible for a male missionary to accomplish much. If he seeks to convert a Moslem, he invites him to almost certain death! But in the Hareem it is different. There is no outward exposure of danger with the women, and the only pure love known to a Moslem is his attachment to his mother, and he does not readily forget what he learns from her. The women are even more bigoted (because more ignorant) followers of Mahome than the men. And if they can be brought up as Christians in these schools, even if afterwards they are forced into a Mohammedan marriage, their children will imbibe their faith. This is what the B.S.M. is doing for the regeneration of Syria.

Miss Bazett dwelt on the bright intelligence of the children, and the admirable way in which they are taught to interpret and explain the Scriptures they learn. One little girl, in answer to a question put to her by the speaker rendered the spiritual meaning of the Storm on the Lake as follows: "The sea is like the world; the boat is like the place of safety we are in when we come to Jesus. The sailors are like the followers of Jesus, and the storm is like the troubles in the world; but if we have Jesus in the little boat we need not be afraid."

Rev. E. Bacheler Russell made an earnest appeal for practical help for this good work. There was urgent need of £150 to complete the purchase of some school property in the Lebanon, that would have fallen into Roman Catholic hands unless the B.S.M. had bought it; and this would have resulted in the eviction of the Mission and the eclipse of evangelical light in that place. Mr. Russell spoke of the economy with which the Mission is carried on, also of the spirituality of both the work and the workers.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

As the famine increases in intensity, the burden upon the missionaries grows correspondingly heavier. The tidings from Gujerat are especially terrible. Mr. Alfred Taylor, a worker of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, thus describes the state of affairs at Ahmadabad:—"We visited the Poorhouse. In it were some 1,300 inmates, of all ages, mostly living skeletons, and all more or less helpless from privation and famine sickness. In spite of much attention shown to their needs, very many of them die. We were conducted to the corner of a field where was a GROUP OF ELEVEN CORPSES.

They had died in the night. Late in the afternoon, while passing through the bazaar, we overtook a cart which jolted towards the Poorhouse. It contained ten famine victims, from the outskirts of the city. Two children, of about seven years of age, were evidently far beyond the need of any poorhouse; their faces were black with flies. Most of the others were semi-conscious and unable to articulate; one of the men, with more strength than the rest, joined his hands to us in an attitude of supplication. On turning away from this sickening scene, we heard the imploring and weakly cry of a skin-and-bone beggar, asking alms of a well-to-do merchant, who, standing at the door of his shop, roughly turned away this object for charity, probably destined to follow very soon the occupants of the cart. Yet a few steps down the street, an overfed but sacred Brahman bull was having grain handed to it! while out in the open square we saw hundreds of pigeons having corn scattered before them, as an act of righteousness. Such is heathenism!"

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission has received from Miss Fulcher, one of the Society's missionaries at Malegaon, in the Bombay Presidency, some particulars of most pitiable sights:—"On the ground, near our schoolroom, you may see each day over fifty gathered, some too weak to sit up, and

ALL TERRIBLY EMACIATED.

Here, at noon, they receive the first and only meal of the day, which consists of a handful of grain, and once a week a cooked meal. This is very little, but it keeps them from starvation. One Sunday, about three weeks ago, most of the day was spent in trying to save six little ones brought to us. We started by bathing them. Then I turned barber, by which time some food was ready; and, seated in a row outside the tent, they ate ravenously, occasionally raising their large sallow eyes, which spoke more eloquently than words. Two of them—quite mites—were beyond eating, and looked as though they could scarcely live another hour. One died very soon afterwards.

"The scenes that met one all along the road, from Malegaon onward to Munmar, were sad to a degree. Husbands were carrying dying wives on their backs, who were beyond walking, and mothers carrying their sons. One lad we saw, apparently unable to hold on to his mother's neck any longer, suddenly fall from her back into the road, there to lie until death should release him! A few steps further on we again stopped before a little group by the wayside, who sat watching someone writhing in the agonies of cholera. They must wait until she is dead, and not till then move on. Added to famine we have cholera raging in Malegaon; the people, in desperation, having and dying cattle, which abound, and drunk of bad water, are now being taken away in large numbers by this enemy. Smallpox also is rife in our midst, and at Yeola all work is stopped on account of plague. Probably the worst has yet to come, during June and July."

In connection with the work of the United Presbyterian Church, the number of orphans, despite the great mortality, continues over 1,200. Both at Ashapura and Beawar cholera has broken out. At Ashapura seventeen died in one day. At Beawar Dr. R. G. Robson has formed a camp on a favourite site three-quarters of a mile from the city, and has removed to it the 270 women and girls under his care, so that every precaution might be used to protect them from cholera.

Soldiers in South Africa.

THE CAMP HOMES.

In a further communication from the front, Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe give a brief review of their work in connection with the British operations. After observing that £6,000 has been received from the soldiers, chiefly in pennies, in payment for food, &c., Mr. and Mrs. Howe say:—"It is six months since we opened our first Camp-Home. We have been able to buy a complete equipment for seven Homes, and have twenty-seven European workers at the front. It has been our privilege to feed thousands of hungry men, and to clothe a considerable number. On one evening we had as many as 2,000 men to tea, and it may interest your readers to know that on that occasion the supplies included 3,000 pine apples, 200 water melons, 6,000 buns, and 250 gallons of tea. At special places our workers meet the sick with milk and various comforts, besides providing for some who are in hospitals.

"At all our Homes we have made it clear that the refreshment bar is a secondary consideration. At each there is a separate marquee for spiritual work. The nightly attendances are large, and many of the soldiers have yielded to the Saviour. Our workers occasionally act for the chaplains and bury the dead. At De Aar, they meet the trains in which soldiers are being conveyed to the front, and distribute books and tracts, while at Springfontein the trains containing the sick are met and buckets of milk provided. In many other ways, too, the various needs of the men have been satisfied. Our health will not allow us to stay here for long. We are looking that, in answer to prayer, the Lord will lead those who are interested to take over the work at a later stage. G. B. and M. S. Osborn Howe."

A SOLDIER'S LETTER.

In the course of a letter to a sorrowing mother whose son (a colour-sergeant) had been killed in battle, a friend recently wrote: "Although you do not know me personally, yet I feel I must write you a few lines, as the love of Christ constrains me, in your bereavement. I knew your son so well; many a blessed time we have had together at the Throne of Grace. I cannot help passing on to you 1 Pet. i. 7, and commend you to the comfort of the Holy Spirit to keep your heart from fainting, and bring to your remembrance that all God's dealings with us are in love. I was not with our dear colour-serjeant when he was killed, but I understand he suffered no pain. The last time I saw him was at Cape Town, on the night of his departure for Kimberley, and he wished me the Lord's presence till we should meet again in glory. I know not myself whether I may be in the body next week, but I know that time is short, and He that shall come will come, and not tarry. May we live, so that, like our dear colour-sergeant, we may be ready when Jesus says, 'Come up higher.' I commend you to the God of all comfort."

THE SOLDIERS' NEW TESTAMENTS.

Mr. Vernon Harcourt, organizing secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, has been for some time at the front, distributing copies of the Soldiers' New Testament, and holding Gospel services as he has had opportunity. The success of the Soldiers' Testaments, with their interesting imprimatur by Lord Wolseley, will best be demonstrated by Mr. Harcourt's last letter, in which he says:—

Drawing from my pouch one of the "Soldier's New Testaments," I asked, "Don't you think you could make room in your khaki for one this size?" At sight of the pretty and appropriately-designed little volume, the bronzed face brightened, and the fierce eye gleamed with a softened light. "My word! but that's bonnie!" he exclaimed, taking the little book gingerly between his fingers, and examining it with as much pleasure as a child might evince at sight of his first picture book. The battered and maimed warriors of Graspan, Belmont, and Paardeberg hobbled on their crutches, or limped by aid of a stick, to look at this new thing in the way of British solicitude for Tommy's spiritual welfare.

Such was the attention devoted by each one of these poor fellows, that my Highland friend forgot to reply to my query. On repeating it, his answer came straight from the heart, and bore in it the ring of absolute truth. "Find room for it, sir? Rather! I'd stow my tobacco pouch in one boot and my pipe in t'other, to make room for this. Now, if one of these had been given to each of us when we embarked, we'd have stuck to it like grim death." All the time he was speaking, this soldier kept turning over the leaves of the Testament, when, suddenly, his eyes rested on the short but powerful commendatory preface written by Field Marshal Lord Wolseley.

"Oh, listen to this, chums!" he cried; and then, in a clear and distinct utterance, he read out the sage advice given by the Commander-in-Chief of the British army, an advice which, if accepted and acted upon, would render that army invincible in the field, and a still greater honour to the British Empire. The soldiers, both officers and men, are eager to obtain the Testaments, and I am sanguine about the results that, under Divine blessing, are bound to be the outcome of this great and truly spiritual enterprise.

These words eminently prove that the work has not been in vain, and that the troops have given a most hearty welcome to their special Testament.

At Paris Exhibition.

THE beautiful hall which we have been permitted to secure for Gospel work just outside the Exhibition, on the edge of the Champ de Mars and under the shadow of the Eiffel Tower, is now in use daily, though the workmen have not yet completed it. On Sunday, May 6, it was opened for the first time for the annual meeting of the M'All Mission in France. The chair was occupied by the honoured president of the mission, M. Sautter, who, after a brief introductory prayer, in which he sought the Divine blessing on all that should be done in this hall, and after Scripture reading and earnest prayer by M. Reveillaud, the well-known secretary of the French Tract Society, gave an admirable address, holding up the Gospel of Christ, which the mission seeks to set forth as the only solution for the doubts and difficulties of the age.

After the director of the mission, Rev. C. E. Greig, had carried us through many towns of France and Corsica, by means of lantern slides, and told us many encouraging incidents of the work that is being done, Pastor Henri Soulie gave an eloquent address, in which he set forth the sublime certainty of Christ's claim, "I am the Light of the World," in opposition to the blank ignorance or the faltering hypotheses of unbelieving men of science as regards the great questions: Whence are we? Whither go we? How should we pass through this world?

On the Sunday, after another week's patient waiting, we were able to hold public meetings in the afternoon and evening, and were much gratified with the attendance, and especially with the earnest attention of the audiences, to most of whom meetings of this kind were evidently an entire novelty. In the evening we had more than 200 listeners, the great majority staying quietly to the end. M. Sautter again presided, and gave earnest, simple testimony as a manufacturer who has taken part in each of the Exhibitions held in this city during the past half-century, to the preciousness of that Gospel by which he has lived. Last evening we began daily meetings, and were again gratified by the interest manifested, as Messrs. Greig and Anderson proclaimed the Gospel message, so old to us, so new to most of the hearers.

We have also begun a daily prayer-meeting, at which several of the workers engaged in the distribution of Gospels and tracts at the gates of the Exhibition are usually present. They are greatly encouraged by the way in which they are received; instances of Gospels or tracts refused or torn up being very exceptional. Much good seed is being sown, which will be carried into all corners of France, and will surely bring forth fruit after many days.

Rev. Robert Lowry, D.D.

THIS preacher and hymn-writer, who passed away at the end of the last year, at Plainfield, New Jersey, was widely known, and highly esteemed. He was a native of Philadelphia, and born in 1826. A graduate, with honours, of the University of Lewisburg, he became pastor of the Baptist Church at West Chester, Pa., in 1854. He subsequently laboured for several years in New York City, and in 1869 accepted the professorship of Belles-Lettres in Lewisburg, combining pastoral work therewith. After for six years, he retired to Plainfield. He was subsequently elected Chancellor of the University.

Shortly after reaching Plainfield a new church was organized, which called him to its pastorship, and this movement subsequently led to the erection of Park Avenue Baptist Church.

It is as a hymn-writer that Dr. Lowry's name will live, although it is said that he always felt a certain discomfort in being better known as a writer and composer than as a preacher. His special gift, however, would not be denied its legitimate effect. From his boyhood he was a singer, and evinced a talent for composing music. Discerning that music was an art as well as an instinct, he gave himself to a thorough study of harmony, and became the editor of many books for churches, choirs, and Sunday-schools. The sale of one of these works exceeded a million copies. Dr. Lowry's compositions are to be found in most of the popular hymnals, and some of his songs have been translated into several languages. The musical flow in him seemed to be perennial. "I sing myself to sleep in melodies that make no sound," he wrote once to a friend; "I spin music as a spider spins its web." He regarded "Weeping will not save me" as the most evangelical of his writings, and among other notable productions may be mentioned

"SHALL WE GATHER AT THE RIVER?"

"One more day's work for Jesus," "Where is my wandering boy tonight?" "I need Thee every hour," and "The mistakes of my life."

These and other spiritual songs have gone forth in many languages, a source of comfort and stimulus to Christians in all parts of the world. Their usefulness in Sunday-school work received enthusiastic testimony on the occasion of the Raikes centenary in London in 1880, when the delegates, assembled from all parts of the world, gave a most cordial greeting.

During his final illness, his utterances of assurance and hope were of an inspiring character, and his end was in harmony with the confidence and faith of his life. Few men have contributed more helpfully to Christian hymnology, which will be greatly the loser by his removal from our midst.

World - Wide Evangelization Prayer Union.—In a booklet, "In Memoriam," Miss Radcliffe intimates that a year has passed since the translation of her mother, and reprints helpful words written by her father in these columns in 1894. She continues: "Many new members have joined us in the past year, and we want to go on adding to our numbers, and pushing the beautiful work of spreading the Gospel as hard as we can. So many of our best workers have been called 'home,' we need to put out fresh energy. Lately I have found, working in Berlin, such readiness to receive the Gospel. Three things never return: The spent arrow, the spoken word, the the lost opportunity. Those Christians whose hearts God has enlarged to pray for world-wide evangelization would be welcomed to this Union, if they would kindly send their addresses to me. There is no subscription."—Address: Miss Catherine E. Radcliffe, Inglewood, Waterloo. Liverpool.

THE LATE

Miss von Weling.

ON Thursday, May 24, the mortal remains of Fräulein von Weling were interred amid many tokens of respect and love. On the previous day the remains lay in state in the Allianz Hall, beneath the platform from which the departed worker had so often interpreted for the speakers at the conferences. The first tribute of flowers was from the mothers' meeting; and during the day the people of the town flocked to obtain a last view of the familiar face.

Thursday was Ascension Day. The Hall was packed with people when, at 3 o'clock, Dr. Baedeker led in prayer. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Pastors Jellinghaus and D. Janssen. A series of passages of Scripture, selected by the deceased, was read by Dr. Baedeker. The children whom Miss von Weling had adopted followed the coffin out of the Hall; then came near friends, the general public following. After some trouble, the Government allowed the interment to be made in the grounds at the rear of the Allianz Hall. Pastor Jellinghaus led the burial service, which was touching alike in its simplicity and in the manifestation of the high esteem and love in which the deceased worker had been held by those who attended the last sad rites.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S TRIBUTE.

With heartfelt sorrow I lay my wreath on the grave of my dear friend, Fräulein von Weling. She was so full of will-power and vitality, of schemes for the glory of God and the salvation of those around her; so utterly devoted to the furtherance of spiritual religion, that it is difficult to realize that she has left us. In these last few years I have had much Christian intercourse with her, going again and again to the Blankenburg Conference; and the more Mrs. Meyer and I knew her, the more she endeared herself.

Moody, Macgregor, Nuttall, and now Anna von Weling—all gone! One's comrades are dropping fast, and one might be afraid for the Ark of God, were it not for the Living Christ. How sadly those dear children (some fourteen of them), whom she adopted, will miss their mother! An intense, devoted, warm-hearted, gifted woman! We can ill spare her.

F. B. Meyer.

Women's Missionary Work.

THE signs of progress in medical and educational agencies among women and children on the mission field are numerous and encouraging. The report of the Women's Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society for the year is a record of untiring zeal on the part of those who supplement the labours of the missionaries in this direction. The seven stations are rapidly growing in importance. The workers are in districts where native treatment is ignorant and cruel beyond belief, and, in consequence, the number who seek the aid of the missionaries is more than can be dealt with. The possibilities of this branch of missionary effort are clearly manifest in the number who are being drawn to Him who is set forth in his servants' deeds of mercy.

From Rome, Rev. H. J. Piggott reports an increase in the attendance at the Spezia day schools, and gives a favourable account of

THE ORPHANAGE AT INTRA.

The industrial work is developing well, and promises to substantially benefit the funds. At Barcelona a new school has been opened in the centre of the town; and, although for the first fortnight there was but one scholar, the number soon rose to twenty-five. A free night-school for young women has also been opened, where all the teaching is voluntary. The Pueblo Nuevo School has 128 scholars. Notwithstanding the inducements held out by many Roman Catholic free schools in the district, the parents persist in sending their children to the Protestant school.

In the Colombo district the fruit of past toil is being reaped. The Romish priests are active in their opposition; but, in spite of their efforts, the number of conversions from Roman Catholicism continues to increase. Writing from Moratuwa, a Ceylon minister says the Boraluwa school prospers. "At the religious knowledge examination not a single child claimed exemption on the plea of being Buddhist or Romanist. Mr. Mendis tells of strong Buddhist opposition. "Wherever we have our schools they open new ones. Now they have begun to on those who do not send their children to Buddhist schools."

At Batticaloa the medical work has grown apace, and the new Jevons Dispensary has proved of great advantage. Miss Taylor visits the dispensaries at Kattancuddy and Eraur. The poor neglected Moorish women value the assistance she is able to render in ministering to their bodily and spiritual needs. The news from other stations is of an assuring character. There is for medical and educational work in these centres of missionary activity. In China, as in other countries dominated by heathen religions, the prospects are particularly bright. At Hankow, Dr. Ethel has a full hospital and a busy practice with dispensary and outdoor patients. The strain of the work, however, has been too heavy, and her health has become a source of serious anxiety. The Chinese nurses in the hospital have given much satisfaction. They are full of zeal, and take a real interest in their patients. They are thoroughly in earnest in their efforts to teach them the truth as it is in Jesus.

Liberality is never so beautiful as when the hand which bestows the gift is concealed.—Anon.

Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A.,

PRESIDENT-ELECT OF THE FREE CHURCH COUNCIL.

It is given to some men on behalf of Christ to minister to a vast and eclectic audience from their earliest public days; to others an influence of this kind comes gradually and reaches its zenith later in life. The subject of this sketch belongs to the latter order. Ten years ago, Mr. Greenhough was practically unknown beyond the confines of his own denomination; to-day there are few men whose reputation and influence have travelled farther in the Christian world. A visit paid by him to the native Churches of Jamaica a few years ago seems to have been the starting point of the extensive ministry which he is now so successfully exercising. From that time he has been hailed as one of the most potent Evangelical forces in this country.

With regard to that celebrated visit to Jamaica and its consequences in Mr. Greenhough's life, there has been a considerable amount of misapprehension. For a long time it was freely stated that until he visited those warm-hearted children of the sea, he had been entirely opposed to Evangelical truth. The fact is (and we give it at first hand) Mr. Greenhough's views of Christian truth remain to-day what they have always been with him; i.e., distinctly and definitely Evangelical. Contact with the native Christians of Jamaica, however, did make a great difference in his life, and from that time he has manifested a fervour which aforetime was lacking in his ministry. A similar quickening has come to many other men.

The addresses he delivered in this country upon his return were electric, and produced everywhere unbounded enthusiasm. His manifesto, made upon one of these occasions, was misunderstood by many people to be a recantation of some former heresy. In truth, it was simply Mr. Greenhough's earnest reaffirmation of his life-long belief. In it he declared that any man who denied the Deity and the Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ had no place in the Baptist ministry. To those who heard the tremendous applause with which this statement was greeted, there could be no two opinions concerning the Evangelicalism of the Baptist Union, in whose presence he spake.

In 1895 the Baptist Union, of which he is a loyal member, elected him its president. In the spring of that year he chose for his subject "A Puritan's Message to the Democracy," and in the autumn of the same year "A Free Churchman's Thoughts about the Church." This latter address occupied an hour and a quarter in delivery, and was unaided by note of any kind. In it occurred the following timely passage:

> Let our own churches, at least, be on their guard against every temptation to substitute pleasurable devices for exercises of devotion, and sacred concerts for prayer and praise and the preaching of God's Word. We thank God for the ministry of song. It will lift us up like angel's wings if we use it soberly, but nothing needs more to be kept in its own place and due proportion. A church may be inspired by heavenly melodies, and it may fall asleep and die to that sound if it hears no other. . . . We can only live by strong convictions, by intelligent apprehension of the truth, by prayerful study of God's Word, and by that preaching which has always been God's instrument for soul-saving and the building up of holy lives.

In March last, at Sheffield, the Free Church Council, representing more than two millions of members, elected Mr. Greenhough to be its president for the year 1901-1902. In addition to this, he has been called upon by nearly all the great religious and philanthropic societies to take a prominent part in advocating the good and right and true. In one year he preached the annual missionary sermon on behalf of four great missionary societies—a unique record. Perhaps the most powerful of all these utterances was that given at Bloomsbury Chapel on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society, the text being "Freely ye have received, freely give." In this sermon the missionary work of the church was placed on the highest level, and the obligation of Christians to convey the Gospel to all was insisted upon as a necessity arising out of our own indebtedness to Christ.

It goes without saying that a man who can command the respect of the various Evangelical Churches, as Mr. Greenhough does, must possess unusual powers. He has indeed a remarkable blend of gifts. His mind is naturally acute and penetrating; he has the intuitive faculty of perceiving a fallacy in a moment. Added to this, he possesses in plenitude the not always harmonised gifts of sarcasm, humour, and pathos. These powers demand most careful and wise employment in the spiritual realm. Unsanctified sarcasm may wound a soul to the death; unsanctified humour may dissipate valuable forces. When Mr. Greenhough employs his sarcasm in dealing with priestly pretensions, or with carping biblical critics, or with the vulgar falsehoods of rationalism, the hearer comprehends that this gift becomes, in the hands of him who wields it, like unto a scimitar before whose stroke error falls to the ground. So with his humour: he never condescends to mere joking, but his sallies of wit distinctly help his serious purpose.

There is, however, much more than mere cleverness in Mr. Greenhough's preaching. True, his style is chaste, his diction elegant, and his thought radical; but there is about it all that indispensable plus which makes his, in the true sense, spiritual preaching. To the front there is always the Cross and the Redeemer. He preaches Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He insists, with an irresistible force and passion, upon the grand verities of our Holy Faith, and his audiences perceive that a man of learning and of broad mind is speaking to them of the truth of the Gospel; and they are bound to respect the truth thus presented to them.

In the year of his presidency of the Baptist Union he preached in all parts of the country, and some of these sermons have been collected into a volume, bearing the title "The Cross in Modern Life." A glance at the pages will reveal one great secret of Mr. Greenhough's power. It is not surprising that a second edition was called for in a very short time. In manner he is generally quiet, but it is evident to all that he possesses much reserve power, which is called up when occasion demands it. His words do not stun the hearer by the force of their reverberation, but they penetrate with the ease and rapidity of lightning. Certain passages, which will long be remembered by those who heard them delivered, were spoken in a tone little higher than that of ordinary conversation.

The personal history of Mr. Greenhough is full of interest. An Englishman by nationality and a Yorkshireman by county, he was nevertheless born at Burg, in Prussian Saxony, in 1843. Coming to England at an early age with his parents, he received an education which fitted him for a post in the Civil Service. Whatever prizes were to be taken he carried off. He was the first youth in this country to secure the Prince Consort's gold prize offered to those who successfully passed the greatest number of educational examinations. This success brought him honours in one or two ways. On account of it he was appointed to a position in the office of the Privy Council, where he remained for two years. There can be no doubt that, had he continued in the Civil Service, his brilliant abilities would have secured for him a foremost place. He had, however, always before him the vision of his future career, and he resolved to obey that heavenly vision and become a minister of Jesus Christ in the work of preaching.

The moderate office hours (six hours per day) allowed him much leisure in which to perfect himself educationally in view of the ministry. In due time he entered Rawdon College to receive theological training for his life work. While there he graduated as a Bachelor of Arts of London University, with honours, eventually taking his Master's degree in philosophy. Mr. Greenhough's first pastorate was at Coseley, in Staffordshire, whence he removed in 1873 to Cotham, Bristol, remaining at the latter place for six years. During this time he was appointed Lecturer on Logic, Philosophy, and Church History at Bristol Baptist College. The celebrated Dr. Gotch was Principal of the College at this time. In 1879 he removed to Leicester, where he still remains pastor of one of the most influential churches in the city. His church has done nobly in contributing to the Twentieth Century Fund.

Besides the work of preaching, and the ordinary work of the pastorate, Mr. Greenhough exercises a wide ministry by means of his pen. His articles are found in most of the leading religious periodicals. One series of articles attracted much attention. It was entitled "Our dear Home Life;" and a stranger could not fail to perceive that Mr. Greenhough's own home life was very dear to him. He speaks of his wife as "the best woman in the world;" and doubtless, as he says, "but for her I could not accomplish the work I do." Mrs. Greenhough (née Stephenson) is a Bradford lady.

Mr. Greenhough's wider influence, it will be noticed, was not exercised until about his fiftieth year. This is a point worth noting in a day when so many are insanely crying out for "young ministers," and when men over forty-five years of age are regarded as "too old" to accomplish much. A man's best work should lie before him at fifty. The immaturity of youth is left behind; he has bought, often dearly, an invaluable experience, and the sense of shortened time adds solemnity to his utterances. With Dr. Maclaren at seventy-three, Dr. Parker at seventy-one, Dr. Talmage at sixty-seven, and many others equally advanced in years, yet still doing remarkable work for God, it is against reason, and in fact, absurd, to cry out only for young men, as if all the vigour and power of life were left behind at forty.

In this light Mr. Greenhough's best work may still lie before him. All the Churches are grateful to God for his splendid catholic ministry, and we fervently pray that his helpful work may be continued and augmented. The Church requires men of culture and spirituality who can speak to it in such terms as Mr. Greenhough used in a presidential address:—

We cannot and dare not preach any other Gospel. Our work is moral and not political. Our weapons are spiritual, not carnal. It would be a happy thing indeed if we could raise all political and secular things to the high religious level that the Puritans did; but the tendency against which we have to guard is the reverse process, the letting-down of religion to the secular plane, the surrender of the Divine ideal to the pressure of the lower nature. Each man must be made sober, pure, unselfish and loving, by having a new nature given from above. . . . Each member of society must have the heavenly mind before the whole of society can be coloured with heavenly hues; and the only way to happiness, whether for the individual or the race, leads through the straight gate which the Incarnation opened—the way of forgiveness, cleansing and renewal by the Holy Ghost.

The Soul's Call.

Hear thou the trumpet peal
From Zion's loftiest height,
Ascend with Love's all-bending zeal
To live the life of light.
God's challenges receive
With prayerful gratitude,
His fullest graciousness believe,
And prove that He is good.

Onward! from peak to peak,
Heed but the highest call,
The best that God has promised, seek,
Nor from his pathways fall.
Lift up thine eyes, and see
The glory set on high;
Advance, and claim his love to thee,
And find his Spirit nigh.

What else can claim thy care?
Can wealth, or fame, or ease?
Thou who wast made to pray, can prayer
Fulfil itself in these?
Didst thou not hear the voice
From heaven calling thee?
And canst thou have another choice
Than its own son to be?

In Christ spring to thy feet,
Thy garments cast away;
Thy business here to reach the seat
Of everlasting day.
The Spirit of the Lord
Within thee entertain;
New efforts let each day record
Thy lost life to regain.

Thy yesterdays forget,
Press forward to the goal,
Eager to know the things that yet
Await the light-charmed soul.
To thine Upholder cling,
Trust Him, nor fear, alway;
Then shalt thou look upon the King,
And all his love survey.

Points and Outlines.

A Dying Testimony.

THE sum of the Gospel is Christ crucified. Seek where this is purely preached; beware of a desire after pulpit debates; walk humbly with God, fear always; hold at a distance from appearances of evil; follow peace, truth, holiness. This, instead of legacies, I leave unto you as my last will, never to be revoked.

Thomas Halyburton (to his family).

"All Fulness."

I. In Christ.—"It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell" (Col. i. 19). "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. ii. 9).

II. In Believers.—"Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John i. 16). "Till we all come unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. iv. 13). "That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God" (Eph. iii. 19). "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts. ii. 4). "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18).

Guilty Silence.

Luther professed that he had rather be accounted anything than be accused of wicked silence in Christ's cause. "Let me be accounted," says he, "proud; let me be accounted covetous; let me be accounted a murderer—yea, guilty of all vices, so I be not proved guilty of wicked silence in the cause of Jesus Christ."

Stages of Faith.

There is a threefold act of faith which the Spirit of God works in the soul, whereby it more especially closes with Christ, and is espoused unto Him:—

I. An Act of Choice or Selection—whereby it pitches upon some one thing, and prefers that before all others, to such and such an end.

II. An Act of Trust or Dependence—whereby the soul anchors upon Christ, rests and relies upon Him for life and peace, for all grace on earth and glory in heaven.

III. An Act of Resignation or Subjection—whereby he passes himself away from himself, and gives himself into the power and possession of Jesus Christ, to be ruled, governed, and saved by Him as He sees good.

Edward Pearse (Puritan).

Right Ways.

The old and good way (Jer. vi. 16).
The new and living way (Heb. x. 20).
The strait and narrow way (Matt. vii. 14).

Dependence on Providence.

We are too apt to forget our actual dependence on Providence for the circumstances of every instant. The most trivial events may determine our state in the world. Turning up one street instead of another may bring us into company with a person whom we should not otherwise have met; and this may lead to a a train of other events, which may determine the happiness or misery of our lives.

Richard Cecil.

The Certainty of Death.

Our bodies are but living graves. No sooner did we begin to live than we began to die; and we continue dying until we be swallowed up of death. As every man had his genesis, his beginning, or coming into this world; so every man shall have his exodus, his ending, or going out of the world. O soul, flatter not thyself and thy soul with an undieable state. Death's seizure is without surrender, and from its sentence there is no appeal. Those long-livers recorded in the sacred Scriptures, and transmitted to posterity, died. They lived long, but they did not outlive death; a day came when they could not live a day longer. R. Mayhew (Puritan).

The Gospel in Brittany.—It is a source of encouragement to find from the report of the Société Evangélique Bretonne that many districts and cantons of Brittany which knew nothing of Protestantism have been awakened. The indifference of the inhabitants to any kind of religion is gradually giving place to an interest in spiritual matters, ever widening in its influence and force. The evangelists have been much cheered in their arduous task of refuting the teachings of Romish idolatory and superstition, and proclaiming the Gospel, by many tokens of divine blessing. The colportage work has been maintained with untiring zeal; while the schools—more than ever the object of the attack of the adversaries—have shown signs of advancement. Copies of the annual report may be obtained from Rev. Dr. Bullinger, hon. sec., 25, New Oxford Street W.C.

English Racing Lads in France.

NO doubt there are many in England who are unaware of the large number of English lads employed in the racing stables at Chantilly, Oise, France. Over 500 persons are employed there, and the majority are young lads who have left their home and parental care, and are apprenticed for five, six, or seven years. They are surrounded by evil influences, and often dragged down by sin, gambling, and betting, which is called here a profession.

We have a splendid institute for these lads, where they can spend their evenings, instead of the drinking dens and gambling hells which abound. A Bible class is held every Sunday afternoon, and I have already a membership of sixty-five lads. There are many anxious souls, and we are expecting blessed results from the Gospel teaching in this class. I am in great need of a worker, and it is most important that he should be a university man if possible, or one who would be willing to help in the different departments of the work, such as cricket and other outdoor games, &c. I should require his aid in the Bible class, and also to play the piano, &c., and encourage the lads in the singing.

No doubt there is a man who could come out and occupy himself in the morning in reading or studying, and could give the rest of his time for the work. Accommodation is to hand free; he would only be required to pay for his board. I shall be pleased to communicate with any earnest Christian who would take a real interest in the lads' spiritual welfare.

Foreign Aid Society.

GOOD work is done by the Foreign Aid Society in strengthening the hands of Evangelical workers on the Continent.

At the Society's annual meeting recently held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Tritton, Queen's Gate Gardens, Rev. J. Gosset Tanner, while regretting that it had been necessary to reduce the grants to some of the evangelistic societies which worked in France and Belgium, said that the circulation of the Word of God was bearing fruit. It was said that 600 priests were meditating an exodus from the Romish Church.

Rev. H. J. R. Marston, who followed, advocated fresh efforts in the interests of France, and Rev. Ch. Merle d'Aubigne spoke pointedly upon the evils of the Romish system. Protestantism was, in his opinion, the hope of France; not that he expected the whole nation to be brought over to it, but hundreds and thousands were being converted. The visits of pastors and evangelists were leading the peasantry to realize that there was a religion which was not part of a vast scheme for taking money out of their pockets on every conceivable occasion, and which did not corrupt the minds of their women and children. The consequence of all that was that vast districts were opening up to the Gospel, and especially in the south-west of France, where in the sixteenth century Reformed churches flourished. It would seem that the seed sown 300 years ago was now springing up. Another great hope for France was in the number of the young men at present studying in her Protestant theological colleges.

Pastor Vernier, from Geneva, subsequently described the work of the Evangelical Society there. Their efforts lay in three directions: evangelization, carried on in the remotest villages; a theological college, where the pastors and evangelists were trained; and the colportage department, which carried the Word of God to the people, and often prepared the way for the pastor or evangelist. In spite of continued opposition during the past year, the sale of Bibles, New Testaments, &c., had increased by 40,000 copies.

Friendship is the richest cordial of life. Without it all the pleasures of life are but insipid; they are roseless thorns—a winter without a spring.—Bennet.

The Gospel at Epsom Races.

NO signs of declension in the popularity of Epsom as the resort of the confirmed and casual votaries of the turf are yet to be found. The lapse of years only too clearly manifests the alarming growth of the tendency among old and young to countenance and patronize the evils of the racecourse, and to foster the spirit of gambling. One is constrained to ask, when will people realize that profit or pleasure gained at the expense of another's loss and misery is nothing less than a curse, having for its inevitable issue the disintegration of society and the moral degradation and spiritual ruin of men.

But the voice of the law is not yet heard denouncing as illegal a means of subsistence so utterly devoid of righteous principle; and so the fair Downs of Epsom have again been the scene of a festival over which servants of sin and workers of iniquity would assuredly rejoice. True it is that the pleasure-seekers, in their

and given over to the attainment of their quest, were a great multitude; but it needed only a casual glance to see that the majority were prepared for the nefarious transactions of betting. For these, provision was not lacking, and the Downs re-echoed with the wild cries of the gaming fraternity. To many this stronghold of sin appeared impregnable; but, with the remembrance that with God nothing is impossible, Christian men have once more invaded the enemy's camp, and in the midst of revelry proclaimed the glad news of salvation. This year the Open-Air Mission, as usual, was strongly represented, as was also that more modern organization called the Racecourse Mission. These

TWO BANDS OF WORKERS

proceeded to Epsom at the beginning of the week, and throughout each day held services on and near the course. In the evening at various centres of the town open-air meetings were held. Many discussions of the day's race proceedings and the prospects of the morrow were intercepted by the sound of sacred music and the voice of the Gospel speaker; and gradually small knots of gossipers—more perhaps out of curiosity than anything else—gathered round the preachers. Time has been when attempts to deliver the Gospel message under such conditions have been frustrated by those whom it was intended to reach. But happily no opposition of any account is now offered at Epsom, beyond the casual murmur of the hostile blasphemer or

THE SNEER OF THE SCEPTIC.

The Open-Air Mission had, as usual, the co-operation of many Christian gentlemen. Among these were Major J. C. Cox, Lieutenant-Colonel Spencer Acklom, Lieutenant-Colonel R. Phayre, Colonel Roberts, Mr. F. Cockrem (secretary), and Mr. L. Tweedie. Other workers, true and tried, included:—Messrs. W. Goff (Sutton), Chas. Cook, Barry Wake, and Ned Wright. The Racecourse Mission was represented by Mr. W. Hodson (president), Mr. O. L. Heatley (secretary), Mr. Herbert Leng (secretary of the London Christian Police Institute); and by volunteers from all parts of the kingdom, including Darlington, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Derby, Sittingbourne, and Burnham.

In many cases the workers were men who had been

and brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. Their experience was retold with a passionate earnestness, and the power of God to save to the uttermost was proclaimed by those who were once better known as light-weight champions and pugilists.

Derby Day (Wednesday) was a day to be long remembered. While seemingly numberless vehicles and crowded trains were swelling the throng of visitors—gay and heedless—the evangelists of the Open-Air and London City Missions assembled in the Town Mission Room, and engaged in earnest supplication for Divine guidance and support for the work upon which they had entered. Mr. Hodson (Racecourse Mission) led the service, and commented upon the "word of command"—"Fill thy horn with oil, and go, for I have prepared." The invitation for prayer having been given, one after another, in quick succession, waited upon God, seeking the aid of the Holy Spirit.

On arrival at the Downs, the banner of the Open-Air Mission was planted on the course immediately in front of the Grand Stand; the Racecourse Mission being located at a distance. Soon commenced a service by each party, perhaps unique, but in every detail. The absence of any attempt at formal procedure did not hinder the success of the movement, for, from beginning to end, the meeting was one succession of brief, pointed addresses interspersed with solos, vocal and instrumental. As each speaker descended from the improvised platform he passed into the throng, there to follow up the message by the presentation of tracts, Scriptural portions, &c. The announcement of the first race was the signal for adjournment to the tent for prayer and praise.

In the afternoon preaching was resumed on the Downs in the midst of the stands occupied by the bookies. The crowd gathered here was as orderly as could be desired, and many were the signs of the Holy Spirit's power working in the hearts of on-lookers. A young woman, while listening, was seen to burst into tears. On being spoken to, she confessed to being a frequenter of the racecourse, but in the earnest conversation she professed penitence, and promised never to be seen on the course again.

THE POWER OF PERSONAL DEALING with individuals was manifest on every hand. One of the workers noticing a bookie standing near the ring, approached him with a Gospel. In the course of conversation the man was led to admit that he had never known a mother's love, having been left destitute on the doorstep of a workhouse, when only a helpless child. With the remembrance of his former deprivation and life, the man burst into tears, and rushed away. He was promptly overtaken, and after further conversation showed anxiety regarding his soul's welfare.

During the singing of one of the hymns, a man became deeply impressed. He was spoken to by one of the evangelists, and expressed a desire to accept the Gift of God. He had been a communicant for twenty-three years, and a sidesman in a church. He was taken to the tent, where several prayed with him, and he left rejoicing in the knowledge of the love of God.

The singing was found a powerful attraction, and the efforts of the Male Voice Choir of the London City Mission were warmly appreciated. Mr. J. C. Gray and Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, with others, were ever prepared to supply a chorus of some familiar Gospel songs which were listened to with earnest attention. The seed sown in the hearts of many who remained untouched by the message delivered was not without results, and many a seeker after peace was pointed to its Divine source. In and out among the moving throng the missioners steadily threaded their way, until the last race of the day had been run, and the motley company began slowly to disperse.

In the evening the tent of the Racecourse Mission was the meeting place of who frequent the course. Every minstrel had received a card of invitation, and about seventy assembled. After a meat tea, a short service was held, and the minstrels, with their instruments—banjo, trumpet, harp, or 'cello—joined heartily in the worship of God. Also in the evening there was again a service in the town, and here many opportunities presented themselves of dealing with individual souls. The crowds, as was to be expected, were enormous, and many were the tokens of blessing received.

On Thursday morning the members of the Open-air and Racecourse Mission assembled in the tent of the latter, and united in prayer. Mr. Barry Wake spoke helpful and encouraging words. During the day, the policemen on duty on the course were not overlooked. Through the kindness of the President of the Racecourse Mission, they were invited to rest and lunch in the tent. Nearly three hundred accepted the invitation on Wednesday, and on Thursday morning there were many present at the meeting, to whom earnest words were spoken.

The distribution of the Word of God in various forms has been carried on to an extent hitherto unsurpassed. Never in the history of the racecourse movement has the reception of the Scriptures been more cordial. The Racecourse Mission had prepared tastefully-designed and beautifully-embossed cards for distribution among the occupants of carriages. On the outer cover was printed in gold, "Epsom Races, 1900." Inside was to be found an appropriate passage of Scripture, such as "Him that cometh I will in no wise cast out." Every bookmaker also was visited and handed a card; and the prayers which accompanied these silent, solemn messages

WILL SURELY NOT REMAIN UNANSWERED.

Each day several of the missioners were located in various parts of the town, distributing Gospels and other literature. At the railway station there were many opportunities of speaking a word to those leaving and entering the town. On the evening of Derby day a commercial traveller was offered a tract, which he willingly accepted. Entering into conversation, the evangelist discovered that the man, possessing valuable jewellery, was being dogged by two others. These men were ordered away, and as the evangelist continued his conversation, quoting from the Word of God, the man became impressed. Realizing his condition, on the station platform, and cried to God for mercy. He subsequently determined to leave Epsom and return to London, and after prayer had been offered in the railway carriage, this sinner seeking the Saviour was hurried from the scene of danger and misery, followed by the prayers of those who had been led to speak the word in season.

HE FELL UPON HIS KNEES

Another case was that of a young betting man, who, when spoken to, confessed "I am utterly disgusted with my life." He was pleaded with to attend one of the meetings which were being held, but his companions eventually dissuaded him from doing so, and he promised to meet the missionary the following day. This he failed to do; his companions were there, and told the missionary he had "knocked him out first round," and the young man had left the course determined never to return.

The testimony of one and all is that never has the Word been preached on the course with more manifest tokens of blessing; and a worker, who for thirty-five years has regularly visited Epsom, has never seen so many under conviction on the Downs.

THE GIPSIES

have not been overlooked. On Thursday night several of the Open-Air Mission members accompanied Miss Alexander to their squalid hovels. Some six or seven brief services were held in and out among the tents and caravans, and the interest of the elder inhabitants was perhaps surpassed by the eagerness of the motley groups of dusky children who gathered round, and with remarkable aptitude joined in the refrains of the hymns with evident delight. A visit was paid to a tent where lay a gipsy on the point of death. On being asked if he had any doubt as to his future destiny, the dying man with gasping breath murmured that his peace was made with God. After three hours of singing, praying, and speaking with these neglected wanderers, it was encouraging to notice their hearty appreciation of the kindly sympathy and loving interest taken by the workers of the Mission.

On Friday morning the number of missionaries was considerably increased. Meeting in the Town Mission Room, a devotional service was held, conducted by Mr. L. Tweedie, and the services of Miss Alexander, who has been associated with the work for forty-three years, were referred to in terms of warm appreciation. After prayer, and words of encouragement and counsel from Mr. Barry Wake and others, the workers again proceeded to the Downs.

I THINK you would like to know something of Mr. Moody's early experiences as a Christian worker, as described in the Life which has been written by his son.* You will be especially interested in the story of Mary Richardson, as showing

WHAT A GIRL CAN DO.

At the close of the school Mr. Moody took his place at the door and seemed to know personally every boy and girl; he shook hands and had a smile and a cheery word for each. They crowded about him tumultuously, and his arm must have ached many a time after those meetings. It was easy to see the hold he had on those young lives, and why they were drawn to that place week after week. The institution was meetings almost every evening, with occasional picnics and sociables, and services on the Sabbath that occupied most of the day.

Mr. Moody filled a variety of offices from that of janitor to superintendent. "Sunday was a busy day for me then," he would say in relating the story of the work. "During the week I would be out of town as a commercial traveller selling boots and shoes, but I would always manage to be back by Saturday night. Often it was late when I got to my room, but I would have to be up by six o'clock to get the hall ready for Sunday-school. Every Saturday night a German society held a dance there, and I had to sweep up sawdust, clean up generally, and arrange the chairs. This I did not think it right to have done on a Sunday, so sometimes with the assistance of a scholar, and often without any, I would do it myself.

"This usually took most of the morning, and when it was done I would have to drum up the scholars and new boys and girls. By the time two o'clock came we would have the hall full, and then I had to keep order while the speaker for the day led the exercises. We had to keep things going to keep up the children's interest. When school was over I visited absent scholars, and found out why they were not at Sunday school, called on the sick, and invited the parents to attend the evening Gospel service, following which we had an after-meeting. By the time I was through the day

I WAS TIRED OUT."

An interesting incident is given by Rev. John Vetter, who says:

"In the autumn of 1863, as a home missionary, I was on a tour in northern Michigan. Arriving at the county seat of M—— County, I inquired about the Gospel needs of the place. There was no meeting-house, no preaching. On inquiring about Sunday-school, the man, with some hesitation, as though not quite certain, said, 'Well, yes, a Sunday-school was started last Sunday

BY A LITTLE GIRL.'

I quickly went to her father's house. Mary was all animation telling me about Mr. Moody and his Sunday school. Mr. Moody's photograph was hanging on the wall, and another of sixteen street boys with their street names, only one of which I now recall—'Butcher Bill.'

"I must say that I was taken a little by surprise. I had not heard of D. L. Moody at that time. But her face was all aglow as she spoke of the Sunday-school in Chicago to which she had belonged. Evidently she had caught Mr. Moody's enthusiasm. Captain Richardson had arrived here with his family but two weeks before, and now a Sunday-school is started by this girl in her teens. Since their arrival here a little child had died in the neighbourhood. They were about to bury it without funeral exercises; but Mary proposed to read some Scripture, sing, and pray, which she did, to the satisfaction of all. Richardson bought a pony for his daughter, so she was enabled to go to the next town, five miles distant, and organize another Sunday-school, where preaching was established soon after, with a revival following that swept the place. An account of this experience appeared in one of the religious papers at the time.

"During the following summer, having occasion to be in Chicago, a friend asked if I would not like to go to Mr. Moody's Sunday-school in North Market Hall. Having met Mary Richardson, an interest had been awakened to see the man she had described so glowingly. On being introduced, he at once asked, 'Are you not the man whose account of Mary's work in Michigan I saw in the papers last year? Now, I want you to tell this Sunday-school all about what she is doing. Right over there' (pointing toward the north-west corner of the hall) 'is her Sunday-school class, and there is where she was converted.'"

MR. MOODY AT 27: SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKER.

Flowers for Little Cripples.

ONE of the band of devoted people who give their time to brightening the lives of suffering children, relates some of his experiences in the following letter to Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union:—"I think it would interest you to know how the flowers which were given to us at the Conference on Cripples, were received in the Children's Homes. I selected the weakest of my cripples, and the work of distributing the beautiful handiwork of our bountiful Creator seemed to me one in which angels would have rejoiced to join. I saw the momentary forgetfulness of pain, the feasting of the eye, and heard the children's expressions of joy. I will mention only two of the eighteen on whom I was able to call.

"There was Georgie, a little lad of nine. He has no power in his back, and is supported by pillows. He uses his go-cart to wheel himself to the open door, that he may see the busy throngs who pass by the cottage door. He is very fond of flowers; sometimes his mother buys a pennyworth to gratify her boy. He selected a rose from my bunch, and I reminded him that our heavenly Father painted the beautiful flowers "with hues on hues expression cannot paint." George did not say much as he lay and gazed at the bloom, but his mother's eyes were filled with tears.

"Next, we went about twenty doors lower down to Willie, a boy of eight. Willie had just had the nurse, from the Nurses' Home, to wash him. He is such a happy-looking boy. His pains come on in the silent hours of the night, from hip disease, which is just developing. He asked for 'a red flower,' so one is put in water for him, and a lily as well, at which he is all smiles. Before I saw Willie again the nurse had called to take him to a hospital. He turned pale, for he dreaded some operation, but nurse says with a kiss, 'Cling to me, Willie,' and confidence is restored. 'Take care of my flower, mother,' he says, 'and give it some fresh water every day, until I come back.' If no operation should be needed, the doctor would send him back in two days.

"What an object-lesson there is in presenting these lovely flowers which deft fingers have arranged, and to see the withered arms of the cripples take them up, oh so gently! 'Your heavenly Father sent them by the hand of his servant' is our message. But how we are reminded, amid these sad scenes, of the words of Isaiah, 'All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand for ever.' I will close lest I tire you, but I would like the senders of flowers to share the joys which are ours in the distribution."

Protestant Van Work.—Mr. S. Bradfield, of the Bishop Hooper Protestant Van, writes:—"During the past month a fruitful mission has been held in two parishes near Stroud, Cainscross and Whiteshill. In the former a number of earnest church people have had to leave their parish church on account of Romish practices and doctrine. They have built a meeting-room, in which they meet for Bible-reading and prayer, and also to partake of the Lord's Supper."

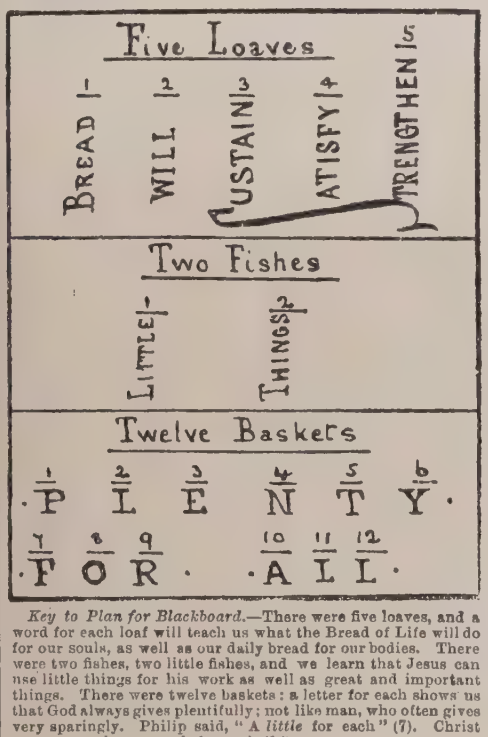
Feeding the five thousand (John vi. 5-14).

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Give us this day our daily bread" (Matt. vi. 11).

INTRODUCTION.

Hungry multitude about 5,000 (10). A mighty Saviour who could give not only food to feed hungry bodies, but bread to feed hungry souls as well. See Jesus training his disciples to help Him in his work (6), to see how much faith there was: (10) gives them something to do: (11) more work to hand the food round: (12) more work to finish what had begun.

Matt. xiv. 15—"It was evening." Mark vi. 39—"green grass." Mark also tells us (34) that Jesus "was moved with compassion." Trace this expression through all the Gospels; it shows Christ's great love for mankind.



Key to Plan for Blackboard.—There were five loaves, and a word for each loaf will teach us what the Bread of Life will do for our souls, as well as our daily bread for our bodies. There were two fishes, two little fishes, and we learn that Jesus can use little things for his work as well as great and important things. There were twelve baskets: a letter for each shows us that God always gives plentifully; not like man, who often gives very sparingly. Philip said, "A little for each" (7). Christ gave more than enough for each (13).

FIVE LOAVES.

Bread is called "the staff of life;" it is one of the necessary daily needs of everyone. This multitude was hungry, they wanted something to sustain them (Matt xiv. 15; Mark vi. 36), to strengthen them, and to satisfy their hunger. Jesus takes the five little loaves, and supplies all their need. In this He also teaches a lesson "below the surface," that souls need "bread," and daily bread too, to do the same for them as for the body.

Christ Himself is the "Bread of the Soul." He alone can satisfy (35); sustain (51); strengthen (32). (See also Matt. v. 6.) Do you hunger for the True Bread of Heaven?

TWO FISHES.

Two small fishes (9). Little things, but with the bread they made a good meal for those 5,000 men, besides women and children (Matt. xiv. 21). Notice other little things in our lesson.

"A little lad" (9) used for the glory of God. It was very little food (9)—one loaf to 1,000, one fish to 2,500; but Christ made it enough. It was a little prayer Jesus offered up to his Heavenly Father (11); but it was thanksgiving, and an act we do well to copy before our meals. "Order" may be a little thing to many people, but Christ will not do things in a disorderly way (Mark vi. 39, 40). (Trace God's perfect order in everything all through the Bible.)

Fragments are very small things, "not worth the trouble to gather up," said some; not so, said Christ. "Gather them up, waste not" (12).

TWELVE BASKETS.

Is it possible to fill twelve baskets of remains from so little? Yes, one for each apostle. Notice, "filled," too (13). Little wonder the disciples said what they did in v. 14. Philip must have felt ashamed of his first speech (7); but he had to learn, as we all have, not to limit God's power; but trust Him, even where we cannot trace Him. Neither did Andrew understand (9) how this multitude could be fed (Psa. lxxviii. 19, 20, 41).

The people were satisfied (11)—"as much as they would." We may also be satisfied (Psa. xvii. 15). "Now none but Christ can satisfy. No other name for me."

Let us gather up the lessons we learn in prayer for more faith, more trust, more longing for the Bread of Life, asking God to use us, however young and small, for his glory, and praying Him to strengthen, sustain, and satisfy our souls out of his fulness, for Jesus' sake.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 10.

LIVES THAT LIFT (Luke xiii. 20, 21).

IN most passages, where leaven is mentioned, it is an emblem of evil. Many would go further and say that in all passages this is the case. These, however, would find great difficulty in explaining how it came to pass that, in some of the Levitical sacrifices, it was expressly provided that leaven should be offered. Leaven is obviously the emblem of evil, however, in such passages as 1 Cor. v., where we are expressly told to purge out the old leaven; and, as we know, the modern Jews spend much time and pains before the feast of Passover in cleansing every corner of their homes that no particle of leaven, however insignificant, may escape to defile them and mar the festal purity and joy.

But evidently the framer of our topic views leaven as a possible type of good influences which may be brought to bear upon men, and lift them; and in this sense we must, for our present purpose, interpret it.

The old commentators spent much time in endeavouring to fix an appropriate meaning on the three measures of meal. They said that the woman represented the Church, and that the three measures of meal were spirit, soul, and body; but there is no sort of a justification for these minute interpretations.

Turning from the parable to the lifting power of a life, let us notice—

1. That you cannot lift a man higher than you are yourself. Very often a man who is notorious for his weakness in some one direction takes upon himself to set right a comrade who falls under a sin to which the first has no bias. It is the case of the man pulling out the mote from his brother's eye, whilst his own is not clear. By God's help, you must see that his grace has given you the victory over your own besetting sin, and has placed your feet upon the rock of his keeping power.

2. You cannot lift another until your own footing is secure. If the river is carrying your companion down, the oozy soil will not give you sufficient purchase to sustain his weight and yours. And if you would save men from perdition, become steadily fixed with both feet on the Rock, Christ Jesus.

3. Lifting power is best won by your own victory over difficulties. It is quite true that a man born into position of influence, wealth, or intellectual culture may afford considerable assistance to his fellows. But, on the whole, I think the men who have done the most for others have themselves passed through similar difficulties, battled against similar temptations. Above all, our Lord "suffered being tempted," and is therefore "able to succour them that are tempted." "He that ascended is the same that descended first into the lower part of the earth."

4. To lift another, have one hand in the grasp of Christ. Let Him hold the right whilst you extend the left. Be a link, a joint, a band between the head and some drifting member of the body.

5. Let your own attitude and aim be on the track of Christ's ascension, always ascending and there dwelling, setting your affection upon things above.

There is one point in leaven which may be taken as illustrating the influence of true religion. As yeast permeates every particle of dough, so let the great principle of consecration to Christ be infused into every thought, word, and action, so that there is no part left uninfluenced. Leaven is yeast, and yeast is akin to east; and to geyser, the hot springs of Iceland; also to geist or ghost. Let us ask for the power of the Holy Ghost to work within us, energizing and quickening, till we rise and lift others heavenward and Christward.

C.E. NOTES.

The two most recent additions to the list of speakers for the 1900 Convention are—the Bishop of London, who will give the message of the Church of England to the Endeavourers, and the Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., who will speak for the Congregational body.

* * *

The President's programme reaches its conclusion on June 26. The meetings held in May, like all the rest, have proved full of power and blessing. At every place they speak of deep impressions made and definite blessing received. Quite apart from the Endeavourers themselves, the meetings have been of special blessing to many ministers, who in the past had been inclined to characterize Keswick teaching as "namby-pamby." Mr. Meyer's robust common sense presentation of consecration, as being inclusive rather than exclusive of everything natural and manly, has caused a complete revolution in the minds of many.

The Scottish General Assemblies.

ON Monday of last week the Church of Scotland Assembly was largely occupied with the Education and College reports. Much satisfaction was expressed with the work of the training colleges for teachers. The decline in male students, which had been observed for several years, seemed to have ceased. Sir Colin G. Macrae pointed out that, while in Scotland there were about 1,250 students for the teaching profession, a thousand of these were in their own colleges and those of the Free Church, with another sixty in the Episcopalian College; and he believed a great loss would be suffered all round if any severance took place between the colleges and the churches.

STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY.

The report on Probationers disclosed what Dr. Hunter (Galashiels) described as grave facts. The high-water mark in the number of candidates for the ministry had been reached in the years from 1886 to 1890, but the figures of 1899—when only 108 students of theology were enrolled in the three Universities—were the lowest yet reached. He was of opinion that impatience with the tyranny of the existing standards deterred the best of their younger men from seeking the ministerial office. On the proposal of Dr. Mair (Earlston), a special motion was passed inviting ministers to deal with their people on the subject. He felt cheered by the reflection that in all ages there had been circumstances that deterred men from the ministry, and attracted them to the world; but he believed that if men were kept back by any of the current objections they were better outside.

HOME STATISTICS.

Tuesday was Home Mission Day, when a satisfactory report was clouded over by the resignation—for health reasons—of the Convener, Dr. Donald Macleod. The number of mission churches and stations was put at 182, with an attendance of 21,073, while 260 missionaries were engaged in aggressive work. The gross income for this work had been £13,295.

The Report on Statistics—presented on Wednesday by the Right Hon. Jas. Alex. Campbell, M.P.,—showed the total roll of membership to be 656,112, an increase of 7,636, with 10,172 elders, an increase of 131. Under the heading of Christian Liberality, the gifts amounted to £422,323, the largest sum yet reported, although exclusive of seat-rent revenue and of a special £20,000 received after the accounts were closed. The membership of the Church Guilds was reported at 37,000 young women and 27,000 young men, who were engaged in the promotion of evangelistic work and the development of the Church organization.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

On Thursday, Dr. McMurtrie gave in the Foreign Mission Report, which was of a most encouraging nature. The key note was, he said, that the time had now come when the Assembly might, with great advantage, give a new impetus to the Foreign Mission advance movement. The Church has a missionary band of 115 Europeans in the field; last year the baptisms numbered 850, bringing the baptized persons in the various fields up to about 10,000, with 12,584 children in the schools, and 1,063 Zenana pupils. The foremost idea of the founders of the India Mission was the building-up of a native ministry. Now they had 533 native Christian assistants at work, eight of whom are ordained, while one is a licentiate. Addresses were given by workers representative of various lands.

FREE CHURCH FACTS AND FIGURES.

In moving the adoption of a satisfactory report on the Free Church Colleges, Rev. W. M. Macgregor said if the number of students for the ministry is to be increased, it will be necessary to make the young men feel more than they appear to do that they have a Gospel worth preaching, and to make it very clear in detail what that Gospel is, as well as how it stands related to modern thought.

The Finance Committee reported the income of all funds under their control to be £706,546. While regarding these figures as in a measure satisfactory, Mr. J. M. McCandlish re-echoed the statement in the Established Church report that "there is abundant room for much greater liberality than has yet been known."

Dr. Robert Howie (Govan) brought forward a report on home missions which bristled with evidences of progress. The total membership of the church was 296,085, an increase of 2,401. The six lay evangelists had met with unbroken success in their work in all directions. Special deputies were sent to eight principal fishing stations to labour among the men and women during the season. A scheme by which distinguished ministers have carried on evangelistic missions in special circumstances has met with such a measure of success as to call for extension during the current year.

Stimulating addresses followed. Rev. John McNeill put forward the question whether the preaching in our churches is what it ought to be. He asked also if we have enough of the 4.7 guns. Might there not be a little more mobility? Are not our guns getting a little out of range? It must, he thought, cause a sickening feeling for those behind the guns to find that the contents fall so much short of the mark.

On Tuesday the Temperance Report was submitted by Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie). The Report of the Royal Commission was welcomed, and the fact recognised that many of the recommendations marked progress. With regard to the proposals of the Minority Report, the Assembly agreed that while these might afford a basis for legislative action, nothing more than a general approval of their spirit and bearing could meanwhile be given, until it should be seen what form they assumed in actual legislative proposals, and in particular the place which Local Veto has in these proposals. Several speakers called attention to the necessity of a clear protest against compensation.

Work in the Highlands and Islands took up the evening, when cordial recognition was given of the valuable work done by many Board teachers in Scripture instruction. Rev. Alexander Lee made a statement on the splendid work done by Rev. John McNeill in his Highland tour. As a corresponding member from the United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Thomas Shaw, M.P., testified to the deep and absorbing interest with which he regarded the work in the Highlands, and to his satisfaction that it would soon be the common concern of the United Church.

THE SUSTENTATION FUND.

Dr. Ross Taylor reported that the Sustentation Fund showed an increase for the twelve months of £4,100 19s. 5d., or a total advance in three years of £11,863 14s. 10d. Mr. Lee gave an address on the success which had attended the "forward movement" during the past two and a half years, and recounted some of his experiences when visiting different districts in the interests of the Fund. The resignation by Dr. Melville of the secretaryship of the committee was received with regret.

PROGRESS IN THE FOREIGN FIELD.

The resignation of Professor Lindsay of the Foreign Mission convenership, on account of the state of his health, caused much concern. His place is now taken by Rev. Archibald Henderson (Crieff). The report was of a most satisfactory character. A total number of 1,485 Christian workers in the field is made up of sixty-three ordained Europeans, twenty native pastors, twenty-four medical missionaries, seventy-seven European teachers, 971 native teachers, sixteen European evangelists, 316 native catechists, &c. Dr. Hood Wilson and Colonel Cadell both spoke with satisfaction of the missionary outlook of the United Church; Rev. D. J. Martin (Oban) described his impressions after a recent tour in India, and Rev. J. Scott (Natal) told the story of Christian progress among the races living south of the Zambesi. At the evening meeting addresses were given by influential workers. At the close Lord Overtoun introduced five young missionaries, going out for the first time; three nurses, a doctor, and a mason; while Rev. William Stevenson, on behalf of the Women's Society, presented a fourth qualified nurse who is on the point of leaving for India.

CHURCH UNION.

Thursday had been set aside for the final discussion of the proposals for union with the United Presbyterian Church, when Principal Rainy submitted the motion of the day in a great and memorable speech, addressed to a house crowded in every part. He reviewed the manner in which the churches had been led of God to take the proposed step, and in earnest and faithful words dealt with and answered the various objections that had been brought forward. The motion having been seconded by Mr. Charles J. Guthrie, Q.C., an amendment was moved by Rev. Angus Galbraith (Lochalsh), disapproving of the report, and declining to take further steps in the matter. After much discussion, in the course of which it was evident how deeply the hearts of many were moved by the change in prospect, the union proposal was carried by 592 votes against 29. A final protest was tabled by the dissenting parties; but, as the result of the division, the United Presbyterian Synod and the Free Church General Assembly hope to meet in their respective halls on October 30 next to complete arrangements, the two following days being devoted to the celebration services in the Waverley Market.

Scottish Notes.

THE annual report of the Arbroath Female Mission tells of another year of house-to-house work and visitation of the sick and bereaved. The year has been marked by great distress in the town, and it is matter for sincere thankfulness that in the midst of trouble many have testified to the good received through the instrumentality of Miss Airth, the agent of the Mission.

The various organizations for aggressive Christian work in Dumbarton have lost a warm friend and supporter through the death of ex-Bailie Thomas Thomson. Born in Kilmarnock in 1825, most of his life had been spent in Dumbarton; and for many years before the passing of the Education Act he devoted much time and attention to the opening and maintaining of day and Sabbath schools in the Dennystown district. In recognition of these efforts and of his general interest in educational affairs, he was always accepted by the community at the School Board elections, and during six years acted as chairman. He was an elder of the Free Church, and took an active share in the revival meetings of 1858.

The annual Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life—held in the grounds of Douglas Support, near Coatbridge, by invitation of Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas—was opened on Saturday, May 26, when there was a large attendance. Mr. Douglas presided, and addresses were given by Rev. Gordon B. Watt (Kilmarnock), on "The Ascension Life;" Rev. James Smith (Coalsnaughton), on "Ezekiel;" and Mr. John W. Arthur (Secretary Glasgow United Evangelistic Association), on "Witnesses." On Sabbath evening Mr. Douglas preached.

After many delays Mr. R. H. Hunter announces, on behalf of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland, that the children are now resident in the new Home at Kilmalcolm, although much yet remains to be done in the way of fitting up. It is intended to have a formal service of thanksgiving and consecration later in the year, but the date cannot be fixed till the work is farther advanced.

At the present time the Glasgow Fresh-air Fortnight Scheme is entirely without funds to carry on its beneficent work. Hitherto 7,000 or 8,000 children have shared the privilege every summer, but none can be allowed to go for whom funds are not in hand. Mr. Mackeith (19, Howard Street, Glasgow) pleads eloquently the cause of these pinched and much-wronged waifs of city life.

Irish Notes.

THE Methodist Female Orphan Home, Dublin, which is managed by a committee of ladies, is doing a splendid work. It has in it at present thirty-two girls, and some 257 orphans have already passed through it. The Home is beautifully situated, and the rooms and dormitories are kept scrupulously clean, while every care and attention are given to the religious and secular training of the children.

At the suggestion of the Dublin Methodist Council, the Non-Episcopal ministers of Dublin are about to present an address of welcome to the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church which is meeting in Dublin this week. This is a new departure, but a very proper one.

The Dublin Sabbath School Union has held its annual meeting under the presidency of Mr. W. Hewett. The report stated that 630 children presented themselves for examination during the year, and that to these several prizes and medals were given.

Three of the smaller Protestant denominations in Ireland held their annual meetings last week. These were (a) the Baptists, who met in Harcourt Street Chapel, Dublin, under the presidency of Pastor H. D. Brown, M.A., the trusted and honoured leader of the Irish Baptist Church, who said that they had now thirty-five churches, with a membership of 2,700 persons, and that during the past thirteen years they had made considerable progress; (b) the Congregationalists, who met in Carrickfergus, Rev. W. Newman Hall in the chair, when a forward movement in Ireland was resolved on, and Mr. W. W. Cleland elected as chairman for the coming year; and (c) the Reformed Presbyterians (Covenanters), who met in Belfast, Rev. Samuel Kennedy, of Limavady, presiding. In each of these cases encouraging reports were submitted.

The Aged Christian Blind.

THE Homes for Aged Blind Men and Women, Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, were founded by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bright, in 1880, so that this year they enter on the twenty-first year of their existence. The annual meeting was held on Thursday last, at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan in the chair. The report, read by Rev. J. F. Osborne, M.A., showed that, notwithstanding the collections on behalf of Famine and War Funds, the Homes showed a balance in their favour. The number of inmates had been even increased, and, including those in the new branch at Southend, it amounted to 100. During the year seven inmates had died, their ages ranging from sixty-four to eighty-nine, and one still surviving in the Homes is almost as old as the expiring century. In consequence of illness, and increase in the price of provisions and coal, the winter was trying. Ministers and others still conduct both the Sunday and week-night services for the inmates, while Christian friends visit the Homes for music, reading, and conversation. The institution has also been indebted to ministers in the neighbourhood who have made congregational collections on its behalf. A warm tribute of respect was paid to the memory of the late Mr. Peter Terry, who for twenty years acted as treasurer of the Homes, and who for seventy-six out of the ninety-four years of an actively busy life sought to promote the glory of God. The educational and Bible class work was carried on with extremely beneficial results. The annual garden party to the blind inmates of five workhouses was again given. The Home of Rest at Southend has proved to be a great blessing; and, in addition to those who enjoy its accommodation free, it is available for others who can make a small payment. The committee have resolved to celebrate the "coming of age" of the institution by raising £800 in addition to the ordinary income, so as to raise the Sustentation Fund to £3,000. Cordial acknowledgments were made to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bright for their services from the first as hon. superintendents.

Cambridge Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

IT is not customary to hold more than one or two meetings of the Christian Union in the May Term. This term it has only been addressed by Rev. S. A. Selwyn. The Bible readings, however, given on Sundays after morning service, have been regularly held.

On May 23 the foundation-stone of a new church for the rapidly growing district of St. Mark's, Newnham, was laid.

On Sunday, May 27, a farewell missionary meeting in connection with the S.V.M.U. was held, at which five Cambridge men about to sail for the mission field were bidden "God speed." Professor Moule was in the chair.

The University sermon, on May 20, was preached by Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies, Vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale. The subject was "The Emotional Character of Christ's Teaching," and the text Mark viii. 21. The preacher on the following Sunday was Professor Swete, who selected as his subject "The Ascension of our Lord."

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

THE anniversary services of this Mission were held on Sunday and Monday, May 27 and 28. Mr. T. M. Cleaver, B.A. (of the Egypt Mission Band) and Mr. Tasker, of Andover, took the Sunday meetings. On Monday, Rev. F. Baldey, of St. Simon's, Southsea, presided, and expressed his delight at the good work being done in the Mission, and the fact that its platform was one where Christians of the various sections of the church were united in the service of their Lord. The speakers were Mrs. Buller, of London, Revs. A. Halliday (Presbyterian), L. Railton (Wesleyan), J. W. Davies (Congregationalist), &c.

Mr. Hogben, the director of the Mission, gave a very encouraging account of the work. He showed how, in answer to prayer, the Lord had removed great difficulties, and week by week had manifested his power in the salvation of souls. During the year some 5,000 copies of the New Testament and "Pilgrim's Progress" had been given to our soldiers going to South Africa; while for our sailors at home and on foreign service there had been a large distribution of books and tracts. He also stated that a very successful effort was being made to reach the people of the town in their own homes by means of street prayer centres.

Friends' Yearly Meeting.

THE yearly meeting was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, from May 23 till June 1. Some important questions were discussed. The great subject of peace was early under consideration, and a document was issued which constitutes a pronouncement in harmony with the deep convictions of Friends, and which proves that the testimony of 250 years past remains unshaken and unimpaired. An address to Friends and other churches will make the Christian position on war clear. "Birthright membership," too, received earnest and devout attention. After two sittings devoted to it, and some of our ablest minds expressing their clearest thoughts thereon, the great weight of the meeting of perhaps 1,200 friends was decidedly against any change in the present system. Another feature of this year was the Home Mission work, which seems to be spreading and consolidating, and the work abroad excites enthusiasm.

Early devotional meetings were stimulating and inviting. Purity and anti-opium, and a host of other causes, have their annual reviews during the yearly meeting, and their influence is promotive of great good. The yearly meeting of 1900 will be remembered as one of the best. Differences of opinion existed and were accentuated, but love was triumphant. Tolerance and forbearance were marked characteristics of the meeting as a whole. Some increase of membership, both in England and Ireland, was announced. Many felt that the mission of the Society was taking fresh hold of many hearts.

The London Tent Campaign.

THE situation of the tent at Harlesden is well chosen. From the opening day the meetings have been large and hearty. The people show marked interest, and the influence for good extends in all directions. Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. Wm. Grove have done yeoman service. The meeting for special prayer on Saturday night was a real time of blessing, and a suitable prelude for the day which followed.

Sunday was a high day. Great expectation preceded the three services which were held. Mr. Henry Varley addressed 800 men in the morning at eleven. His stirring words were listened to with profound attention and made a deep impression upon the great company whose united voices sounded out the songs of praise. In the afternoon another large audience assembled, despite the holiday attractions of Whitsuntide. The preacher's address was striking and greatly profited the audience, judging from the rapt attention and the number who came to thank Mr. Varley for the words spoken. In the evening the crowd assembled early and entered enthusiastically into the praise service. By eight o'clock the tent was crowded out, and the side canvas lowered, so that at least 2,000 persons heard "the Word of Life." The preacher's theme was the first miracle after Pentecost, found in Acts iii. The people hung upon his words, and closely followed him in the striking points which were presented, showing no desire to break up. The after-meeting, in which about twenty confessed their reception of the wonderful gift of eternal life which is in Christ Jesus, was a season of much refreshment and blessing. Mr. Varley continued the meetings on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights last.

Mr. Rowland Edwards and the Gospel singer, Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, commenced their work in the Campaign on Sunday last at Ilford. This mission was planned to close, but the friends in the district felt that while such a grand work is going on it would be wrong to close the tent. At Clapham, Mr. Charles Inglis spoke to a large and very attentive crowd.

Three new tents were opened last week, the first one being at Wood Green, on Friday last. The second was opened by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver at Wimbledon on Saturday, and although the seating accommodation was not as perfect as it might have been, there is every sign of a great work to be accomplished in this district. This tent makes quite a picture, lit with electric light. The third tent, which is a very large one, is situate in the West Ham Lane, Stratford, erected on the piece of ground upon which Mr. D. L. Moody held his great mission some years ago. The District Council have kindly permitted the Committee free use of the ground for one month. Those who were present at the Conference on Whit Monday evening will long remember the earnest address of Mr. Leonard Weaver. Some of the first to come forward, seeking the prayers of God's people, were fine, stalwart men, and quite a number of people were dealt with in different parts of the tent.

Tents are now at the following places:—Ilford (High Road), Edmonton (Silver Street), Clapton (Jolly Butchers' Hill), Stratford (West Ham Lane), Harlesden (Willesden Junction Station), Clapham (High Road), Wimbledon (Queen's Road).

Gipsy Smith at Bacup.

The recent mission at Bacup, conducted by Gipsy Smith under the auspices of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches, was of a fruitful character From the first Sunday blessing was given; at the end of the services we could count about three hundred inquirers. It is many years since this locality was so thoroughly stirred- Blessing has come to all the churches in spiritual quickening as well as in additions to membership. The good work still continues among us, and there is every prospect of greater spiritual activity in the form of combined effort among the different churches.

C.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey at Boston, Mass.

The announcement that Mr. Ira D. Sankey would sing and speak in Dudley Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., drew a very large audience. Crowds were unable to obtain admission. The Boston Morning Journal, describing the meeting, says that Mr. Sankey played many of the hymns he has written and arranged. With each one he told the story of how it came to be written, or of where it was first sung, or of some effect the writing and singing had upon people. The stories were well written and well told. Mr. Sankey also visited Cambridge, Mass., and gave his lecture, "Sacred Song and Story," in the First Congregational Church. The large edifice was filled to overflowing. Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine" and other hymns, and his address was received with deep attention.

Mr. W. R. Clark-Lewis, of the East Leeds Mission, has conducted a series of meetings from house-to-house in the district. Some hundreds of people, a large percentage of whom attend no place of worship, were gathered in, and there were manifest signs of blessing.

Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a three weeks' tent mission in Grangemouth. A correspondent writes:—"While believers have been strengthened and helped, sinners have sought the Saviour and others have been deeply convicted. We believe that much fruit will result from the mission, where the Gospel was preached so faithfully."

An eight days' mission has been conducted at Dover by Messrs. S. Levermore and J. C. Gray, of the Open-Air Mission. Services were held nightly in the Union Hall, preceded by open-air meetings in various parts of the town. On the Sundays the open-air assembly was in the Market Square. Mr. Gray's Gospel songs touched many hearts, and Mr. Levermore's message was characterized by faithfulness and power. During one of the meetings on the sea front, a working man knelt and cried aloud for mercy. Not only have sinners sought the Lord, but Christians have received blessing, especially at the Bible readings. A meeting for young people, too, was a time long to be remembered.

Rev. E. P. Hammond recently conducted a union service in Hartford, Conn. (U.S.A.), where he resides, of three churches and Sunday schools. Some preparation had been made for the meeting, and the Christians had been praying that blessing might be given. It was soon evident that the Spirit of God was pressing home the truths to the hearts of the young. Numbers of hearers were melted to tears, and ere long a large proportion were seeking Christ. Ministers, and Sunday-school teachers were delighted to find some, for whom they had been praying, trust in Jesus. During the past twenty years Mr. Hammond has from time to time held meetings in the various localities of Hartford, and he frequently finds those in his services, these later years, ready to stand up and testify to their conversation in gatherings he had held long ago. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of Spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The village church of Fernham, in the parish of Longcott, near Faringdon, has been reopened after restoration. The services were well attended. This is the second church that has been restored in the parish within five years, the money for the two being collected by the vicar, Rev. Robert Thompson. The ministry is strictly Evangelical.

The Council of the Church Association have passed a resolution expressing profound regret that a proposal should have been made to hold a round-table conference with representatives of the Romanizing party in the Church of England. The Council desire to dissociate themselves from any recognition of the possibility of finding a modus vivendi with revived Romanism.

Speaking at a meeting in aid of the Bishop of St. Alban's Fund, Lord Cross said he did not believe that people had the smallest idea of the growth that was going on in the East-End. Early in the Queen's reign there were only 35,000 inhabitants in that part, and the district possessed many country houses. In 1865, the churches provided accommodation for one-fifth of the inhabitants; now there was only seating accommodation for one in eighteen, and only one clergyman for 4,500.

Some ten acres of the grounds attached to Lambeth Palace have been thrown open for the public use. The grounds will admirably serve one of the poorest parts of the parish, in which the population is dense, and the death-rate correspondingly high. It is understood that the London County Council, in whom the grounds are now vested, propose to make gravel paths, to plant shrubs, and to lay out flower-beds in suitable spots. The grounds have appropriately been named "The Archbishop's Park."

The enthronement of the Bishop of Liverpool took place on Thursday last in the Pro-Cathedral. The preacher (Canon Armour, Master of the Merchant Taylors' School at Crosby) took for his text St. Matt. xxviii. 20: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Speaking of broad outlines of common effort which lie before Liverpool Churchmen in the future, the preacher insisted that from its wide-world commerce Liverpool ought to be pre-eminently the missionary diocese. He at the same time emphasized the claims of the masses at home on the care of the Church, and the need for the Church to keep herself abreast of all movements which tended to the good of humanity. In conclusion, the preacher said that the greatest satisfaction existed among clergy and laity of all schools of thought at Bishop Chavasse's appointment, and assured him of a frank and loyal welcome.

Congregational.

The recognition service of Rev. J. C. Easterbrook, the new pastor of Caledonian Road Church, has been held. There was a large attendance of members and friends, and the chair was taken by Rev. A. W. Stockwin, B.A. Stirring addresses were delivered by Revs. Llewellyn Parsons, Alfred Rowlands, LL.B., Mathias Lansdown, and others.

Dr. Horton's book, "England's Danger," is being issued in six parts as a supplement to Te Karere, the monthly paper printed at the London Missionary Society's Press at Mangaia, in the Cook Islands. The supplement is in English, for the benefit of British residents in the group. Te Karere circulates not only in the Cook Islands and neighbouring groups, but also in Tahiti, Samoa, and as far as the coast of New Guinea.

The new School-chapel at Hither Green, erected under the auspices of the District Committee of the London Congregational Union, has been opened. An appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., and at a public meeting Rev. E. J. Penford reviewed the history of the movement, which is due to a combined effort on the part of the surrounding churches. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. A. Mearns and others.

The Pilgrim Fathers' Church, New Kent Road, London, Pastor, Rev. F. Docker, has a frontage, suitable for holding open-air services. A "pictorial sermon" was recently given in the open air on a Sunday evening, aided by a magic lantern. The subject of the sermon was "Contrasts." A large crowd assembled, and listened attentively to the contrasts of a godly and an ungodly life.

There was a large gathering at Sebert Road Church, Forest Gate, on the occasion of the public recognition of Rev. H. T. Spencer, M.A. The chair was occupied by Mr. Thos. Mason, of Woodford. Letters were read from two vicars in the neighbourhood, couched in a brotherly spirit. The recognition prayer was offered by Rev. W. Skinner, the former pastor of the church, and addresses were given by Revs. A. Averell Ramsey, J. French, and other friends.

Resignations.—Rev. W. J. Andrew, of Victoria Street Church, Swindon; Rev. J. Davies, of Rishton.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. H. Merchant, of Greville Place Church, Kilburn, to Wem, Salop; Rev. E. Slater, of Field's Church, Kirkheaton, to Great Northern Street Church, Huddersfield; Rev. W. T. Moreton, of Christ Church, Hants, to Halesowen, near Birmingham; Mr. J. Morgan Jones, of Mansfield College, to the Tabernacle Church, Aberdare.

Baptist.

An assembly hall has been erected in Racecommon Road, Barnsley, as the first instalment of a new church. The complete scheme will involve an expenditure of between £6,000 and £7,000. Dr. Clifford preached at the opening.

In connection with the new church recently given to Northchurch, Berkhamsted, by Mr. John Marnham, of Boxmoor, it has been decided to secure a resident pastor. The Herts Baptist Union has promised a grant for this purpose for three years, which will be supplemented by gifts from Mr. Marnham and other friends.

At Bovey Tracey, a new schoolroom having been erected and the chapel re-decorated, reopening services were held on May 27, when sermons were preached by Rev. Evan Edwards, of Torquay. On the following day there was a well-attended public meeting, at which addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Emery, W. H. Payne (pastor), and others. More than half the cost of the alterations has been defrayed.

On Sunday, May 27, Rev. John Edmonds, of North London, preached the anniversary sermons at Offord, Huntingdon (Pastor, Rev. S. S. Sarson). In the evening the church was crowded. On Tuesday, May 29, Rev. W. Cuff preached in the afternoon to a large congregation, and in the evening a crowded public meeting was held in the Board School. Mr. C. P. Tebbutt, J.P., presided, and addresses were given by Revs. W. Cuff, J. Edmonds, E. A. Phillips, and others.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. G. B. Robinson, of Bexhill-on-Sea, to Arlingham Church, Gloucester; Rev. J. Bailey, formerly of Sheffield, to St. Mary Street Church, Newport.

Methodist.

The May synods of the Wesleyan body which have just closed have provided statistics of membership which show an increase in most of the districts. Outside London the Wesleyans appear to flourish most at Exeter, Birmingham, Liverpool, Leeds, and Nottingham.

Over 5,000 Volunteers are in camp at Conway, North Wales. To provide a place where they may spend their evenings with profit and enjoyment, the Wesleyan Schoolroom in Rosehill Street is thrown open as a place where the men may read, write their letters, &c. Facilities for Christian fellowship and work will also be found there.

A new Gospel car, making the thirteenth, has just been finished and furnished for its work under the Wesleyan Home Missionary Society. A car, which for some years has been employed among the villages in East Anglia, has been handed over to the committee by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant.

East Street Primitive Methodist Chapel, Walworth, the mother chapel of South London, is situated in a very poor district, and owing to the death of old officials, and migration of members, is now almost deserted. A proposal to sell the property has been negatived by the District Committee, and the next Conference will be asked to make it a mission, or attach it to St. George's Hall Mission (Rev. J. Flanagan's).

Presbyterian.

Rev. S. Starritt preached his first sermon as minister of the new church at Muswell Hill on Sunday, May 27. The hall was crowded. Mr. Starritt gave an impressive address on Ex. xiv. 15, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

The authorities of Bala Theological College have decided not to appoint a Principal in succession to the late Principal T. C. Edwards, at present, but two lecturers are to be appointed, and an essential qualification candidates must possess is, that they must be members of the Calvinistic Methodist Church.

A well-attended meeting of open-air and other evangelistic workers was recently held in Regent Square Lecture Hall. The Moderator of Presbytery, Rev. R. E. Welsh, M.A., of Brondesbury, presided. Dr. Hanson opened the discussion in a thoughtful speech, in which he dwelt upon the difficulties of open-air work, especially in Hyde Park. He urged the importance of training men specially for open-air evangelistic work. Mr. Cockrem, Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, and others also spoke.

Society of Friends.

It is proposed to erect a new meeting-house at Stockport, at a cost of £2,500. The old premises, erected a hundred years ago, have been pulled down, partly owing to the insanitary condition of the shops which were built underneath the meeting-house.

Miscellaneous.

Gospel work has been commenced in Albion hall, situated in Brunel Street, Whitefield Road, Everton, on an unsectarian basis. The first services were held on May 20, the hall being filled at the night gathering. On the following evening an public meeting was held, at which the belief was expressed that the work will prove to be of a fruitful character.

The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held at the Sunday School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, on Tuesday, May 29. The chair was taken by Mr. J. J. Smith, J.P. The income for the year was £252 9s. 8d., and the expenditure, including £991 distributed among eighty-one aged ministers, £1,037 0s. 8d. The treasurer of the Society is Mr. P. Cadby, 24, St. Peter's Square, Hammersmith, W.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. John Mather, the wife of one of the deacons at Higher Broughton Congregational Church, and the sister-in-law of Mr. William Mather, M.P.—Aged 71. Rev. Dr. MacMahon, of Dublin, and writer. He was ordained in 1853. He held a curacy under Dr. Alexander, now Primate of Ireland, and at the Disestablishment of the Irish Church in 1869, retired from parochial work. The last ten years he was Chaplain to the Mountjoy Convict Prison.—Alderman Elias Lane, senior deacon of the Congregational church at Christchurch, Hants. For many years he had rendered conspicuous service in the Sunday school, and as a preacher he met with much acceptance. For twenty-five years he was lay pastor at Burton, and has taken interest in the Hants Congregational Union and Sunday School Union, of which he has acted as president.—Mr. William Mewburn, of Wykham Park, Banbury, a distinguished and generous Wesleyan Methodist, aged eighty-three.

Notices.

Many friends have answered the recent questions regarding the fullest form of several hymns. Three are to be found in Bishop Ryle's "Hymns for the Church on Earth," enlarged edition: "O eyes that are weary" (by Darby, seven stanzas of eight lines); "Faith is a very simple thing" (by E. B., ten four-line stanzas); and "There's nought on earth to rest upon" (by Rev. F. Whitfield, six eight-line stanzas). These are also in other collections, but for the most part abridged, where, in their complete form, the publications are for the most part out of print or not easily accessible. Mr. Whitfield's lines will be found in a small sixpenny book, "Sacred Poems and Prose," issued by Mr. Rouse, Paternoster Square. Mary G. Brainard's "I know not what may befall me," appears in the third edition of the Hymnal Companion (five stanzas of eight lines). In Mrs. Pitman's handsome volume "Lady Hymn Writers" (5s. Nelson) it is given in full—seven stanzas.

Notes & Comments

OUR readers will be pleased to know that the series of articles by Rev. F. B. Meyer, entitled "Studies in Zechariah," which recently appeared in our columns, will be issued in volume form on Monday next, under the title of The Prophet of Hope. (Morgan & Scott.) Being published at the close of Mr. Meyer's year of presidency of the British Christian Endeavour Societies, and on the eve of the great London Convention, the work is dedicated to members of the Y.P.S.C.E.; but the expositions it contains, which were heartily welcomed in serial form, will also be appreciated by Bible students and teachers generally.

The conference of hon. secs. of Y.M.C.A.s, which this year for the first time precedes the annual gatherings of the Association, and to which reference is made elsewhere, is a sign of the growing realization of the importance of special training and equipment for Christian work. The establishment of a college for Sunday school teachers at Birmingham is a move in the same direction. It is of supreme importance that Christian workers should be earnest, devoted, Spirit-filled men and women, but added to this there should be the training of the mind, and the development of all the faculties, which will enable a man or woman to bring into God's service the most efficient methods, the most cultivated talents.

Now that the summer and fairly light evenings are upon us, it is gratifying to see how numerous are the open-air services being held at points of vantage along our thoroughfares. This is a most necessary method of Gospel work during the season when so many thousands neglect the House of God. The churches are increasingly becoming alive to this, and many send out excellently equipped bands of workers.

Strong evidence is afforded of that breadth of vision with the possession of which Dr. Chavasse has been credited, when we find him, in speaking at his installation as Bishop of Liverpool, paying a high tribute to the great and good men, "not only of the Church of England but of other Christian Churches, who had adorned that place with their holy lives and their eloquence." He went on to refer to his predecessor, Bishop Ryle, as one > whose name he did not hesitate to say was, perhaps, better known throughout every country where English Christianity had spread than the name of any other English divine, except Charles Spurgeon.

It is significant of the feelings with which Dr. Chavasse's appointment has been hailed, to find the Lord Mayor expressing his desire, "although a Jew," to give a substantial contribution towards the cathedral. Let us hope that this points to the union between the Church and the Municipality which the new Bishop hopes to see—the latter seeking to > order, to beautify, to brighten, and to cleanse the city life, and the Church to do her work in accordance with the spirit and the teaching of her Divine Founder.

For obvious reasons it is satisfactory to find the leaders of the extreme High Church party gradually throwing off all disguise and openly avowing their real beliefs and objects. There certainly can be no room left for either misapprehension or misrepresentation in regard to either, after such a bold admission as that which the Church Review makes in explaining that "strictly speaking, sacramental absolution is not necessary to take away venial sin." What could be clearer than the Romish origin and tendency of this teaching?—

> There is every reason why confession before every Communion is the safer course. People do not always know when they are in mortal sin. Only, English Catholics should have no difference from Rome in this matter. The truth is that nothing really separates us from our Continental brethren but the Petrine claims.

Mr. Sheldon, of "In his Steps" fame, is now upon a visit to this country. He is to preach and lecture in several cities, and he is also upon the programme as one of the speakers at the great Christian Endeavour Convention in London next month. In the course of an interview he is reported to have said:

> It seems to me that there is coming such an awakening of the human heart to religious influences as there has never been since the Reformation. All over the world men are getting ready for it. God is preparing for it. Men don't want creeds, nor theologies, nor statements about God and about Christ. They want God, they want Christ, and they are ready to be shown God's will.

It is indeed true that we may know a great many things about God and his Christ, and yet not know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent. But how are we to know God apart from the statements concerning Him of which the Bible consists?

A brief biography of the late Mr. Grant Allen has just been published. From Mr. Edward Clodd, who writes the book, nothing but eulogy was to be expected. The two men were not only personal friends, but their religious opinions were much alike. Mr. Grant Allen was a close student of nature, and his little contributions to the papers upon the phenomena of life will continue to interest this generation. But he vitiated all his work by his atheism, and by his immoral preaching against the sanctity of the marriage bond as defined by Christ. Mr. Clodd significantly says:—

> Again and again in private chat he spoke of never having felt awe or reverence in contemplating phenomena that move the multitude of mankind to sacrifice or prayer.

Precisely! And yet these men who have lost the sense of worship are generally the men who presume to try and account for its presence in other people on some foolish ground or other—as did Mr. Grant Allen.

At the assembly of the Scotch Established Church, held last week, the temperance report was presented by Dr. Paton, of Glasgow, who declared that, despite all the efforts put forth during a quarter of a century, two-thirds of the Scotch parishes were without temperance societies. Dr. Gillespie, of Mousewald, in the course of the discussion which followed, made the most interesting statement that he had been minister of his present charge for thirty-five years, and he declared there was not a single person in his parish addicted to drink. Many of his brethren envy him his charge. There are few, however, such parishes to be found either in Scotland or elsewhere.

The Unitarians have been holding their annual meetings in London. Last Friday was devoted to the subject of "Unitarian Missions." The gentleman who introduced the subject holds the following views on "missions":—

> They (Unitarians) are the most open to new ideas—to new thoughts on the great questions of religion. No possible religious, political or social reform seemed so urgent as to endeavour to induce every man to ask himself what is the truth on the matters brought under his notice; what was the highest and best revealed to him, and to declare and act up to his conviction of what is true. That is Unitarian mission work.

And if the speaker would only open his eyes, he would at once comprehend why his sect can only command what he truthfully styles "small assemblies." Unitarians have no mission and no Gospel, for they have no Christ. The people know better than to respond to them; they are wise enough to know the difference between bread and stones.

Affairs in China are going from bad to worse. The unprincipled and masterful Empress Dowager is determined to have her own way, although the empire goes to pieces. One newspaper correspondent telegraphs that the Empress declared herself ready to defy all Europe rather than try and repress the "Boxer" movement. Whilst this lady is giving lavish entertainments to her sycophants, a wild horde of murderers marches to the gates of the capital, scattering death and destruction on their route. Several foreign powers have landed troops, but it is not likely that these will accomplish much at present. The truth is that China is rotten to the core, and her government must inevitably pass into Western hands. Russia, America and England have a right of interference now, since their subjects have been murdered. But, above all things else, China needs the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The country has been ruined by superstition, intrigue, and unmentionable abominations, from which the Gospel alone can deliver the people.

A nation appears to forget very quickly its sorrows. A few months ago, when disastrous reverses befel our army in South Africa, there was talk of humiliation. In the hour of our weakness we remembered God, who, until that time, had not been named in connection with the campaign. But now that the war is nearly over, men are beginning to talk in the old boastful style. It will be a thousand pities if the country forgets the moral lesson which the earlier part of the war taught. Christian teachers need now to seize the opportunity of insisting more than ever upon the need of a religious reform at the heart of the nation. One need not be a prophet to see that, in order to brave the perils which lie ahead of us in all directions, the nation must become serious and God-fearing.

Pasteur Reuben Saillens, of Paris, whose work has often been brought before our readers, has just paid a visit to this country in the interests of the French Mission. Amongst the many of his good stories is one which shows how a real missionary work is conceived and developed. One of his helpers visited a village in Brittany, where the darkness is very dense. There is no Evangelical teaching in the place. The evangelist, however, took his stand in the public place and distributed Gospels to the people as they came out of the Roman Catholic Chapel. A crowd collected, and a door was at once opened for evangelistic work. Despite the anathemas of the priest, the people eagerly listened to the true Gospel, which they had never heard before, and now there is every prospect of a permanent work being done. In this way much of the French Mission work is conducted. Magna est veritas et prævalebit.

In an able paper in the current Nineteenth Century, Rev. J. S. Moffat, C.M.G., dealing with the question of the future of South Africa, points out that, although there is a vague idea that the aboriginal races everywhere die out as the European races advance upon them, such has not been our experience in South Africa, where the natives keep step with us as an increasing population, and where they have won for themselves an acknowledged place in our social system. Mr. Moffat, unfortunately, has to testify that "the white man's influence is a mixed one," and that, in some respects, "his example as a man only accelerates the growing degradation of the native."

Against this, however, Mr. Moffat sets the Christian revelation, which also comes with the white man, and which, whatever may be said to the contrary, has manifested a power for good in the history of the native races in South Africa. And, unsatisfactory as the outlook is in certain directions, there is a strong Christian element at work amongst the native races due to the persevering efforts of missionary societies and the Colonial Churches themselves, and, although Christianity works slowly, this strong factor must be taken into account. There must, however, be a great improvement in our relations with the natives, and the task of their redemption must be taken with open eyes.

Mr. Moffat says there are two courses open before England—one to permit the black men to continue to be regarded as a servile race, a course doomed to failure; the other, "to accept the black man as a possible citizen":—

> He has qualities which, in the pure air of freedom, are favourable to the noblest type of manhood, and calculated to add to the dignity and welfare of the whole community. The time will come when, dealt with on the broad ground of human justice, instead of being a danger, he will be one of the great sources of strength to the South African Commonwealth.

The doors are being opened wide, and the possibilities for Christian effort are almost beyond thought; but it seems, if we only rise to our responsibilities, that it may be ours, after this sad struggle is over, to hasten the day when "Ethiopia shall lift up her hands to God."

When a shareholder of a southern railway company once protested against the company catering for Sunday excursionists on the ground of morality, the chairman, Mr. Samuel Laing, replied that the company existed, not to teach morality, but to make money. It was a remark worthy of an agnostic. But something more than morality is threatened by these Sunday excursions. Undeniably many decent and respectable folk avail themselves of them, but frequently Brighton and similar places are invaded by a noisy and drunken set, whose chief notion appears to be to constitute themselves "bonâ-fide travellers" for the purpose of obtaining drink. This, in all conscience, is bad enough.

But it is worse when a wretched rabble is let loose upon foreign shores. A correspondent, who was at Boulogne on Whit-Sunday, says that a disgraceful spectacle was presented to the residents of that French watering place. A load of Sunday cheap trippers landed, and immediately proceeded to get drunk. They roared out "God Save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," and they hissed the "Marseillaise." What wonder that the French hate us! It was an English railway company that recently shipped, on the Sunday, hundreds of Englishmen (!) to witness a disgraceful bull-fight. The company that does this may possibly pocket a few hundred pounds sterling, but it puts the Christian shareholder in a most unjust and difficult position.

In the current number of The Contemporary an interesting article appears from the pen of Mr. Holmes, the well-known police-court missionary, who is the friend of all "first offenders." He deals with the question of child criminals, and expresses his conviction, based upon a wide experience, that very much of youthful depravity is directly due to the unnatural action of parents in getting rid of their children as early as possible. "Get him away" is the notion. This unnaturalness is not found amongst the very poor, strange to say. "It is rare," says Mr. Holmes, "to find a penurious widow desiring to get rid of her children." The writer commends Lord James' Bill, which increases and fixes the responsibility of parents. Mr. Holmes' article is both entertaining and sad. It deserves a careful reading.

It is refreshing to find that in many out-of-the-way corners Christ is being preached with great earnestness and power by scholarly and devout men who are content to be doing God's work in obscure places. Such powerful village sermons "in outline" were preached by the late Dr. Hort, full of simple thought for the peasantry, clearly expressed and forcibly put, as is the following:—

> The Psalms, above all the rest of the Bible, are full of that which is the mark of the whole Bible—the mixture of God's part and man's part. . . . Often we cannot separate the two; we cannot say whether man is speaking or God. For instance, God's voice is never so entirely God-like as when it speaks through the deepest experience of a man; and a man is never so much himself as when he loses himself in the thought of God's doings, "standing still to see the salvation of God." Only Christians who know how God and man met in the person of their Lord and Saviour, can fully reap the benefit of this character of the Psalms.

A very unpleasant light is thrown upon the Vivisection movement by the fact that it has been considered necessary in the Senate of the United States to bring in a Bill "for the regulation of scientific experiments upon human beings in the District of Columbia." It prohibits, "for any other object than the amelioration of the patient," scientific experiments upon human beings "in any hospital, asylum, retreat or infirmary established for the treatment of the sick." In order, however, that the measure may not go beyond the scope of protecting those who from weakness or ignorance cannot protect themselves, it also provides, with fine irony, that nothing in the Act shall be construed to prohibit experiments made by medical students, physicians, surgeons, physiologists, or pathologists upon one another!

There are two episodes in the life of Mary Magdalene, which, when placed side by side, convey much consolation to certain spirits. According to the chronology of the Gospels, it was after hearing our Lord's words "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," that she sought Him in the Pharisee's house, and from his lips obtained the word of forgiveness. But Jesus did not name her, she was simply "th woman." On the resurrection morn, howeve Jesus met her in the garden, and when s failed to recognise Him, He said to he "Mary," calling her by name. It is often so life. When we first come to Jesus we co on the strength of a general invitation; H does not name us more than others. But the hour when He withdraws from us, and seek Him with bitter tears, it is then that hear Him in the solemn sanctuary of the hea call us by name.

A Cruel Wrong to Childhood.

WE have given in preceding issues t testimony of publicans, and some the evidence laid before the Roy Commission by Miss Johnson as to the evi accruing from the sale of drink to childre We now append extracts from

The Evidence of the Police.

Children the Worse for Drink.—"It h been observed that young people in the rough neighbourhoods have been the worse for drin and it struck me at the time of making a repo that thirteen was very young to be allowed consume beer in licensed houses."—Superi tendent Lucas, Metropolitan Police.

Not a Proper Thing for Children.—"Wh I go into a house and find in the bar of th house some eight or nine women of objectionable class there, I think that is sufficient reason for me to say it is not a prop thing for children to go through that place —Chief Constable Sowerby, Plymouth.

Children Bribed with Sweets.—"There ar of course, many cases of children enterin public-houses to take beer away, and som times they are bribed by sweets and so on bring custom. . . . At present the la only prohibits the sale of spirits to childre under sixteen. I should like to see the pr hibition extended to the sale of any liquor children under sixteen."—Captain Bowe Chief Constable of Liverpool.

Drunken Parents Sending for Drink.—" is not now considered an offence against th Public-houses' Act to supply intoxicatin liquors to any boy or girl under fourteen yea of age if they are the messengers of oth persons. This has become a very serio matter. In many cases that have come und the notice of the police the parents or guardian who have sent these children for spirituo liquors were at the time under the influen of drink at their own homes."—Mr. M'Hard Chief Constable for Dumbartonshire.

Quite a Common Thing.—"I could mentio instances of children going as messengers an consuming liquors themselves and makin themselves useless; but I suppose that is qui a common thing, now and again, over th country."—Chief Constable Wyness, Abe deen.

Six Children Drunk.—"The children wh are sent to the public-house as messengers a frequently seen to partake of the liquor t the way, and get under the influence of it als I have seen no less than six who were foun drunk, so bad that the doctor had to be se for, and had, in some cases, to apply th stomach pump to bring them round. Two the publicans were taken up for selling it, b got off, as the decision in the High Court wa that if the child was a messenger no convictio could follow."—Chief Constable M'Hardy.

How to Study the Life of Christ.

By W. G. BALLANTINE, LL.D.

THE only inexhaustible subject of study is the one perfect life. Whatever else an Association does or fails to do, it should have, at least once in every year, a course of study in the life of Christ. That year will be an off-year in which such a course is omitted to give place to subjects further from the centre. Jesus is the Way and the Truth and the Life. Every teacher must have observed how much easier it is to kindle interest and call out tender and deep feeling when Jesus is the theme. The supreme thing to do for every young man is to bring him into the very presence of the Master, and to make him realize the divine beauty of his life, and the tragic mystery of his death. He who, in reverence, has spent the evening in the upper room, and then has followed Jesus step by step to Gethsemane, to Pilate's judgment hall, to Calvary, to the tomb, and later to Olivet, will be a changed man ever after. He will understand what Paul meant when he said, "I am crucified with Christ."

The inherent faults of what I may designate the fragmentary system of Bible study are so many and so serious that every energetic teacher will do well to abandon it altogether. For, in a living thing, the sum of the fragments is not equal to the whole. In science teaching we learned this long ago. The old study of botany, which consisted in pulling the flower to pieces and counting the number of petals and sepals, stamens and pistils, has given place to eager watching of vegetable life; physiological botany is a far higher thing than plant analysis.

The Gospels are wholes, each designed to make a single and cumulative impression; a study of dislocated bits of them—a hash of them—is the least profitable of all conceivable ways of using them. It is like tearing down four separate buildings and then reconstructing a single building four times as large as any one of them; or, to put it differently, tearing down the four façades of one building and reconstructing a single façade with all the stones. The stones are there, it is true, but all of the different architects are obliterated. We rearrange the materials to bring out our own notions of the plan.

Take as an illustration the Sermon on the Mount. The International Committee assign to it two Sundays, April 1 and 8. The first lesson is on the Beatitudes, the second is on the precepts and promises (Matt. vii. 1-14). Now, although the suggested readings cover the whole sermon, it is plain that these twenty-seven verses are thrust into a wholly unnatural prominence, and that the effect of this way of presenting the lesson will be, in most cases, to direct thought away from any comprehensive study of the sermon as a whole. The Sermon on the Mount covers six pages of an ordinary New Testament. Why not assign the whole of these six pages to be studied for two weeks? And why not ask the scholars to read over all of it a number of times, and try to find out Jesus' general plan and purpose in the whole? Many persons have never observed that there are any general thoughts in this sermon; they see only a string of unrelated particulars in accidental juxtaposition. Such study is not at all too advanced for children of ten and twelve if only the teacher is alert and intelligent. Too often Sunday-school teaching is a weak imitation of preaching; a text is taken and a brief sermon is preached, illustrated by material hunted up outside the Bible. The Bible itself contains all the illustrations necessary, if we will only use large enough portions at a time.

There is no reason why the whole of the four Gospels should not be studied in eighteen months rather than a number of supposedly representative fragments. But they should be studied successively. To pass four times over the life and death will unify and deepen all of the impressions. The first Gospel to be studied should, by all means, be Mark, the briefest and simplest; then Luke, then Matthew, and last of all John. Mark gives us two pictures—love, in its incessant, laborious activity, and then sin in its murderous malignity; Luke dwells on every incident and word that expresses the wideness of God's mercy; Matthew triumphantly shows Jesus as the promised Messiah; John describes the life from the view-point of the Incarnation. The scheme of colour is different in each picture; if you cut out the figures and paste them on a common background in one large group you

LOSE MUCH AND GAIN NOTHING.

Entirely too much is apt to be done in supplementing the Gospel narratives. Teaching often seems to consist in supplying what the Evangelists did not say, instead of reverently dwelling upon what they did say. Every one has his own system of theology, and is prone to make the words of the Evangelist a point of departure. It requires uncommon qualities to abstain from presenting the complete view of a truth, as it lies in our own minds, when teaching a passage in which Jesus or the Evangelist has presented but a fragmentary view. For this reason I never feel much interest in the chronological conjectures of the "Harmonies"; the Evangelists were at no pains to enlighten us on the chronology; it was, in their view, of little importance.

It is interesting to go through each Gospel on the great lines of thought. For example, to take all the parables in Matthew and study them comparatively, asking, What are the truths most plainly taught in the parables? and, What truths are illustrated by the greatest number of parables? In such studies the unprofitable overworking of the details of single parables is avoided, and the main thoughts of Christ's teaching are discovered. Another plan is to take each person who came into contact with Jesus, and find every time he is mentioned in the Gospel in hand, and from these notes to construct his character. Young scholars delight in this work, and will turn all the pages of a Gospel a score of times in tracing Peter, John, the Pharisees, and others. The great characteristic words of Christ may be taken, as, for example, the kingdom of heaven, and all that he has said regarding it may be sought out. A concordance will help in such work, but rapid reading is better.

One of the best possible plans is to have the class draw out the teaching of Jesus in a Gospel. Have them go through, and, wherever Jesus is recorded as speaking, of which he speaks and his main thought about it. A note-book for each Gospel on this plan will be an invaluable treasury of suggestion. Many persons will be surprised to find that Jesus did not talk at all about their favourite themes, or, if he did, he did not say their favourite things. Few persons are willing to teach the Gospels inductively, that is, to make the points that the Evangelists make and then say no more. For example, in narrating the death of Jesus, the various wickednesses and atrocious cruelties of men, and the patience and majesty of Jesus, are minutely described, but nothing like an explanation of the Atonement is attempted. A common practice is to dismiss quickly and in general terms all those details which are so carefully given, and to devote large attention to the explanation which is not given. Many people have no other conception of Bible teaching than that of giving such explanations, and regard objections to them as objections to the study of the Bible itself.

NOTE DOWN THE SUBJECT

Instead of reading "lesson helps," it will be a good plan to read rapidly several of the popular Lives of Christ in order to get of that life as a whole. Anyone reads a novel in a few days, yet few would think of attempting to read half a dozen lives of Christ in as many weeks. Those who try it will be richly rewarded.

It is the great spiritual thoughts of Jesus, and not small matters of oriental archæology and geography and chronology, upon which the teacher and student are to dwell. The habit of reflection, of holding the facts before the mind until one's whole being comes under their spell, is the habit to be cultivated. The "practice of the presence" of Jesus is the life of the soul.—The Association Outlook.

Our Queen and Empire.

God bless our aged Queen,
Whom myriads late have seen
Passing serene
Thro' London's great highways,
'Neath Heaven's all glorious rays,
These early summer days,
God bless The Queen!

May He her steps attend,
And ever her befriend,
On either hand;
Bless her all ranks among
This mighty Empire's throng,
Guiding 'twixt right and wrong,
By sea and land.

May He the millions feed,
Far hence, in direst need;
Sending them rain,
With seed, wherever stored;
All needful things, a hoard,
And banish pest and sword
With hurricane.

May He the poor around,
'Neath roof or on the ground,
Raise from the dust;
And, ere called to depart,
Comfort her aching heart,
O'er one, who bore his part—
Her earth-born trust.

O God, look down, we pray,
On those far, far away
From home and love—
Slain, wounded, bleeding, cold,
In winter's grip and hold;
To them thy power unfold,
From heights above.

For those who plough the deep,
Whilst landsmen wake and sleep,
We, Lord, implore.
Our naval crews enrolled,
Our merchant seamen bold,
Here, there, so manifold,
On every shore.

O Lord our God arise!
Forgive our enemies,
The wide world o'er.
Thy faithful ones send forth,
With truth of priceless worth,
East, west, and south and north,
On sea and shore.

IRENEUS.

The Khalsa Prayer Union held its annual meeting at the residence of Mrs. Mawer, Southmead, Chartfield Road, Putney Hill. In the unavoidable absence of the President, Colonel Robert Williams, M.P., the chair was taken by Mr. W. Coldstream, I.C.S. (late of the Punjab). The report showed an increase in the number of members and in the receipts for the Missionary Fund in the past year, and closed with an appeal from the founder of the Union, Bábá Mokhan Singh Sodhi. Rev. R. Wright Hay spoke on the particular message which we have for the Sikh people; and Miss E. S. Bartlett (C.E.Z.M.S.), described work amongst Sikh women in Amritsar city and district.

Lisson Grove Mission.—In the centre of a populous district, this agency is maintained with many tokens of divine blessing. For forty-three years the work has been carried on, but at no period has there been greater scope for its useful activity. The ministry of the Gospel, the visitation of the sick, aged, and distressed poor, have borne fruit in many directions. Nearly 600 meetings were held during last year, while the Bible-women paid 1,049 visits to the homes of the people, cheering them by friendly sympathy and Christian intercourse. The Sunday school is steadily improving. The attendance continues to increase, and the interest of the scholars is well sustained. Children are sent into the country during the summer months for various periods, and a number of mothers also enjoyed the benefits of a holiday at Chorley Wood. Further information respecting the Mission may be obtained from Mr. George T. Hunt, 77, Church Street, Lisson Grove, N.W.

Art Thou He?

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT is very touching to remark the tenacity with which some few of John's disciples clung to their great leader. The majority had dispersed, some to their homes, some to follow Jesus. Only a handful lingered still, not alienated by the storm of hate which had broken on their great leader, but drawn nearer, with the unfaltering loyalty of unchangeable affection. They could not forget what he had been to them—that he had first called them to the reality of living; that he had taught them to pray; that he had led them to the Christ—and they dare not desert him now, in the dark sad days of his imprisonment and sorrow.

It was to two of these choice and steadfast friends that John confided the question which had long been forming within his soul, and forcing itself to the front—"Art Thou He that cometh, or look we for another?"

I. John's Misgivings.—Can this be he who pointed to Christ with unfaltering certitude, saying, This is He, the Lamb of God, the Son of the Father, the Bridegroom of the soul? How great the contrast to this sorrowful cry, "Art Thou He?"

The Bible does not scruple to tell us of the failures of its noblest children: of Abram, thinking that the Egyptians would take his life; of Elijah, stretching himself beneath the shadow of the desert bush, and asking that he might die; of Thomas, who had been prepared to die with his Lord, but could not believe that He was risen. The material out of which He made the greatest saints was flesh and blood like ourselves.

IT WAS BY DIVINE GRACE, that they became what they were. We can easily trace this lapse of faith to three sources.

(1) Depression. He was the child of the desert. The winds that swept across the waste were not freer. The boundless spaces of the infinite had stretched above him, in vaulted immensity, when he slept at night or wrought through the busy days; and as he found himself cribbed, cabined, and, confined in the narrow limits of his cell, his spirits sank. He pined with the hunger of a wild thing for liberty—to move without the clanking fetters; to drink of the fresh water of the Jordan; to breathe the morning air; to look on the expanse of nature. Is it hard to understand how his deprivations reacted on his mental and spiritual organization, or that the depression of his physical life cast a shadow on his soul?

We are all so highly strung, so delicately balanced. Often the lack of spiritual joy and peace and power in prayer is attributable to nothing else than our confinement in the narrow limits of a tiny room; the foul, gaseous air we are compelled to breathe; our inability to get beyond the great city, with its wilderness of brick, into the country, with its blossoms, fields, and woodland glades. In a large number of spiritual maladies the physician is more necessary than the minister of religion; a holiday by the seaside or on the mountains, than a convention.

(2) Disappointment. When first consigned to prison, he had expected every day that Jesus would in some way deliver him. Was He not the opener of prison doors? Was not all power at his disposal? Did He not wield the sceptre of the house of David? Surely He would not let his faithful follower lie in the despair of that dark dungeon? In that first sermon in Nazareth, of which he had been informed, was it not expressly stated to be part of the Divine programme, for which He had been anointed, that He should open prison doors, and proclaim liberty to captives? He would surely then send his angels to lead him forth into the light! But the weeks grew to months, and still no help came. It was inexplicable to John's honest heart, and suggested the fear that he had been mistaken after all. We can sympathize in this also. Often in our lives we have counted on God's interfering to deliver us from some intolerable sorrow. With ears alert, and our heart throbbing with expectancy, we have lain in our prison-cell listening for the first faint footfall of the angel; but the weary hours have passed without bringing him, and we have questioned whether God were mindful of his own, whether prayer prevailed, whether the promises were to be literally appropriated by us?

(3) Partial views of Christ. "John heard in the prison the works of Jesus." They were wholly beneficent and gentle.

"What has He done since last you were here?"

"He has laid his hands on a few sick folk, and healed them; has gathered a number of children to his arms, and blessed them; has sat on the mountain, and spoken of rest and peace and blessedness."

"Yes, good. But what more?"

"A woman touched the hem of his garment and trembled, and confessed, and went away healed." "Good! But what more?"

"Well, there were some blind men, and He laid his hands on them, and they saw."

"Is that all? Has He not used the fan to winnow the wheat, and the fire to burn up the chaff? This is what I was expecting, and what I have been taught to expect by Isaiah and the rest of the prophets. I cannot understand it. This quiet, gentle life of benevolence is outside my calculations. There must be some mistake. Go and ask Him if we should not expect another, made in a different mould, and who shall be as the fire, the earthquake, the tempest, while He is as the still small voice."

John had partial views of the Christ—he thought of Him only as the Avenger of sin, the Maker of revolution, the dread Judge of all. There was apparently no room in his conception for the gentler, sweeter, tenderer aspects of his Master's nature. And for want of a clearer understanding he fell into this

SLOUGH OF DESPOND.

Is not this what we do? We form a notion of God, partly from what we think He ought to be, partly from some one-sided notions we have derived from others; and then because God fails to realize our conception, we begin to doubt. And then, because the world still groans and travails, we question whether God is in his high heaven.

II. The Lord's Reply.—"In that hour He cured many of diseases, and plagues, and evil spirits; and on many that were blind He bestowed sight." Through the long hours of the day, the disciples stood in the crowd, whilst the long train of sick and demon-possessed passed before the Saviour, coming in every stage of need, and going away cleansed and saved. Even the dead were raised. And at the close the Master turned to them, and with a deep significance in his tone, said, "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard. And blessed is he whosoever shall find none occasion of stumbling in Me."

(1) It was indirect. He did not say, I am He that was to come, and there is no need to look for another. Had He done so, He might have answered John's intellect, but not his heart. After a few hours the assurance would have waxed dim, and he would have questioned again. He might have wondered whether Christ were not Himself deceived. One question always leads to another so long as the heart is unsatisfied; hence the refusal on the part of our Lord to answer the question, and his evident determination to allay the restlessness and disquietude of the heart that lay beneath.

God might, had He so willed, have written in starry characters across the sky the Divine reply. This might have awed the intellect, but it would

NOT HAVE CONVINCED THE HEART.

Were this God's method, we should miss the benediction on those who "have not seen and yet have believed." We should miss the discipline of waiting until our doubts are dissolved by the Spirit of God. Besides, though one were to rise from the dead, and come to men with the awe of the vision of the other world stamped on his face, they would not believe. The evidence of the unseen and eternal must be given, not to the startled physical sense, but to the soul. The heart must be taught to wait, trust, and accept those deep intuitions and revelations which establish the Being of God.

(2) The answer was mysterious. Surely, if He were able to do so much, He could do more. The power that healed the sick and lame, and could cast out demons, could surely deliver John. It made his heart the more wistful to hear of these displays of power. He had to learn that the Lord healed these poor souls so easily because the light soil of their nature would not bear the richer harvests; because their soul could not stand the cutting through by which alone the brilliant facets which were possible to his could be secured. It was because John was a royal soul, the greatest of woman born, because his nature was capable of yielding the best results to the Divine culture, that he was kept waiting, whilst others caught up the blessing and went away healed.

That is where you have made a mistake. You have thought God was hard on you, that He would help everybody but you; but you have not understood that your nature was so dear to God, and so precious in his sight, and so capable of development. God could have given you sight, made that lame foot well, given the child back to health, and have opened the prison door of your circumstances. He could; but for all eternity you will thank Him He did not, because you are capable of something else. We are kept waiting through the long years—not that He loves us less, but more; not that He refuses what we ask, but that in the long strain and tension He is making us

PARTAKERS OF HIS BLESSEDNESS.

(3) The answer was sufficient. Together with the works of beneficence, the Lord drew John's attention to words he seemed in danger of forgetting, that he might convince the questioner that his views were too partial. It was as though Jesus said, "Go to your master and tell him to take again the ancient prophecy and study it. He has taken the sterner predictions to the neglect of the gentler, softer ones. It is true that I am to proclaim the day of vengeance; but, first I must reveal the acceptable year. It is true that I am to come as a Mighty One; but it is also true that I am to feed my flock like a Shepherd, and gather the lambs in my arm."

We make the same mistake. We have but a partial view of Christ, and need to get back to the Bible afresh, and study anew the comprehensive words; then we should understand that the present is the time of the hiding of his power, the time of waiting, the time of the gentler ministries. Some day He will gird on his sword; some day He will winnow his floor; some day He will sit upon the throne, and judge those who oppress the innocent. The world is full of evidences of his gracious and Divine power. They are not so striking and masterful as deeds of judgment and wrath might be—they need a quicker eye, a purer heart to discern; but they are not less significant of the fact that He liveth who was dead, and that He is alive for evermore.

III. A New Beatitude.—"Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in Me." Our Lord put within the reach of his noble Forerunner the blessedness of those who have not seen and yet have believed; of those who trust though they are slain; of those who wait the Lord's leisure; and of those who cannot understand his dealings, but rest in what they know of his heart.

God's children are sometimes the most bitterly tried. For them the fires are heated seven times; days of weariness and nights of pain are appointed them; they suffer, not only at the hand of man, but it seems as though God Himself were turned against them, to become their enemy. The heavens seem as brass to their cries and tears, and the enemy has reason to challenge them with the taunt, "Where is now your God!" The waters of a full cup are wrung out in days like these; and the cry is extorted, "How long, O Lord, how long!"

Then we have the chance of inheriting a new beatitude. Light will break in on us as from the eternal morning, the peace of God will keep our hearts and minds, and we shall enter on the blessedness which our Lord unfolded before the gaze of his faithful forerunner.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 17. Psalm cxxiv.

A PSALM of retrospect. The pilgrim soul halts for a little on the rising ground, and looks back on the way by which it has come. So Christian looked back on the Valley of the Shadow of Death in his immortal journey. Such times of brooding and consideration come to us all, and it is well to look back, not with the regretful glances of repining, but to take note of the way in which God has led us, to thank Him for his great goodness, and to say, "If He had not been on my side, the proud waters would have gone over my soul."

As the light of morning breaks we can see the proud waters that are "out" on the lowlying land. They have swept away the bridges, and broken down the ramparts; they have caught up hurdles and cradles, household gear and farming implements, and all are rushing, eddying, whirling downwards. It is a wonder that we escape. A mysterious, unknown Presence must have been at our side, guiding with wisdom, guarding against accident and mishap. We see where men laid snares for us, waiting to entrap us in their meshes. We can see the pitfall, the net, the disappointed pursuers turning back.

There we were nearer destruction than we had any idea of. How wonderful! Saul was on one side of the mountain and we on the other. Indeed, he passed the very mouth of the cave where we lay hidden. We were in the hollow trunk of the tree as he passed, and heard him utter our name. That man or that woman, like Potiphar's wife for Joseph, had nearly encompassed our ruin. What a miracle our life is! How strange that we should be preserved, when so many have fallen beside us! Blessed be the Lord! In Him shall be our help in all the coming years.

MONDAY, June 18. Psalm cxxv.

The mountain-circle that gathered around the chosen city of God was a beautiful emblem of the Divine protection. The Lord was round his people, and will be round them for ever. 'From this time forth and for evermore." This shall be our eternal environment. I have been told of a cluster of rare jewels, which are left without the custody of iron bars or patrols, because all around them is poured the invisible protection of the electric current. Let the thief put his hand anywhere near, and he must draw it back trembling and paralyzed. O soul, if thou wouldst but dwell in God, and let Him dwell in thee, no evil could befall thee. Thy great enemy knows this well, and so he is ever endeavouring to allure thee out of the Divine safe-keeping. Permitted sin and worry are enough to break the Divine cordon of keeping-power. Beware of these; stay inside thy encircling mountains.

The sceptre of wretchedness is often extended towards our lot, and even over it, but it is not allowed to rest upon it. God will see to that, lest it tempt the righteous to retaliate by the use of unlawful means, or to sink into an abject compliance. There is always a "thus far." When matters are being pushed to an extreme, look up and claim deliverance. Even Satan himself has a chain, held in God's hand, and He draws it in a link or two, when the saint is almost done to death. Cultivate an invincible faith in thy God, beloved. He cannot fail thee. Though oppression assail thee, armed and violent, flee to God's heart, and remind Him that thou art but dust.

TUESDAY, June 19. Psalm cxxvi.

Another psalm of retrospect, which leads up to prayer. The soul arrests its climb, and reviews the time when it was a captive, or the chains clanked wearily at the wrists—when it was an exile, and the wastes of water or sand seemed to make it impossible ever to behold the Father's face, or the old homeland. Among the saddest of our retrospects are the reasons for our captivity, when we have been in bondage to evil companionships and habits, and have lost the consciousness of God.

But how often has God our Saviour turned again our captivity! Almost without our realizing what was in process, there has been a softening, a returning tenderness, a relaxing of our bonds, a new passion of desire. The circumstances which had restrained us have altered, the habits that fettered us have lost their fascination, we have been thrown into happier surroundings. Then our mouth has been filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing. The sun has shone again upon our pathway, and we have given occasion to all who knew us to say, "The Lord hath done great things for them." Are you, even as you read these words, conscious of this captivity of soul or circumstance? Is your life like the empty bed of a stream in a south or desert land, stones instead of water, and drought in consequence on all sides? Ask God to send you a freshet from his heavenly hill, and whilst you pray you shall detect the murmur of the descending waters. Out of him, said our Lord, "that believeth in Me, shall flow rivers of living water."

No tears which we shed for our sins and failures, or for the hardness of the soil around us, are lost. There is a far-off interest of tears, especially for those that we shed for others. This is the time of the autumn sowing; the mists hang heavily over the lea, the toil is great, and to bear forth handfuls of precious seed to the dark sods tests faith and patience. Ah, but over those same acres thou shalt come again, standing thigh-deep in the rustling corn, and bringing in the sheaves.

WEDNESDAY, June 20. Psalm cxxvii.

This psalm is a plea against worrying care. In Building.—You are engaged in building up your business, or your influence for good, your church, or your work for God. It is in your mind day and night, and you are greatly tried by it. Now let there be a change in your attitude. Realize that God is the Builder, and that you are God's fellow-worker (1 Cor. iii. 9). Believe that He has a plan, and will find the necessary materials, and that He only wants you to co-operate with Him. At once the responsibility passes off, and the government rests upon his shoulder.

In Watching.—Perhaps the building of your life-fabric is complete, but your anxiety is to watch it, and to keep what you have acquired. Day and night you are devising this and the other method of maintaining and guarding your possessions. But it is a great mistake, and it will not suffice. If God is not on your side, your own efforts will be unavailing; whilst if He is, and if you commit the keeping of your soul and your concerns to Him, as to a faithful Creator, He will keep you. Yes, and He will specially keep the city of your life from the assaults of your greatest foe and his.

In Daily Toil.—Too many of us act as though the maintenance of our life depended on our exertions. We rise up early and sit up late. As preachers, we wear ourselves by toil early and late; as authors, we produce to the exhaustion of brain and nerve; as business people, we act as though there were no Heavenly Father. And He draws nigh to us and says: "Sleep a little more, rest, trust; leave things with Me. To my beloved, I can give whilst they sleep."

In Regard to our Children.—We shrink from the responsibilities of children—largely through unbelief. We forget that He gives them, and will provide for them and us. Of course, we must not be thoughtless and improvident, but we must equally avoid unbelief.

THURSDAY, June 21. Psalm cxxviii.

This is a perfectly-cut cameo—the picture of a godly man, who fears God, and walks in his ways. It is a picture of an ideal home, such as was to be found in the best days of the Hebrew people, and is still to be found wherever the light of Christ has shone. Here is the husband and father, reverent and devout, coming from the hour of his private prayer, with the peace of God on his face, happy in himself and home, a benediction to wife and children, respected among his fellow-men, and successful in garnering the results of his toils. Here, also, is the wife, compared to the vine, which twined around the trellis, or open lattice-work, that surrounded the inner court of the Oriental house. The broad leaves and the pendant grapes give refreshment and shadow. Here, also, are the children, as they gather round the table for their meals. They are like young olive-plants now in their pots, but soon to become olive-trees in their mature beauty—what a beautiful family-scene!

Such a life lies under God's benediction, as a landscape under a summer sun! Behold that man is blessed! And what blessing comes to him, he transmits. The house of God is dear to him. He seeks its prosperity and promotes it. He is spared to see it through long years, and the cup of his life is filled to the gold of its brim.

FRIDAY, June 22. Psalm cxxix.

Life is not all outwardly prosperous, or inwardly happy. It has its dark hours, its overcast skies. Afflictions come, not simply as the chastisements of God, but as the result of our own folly, and from the hand of our fellows. "Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up."

Tell me, ye winged winds
That round my pathway roar,
Do ye not know some spot
Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,
Some valley in the west,
Where free from toil and pain
The weary soul may rest?
The loud wind dwindled to a whisper low,
And sighed for pity as it answer'd—"No!"

Ah, the poet has not told all. Nature may have no such sheltered nook. The fairest scenes of earth have oftenest been the scenes of the most bitter suffering that man can inflict upon his fellow, and the scourge has ploughed long furrows of blood upon the quivering flesh of the slave. But there is a place where the afflicted soul may find a shelter. It is in the heart of God; not yonder in heaven, but here and now. He takes the breaking heart as a mother her sobbing child, who presses it to her breast. He pours in the wine and oil of his comfort, as the good Samaritan to the wounds of the waylaid traveller. He cuts asunder the cords with which our enemies had bound us, keeping us till they had leisure to complete their cruel intent; but when they come they find us gone. He is righteous, vindicating our lot, and causing those that hate us to be ashamed. They are as the withered grass of the housetops, whilst the righteous flourish as the palm tree, and grow like the cedar in Lebanon.

SATURDAY, June 23. Psalm cxxx.

Out of the depths! The depths of contrition for sin. Methinks Peter must have fathomed them; every word of this psalm might have been appropriated by him.

This deep conviction of sin is characteristic of true religion. No literature in the world, apart from Scripture, has dealt with it as the Bible does; and this makes us so sure that the Bible is the Word of God. It so exactly meets our case, diagnosing our disease, and presenting the remedy. But note the exquisite balance of these words. There is a profound sense of sin as contrasted with the purity and holiness of God. There is the consciousness that the sinner cannot justify himself so as to stand in God's holy sight. There is the fixed confidence that there is forgiveness with God, albeit that He cannot away with sin. There is, also, the eager outlook for God's forgiveness, with all the expectancy with which watchers await the morning.

Plenteous redemption! O my soul, dwell on that precious phrase, until its music charms away thy fears! Plenteous, because where sin abounded grace did much more abound. Plenteous, because God is infinite and eternal, and the ocean of his love, when it comes in, covers the sands, and ooze, and bare unsightly rocks. Plenteous, because when Jesus died, He offered a priceless and superlative atonement. Plenteous, so that God can forgive to the uttermost of transgression, can deliver from the wildest and fiercest passion, can lift the sinful soul to sit with Christ in the heavenlies.

How Mr. Moody gave up Business.*

"THE greatest struggle I ever had in my life was when I gave up business," Mr. Moody often said. The steadily increasing duties in his pioneer religious work had not prevented his success in business, and though manager of the largest Sunday-school in the country, he could hold this position without detriment to the interests of his employer.

In 1860 he was working for Buel, Hill and Granger, and had saved 7,000dols. towards the 100,000dols. which had been his early ambition. In one single year he made, by special commissions, in addition to his regular salary, over 5,000dols., an unusually large sum for a young man under twenty-four . . .

How he came to give up business altogether may be best told in his own words:

"I had never lost sight of Jesus Christ since the first time I met Him in the store in Boston, but for years I really believed that I could not work for God. No one had ever asked me to do anything.

"When I went to Chicago, I hired four pews in a church, and used to go out on the street and pick up young men and fill these pews. I never spoke to the young men about their souls; that was the work of the elders, I thought. After working for some time like that, I started a mission Sunday-school. I thought numbers were everything, and so I worked for numbers. When the attendance ran below 1,000 it troubled me, and when it ran to 1,200 or 1,500 I was elated. Still none were converted; there was no harvest.

"Then God opened my eyes.

"There was a class of young ladies in the school who were, without exception, the most frivolous set of girls I ever met. One Sunday the teacher was ill, and I took that class. They laughed in my face, and I felt like opening the door and telling them all to GO OUT AND NEVER COME BACK.

"That week the teacher of the class came into the store where I worked. He was pale and looked very ill.

"'What is the trouble? I asked.

"'I have had another hemorrhage from the lungs. The doctor says I cannot live on Lake Michigan, so I am going back to New York State. I suppose I am going to die.'

"He seemed greatly troubled, and when I asked the reason he replied:

"'Well, I have never led any of my class to Christ. I really believe I have done the girls more harm than good.'

"I had never heard anyone talk like that before, and it set me thinking.

"After a while I said:

"'Suppose you go and tell them how you feel. I will go with you in a carriage, if you want to go.'

"He consented, and we started out together. It was one of the best journeys I ever had on earth. We went to the house of one of the girls, called for her, and the teacher talked to her about her soul. There was no laughing then. Tears stood in her eyes before long. After he had explained the way of life, he suggested that we have a word of prayer. He asked me to pray. True, I had never done such a thing in my life as to pray God to convert a young lady there and then. But we prayed, and God answered our prayer.

"We went to other houses. He would go upstairs and be all out of breath, and he would tell the girls what he had come for. It wasn't long before they broke down and sought for salvation.

"When his strength gave out, I took him back to his lodgings. The next day we went out again. At the end of ten days he came to the store with his face literally shining.

"'Mr. Moody,' he said, 'the last one of my class has yielded herself to Christ.'

"I tell you we had a time of rejoicing.

"He had to leave the next night, so I called his class together that night for a prayer-meeting, and there God kindled a fire in my soul that has never gone out. The height of my ambition had been to be a successful merchant, and if I had known that meeting was going to take that ambition out of me, I might not have gone. But how many times I have thanked God since for that meeting!

"The dying teacher sat in the midst of his class, and talked with them, and read the fourteenth chapter of John. We tried to sing, 'Blest be the tie that binds,' after which we knelt to pray. I was just rising from my knees when one of the class began to pray for her dying teacher. Another prayed, and another, and before we rose the whole class had prayed. As I went out I said to myself:

"'O God, let me die rather than lose the blessing I have received to-night!'

"The next evening I went to the depôt to say good-bye to that teacher. Just before the train started, one of the class came, and before long, without any pre-arrangement, they were all there. What a meeting that was! We tried to sing, but we broke down. The last we saw of the teacher, he was standing on the platform of the rear car, his finger pointing upward, telling that class to meet him in heaven."

* From THE LIFE OF D. L. MOODY. By his Son. (Only authorized edition. 10s. 6d. and 12s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.) (825)

Prof. White's Bible School.

THE news of Professor White's return to London will be heartily received by those who have been privileged to attend the Bible Studies conducted by the esteemed lecturer. The gathering, on Friday last, at the Polytechnic Hall (used for this occasion only, the Queen's Hall not being available) was marked by manifestations of deep sympathy with Dr. White in his bereavement, Sir George Williams voicing the general feeling in a few well chosen words.

Dr. White did not feel that he could at once take up one of the stated subjects of his course, but preferred, under the special circumstances, to consider some of the in times of sorrow. Some reminiscences of the speaker's personal experiences in gaining a steadfast faith, and his pathetic allusions to the circumstances of his son's death, conduced to render the gathering one of pathetic interest, as well as spiritual profit.

After quoting from Luther: "When I am too sad to pray, then I begin to sing," and from Dr Cuthbert Hall, who speaks of the "idyllic tenderness of the consolations of the Gospel," Dr. White contrasted the Christian outlook in periods of trial with that, for example, of Pliny, who could find a refuge only in study. The speaker next commented, in chastened terms, on the "Redeemer Passage," in Job xix., observing that it had been well said that Job "planted the flag of victory on the grave." He went on to consider: (1) Preparations for experiences of trial; (2) Sustenance in trial; and (3) Results of trial. Recalling one of the heads of an address on Abraham, Dr. White instanced, as a characteristic of the Almighty, that He is "One who knows our frame, and adjusts our trials to our ability to bear them. When Lot was allowed to choose the well-watered plain of Jordan, and Abraham's faith possibly was tried, there came the word of cheer, 'Now lift up thine eyes and look northward, southward, eastward, and westward; for which thou seest will I give thee.'"

Lessons were next drawn (a) from Abraham's refusal to accept any reward, "from a thread even to a shoe-latchet," from the King of Sodom, with the subsequent Divine assurance, "I am thy exceeding great reward," and (b) from his obedient faith respecting Isaac, on Mount Moriah, "accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead." Dr. White referred to some phases of his own spiritual experience when he was subject to doubts, with attendant depressions and shadows, and went on to describe how in those days light had come when, in preparing and delivering some lectures on Prayer, he had been brought into closer contact with the Bible, and his difficulties had disappeared before the revelations of God.

The speaker quoted passages from various writings, as well as incidents of Christian experience, which had proved helpful in times of sorrow. One worker had been cheered by the words, "But—God," and Dr. White cited in this connection Psalm lxxiii. 26: "My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart and my portion for ever." Many have been consoled by the spirit of triumph in God shown by the missionary mother who lost her six children in the landslip at Darjeeling. The funeral services of Mr. Moody, full of calm reliance on God, as well as the exultant dying words of that evangelist—"Earth recedes, heaven opens before me. . . . God is calling"—were full of encouragement. Dr. White said that the Gospel is that can come. He would not lay down any law for others, but in his own family, at this time of sorrow, there was no sign of mourning if by mourning men meant bewailing. In conclusion, the speaker commented briefly upon 1 Cor. xv.; and then upon 1 Thess. iv.; emphasizing the word "so" in the subsequent verse of the latter chapter. "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Even the presence of the Lord will not obliterate the sense of union with the risen dead in Christ. The speaker's final words were of invitation to enjoy the Lord's consolations so mercifully provided for all.

Professor White speaks at King's Hall, Newton Street, Holborn, on Mondays, at 5.30 p.m.; at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W., on Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m. and at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, on Fridays, at noon. He hopes, also, to devote some time to interviews with those who desire advice on spiritual matters. Communications respecting interviews should be addressed to the secretary, Miss Meager, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

Points and Outlines.

POINTED PREACHING.

An ancient father wept at the applause given to his sermons; he felt that his words had not gone deep enough. "Would to God," said he, "they had gone away silent and thoughtful." Well did Charles Bridges insist: "We must preach to our people as well as before them." Robert Hall said: "The conscience of the audience should feel the hand of the preacher searching it, and every individual should know when to class himself."

PRAYER.

I. Different kinds.—Secret, Matt. vi. 4; Public, 2 Chron. vi.; Intercessory, John xvii.

II. For what?—Forgiveness, Psalm xxv. 18; Clean Heart, Psalm xix. 11; For Enemies, Matt. v. 44; To be kept from Temptation, Luke xxii. 40.

III. Where?—Everywhere, 1 Tim. ii. 8.

IV. When?—Without ceasing, 1 Thess. v. 17.

V. How?—With the Spirit and with the understanding. C. H. Parker.

A PASTOR TO PASTORS.

None but converted men do make God their chief end, and do all or anything heartily for his honour; others make the ministry but a trade to live by. Sirs, all your preaching and persuading of others, will be but dreaming and vile hypocrisy, till the work be thoroughly done upon your own hearts. How can you follow sinners, with compassion in your hearts, and tears in your eyes, and beseech them, in the name of the Lord, to stop their course, and return and live, never having had so much compassion on your own soul?—Richard Baxter.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE AND GOD'S PEOPLE.
(Rom. viii. 28.)

God's Providence in its relation to his people is: (I.) UNIVERSAL IN ITS EXTENT: "All things work together" for their good. Angels and men, and even untoward occurrences, contribute to the great end. (II.) HARMONIOUS IN ITS OPERATIONS: "All things work together" alike (a) in the history of redemption, so profound and sublime; also (b) in individual experience, often mysterious beyond understanding. (III.) BENEVOLENT IN ITS DESIGN: "All things work together for good," visible and invisible blessings coming to them, and being ever treasured up for a glorious future.

Scapulars for Protestant Soldiers.

THE Irish Catholic for May 26 printed some "Letters from Nursing Sisters" in South Africa, from which it appears that the machinery of Rome has been put in motion to supply Protestant soldiers going to the war with scapulars and other delusive Romish charms. In these letters we read: "The sisters visit the troopships . . . sometimes they have to return three times to the house for fresh supplies of scapulars, medals, &c. They also visit the hospital ships." Again: "Father Simon Knapp also writes he is truly grateful for the box of scapulars, &c., which reached him at Southampton. He enrolled all the men on board the transport who had not previously got the brown scapular." Again: "I cannot sufficiently thank all those kind ladies who sent the badges, Agnus Dei's, scapulars, &c. Not a man, Catholic or Protestant, but asked for them . . . some of the Protestants themselves promised to say the prayers each day."

By a strange coincidence we find in the same number of the Irish Catholic an article headed "A Model of the Apostolic Life," which is full of the sayings and doings of a certain "Father Milleriot." We quote the following passage as relating to the scapular, and as showing the silly superstitions which are in all seriousness placed before the credulity of the Irish people as veritable incidents in an "apostolic life." Father Milleriot, we read, offered the scapular and the miraculous medal to all with whom he came in contact, assured that thereby he would procure for them the patronage of Mary. To increase their confidence in her power, he was fond of relating the history of two unfortunates, whom he called his "drowned" and his "hanged." A man having committed a crime, and dreading the vengeance of the law, came to him one day, saying, "It is the last time you shall see me, Father ——." "At least, my friend, grant me a favour; promise that you will always keep the Scapular." "I promise sincerely; you have always been so good to me!" And Father Milleriot went away delighted, murmuring, "My friend, I have you. You may kill yourself if you wish; you shall not die unprepared."

The next day, indeed, the aunt of this person ran up to him. "Father," she said, "your man is dying! Yesterday he threw himself into the Seine. Although he does not knew how to swim, he was not able to drown himself. But he has taken the pleurisy. Come quick!" The man had kept his scapular. The Father gave him the last sacraments. As to the "hanged," who wore the miraculous medal, by a special protection of God the rope he used broke at the right moment. When informed of the affair Father Milleriot went to see him. "Well, my friend, how is it that you escaped death?" "Do not speak to me about it, Father! I cannot understand it. I selected the strongest rope I could find, and flung myself resolutely into space." He was never tempted to try the experiment again.

Lest some of our readers should be unaware of the Romish use of the scapular, we would refer them to the "Manual of Instructions on the Brown Scapular of our Blessed Lady of Mount Carmel," by Rev. A. E. Farrington, D.D., O.C.C. Second edition (Dublin: James Duffy & Co., 15, Wellington Quay)—a little manual published with the imprimatur of Archbishop Walsh, in which there is a brief history of the Carmelite Order, and a full description of the origin and use of the Brown Scapular, which consists of two small square pieces of brown woollen stuff to be hung over the shoulders, so that one of the pieces rests on the chest, the other on the back of the wearer. Devout wearers of this charm are promised protection from drowning and burning, and a speedy release from purgatory!

It is sad enough that Roman Catholic soldiers should be taught to trust in such vanities, but that Protestant soldiers should be induced to put their trust therein, instead of in the mercy of God through Christ, realized only by the exercises of true penitent faith, is still worse. It is, however, well that the public should know the kind of mission which is carried on by the nursing sisters of Rome; and the knowledge should stimulate them to help forward more earnestly the work of those who are proclaiming the unadulterated Gospel of the Grace of God in the hospital, the camp, and on the battlefield.

Missions in the Transvaal.

[From a Correspondent.]

IN view of many mis-statements made about the Boers and mission work, the following facts, taken from a letter by Rev. A. Murray, will speak for themselves:—

"There are three Dutch churches in the Transvaal, but the largest one is the United Reformed Church, numbering 31,000 members, far more than the other two churches together. In its Church laws, the following articles occur:—(124) The Church counts it a sacred duty to labour for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom by means of mission work among the heathen. (125) This mission work is to be carried on in obedience to the command of our Lord Jesus in Matt. xxviii. 19, and is alike the duty and the privilege of all who are partakers of the Gospel. (126) There is to be a mission committee whose object shall be to awaken interest in the work, and ask the prayers, the gifts, and the co-operation of the Church. (128) It is desirable that mission congregations be established in connection with the Church. (135) All consistories are urgently recommended to arrange annual contributions.

"When it is remembered that in this church the number of elders in their synod is twice that of the ministers, it will be understood that it is not a decision come to by a number of ministers alone.

"In connection with this church, there are, at least, five missionaries—one at Pretoria; one at Middelburg, with three evangelists; one at Potchefstroom; one at Wakkerstroom, with eight evangelists; and one at Vryheid, with three evangelists. With regard to this last-named congregation, the annual amount needed for the missionary and evangelist was £178, which was entirely subscribed for by the congregation. There were three Boers who gave ground and a dwelling for an evangelist belonging to another missionary society, and in addition to this there were different farms on which either the farmer or his wife gave instruction to the natives.

"The work at Wakkerstroom, in charge of a committee of that congregation, has been one of intense interest. In the course of seven years more than 800 Zulus were baptized, many of whom had been brought to conversion by evangelists supported by farmers in the congregation of Utrecht and elsewhere.

"I have mentioned this to give proof of how the Church of the large majority of the people aims at being a mission church, and seeks to foster, and that not unsuccessfully, the mission spirit among its members. I, myself, have a son a missionary in the Transvaal, labouring among natives, for whom, for four or five years before he came there, two Boers provided evangelists with a salary for their support.

"I have given this somewhat extended statement to show how incorrect the representations are, even of those who have been living in the country. It is not the Church of the majority that has assumed the position of hostility to missions. I have myself known of men who had their difficulties about the work of missionaries from abroad, who were yet faithful in educating their own servants.

"It is in the Transvaal as everywhere in the world—earnest Christians are led to take an interest in missions; those who live for the world will not do so."

Naples Animals' Protection Society.—The operations of this Society, under the presidency of Princess Mele Baresi, have been considerably extended during the year. Horse and donkey parades have been usefully instituted in Naples and Capri. Prosecutions have had satisfactory results—extra animals have been attached to very many vehicles, while heavy loads have been diminished. During the last two years the number of animals found working in an unfit state has been largely reduced; but many acts of cruelty are still met with. Communications may be addressed, Miss P. H. Johnston, The Beeches, Carlisle.

Americans in Palestine—I.

By Rev. C. S. MASON, LL.B.

IT may be of interest to your readers to hear about the "1900 Pilgrimage." An American party, composed of eighty-six members with twenty-three ministers, representing six denominations and twelve States, we started on February 10, 1900, for a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, Egypt, and Europe.

Reaching the land made sacred by the Lamb of God, for a few moments we live in the past, and touch the lives of Simon the Tanner, Peter, Dorcas, Noah, Jonah.

We hasten on to the Holy City, over the Plain of Sharon. How beautiful the distant blue Judean hills, the oliveyards and vineyards! But we look beyond, intent that we may catch the first glimpse of dear Jerusalem. We see the church of the seven domes on Mount Olivet—the mount He trod upon; and where He wept over Jerusalem, we wept too. The modern city, the Russian church, the Latin churches, with all their traditions, could not turn our heart and mind from this sacred spot. We believed, and his Spirit witnessed with ours. It was a moment never to be forgotten—our first view of the Holy City.

We walk the Via Dolorosa, out at St. Stephen's Gate, to Gethsemane. It was this scene, Christ in the Garden, which brought the back-slidden, cold-hearted disciple, Joseph Hart, back to a consecrated life, a life hid with Christ in God.

Next day we again visited Gethsemane, and ascended the Mount of Olives, where a memorable prayer meeting was held. On the following Sabbath, on Gordon's Calvary, at nine a.m., Rev. A. H. Harshaw, a Presbyterian minister from Junction City, Kansas, gave a Bible-reading on "Jesus at Jerusalem—his sayings and doings." A little way from the American party was a group, with their faces towards Jerusalem, singing sweet songs of redeeming love, led by Rev. J. Harrison, of the Church of Ireland; on another section was a number of young men, headed by D. O. Shelton, who has been called to the work of Biblical instruction, as a secretary of the international committee of the Y.M.C.A. of America and Canada. Some of the party attended the Alliance Mission, which is doing a good work. There are fifty in the Sunday school, and a goodly number attend the Gospel service. Rev. T. L. Smith, of Chicago, a Baptist preacher and worker well known, led the services. Many testified for Jesus. One, a Jew, gave of the power of Jesus and his truth. Brought up in the Jewish faith, instructed to disbelieve and even to hate Jesus of Nazareth, he came to Jerusalem more thoroughly to learn the English and French languages. Here he was sorely disappointed to find the Temple gone, and the glory of Jerusalem departed, and the sacrifices done away with. Instead of the temple he found a Moslem mosque. Here he read the Bible, and found out that the words of Micah iii. 10-12 and 1 Kings ix. 6-19 were fulfilled in consequence of sin—"Israel became a proverb and a byword among all people" (v. 7). Convicted of sin, he sought in the Word for light, and taught by the Spirit, Joseph Silberman was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ, and now, with Mr. Pane and Mrs. Ryison, is working among the Moslem lepers.

A number gave interesting testimony of the transforming power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Hon. S. Merrill, U.S. Consul, and others, spoke at the evening Gospel service, held in the parlours of the Grand New Hotel.

Prayer meetings in the rooms of various members of the party, and many devotional meetings were held, and seed sown—the flowerlets of the Gospel strewn along the "pathway." We met many of our English brethren, and could unite with those of our Motherland in singing—

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.

Y.M.C.A. Conference.

THE Nineteenth British Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations which is taking place this week in Newcastle-on-Tyne, meets in perhaps the finest Y.M.C.A. building in the United Kingdom. Opened only a few weeks ago by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, it is fast becoming a hive of busy workers who have swarmed into it from the temporary rooms of the Association in Northumberland Street.

The position, planning, furnishing, and general equipment of the premises call forth unstinted praise — not to say envy — from the delegates to the Conference assembled from all parts of the country. From the café in the basement to the photographic dark room in the roof, every detail affords evidence of careful study of the needs of the work; and the building itself, standing on one of the best sites in the City, is a magnificent testimony to the importance of the work carried on by the Association, for the spiritual, social, mental, and physical welfare of the young men of Newcastle. The premises, in addition to the café, and six shops and other offices, which are let, and form a source of revenue to the Association, comprise two halls (one seating 700 and the other 300), reception and reading rooms, also fourteen smaller apartments, baths, and a large and well-appointed gymnasium.

A special feature prior to the General Conference this year is the HONORARY SECRETARIES' CONFERENCE.

The need for something of this kind has long been apparent, and the meetings held on Monday and Tuesday formed a first step in the direction of systematic training for the hon. secs. Not that anything ambitious was attempted, but it is something to have made a beginning; and, when it is remembered that Y.M.C.A. work in this country is carried on mainly by honorary workers — the proportion of general secretaries to honorary being about one in six—the importance of efficient training is at once obvious.

About forty secretaries mustered at the opening meeting on Monday evening, when Mr. C. J. Dymond, hon. secretary of the Newcastle Association, gave an address of welcome. Ths was followed by a devotional meeting, at which the need of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit was the burden of prayers.

The first subject for conference was "The Honorary Secretary: His Duties and Relation to the Work."

"None Now But Christ."

WRITING from the headquarters of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society, 200, Broomielaw, Glasgow, Mr. Larus Johanson, relates the experiences of his fifth visit as a missionary to Iceland, his native country.

"At Fellsströnd I found there about twenty converted people, who were instructed in the way of the Lord by a farmer named Matthew, whom I met on my way to Reykjavik in 1898. I had personal conversation with him, through which he was convicted of sin. He shortly afterwards received Christ, and straightway began to testify boldly for Jesus on the streets. His errand to Reykjavik was to employ a lawyer to settle some grievance between himself and another farmer. After his conversion I asked him, 'What about the lawyer?' His reply was, 'I want none now but Christ.' On his way home he met his enemy, paid him all he demanded, and preached Christ to him. He too became soundly converted, and through his personal dealing with the people round about his home, a revival broke out."

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD "Eights Week" has brought a larger number of visitors than usual, and the meeting must be equally delightful to the undergraduates and their friends. There is one class, however, who should not be forgotten, namely, the lodging-house keepers and the college servants. Very few of them are able to attend the means of grace during the summer term. What this means to some of them, let those of us say who enjoy the weekly prayer-meeting and the Sabbath services. We are glad to know that this week a special meeting was held at Christ Church, convened by the Archdeacon of Oxford, to consider the case of the college servants. What they need is not a service in the College Chapel, but the opportunity to attend their own services. Hall at six o'clock instead of seven, and a fixed rule that no large luncheon will be allowed on Sunday in the Colleges, together with a permit to leave the lazy undergrad in bed if not up at 10 o'clock, would practically solve the difficulty. If cold dinners too were the rule on Sunday this would simplify matters still further, and surely this would be no great hardship. We hope soon to be able to report that the real grievances of the college servant have been removed.

Rev. C. J. Casher organized again this year the tract distribution during the Eights Week. He was assisted by the venerable Rector of St. Aldate's and by Rev. and Hon. Talbot Rice. Some thousands of booklets were thus given away; and, while the movement is differently viewed by different men, it cannot but be useful, if only as an assurance that Evangelical religion is alive in Oxford, and eager to use any opportunity. For forty years the work has been carried on, and none of us would like it to be given up.

The Master of Pembroke (Bishop Mitchinson) is proving himself a power for good in the city. He is full of energy, and finds time to interest himself in good work outside the College. Last Sunday he addressed the men's service at St. Aldate's, held regularly in the afternoon. As it was the Open Sunday there was a very large congregation. "The Fruits of the Spirit" was his subject, and very faithfully did he show what the Christian life should be.

Mr. H. Gibbon, one of the clerical members of the staff of the Oxford pastorate, is at present conducting the Greek Testament class on Sunday evenings, which, under the late Principal of Wycliffe, has been so powerful for good. The numbers are maintained. This speaks well both for Mr. Gibbon and the members.

Missionary Breakfast.

AT the twenty-second annual missionary breakfast, held at Talbot Tabernacle W., on Whit Monday a large number o friends assembled, and Pastor Frank H White, who presided, was supported by mis sionaries representative of many countries an societies.

At the meeting which followed, after Scriptur reading, and some introductory remarks fro the Chairman, Rev. David Baron said that a the watchmen on the walls of Zion, and th priests on the pinnacle of the Temple used t look for the dawn, so they to-day, in thei work amongst the Hebrew people, felt the nigh was far spent, and were stirred to do thei utmost in the time remaining. The parish o the Missionary to Israel was the largest an missionary ever had, for the Jews being a dis persed people, their field was the world.

The next speaker was Rev. James Wall, wh gave a striking description of Jewish life i Rome, and declared that he had found th Papal system to be the deadliest enemy of th nation and of liberty, of the family and o home, of the conscience of man and the honou of God. The greatest need of Italy wa the Word of God. In their work they ha disposed of tens of thousands of Gospels, and recently, 10,000 copies of the Epistle to th Romans had been distributed amongst th electorate and to the 550 Deputies. In closing Mr. Wall made an earnest appeal for mor workers.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith followed with testi mony to the value of work done by lad missionaries in the inland provinces of China and asked for volunteers. In that lan there is one missionary to ever 100,000 of the population. M Smith told the story of the con version of a Chinese photographer who having been delivered fro the power of the "big smoke (opium) and then the "littl smoke" (tobacco), has bee greatly used by God to lead sinner to the Saviour and believers t service for the Master.

The occasion proved to be on of the best of these helpful gather ings, it was a very blessed seaso throughout, and the addresses o the brethren were in much power

Irish Church Missions.

TWO of the trained worker of the Irish Church Mission have had an interestin time in the Northern Fair during May. The following ex tract from their journals will b read with interest: "Thursda being Ascension Day, we visited ——— Market where were hundreds of Roman Catholic keeping holy-day. In the Market Square w played and sang, and preached freely, and large crowd was most attentive. We spoke a long as our voices would allow us, referrin especially to the Gospel for the day, and dwel ling upon Christ's mediatorial work now for us Sold seventeen Testaments and seventeen othe books. Both of us enjoyed much power an liberty in proclaiming the truth, and th weather was lovely. On Friday, at ———, w sang and spoke for a long time. Many wer influenced to buy in spite of the bitterness o many, and an attempt to pull one of us off th box when speaking on 'St. Peter's Letter. Before we began, one man hoped that we should fall and break our necks; and the pigs in th carts close to us were very noisy at times. O course, they had to be lifted out to show t would-be customers, and when you lift a pig o hold him by the tail, he makes a noise. W sold nine Testaments and seventeen othe books."

Grace comes into the soul as the morning sun into the world: There is at first a dawning, then a mean light, and, at last, the sun in his excellent brightness —S. Adams.

Death of Dr. Ryle.

THIS distinguished prelate did not long survive his removal from Liverpool, with which city he had been associated as Bishop for nearly twenty years. Since his retirement he had been living at Lowestoft. He had been confined to the house for about five weeks, and on Saturday showed signs of increased weakness, and gradually sank, until, on Sunday afternoon, he passed into the presence of the King.

The career now terminated has been, in many ways, a remarkable one—not marked, it is true, by very varied experiences, so much as by a fidelity and consistency to his own selected line of thought and action. But he came to the bishopric in troublous times, and was recognised and highly appreciated as a leader of thorough-going, uncompromising Evangelicalism. It it noteworthy that, so far as "a man's heart deviseth his way," he had no thought of a clerical life during his youthful days. But "the Lord directed his steps," and the financial failure of his father closed the door of his anticipated career as banker and M.P., and he thereupon entered the open door of the Church of England at the age of twenty-five. For forty years he fulfilled conscientiously and with abounding energy the duties of a parochial clergyman, first at Helmingham (Suffolk), and subsequently at Stradbroke, until in 1880 he received preferment to the see of the Mersey city. By this time he had attained to ripe experience and an understanding of the times and their spiritual necessities, and he deviated not a hairbreadth from the strong Evangelical position to which he had adhered for so long.

The progress of the "Oxford Movement" had always been a matter of sore interest to him, and he unflinchingly used his position as Bishop to support those clergy who, in his judgment, were following most closely the New Testament ideal.

When he was selected by Lord Beaconsfield to occupy the see he feared he was too old for it. But the Prime Minister, impressed by his stalwart physique, replied, "No, sir, you have a constitution!" He might have added, had he known him better, "and a conscience;" but this he found out in due time.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

Mr. Ryle had attained no mean repute as a writer of tracts, the first of these being his opening sermon, originally printed for private distribution only, and taking its title from the text, "I have somewhat to say unto thee." The series was, indeed, a remarkable one; not so much for the number of the tracts, although this exceeded 200—since we can hardly be mistaken in assuming that they were written editions of his sermons—as for their execution and success. They were addressed, not to the illiterate and profligate, but to the respectable, middle-class church-goer. Short, sharp, and importunate were the titles, and below the titles was matter solid, fresh, and as full of strict reasoning, on a Scriptural basis, as of spiritual appeal; in a style undeclamatory, unconventional, spoken, heartfelt, pointed. "Are you Converted?" "Are you Forgiven?" "Are you Holy?" "Are you Free?" "Do you Pray?" "How Readest Thou?" "Strive." "Strike." "Watch." "Occupy." "Wheat or Chaff?" "Our Home." In this fashion we were challenged, and cautioned, and stimulated in every part of us, and we could not but attend to ourselves—and attend to Scripture.

As long ago as 1876 was made out a list of little more that 100 tracts, with the circulation of each appended, and the sum total exceeded 11,500,000. A selection of them appeared subsequently under the felicitous title of "Home Truths." Compared with other successful tracts, Mr. Ryle's had a strength especially their own, an individuality never to be mistaken. They must have owed much to their titles, which would alone form an effective guide for a young sermon-writer, showing him the kind of subject he might sometimes take with him into the pulpit, even should he never read a line of the tracts themselves for a style. We fully believe that the Bishop's intimates could tell of many a triumph won to the Redeemer's kingdom by these multitudinous messengers. Bishop Riley, of the Mexican Reformed Church, which began in 1865, was much indebted to a Ryle tract, "Are you Forgiven?" for ability to start in that movement, and he has supported his share of it by translating above forty of the tracts into Spanish. One of these, "True Liberty," gained over to the cause a Mexican Roman Catholic priest of great ability, Manuel Agnas.

The Bishop's longer treatises and volumes were also numerous, occupying mainly the Stradbroke, and some the Liverpool, period. Of one of these, entitled "Knots Untied," it was stated, some years ago, that seven young men were known to be studying for holy orders, as the result of reading it. Of the volumes, perhaps, the most popular has been "Christian Leaders of the Last Century," sketching the lives of eleven eminent revivalists, with Whitefield and Wesley at their head; and his enthusiastic admiration of them is shared by most of his readers. We doubt, however, whether a still more valuable work is not the "Expository Thoughts on the Gospels," as being more continually and lastingly in the reader's hands.

From the heart of East Anglia Mr. Ryle spoke by his writing to all England, and to excellent purpose. Could he have done more good if the ambition of his early life had been realized? We doubt it, although, in succession to his father, he could have done good work in the House of Commons. The Lord of all the wide domain had granted unto him vastly more than he had lost, and as year after year added to his new inheritance of usefulness, he must have found ever fresh reason to lift up his head with joy and still press forward. In 1880 he entered upon much more than the lordship of Macclesfield.

Of his important diocese the special difficulties, we understand, were these:—Lancashire abounds with native English old Roman Catholic families; Liverpool teems with immigrant Irish ones, and with those Welsh ones who know not bishops. The princely merchants of the great city, who could spare their thousands as common men do guineas, are mostly from beyond the Tweed where they have known presbyters only. A bishop, therefore, in working the special organization of which he is in charge, is sorely straitened for means and countenance. Nevertheless, the first Bishop of Liverpool's great exertions produced remarkable successes. But there were also spiritual results beyond the reach of figures, and never did bishop more persistently than he aim at these, in ordinations most particularly.

Another praise, which he did not always get credit for, is his due; we refer to his generous large-heartedness towards those who theologically differed from him. He was anything but narrow-minded—as those well know who have read his "Christian Leaders" or remember the warm receptions which, as Canon Ryle, he used to get at Church Congresses. He did not insist (except for himself) on his own precise views of truth in every particular, and if he saw the Gospel holding an emphatic place in another man's system, he was tolerant of concomitants which might strike some as perilous; such faith had he in the sovereign power of the Gospel of Christ if it be central. In this spirit he hopefully surveyed the Church of Christ, and in this spirit he administered his episcopate.

An Irish Convert.

THE June number of The Catholic, Rev. T. Connellan's well-known monthly, contains two communications received by the editor from a man who has been associated with the Marist Fathers, but who eventually became enlightened as to the only true way of salvation. While in the service of the Fathers, Michael Reilly wrote:—"I am thoroughly disgusted with what I see and hear. We dress and come down to work at six. We are on our feet all day until we retire to bed, after sixteen hours. I am employed as waiter and sacristan. I am always mumbling what I know nothing about, that is Latin. They are very anxious here that I should become a lay brother, that is a free labourer or priest's slave, but I hope some day to show them I have ceased to believe in the false doctrines they are teaching. I have only one friend here with me, and that is the New Testament with which you presented me."

At a meeting a few days afterwards, Michael Reilly was introduced to a gentleman home from South Africa, himself a convert from the Church of Rome. His advice was evidently blessed by the Spirit of God, as a second letter from the young man announced his exodus from the Romish institution, and his acceptance of the Protestant faith. "Yesterday morning I served the last Mass for ever. I was as usual very reverent, just the same as if nothing was about to occur. No more will I be seen standing in the hall; no more on the altar; no more singing in the church; no more in the confessional while breath is in my body. I go to the Cross in spirit, and pray God will give to others, as he has to me, the gift of faith."

The Indian Famine.

STATEMENT BY THE VICEROY.

An earnest appeal for famine-stricken India has been addressed by the Viceroy to the Lord Mayor. Whilst thanking the English people for their "liberal," but yet not too liberal, contributions," Lord Curzon of Kedleston points out that the Indian authorities are struggling with a famine greater in its intensity over the areas afflicted than any previous recorded visitation, whilst the charitable help received from home compares unfavourably with that extended in 1897. The present famine is marked by the absolute failure of the two last autumn and spring harvests, and by an unprecedented loss of cattle in the central and western parts of the country. Many thousands of persons must inevitably succumb, if not to positive starvation, at any rate to the debility that is scarcely distinguishable from it.

Some of the sad facts which have already been laid before our readers by missionary correspondents are rehearsed in the Viceroy's letter. It is gratifying to observe that the British colonies and outlying stations of British influence or commerce have come forward liberally with assistance; and special mention is made of the generosity of Germany, acting upon the noble initiative of the German Emperor, also upon the outburst of practical sympathy in the United States of America, which we described some weeks ago. The Mansion House Fund, on Tuesday last, amounted to £277,100.

This amount is probably less than half the total sum distributed in the form of Famine relief, and our readers will want no argument to satisfy them of the special importance of such funds going through missionary channels. Some light is thrown upon this by an article from its special correspondent, published in The Standard on Tuesday last. We make a brief extract:—

It is alleged that, while the superior English officials are doing their best to cope with the terrible distress undoubtedly existing in this part of India, the harshness and ill-treatment of the native subordinate, whenever the Englishman's back is turned, has done much to make the people timid, and thus indirectly causes numbers of deaths from starvation. This want of sympathy, and even cruelty, on the part of the subordinate native officials is, unfortunately, one of the most marked features of the famine all over India.

The European missionaries, on the other hand, are doing noble service in this and in many other parts of India. It is noticeable that the best results are achieved in places where Government officials and missionaries work hand in hand.

The missionaries by whom the funds committed to our care have been distributed, are continually expressing gratitude for opportunities thereby afforded them of getting at the hearts and consciences of the famished people.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra Medical Missionary Training Institute, writes respecting the food stuffs which we have been enabled to despatch:—"They will be the means, under God, of saving the lives of thousands of poor creatures who would otherwise perish. Cholera has broken out in the affected districts, and before medical assistance can reach them. Indeed, we have almost ceased to think of the famine in view of the terrible visitation of cholera which we are now experiencing. I have made up and despatched medicines to several parts with directions as to their uses. I have also arranged to send these medicines to all missionaries who apply, men or women. (I do wish that every missionary coming to the foreign field could arrange, before coming out, to have six months' course of dispensary or hospital practice.) I expect the rains will be breaking shortly, but when they do, the mortality from starvation, exposure, and disease will be increased twenty-fold.

Dr. Valentine forwards a description of the heartrending condition of the effects of the famine at Behad, Gujarat, written by Mr. C. E. Aldrich, who says:—

"On every hand were the dead and dying. Sometimes it was an aged person; sometimes a youth or an infant. The wind carried the sand in clouds. There was scarcely any noise, though there were many people. They sat or lay quietly in groups of four, five, to fifty by the roadside. The living and the dead were all together. If one died, no one attempted to remove him. Why should they? All have sat or lain down there to die, and one by one they meet death; they all wait for it. . . . In the bottom of the dry river-bed, and on its banks, were scores of the dead bodies of persons who had

STARVED TO DEATH.

In many parts of the city dead bodies were also to be found. It is dreadful to look upon the faces of the small children who had starved to death. Marks of infant beauty, intermingled with those indicative of a painful death, were traceable. The missionaries are doing much, and would do more if they had the means.

"As we walked about those quiet streets, we saw deserted homes, sad faces and dead bodies, so many that had lain so long in the streets and by-ways that we had to breathe through a well-wadded handkerchief. Lying in the midst of one of these groups was the skeleton of a child. We concluded that the flesh had been eaten from it by the jackals. We saw many who were almost too weak to raise a hand, and who, we are sure, could not defend themselves in the event of an attack by a jackal or a hungry dog."

Rev. Dennis Osborne writes from Poona: "It will interest your readers to know with respect to the food supplies sent that, after consultation with the leading missionaries of the various societies concerned, it has been decided to send supplies to the workers of twelve different missions actually engaged in relief work. I have in my care some

FOUR HUNDRED ORPHANS

(in Bombay, Poona, and Talegaon), and this number will be largely augmented by waifs." Mr. Osborne proposes to do something for the prevention of famines in the future by the storage of water, and digging wells; he also aims to help poor cultivators to procure cattle, seed, and ploughs, when the rains come.

We have received a communication from Mr. T. Carroll (of Messrs. William Watson and Co., Bombay), who says, referring to the food supplies:—"We had received, cleared, and despatched 107 cases, as proportioned by the local committee. You will be pleased to hear that the Government have exempted these foods from duty, and that the two chief railways have agreed to charge their lowest rate all over their lines." It should be mentioned that Messrs. Watson have devoted time and labour to the matter, free of charge.

DISINFECTANTS.

In response to an urgent call for supplies of disinfectants, we have communicated with a number of leading firms of manufacturers in order to secure a reduction on usual prices. We are able to report the following satisfactory replies:—Messrs. George Beddow and Co. and Messrs. F. C. Calvert and Co. will each send £10 worth of disinfectants at half price; Messrs. A. Boake, Roberts and Co., Ltd., who execute an order for £10 worth, will contribute £20 worth as a free gift; Messrs. Burgoyne, Burbidges and Co. will execute order for £14 worth for £10; Messrs. Condy Mitchell, Ltd., are sending £15 worth for £10; and Messrs. Newton, Chambers and Co., Ltd., are supplying £10 worth of "Izal" at half price.

A SUGGESTION.

Mr. Esu Churran writes from Kalmati: "Everyone who has had experience in famine work knows what a terrible percentage of deaths take place after the sufferers have for some time been taking food. Many will be interested to know of Pundita Ramabai's experience in successfully treating so many of her worst cases. She gives plenty of ghee (clarified butter), which is not only the most nourishing thing available in Indian villages, but is also very soothing. Let me also recommend a cleansing wash of the nature of Condy's Fluid or carbolic, diluted, for 'sore mouth.'"

Off to the Cannibal Islands.

A MEETING of friends interested in the John G. Paton Mission Fund was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last, to bid farewell to Rev. Fred J. Paton (second son of Dr. J. G. Paton) at the close of his seven months' visit to Britain and Ireland, after seven years of labour on the island of Malekula, New Hebrides. With Mr. Fred Paton were Rev. Maurice and Mrs. Frater, new missionaries going out at the charge of the J. G. Paton Mission Fund to open up work amongst hitherto unreached cannibals on one of the northern islands of the New Hebrides group.

Mr. Robert Morton presided at the afternoon meeting, and Lord Kinnaird in the evening. Rev. F. B. Meyer testified his interest, and spoke in a few choice words of the heroism that still led to the lonely islands of the far-off Pacific the servants of Christ to live or die for the salvation of the darkest and most degraded of human kind. Mr. Meyer concluded by lovingly commending the brave trio to God on their difficult and dangerous mission.

The missionaries themselves then addressed the meeting, and received a hearty send-off.

Many friends who saw the beginning of the J. G. Paton Mission Fund in The Christian over ten years ago will rejoice that it has steadily developed, and has been able to accomplish such great things for God as the sending forth and support of three accomplished European missionaries—one of whom is the Rev. Frank Paton, Dr. Paton's third son—and of four European assistant missionaries, and some ninety native teachers. The Fund has committed itself also to the engagement of a fourth missionary. Thus the heart of the venerable missionary whose name it bears is cheered by seeing the accomplishment of his one great purpose of placing a missionary on every island and district of the New Hebrides that still remains in heathen darkness. The hon. Organizing Secretary of the Fund is Mr. A. K. Langridge, Aniwa, Southend-on-Sea.

African Institute, Colwyn Bay.

THE annual Conference of the above Institute was held at the Lecture Hall, on the 8th inst., under the presidency of Rev. Benjamin Evans, of Rhuddlan.

In the course of the sitting, the Director, Rev. W. Hughes, F.R.G.S., read the annual report, which stated that during the year four of the students had left for their respective homes, where they intend to labour as missionaries, and to support themselves by means of the various crafts taught them in England. Two new students were admitted. The expenditure had been heavier than during the previous year, because of the expansion of the work. The committee had been able to secure the services of Rev. A. J. Parry, D.D., of Rhyl, as Theological tutor, who will enter upon his duties in the forthcoming session. Cheering accounts of the success of the work had come to hand from the Cameroons, Yorubaland, Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, Liberia, the Colony of the Gambia, Ambas Bay, and the Congo. A characteristic feature of these reports was that many of them were accompanied with contributions—an unassailable proof of the natives' belief in this scheme as the best and surest means for the civilization and Christianization of the "Dark Continent." An old student of the Institute, Mr. Alfred Dibunda, has established a large school in the Cameroons, where he has at present eighty young men in training for the ministry. Another old student has started a successful printing establishment at Freetown, and is largely patronized. The plant was provided by friends in this country. Mr. Lawson also is a co-worker with his uncle, Rev. M. T. G. Lawson, in the Christian work carried on by him so nobly in Freetown and district. In conclusion, the Director regretted that owing to the dearth of funds, caused chiefly by the war, the committee was unable to grant any of the many applications made for admission to the Institute at the forthcoming session.

Evangelizing French Deaf-Mutes.

OF the many seceding Romish clergymen whom the well-known work among French priests has succoured and enlightened, one has recently marked out for himself a new and rare path of Christian service. Having, ere he became a priest, been a teacher of deaf-mute children, Mons. Vigier is well versed in the divers methods for imparting knowledge to the deaf and dumb; he, therefore, resolved that as soon as his studies for the calling of an evangelist at Neuchâtel Academy should be completed, he would turn his former skill to account by preaching the Gospel of Christ, and teaching his ways to the deaf and dumb men and women of Paris. Upon leaving college he had offered to him the headmastership of the Protestant deaf-mute school at St. Hippolyte du Fort, with a comfortable salary; but he preferred rather to reach men and women who had passed though schools where they had got no ray of the light that beamed on the children of St. Hippolyte.

In a recent number of the Prêtre Converti, he wrote:—"There are about 35,000 deaf-mutes in France; and the department of the Seine alone can count up at least 3,500. In a few institutions not under State control, the young deaf-mutes receive indeed a certain tincture of religious instruction; but it is not long in getting worn-out, partly by such contact as they have with our very irreligious society, but still more by their habitual isolation. Rare indeed are the ministers of religion who can understand them, and who can, therefore, nurture into growth what was sown. Shall I add that in these establishments, except St. Hippolyte du Fort, it is chiefly the tares that are sown, not the pure wheat of true faith in the Saviour Christ?

In the other schools for the deaf and dumb, religious instruction is absolutely forbidden. Thus, having received before going to school, and receiving not one during the whole period of instruction (between six and fourteen years of age), they are doomed to remain for the whole of their life in well-nigh complete ignorance of God, of the Gospel of salvation, and of eternal life.

"In the face of such a state of things . I believe that, knowing, as I did, the language of the deaf-mutes and possessing the truth myself, my duty was to come to the aid of these dear hapless brothers. Did not God, who led me to the Gospel . design that in my turn I should invite to it those whom their infirmity most often deprives of every guide and stay? I believed so, I do believe so, firmly. . I believe this to be a work of God, and therefore, that it will succeed. . The soil that has to be sown is barren, hardened, rocky, because it has never been tilled before. I am confident that it will yield fruits in abundance.

"It is only two months since I left the Divinity College at Neuchâtel, whither the work among priests had sent me, and where I gained so much good; and . results already exceed my hopes. From sixty to eighty deaf-mutes regularly attend the meetings in the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, in spite of heat and distances, though the poverty of many debars them from even the comfort of the top of an omnibus, and in spite of the sectarian hatred of Pharisees, who think it quite natural that folk should be allowed to live and to die without anyone's concerning himself for their immortal souls, so long as they bring their dead bodies and so add figures to the church register, but who grow angry when one desires to enlighten these souls, to tell them that there is a Saviour and a Gospel, and that in Him and it are found the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Yes! the truth makes headway among the silent tribe: nearly 200 New Testaments have been distributed, and are being read. I have visited about 600 deaf-mutes, and all assure me of their sympathy and their gratitude.

"Our services are held as among the hearing and speaking, except as to the hymns, which are explained instead of being sung. On my private visits, I pray with them, after having read a passage out of their New Testaments. Already I have reaped some fruits as a precious encouragement.

"One man, after a parable had been explained, said to me: 'I have been all that you have just told us: I have wished to kill my wife; I have beaten her like mortar, and she has been forced to beg, so as not to starve, along with her children. I have wished to throw myself into the Seine in a fit of madness brought on by *absinthe; but I was very unhappy, and my poor wife still more so. Well, since you gave me that little book, I seem to be rising from the dead. Everything appears new—my household, life itself, and the people around. I am happy.

I WILL DRINK NO MORE.

'Yet I understand that I need to be helped by the good God. I count upon Him and upon my little book, when the old habit urges me; I read a verse or two and I gain courage; and then, too, ever since I have been praying, it seems to me that I have nothing left to fear.' While the husband was telling me his story, the wife was weeping with joy and kissing my hands. Of course I made them understand that it was to God they must render thanks.

"A deaf and dumb woman, again, said to me, 'Although I was trained by the Sisters of the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Bordeaux, I found happiness in nothing of all they told me. But now that I see that there are not all these intermediaries between God and me—that it is by faith in Jesus that I am saved, that I have God as a real Father and Friend, I am happy, I see my way more clearly, and I pray from my heart—a thing I could never do before.' I could cite many other facts attesting the working of God among these souls; but there is much to be done . and the labourers are indeed few."

We may add that the weekly service is held in a hall kindly lent by the McAll Mission, and that by latest reports the attendance has further grown. The enterprise has been receiving a temporary support from The Work Among French Priests, but the duties of that Society properly end when they have launched a convert upon his field of labour.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

A New Opening in Uganda.

IN a graphic letter to her parents, Miss Ruth Hurditch, daughter of the director of the Evangelistic Mission, who has gone to Central Africa under the auspices of the C.M.S., writes: "I have been chosen to go to Toro! No lady has yet gone to this wonderful land, and I am now to go with another young girl, Miss Pike, who came out here last August, and was with me in the hospital. The King of Toro, Kasagama, has been continually writing and begging for ladies, and the people have been praying for years and have already built houses and a school for them; so the reception we shall meet with will be beyond thought, they all say.

"We do not start for about a week or more, and then it is a fortnight's journey. Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Lloyd are to take us up and stay for a week or month starting medical work, and the Bishop hopes I will keep up as much of this as possible. Everybody here is positively taken back at the Bishop's decision, as he had said an elderly lady must go up with Miss Pike to open up this important station and superintend and institute the women's work there. It certainly is an exceedingly responsible work.

"Uganda is the most beautiful country imaginable. Pray long and very strongly for me. 'The promises are unto you and your children.' It is glorious to be the advance column to claim this land for Christ."

Soldiers at the Front.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE Bloemfontein paper, entitled The Friend, conducted for a time by war correspondents, contained the following reference:—"A prominent feature of camp life at Bloemfontein is the erection by the Soldiers' Christian Association of large marquees for the use of our troops, for the purpose of writing, reading, and recreation. Within a week of the British occupation, the first of these was pitched within the Highland Brigade's lines, and since then another has been established in the 1st Division. Field-Marshal Lord Roberts has at all times taken an active personal interest in the work of the association, and has already inspected the marquees, and expressed his cordial approval of the work which is being done in them. It may be of interest to mention that within three days of the erection of the first tent 5,000 sheets of note-paper and envelopes had been supplied (gratis) for the use of letter writers. The marquees are brilliantly lighted after dark, and short bright religious services are held there. The informal character of these gatherings, and the hearty singing of well-known old hymns and choruses attract a nightly crowd of men, with which the accommodation provided is quite inadequate to cope.

SCOTTISH SCRIPTURE READERS.

Among the reports of evangelistic and other undertakings by workers in connection with the Scottish Scripture Readers is an account of meetings at Boshoff:—

The commandant has set apart for our use the "Dopper Church." We have turned it into a Soldiers' Home, and we have the vestry for our sleeping quarters. I am sure the old church was never put to a better use. It is used by the men in the daytime for resting, reading, and writing, and in the evening we have rousing Gospel meetings. It would make your heart glad to hear the hearty singing of the soldiers. We make ourselves heard all over the camp. The very first night we opened the place was full, and all through the efforts of the Christian soldiers themselves; they blazed the meeting abroad. We had a prayer meeting at noon to-day. . . . Just a line to say that the old church was crowded out last night, men sitting all round our feet on the floor. Capt. T—— spoke with quiet power from Ex. xii. and 1 Cor. v. 7, 8. Lord Methuen called in this morning and inspected our quarters. He shook hands most warmly, and said he was glad to see us here. Praise God!

Palestine in London.

STRANGE as it may seem, it is quite true that three out of four average people would learn more of Palestine and of Bible history from attending a course of the lectures now being given by Rev. James Neil than by visiting for months the Holy Land themselves. The illustrative pictures are beautiful works of art, and the explanations of Eastern life and the expositions of Scriptural incidents, customs, and allusions make the sacred story luminous. A workingman said, "You have made the Bible a new book for me;" and an intelligent woman, after hearing three lectures and seeing the Exhibition, gave this graphic testimony, "You have made the Bible live." The remaining lectures of the present series are as under:—At the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W. (close to Victoria Station): June 19, 20, and 21, "Bedaween; or Tent Life." June 26, 27, and 28, "More about Farming." July 3, 4, and 5, "Palestine Trades." Part II. July 10, 11, and 12, "Ishmael's Lot; or the Arab el Arab." July 17, 18, and 19, "Curiosities of Syrian Life." July 24, 25, and 26, "More about Fellahheen Life." Admission free (without tickets). There are a few reserved seats at 1s. The hours of gathering may be learned from our Forthcoming Meetings column.

A Chase for a Scholar.*

ONE Sunday afternoon Mr. Moody met a little girl, of whom he inquired where she attended Sunday school. As she was not a regular attendant anywhere, Moody asked to be introduced to her mother, to secure permission for the family to attend his school. The child had reasons for not wanting to have Mr. Moody find her home, as she knew who he was. Asking him to wait on the corner for her till she had done the errand on which she had been sent, she disappeared, not to return.

For three hours he waited on the street corner for the little truant before he gave her up at last. Some days later he saw the girl again, and the recognition was mutual. Without waiting to explain why she had deserted him on the former occasion, the child turned and fled. At this time the city's system of drainage had just been changed, necessitating the elevation by several feet of the streets in a large portion of the city. In some cases the property owners had not only elevated their houses, but had built new sidewalks on a level with the raised street. In this transition period from low to high grade, these innovations had been frequent but irregular, and the connections between old sidewalk levels and new ones were made by a few raised steps. Up and down these sidewalks the girl ran, while close behind her followed the determined Sunday-school teacher. Finally she darted into a saloon, and through the bar-room into a little room, and finally upstairs, where he found her hiding under a bed. Having persuaded the child to come out, he was duly introduced to the mother, explained the purpose of his call, and the children were secured for the North Market Hall.

The sad story of the family was afterwards confided to Mr. Moody, when he learned that the mother was a widow, who had only recently lost her husband. He had come to Chicago to make his fortune, and, having failed to secure employment at his trade as a carpenter, had finally opened a saloon. Soon after he had died, leaving this saloon as the only means of support to his widow and children, who had never become reconciled to the business, and felt ashamed of this way of gaining a livelihood. This explained the child's unwillingness to have Mr. Moody know where she lived. In time the widow and her children were led into the way of a better life; the saloon was closed, and years afterwards Mr. Moody met, in a western city, the little girl who had given him that wild chase—a woman now, the wife of an earnest Christian, and herself devoted to church work.

B.-P.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

EVERYONE has been talking of the popular hero, Major-General Baden-Powell, who for seven months defended Mafeking against the Boers. When relief came, the two initials of his name were to be seen everywhere; and as I rode through London streets and saw them, I jotted down what they reminded me of:—

Beloved Prince.—Baden-Powell was not a prince; but Jesus is, even the One of whom God said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 17).

Bringing Pardon.—What a blessed B.P. is this; All have sin; but all have not pardon. Have you? "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins" (1 John i. 9).

In wonder lost, with trembling joy,
We take the pardon of our God,
Pardon for crimes of deepest dye,
A pardon seal'd with Jesus' blood.

Bringing Peace.—This also Jesus does. "Peace through the blood of his cross" (Col. i. 20). "Peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. v. 1). "Peace brought by the Prince of Peace" (Isa. ix. 6).

Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin?
The blood of Jesus whispers peace within.

Bringing Power.—This is what we want, power that will deliver us and drive back the foes that keep us in our Mafeking; power to fight for Jesus and power to win the victory. What a grand promise is Luke x. 19.

Bringing to Paradise.—For his sin, man was driven out of Paradise; but all who are born again, Jesus will again bring in. Do you remember the dying thief who prayed—"Lord, remember me when Thou comest into thy kingdom"? And Jesus said unto him, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 42, 43).

Blessed People.— Who are they? God's people. Christian fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters; all who believe in Jesus and are saved. Blessed by God, who alone can bless. Blessed is but another word for happy, and God's people are truly happy.

Bought and Paid for.—Here is another B.P. In Bible language, they are redeemed, not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ.

My Lord is in the Homeland,
With angels bright and fair;
There's no sin in the Homeland,
And no temptation there.
The music of the Homeland
Is ringing in my ears,
And when I think of the Homeland,
My eyes gush out with tears.

For those I love in the Homeland
Are calling me away,
To the rest and peace of the Homeland,
And the life beyond decay.
For there's no death in the Homeland,
There's no sorrow above;
Christ bring us all to the Homeland
Of his eternal love.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 17.

ABIDING IN CHRIST (John xv. 1-10).

A VINE may have been fluttering in the night wind as our Lord passed from the upper room into the moonlit street, suggesting this matchless parable. If my readers have never done so, let them by all means read Ugo Bassi's sermon on it in Mrs. Hamilton King's "The Disciples"—one of the most exquisite poems in the language. There the story of the vine is told in detail—how it suffers, bleeding beneath the pruning-knife; how it yields its best, to be ruthlessly despoiled; how, stripped and trodden under foot, it lies forgotten whilst the land is rejoicing in its produce; how lonely and sad it is through the long, sad winter, till once more in the spring it begins again to yield its strength. Such, also, is the history of Christ and his Church—always bearing fruit for the world, at the cost of suffering and life-blood.

It is good to know that the power to produce the fruit of a holy life is in Jesus for us all. He is the vine. It is his part to secure for his people all the grace they need for a holy life, and to communicate it to them, forcing it up into their hearts, as the vine-root forces the sap into the branches. Do you pity the bough, because it has to produce so great a weight of fruit in the golden autumn. Try it, and it will laugh merrily back, and say, "You greatly mistake, I have no anxiety. All I have to do is to keep the doorway open between the trunk and myself, for then, irresistibly and silently, the fruit-making sap will pass upwards and form into the pendant bunches of grapes."

I once asked a Christian man to tell me which was the more important end of a bough, that next to the trunk, or that furthest away from it. And he answered, "Certainly, that which bears the fruit." But I replied, "No, that is the more important surely which connects with the main arteries through which the sap is being poured." In other words, our prime concern should be, not with our fruit-bearing, but with the union of our hearts with the risen and glorified Lord.

There are branches in the professing church which do not bear fruit, and they are denied the opportunity of doing so. I do not think that we can found a doctrine on a parable, or that this word in the parable has any bearing on the doctrine of falling away from Christ. We are dealing here not with our personal salvation, but with our usefulness; and the great lesson is that they who cease to abide in Jesus cease to be useful. In the solemn words of the Apostle (1 Cor. ix.), they are "rejected."

There are branches in the church which are already fruit-bearing. These are pruned or purged—"cleansed"—a result achieved by the Word. If when we read our Bibles we would allow ourselves to be searched and purified by their admonitions and warnings, we should be saved many bitter experiences. The golden pruning-knife of the Word is infinitely preferable to the iron one of pain.

The one object in our entire education and discipline is fruit, much fruit, more fruit. The world is thirsty and weary, there is no way of getting at the blessed resources of the Vine save through the branches, hence the care expended on them by the Great Husbandman.

Abide in Christ by constantly referring to Him. In every emergency lift your heart to Him, and ask Him to work in you and through you the appropriate fruit. In time it will become habitual to you to receive from Him the word to speak, the virtue to manifest.

Abide in Christ by meditation on his words; as they feed and nourish the soul, the very life-blood and flesh of the Son of Man will be imparted.

Abide in Christ specially in prayer. When we pray we open our hearts to receive Him, and when He is within He prompts our prayers.

Abide in the current of Christ's love. Whenever anything threatens to occur which would break its blessed peace, start back from it, keep in the mid-stream; remember you are in it unless by permitted sin, or wrong, or sloth you leave it. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Many Endeavourers are now to be found in China. A Foochow correspondent writes:—"Societies have been formed in various parts of the empire, and many of them are in a flourishing condition. To Foochow belongs the honour of inaugurating the movement amongst our Chinese converts, and this is one reason why we have been favoured with a visit from Rev. F. E. Clark, the esteemed founder of the Society, accompanied by his wife. Most of the meetings were held in the three churches belonging to the American missionaries, and it was a stirring sight to see 1,500 of our Chinese brothers and sisters gathered together with the one desire of being taught how to work and live in accordance with Christ's teaching. For the missionaries themselves meetings were also held. Mrs. Clark addressed large gatherings of women and girls on several occasions."

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Thy kingdom come" (Matt. vi. 10).

INTRODUCTION.

WE will study the Review by finding out how each lesson for the past quarter will show us what Jesus would have us do, and how He would have us live.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The good soldier of Jesus Christ fights the fight of faith under God's banner. He sees inscribed on that banner how he can bear his little part in the "coming of the kingdom" (Golden Text) by living a true, earnest life to the glory of God.

FIRST LESSON: HAPPINESS.

The nine beatitudes all beginning with "Blessed," mean, "Truly happy is and shall be." We learnt in this lesson that Jesus Christ pointed out how the nine different subjects were all needed, and then He closes them with, "Rejoice, for great is your reward."

SECOND LESSON: SELF-DENIAL.

We had sketched for us in this lesson "the two ways," and we learnt that it will require self-denial to choose the narrow way. We also learnt that "to do unto others as we would they should do unto us" will often mean self-denial.

THIRD LESSON: BELIEF.

We cannot get on without this great but simple word. It runs right through the Bible, and Christ's words to the ruler of the synagogue still hold good to-day for us: "Be not afraid, only believe."

FOURTH LESSON: GREAT FAITH.

This follows on, for when we believe we must have faith, but we all need great faith. There are many around us with no faith, there are others with only a very little faith. But if we exercise that little it will increase as did the widow's oil.

FIFTH LESSON: NO DOUBT.

Did John the Baptist doubt? He did not doubt Jesus; but he had expected that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear; and he wisely sent to ask Jesus for information. We must get it firmly fixed in our minds that, Jesus is the Christ, the true Messiah, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, the coming King, and banish all doubt about it.

SIXTH LESSON: LOWLINESS.

This text, Matt. xi. 28, has been a comfort to thousands, and the whole portion for the day pointed to the truth, that if we come to the lowly Saviour as He invites us to do, we, too, must learn of Him, and He says: "I am meek and lowly in heart."

SEVENTH LESSON: THE BEST FOR JESUS.

From the woman who brought her best to Jesus, and received his full forgiveness, we learnt that it is not "half-heartedness" He wants, but our "whole" heart, with all its love. Shall we not give it to Him? He is worthy of it.

EIGHTH LESSON: RECEIVING THE GOOD SEED.

Jesus wants good ground, to plant in it the good seed. The good ground was not hard, it had no rocks below the surface, it did not grow thorns, but it let the seed go right into it. So may our hearts be.

NINTH LESSON: TELLING OTHERS.

Knowing good news, we are bound to tell others. Let us work and pray so that we may help to send the Gospel "to every creature." Let us be glad that people in other lands should hear about Christ.

TENTH LESSON: WITNESS BEARING.

Jesus sent his trusted disciples to the people around for the purpose of bearing witness to Him; they had been with Him and learnt of Him, so they could tell what they really knew. God bids all of us to bear witness and never be ashamed of Jesus.

ELEVENTH LESSON: CHOOSING THE RIGHT.

This sad story of cruelty warned us that if we will not take heed to the good things God teaches us in his Word, and choose to be on the Lord's side, we too may fall into great sin, and find too late that "the wages of sin is death."

TWELFTH LESSON: FEEDING ON HEAVENLY FOOD.

As our bodies need daily food, so do our souls need daily food. As bread is the chief item at our daily meals, so the Living Bread must be the daily food for each soul. Let us remember that bread sustains, satisfies, and strengthens the body. The same exactly coincides for the soul with the Living Bread.

Young Abstainers' Union.—The annual report of this Union records many encouraging facts relating to its continual development and usefulness. Thirteen new branches have been formed—three in London, seven in other parts of England, two in Scotland, and one in Ireland. The membership has increased by 700. The children's cots associated with the Union have been a boon to sick children. Throughout the year the Union has been in active co-operation with other temperance organizations, and efforts have been made to assist the Sunday Closing movement and the "Children's Bill." The activity of the various branches has been marked by many encouraging results in the promotion of the principles of temperance among the young. The central secretary is Miss Hooker, 18, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Scottish General Assemblies.

(Concluded.)

THE Church of Scotland Temperance Report showed that the congregational associations number 632 (an increase of forty-two within the year), with 2,528 workers; and that 16,432 meetings had been held. At the same time Dr. Paton (St. Paul's, Glasgow) pointed out that, after a quarter of a century of "commending, recommending, and strongly recommending" the organization of such work in every parish, in less than one-third of the congregations has anything been done. Three temperance evangelists had been active in different parts of the country, addressing 106 meetings and conducting thirty-three missions.

On the motion of Dr. Theodore Marshall, a firm stand was made in regard to the use by Presbyterian chaplains and soldiers of garrison churches in India. Where buildings have been entirely erected at the public expense, it is intended to insist that the chaplains of Scottish regiments shall be permitted to use them for public worship, a right at present disputed by the Anglican clergy.

Much satisfaction was expressed when Dr. Alison was able to make the announcement that Dr. Theodore Marshall had accepted the convenership of the Home Mission Committee in succession to Dr. Donald Macleod.

ESSENTIALS TO PROGRESS.

The Moderator delivered his closing address on Monday evening, June 4. Standing on the threshold of another century, he said it was impossible to refrain from looking backward to gather up the teachings of things, and forward to summon hope and trust and courage for those to come. Turning to the subject of sacerdotalism, he expressed the opinion that some of the younger ministers ought to exercise greater caution and discretion in the use of a style of ecclesiastical phraseology, and in the adoption of practices, and even mannerisms, in which a certain flavour of mediævalism may be detected—things harmless perhaps in themselves, but unfamiliar to the people, and calculated to give needless offence. "I am convinced that Scotland is as resolutely opposed to all sacerdotal pretensions as it ever was; though I trust there is a growing apprehension of the divine function of the Christian, the Christian sacraments, and the Christian ministry."

In closing, Dr. Macleod named three conditions as essential to the progress and stability of the Church. (1) A living church must be eager "to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." (2) It must ever be ready to adapt its methods to varying needs and circumstances as they arise. As instances he pointed to the phenomenal growth of towns and cities in recent years; and to the fact that in mining and manufacturing districts, where a few years ago there was a rural population of 1,500 or 2,000, such numbers of people were now to be found as 15,000, 20,000, and even 30,000. (3) The church must be inspired by the spirit of a genuine missionary enthusiasm. "Is it not a lamentable fact that only a small minority of our congregations can be said to have been touched, as yet even remotely, by the enthusiasm of missionary faith and activity which is so rapidly asserting its power in other parts of Christendom? God help us during what remains of our brief and passing day of life to do something and, far more than in the past, to hasten the final triumph which is surely coming—coming with the dawn of the new age which is already trembling on the near horizon."

THE FREE ASSEMBLY.

One of the surprises of the Free Assembly came when the report of the committee on the relations of Church and State had been presented. Rev. David M. Ross (Glasgow) moved that "the interests of the Free Church, and especially at the present juncture, do not call for the reappointment of the committee." The seconder (Rev. W. M. Macgregor, Edinburgh) counselled the members to clear their minds of local and personal considerations, to lift them above sectarian wrangles, above the mere traditions of policy, and to take a step that might lead in the direction of more harmonious co-operation with the Established Church in coming days. He was assured that there were many whose interest in the present church union was mainly that it would lead to a larger and richer union, and his great motive in supporting the proposal was his belief that some interruption to the work of that committee might be received as of the nature of a flag of truce held out to the Established Church. The amendment was lost in the division, but it was felt that good had been done by the discussion of the subject.

WORK AMONG THE YOUNG.

The report on the youth of the Church—presented by Principal Salmond, Aberdeen,—brought out the fact that there is a decrease of 3,064 in the attendance at Sabbath schools, while Sabbath school and senior class teachers are down 384. The number attending "children's churches" shows a falling away of 1,760. Speaking later, Lord Provost Chisholm said he should like to see all the churches with a clearer perception of the strategic importance of the position occupied by the children in the great warfare in which the church is engaged, and pleaded that all services for outside children should have a distinct church connection. Mr. C. J. Guthrie, Q.C., expressed the opinion that future church unions would be much promoted if they could come into personal touch with their brethren of the Established Church by having combined meetings on such a great question, for instance, as the welfare of youth.

ARMY CHAPLAINS AT THE CAPE.

Colonel Cadell moved a deliverance, recognising the good work done by ministers and missionaries of the Church among the soldiers in South Africa, and acknowledged the unfailing courtesy of the War Office authorities in connection with the appointment of chaplains. The deliverance also expressed sympathy with the action the Established Church had taken in regard to the use by Presbyterian chaplains of Government churches in India.

THE FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH.

On Tuesday evening of last week, Dr. Ross Taylor brought the proceedings to a close by an address, in which he did much to explain away the difficulties of some who did not approve of the Union resolution. Referring in closing, to Dr. Howie's appalling statement, that in this small and highly privileged land of Scotland there were no fewer than 1,600,000 persons living in open indifference to Christian ordinances, Dr. Taylor said the fact was one to haunt their thoughts by day and their dreams by night. He was convinced that one main cause accounting for it is that the sense of responsibility for the furthering of Christ's Kingdom is but feebly felt by the great body of our Christian people. "The assembly of a number of persons together for joint worship does not constitute a church, but only a meeting; nor does the orderly arrangement of offices and appointment of office-bearers constitute a church, but only an organization. A church, to be worthy of the name, ought to be a body of Christians, all of them alive with impulse, thoughtfully considering their opportunities and duties, and engaging their energies and influence, whatever be their sphere, in the service of their one Lord. In all our congregations there are men and women, old and young, who might be a power for Christ, if through sympathy and companionship—as Christ Himself trained the Twelve—they were getting inspiration and guidance from those more experienced. The Church has largely proceeded on the idea that it is enough to invite and exhort to work for Christ, forgetting that delicate tact, and wisdom, and long-suffering patience are needed if the desired results are to be gained. Hence many who began to run well have been hopelessly hindered. Under the impulse of earnest feeling they made a start, but the work was strange to them; they soon, perhaps, met with disagreeable experiences or frustrated efforts, and in spite of an occasional spur from the pulpit, the work was either abandoned or else henceforth done in the spirit of routine and with a grudge.

Scottish Notes.

THE Scottish National Sabbath School Union is sparing no pains to grapple with the problem presented by the decrease during recent years in the number of boys and girls placing themselves under its influence. A special committee which has been looking closely into the matter, ascribes the decrease to three causes—(1) want of teachers, (2) increasing indifference of parents, and (3) lessening respect for the Lord's Day. Various suggestions have been made with a view to remedying the state of affairs: (1) A circular letter is to be addressed to teachers, calling attention to the declension, urging increased devotion to the work, and soliciting aid in securing additional helpers; (2) all the Unions affiliated are recommended to organize a general canvass for scholars, there being a confident assurance that teachers will be forthcoming in sufficient numbers when required; (3) conferences for the consideration of the whole matter are to be arranged with presbyteries and other church courts.

Last week General Booth spent Sabbath at Greenock, where full advantage was taken of his visit by the local corps of the Salvation Army as an opportunity for a special effort among the people of the town. Three gatherings were held in the Town Hall, each of them taxing the available accommodation to its utmost capacity. On Tuesday the General was at Govan, where Free St. Mary's Church (Rev. Dr. Howie) had been lent for two meetings. The building was crowded at the evening service.

Considerable interest gathered round the meeting last Wednesday in Free St. Andrew's Church, Edinburgh, of the Parents' National Educational Union. The Bishop of Dunkeld and St. Andrews (Dr. Wilkinson) spoke on "Helps and Hindrances to Parents in the Education of their Children," pressing home with great force the fact that it is from their parents that children ought to get their ideas of reverence, justice, truth, obedience, and righteousness; and warning his hearers to provoke not their children, lest they should be discouraged.

Irish Notes.

THE Primitive Church Methodist Society, in conjunction with the Church of Ireland, maintains in many counties of Ulster and Connaught a useful and much-needed evangelistic agency. The missionaries employed are viewed only as Protestant teachers, who preach the Gospel, conduct Bible classes, distribute religious literature, read and expound the Word of God, pray with the sick and dying, and prayerfully strive to get souls saved. The agents are gladly received, and many of the meetings are held in the hamlet school-house, farm-house, or cottage. It is desirable that the 3,000 soldiers in camp between Ballyshannon and Bundoran should be supplied with tracts treating on Sabbath desecration, horse-racing, &c. Tracts (and other help) may be sent to Rev. Joseph Atkinson, missionary and lay secretary, Mission House, Mall, Ballyshannon, co. Donegal.

Two important gatherings met in Dublin last week. These were the Christian Endeavour Convention and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. As to the former, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, was present, and preached the Convention sermon in the Metropolitan Hall to a very large attendance. As to the latter, Rev. J. H. Hamilton, of Donore Presbyterian Church, Dublin, was unanimously elected Moderator, and on taking the chair delivered a wise and able address. A deputation of non-Episcopal ministers presented an address of welcome.

The annual clerical meetings at Cork this year had been more interesting than usual, and extended over four days. The subjects discussed included "The Book of Psalms," "The Authority of the Church in matters of Controversy," "Prayers for the Dead," and "The Social Work of the Church."

Royalty and the Sailors.

ON Thursday afternoon, Sir Whittaker and Lady Ellis hospitably received at Buccleuch House, near Richmond, a number of friends, who met together for the purpose of considering the important work carried on in the Scandinavian Sailors' Home, in the West India Docks.

Her Majesty the Queen of Sweden had graciously promised to be present on the occasion, if possible; and had it not been for the difficulties of arranging a meeting in Whitsun week a much larger number of influential ladies and gentlemen would have been present. As it was, some very interesting addresses were given descriptive of the first beginnings and present working of the Sailors' Home.

Only a few weeks ago, on a memorable day, the King of Sweden and Norway came down to a luncheon party at the Home, where he inspected the different departments of the work, but also conversed with the sailors, and partook of their homely fare. The men were delighted, and proud of their King! So great were his Majesty's linguistic powers that they were able to hear him speak in six different languages; and his kindly manner and genial presence amongst them was, indeed, the delight of all. The Queen herself also has taken a special in this Home for Scandinavian sailors. She gave the first donation towards it, and graced this one and only function with her presence during her Majesty's short visit to England.

The Archbishop of Armagh opened the proceedings with prayer, and afterwards spoke a few kindly words of appreciation of her Majesty's beneficent kindness, and of his own interest in the scheme.

Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair, and spoke very warmly of his interest in the work carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Welin, and of the sailors' appreciation of the efforts made on their behalf, and of the hospitality shown them during their stay on our British shore. He quoted, as an instance of the good done for these men, that an average of £15,000 is annually sent home to the sailors' friends by those in charge, most of which probably is saved from the rapacious robberies of publicans and others who would freely fleece the sailor if they could get a chance of doing so, and if he had no safe refuge in which he might find protection from their wiles.

Mr. and Mrs. Welin both spoke of the work, Mrs. Welin describing in a very graphic manner her earliest introduction to the Swedes at Blackwall, when Miss Macpherson first asked her to speak to a rough gang of men who did not understand a word of English. This opened her eyes to the knowledge of their great need in a strange land, and she determined then and there to devote her time to working for the Scandinavian sailors.

Later on, she married and settled down in the Sailors' Home, which she and her husband have by their own energy helped to bring into the position it now holds, many hundreds of men being housed and entertained under its roof every month.

A handsome album was then presented to her Majesty by Mr. Welin, containing views of the Sailors' Home, as well as photographs of the committee and other friends interested in the work. This was graciously accepted by her Majesty with a few kind words expressive of her sympathy in their labours, and pleasure of hearing of the success experienced.

A very earnest appeal was made by Mr. Welin for £5,000, to be used in the extension of the building, of which sum £2,550 has already been promised, as rooms are now required for the officers as well as for the men; and it is important that a piece of ground adjoining should be utilized as a coffee room for the sailors, the Scandinavians being noted for sobriety and good conduct; they are grateful, simple men, always ready to avail themselves of such opportunities as are offered them for their good.

Her Majesty was interested in hearing of the remarkably strong and clear Christian teaching given by those who are conducting these efforts, and also of the good temperance work done amongst the men. Every night meetings are held for them, and the whole tone of the movement is one of faith in the living God, and prayerful trust in his Word.

We earnestly ask any who may read this slight sketch, to help on this great and good work. The director is Mr. Axel Welin, Scandinavian Home, West India Docks, E. The Trustees are Messrs. T. A. Denny, J. F. W. Deacon, S. Gurney Sheppard, E. M. Denny, James Carnegie, W. H. Seagram.

West London Mission.

DURING the last five-and-twenty years West London has become the centre of business, pleasure, and amusement for the whole world, and it has also become one of the great markets of social vice. Every night in the year a vast army of unfortunate women and girls walk the streets of West London, driven to that terrible life much more by weakness, misfortune, and untoward circumstances than by a vicious desire for evil. Two of our Sisters spend two or three nights a week in the streets, speaking to these poor girls, and letting them know that they have a friend at hand who is ready to help them.

I cannot describe the tragedies that have been unearthed, or the pathetic stories that have come to our knowledge. In this woeful slough of despond, we have found girls of all classes and from all parts of the country. Many of them were brought up in country towns and villages, where they attended Christian churches and even taught in Sunday schools. All sorts and conditions are there, and we have been able, God helping us, to befriend and rescue many. During last year we received into our Home sixty-one girls, and helped thirty-seven others in various ways. At the present moment we are in touch with at least 153 who have all been under our care and are now out in various situations — business, service, &c., earning their living respectably and doing well.

Some people say that it is hopeless work to try to save girls who have once gone wrong, but experience has taught us that this is not correct. It is true that there is often pitiable weakness to contend with, and long and enduring patience must be exercised; but in the great majority of cases we find that the words of Paul are fulfilled, "Love never faileth." We need help at this moment, because the appeals which come to us are far beyond the power of our funds to meet. We specially ask all those who sympathize to give us an opportunity of telling them something about our work. If any Christian minister or friend will get up a meeting in church, schoolroom, hall, or drawing-room, our Rescue Sisters will come down and tell their story.

Shipwrecked Mariners' Society.

THE responsibilities undertaken by this useful Society on behalf of mariners and fishermen in distress are many and varied. At the annual meeting at the Whitehall Rooms on May 22, Lord Chelmsford, speaking from the chair, pointed out that it is also a Mariners' Benevolent Society, and in this capacity it has about 1,000 agencies scattered over the United Kingdom. Nearly half of its relief is given to widows and orphans. Lord Chelmsford reminded his hearers, with a view to securing a wider measure of public support, that sorrow and poverty are felt no less acutely when the nation is at war than in times of peace.

Mr. G. E. Maude presented the report, which showed that during the past year 10,648 persons were relieved. It was pointed out that the Society's work embraces a far larger scope than its title would lead persons to believe. Several grants to special funds were made during the year, including one of £100 to that raised in March in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and another of £250 for relieving Cornish and Lowestoft fishermen, whose boats, &c., were lost near Newlyn.

After an address from Lord Kelvin, the Chairman presented the Emile Robin prizes for saving life. Admiral Adeane, who subsequently spoke, said that when a great disaster occurred, with much loss of life, the people become interested and give help, but it should be remembered that the work of relief was always going on, although all the instances might not obtain so wide a measure of publicity as in the case of some terrible wreck.

Holidays for Slum Children.

THE story of the Epping Forest Home for East London slum children, in connection with the Tower Hamlets Mission, has been well told by Mrs. Kerwin, who superintends the work.

Describing typical homes from which the children come, Mrs. Kerwin writes as follows:—"In a back alley, on one of the principal streets of Mile End, is a block of dreary-looking building, filled to overflowing with poor and struggling human beings. Up a dirty staircase, which smells more than stuffy, lie a family of father, mother, and nine children, crushed into two small rooms. The father is in consumption, and quite the mother a burden-bearer in very truth. Three of the children have already gone into the world to do what they can to earn bread (it is scarcely more) and to keep their miserable home together. There are two rooms between eleven people.

"Only a little way from the crowded home is another sadder still. The parents are both living; but the poor mother is quite an invalid, and suffering is her continual portion. The father, who is almost continually out of work, drinks dreadfully, caring nothing for the sufferings of his wife or the needs of his two children. He spends his days in wretched haunts, only coming home to sleep, abuse, and ill-use his already degraded family. He cares not how they live, nor if they starve, but leaves the whole burden of life on the weak mother and little girls. They must eat, if it is only bread, and the two girls slave from early morn till late at night making match-boxes for a mere pittance."

A holiday at Mrs. Kerwin's Forest Home often means far more than a pleasant visit to the country; it is frequently a child's first glimpse into a clean, wholesome and Christian life. Mrs. Kerwin is hoping to be able to secure more convenient premises for the work. Her address is "Inchcolm," Wallwood Road, Leytonstone, Essex.

Home of Industry.

WITH overflowing gratitude to our Heavenly Father, we record the safe arrival of our dear party of children at the Canadian Home. This feeling is deepened by the warm welcome accorded to them by the Canadian newspapers, as looking all "bright and decently attired youngsters; it did the onlookers good to see the joy in their faces, inspired by the kindly care of the good people who rescued them from their surroundings on the death of parents, and brought them to the land of plenty and hope."

Most of the older children are already asked for, and will be placed in good homes, where their welfare will be looked after by Mr. W. H. Merry, the local superintendent of the Canadian Homes, and his excellent staff of assistants.

It is to the credit of the Messrs. Merry that their institution has received the highest praise from the provincial inspector, Mr. Kelso.

We are also grateful to be in circumstances to receive twenty of either boys or girls who have become fatherless by the war. The offer includes training, outfit, ship and railway expenses. Canada's farmers have entered with both patience and enthusiasm for over thirty years in training from among the 7,000 who have graduated from our home training. Many a widow sends hearty thanks for her boy's start in life among such an industrious and prosperous people. Annie Macpherson.

London Tent Campaign.

THE work in the large tents encircling London in connection with 1900 London Tent Campaign seems to increase in power as the days go by. The Lord is manifesting his power to save in the various tents in a wonderful manner, and many are coming to the Saviour. At the Wimbledon Tent, opened last Sunday, the Weaver Brothers have had evident signs of a very blessed work. On the first Sabbath afternoon, after preaching, a young fellow came right on to the platform in a most pompous manner and took exception to Mr. Bewley Weaver's address, saying "I am a scientist." Mr. Weaver pointed out to him the source of his information, and he said, "I know more than that man; I have made a study of this thing." On the following Friday he was the first to yield to Christ.

A special feature of the work in some of the tents is the active part taken by local pastors and clergy in the work of the Campaign. At Harlesden, the Presbyterian and Baptist ministers might have been seen speaking and praying with anxious souls. At Stratford several ministers took part in the meetings. The closing days at the Edmonton Tent are showing signs of increased interest. Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke on Sunday last to perhaps the largest crowd seen in that tent. Quite a number came forward seeking the Saviour.

At the Ilford Tent a good work has been going on amongst the young people connected with Doctor Barnardo's Village Homes. Some 160 or more have been dealt with in the tent, and the work is being followed up in the Homes.

Mr. Leonard Weaver's Sunday morning meeting "for men only" at Stratford will be remembered by hundreds as long as they live; over 1,000 men of all classes and ages sat drinking in every word. When the invitation was given to those desiring to be saved to come forward, at least 200 left their seats; an invitation was then given for those deciding to give up drink to raise their hand, and about 400 hands went up. The addresses at Stratford have been listened to with rapt attention, the crowds sitting in silence, often heedless of time, everyone feeling the near presence of the Holy Spirit. At the close of the meetings numbers invariably come forward, and many surrender to Christ there and then. God is specially blessing the after-meetings, and many converts say they will bless the day when they went to the tent. Mr. William Grove's meetings at Stratford, as well as those at Clapham, conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis, were also blessed. At Wood Green, on Sunday last, many sought the Lord, notably a drunkard and his wife. It is impossible to describe the many cases. Still the work goes on. To God be praise for his great mercy. A. G.

Among Race Course Minstrels.

With the co-operation of two evangelist friends, Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted negro minstrel, visited Epsom during race week, preaching and singing the Gospel to the assembled crowds. The effect upon the many minstrels present was remarkable, as they heard a former associate proclaiming the Gospel. An old companion, constrained to listen, was quickly impressed, and with penitence he sought the Saviour. Among the booth-keepers, too, there was a spirit of inquiry and there were numerous expressions of a desire to lead a better life. One of the men promised to help Mr. Johnson to erect a tent on a future occasion. The carriages which lined the course were also visited, the occupants listening to the speaking and singing with marked attention. Some of them offered money, the refusal of which afforded opportunities for pointed words regarding salvation "without money and without price."

Gospel Work in South Wales.

We have just concluded, at Barry Dock, a series of evangelistic services conducted by Mr. George Back, of the Open-Air Mission. The nightly Gospel services in the hall were supplemented by services in the day time in the public highways and dock entrances. I should like to write more fully on this method of procedure, for we must admit that the larger number of our congregations are composed of religious people, and the lower strata of society are almost untouched; but by going into these slum streets we have the real non-attendants at places of worship. I should say that at one time some twelve nationalities were represented among the crowd of men at the docks. Whitmore Bay, the rendezvous of the Rhondda Valley, where colliers resort in large numbers, was also the scene of happy labours in the Gospel. These summer months we hope to do much under the "blue sky." At the closing service on Sunday evening several gave testimony of definite blessing received. Gerald R. Coultas.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Few evangelists have been privileged to preach the Gospel for a longer period, and in so many countries, as Mr. Charles Inglis; but perhaps nowhere has he been oftener than with Mr. Charrington in the East End of London. It is now nearly thirty years since Mr. Inglis first preached for the Tower Hamlets Mission, and during the whole of that time has, with but one exception, been a yearly visitor, taking a month's services on each occasion. He has just finished another fruitful mission in the Great Assembly Hall. It is worthy of record to state that during his visit several men, who were on their way to commit suicide with either a weapon or bottle of poison in their possession, when passing the Hall, were induced to step in, and the spirit of God, through the earnest preaching, led them to give themselves into Christ's care and keeping. The instruments with which they intended destroying their lives are now in the possession of the mission. It is a notable fact that more persons have this year been rescued by the services at the Great Assembly Hall, who had upon them the means for ending their lives when they took their seats in the Hall, than in any previous year.

Rev. John McNeill in Glasgow.

A fortnight's evangelistic mission is being conducted by Rev. John McNeill in the district of Springburn, Glasgow, the meetings for the first week being held in Sighthill Free Church (Rev. George Hanson), the mission opened well, and the attendances increased as the week passed, notwithstanding other attractions and distractions (the population of the district becoming almost delirious over the occupation of Pretoria). On Friday it was manifest that the audience was largely composed of Christians, the preponderance of men being as marked—not less than three-fourths—as when Mr. McNeill was in Govan; and the evangelist turned his attention largely to them. Speaking on Mark ii. 12, "We never saw it on this fashion"—he dealt with those who think that the former times were better than these, and called on them to open their eyes to what God is doing, as well as what He has done. Not a few were a little startled as he insisted that the grandest revivals are not past, but still to come. "Aye, the grandest preachers, and the grandest hearers too, are on in front. 'Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion; for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.' The shout has left us because the vision has become dim." Mr. McNeill prayed for a season of revival, in the midst of the careless and worldly crowds around; and at the close there was a precious season of intercession on behalf of individuals. A good work is being done. So far it is very largely among Christians rather than outsiders. But there is much promise of a movement among the careless in the coming days. The meetings during the current week are being held in the United Presbyterian Church (Rev. Alexander Gilchrist). Neighbouring ministers are lending valuable assistance.

The recent mission of Gipsy Smith at Worthing proved a blessing to many. The Worthing Theatre was full night after night, and many gladly passed into the inquiry rooms, especially the young, who gave clear evidence of their sincerity and earnestness. The Free Church Council will do much good in continuing this character of work. W. R.

Mr. Henry Thorne has just held a mission at Chalford, Glos. "The afternoon Bible readings," writes Mr. George Gillingham, "were very helpful to the Christians, while the addresses to the unconverted were solemn and searching, and we have reason to believe that some were led to decision as the result. Mr. Thorne's life story was the means of bringing the Gospel before a great many people."

A mission at St. Silas's English Episcopal Church, Glasgow, has been conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Vicar of Christ Church, North Brixton. The aim has been to reach every home in the district. The congregations were large, and special services were held for men.—Mr. M. M. Boyd, the Scottish Coast Missionary at Methil Docks, who conducted a fruitful mission among the fishermen at Anstruther last March, has gone to Balta Sound, Shetland, to conduct a mission amongst the fishermen.—At Walsham-le-Willows Mr. John Harris has conducted a tent mission. Numbers of people gathered night after night, and the friends believe that blessing has been given.

Requests for Prayer.

For much blessing on the tent mission being at present held near Convoy, co. Donegal.

For a blessing to rest upon the Ipswich monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, June 21. Speaker, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch.

Levermore.

Sergeant Pullinger's present address (incorrectly given in our last issue), is 58, Hugh Street, Pimlico, London, S.W.

After Many Days in China.

WRITING from the China Inland Mission Station at Huei-cheo, Wu-Hu, Mr. Edward C. Smith says:—

"We recently had a conference for church members and inquirers, which proved profitable to all. At one of the meetings an elderly man, quite a stranger to us, related that twenty years ago Mr. Duncan, one of the early workers of the C.I.M., gave him a copy of the New Testament, which he took home and carefully read. The result was that he destroyed his idols, being convinced of the folly of worshipping them. In their stead, he worshipped the Great Spirit of whom he had read in the Book, and has continued to do so up to the present. This was without any instruction, so far as we can gather, from any foreigner, but simply as the result of reading the New Testament, portions of which had been committed to memory.

"This incident should encourage us to 'sow beside all waters,' knowing that God's word 'shall not return unto Him void.' Our dear brother Duncan has for long years been in the glory land; he died without the knowledge that his gift had been made such a blessing; but it will be revealed to him when the covered things shall be disclosed, and the hidden shall be made known."

The Open Air Mission has set itself the task of raising £5,000 this year, in order that devoted and able evangelists may be sent throughout the country. The work of the Mission at races, fairs, fetes, encampments, hop-gardens, great seaside resorts, and in villages forms a thrilling chapter of present-day evangelistic effort. The secretary is Mr. F. Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

A Dorsetshire Mission.—For some five years a useful agency has existed at Bourne Valley, Dorset, known as the Railway Mission. The poor of the neighbourhood, as well as railway men, assemble to hear the Gospel at the Sunday services and week night meetings in large numbers, and there has been much evidence that the efforts put forth have not been in vain. At the present time there is a somewhat serious financial difficulty. Communications may be addressed to Miss Curtis, Poole Road, Bourne Valley, Dorset.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE space required by reports of the Y.M.C.A. Conference at Newcastle, the World's Temperance Congress, and the gatherings of the Primitive Methodists at Bristol, has necessitated holding over until our next issue accounts of a number of interesting events of the past week, including special efforts at Ascot Races, and meetings in connection with the St. Giles' Christian Mission, Friedenheim Home for the Dying, &c.

The importance of the "Day in the Country," and other associations of the kind, cannot be over-estimated when the conditions of life, even at its best, in our courts and slums, are borne in mind; and we are sure that our generous readers, who themselves are in the enjoyment of God's gifts of health and pure air, will not forget the pressing claims of those children who, as Dr. Treves has recently pointed out, are decimated by consumption in consequence of their surroundings.

The following letter from one of our readers is encouraging, and leads us to hope that friends will continue to bring the paper under the notice of those likely to be benefited by it:—

> I cannot write without saying how greatly I value The Christian, and what words of hope and comfort I always find in its pages. I had never heard of it until last year at the tent meeting at Peckham, when copies of it were given away. Its messages have been largely the means of helping me to decide finally for Christ, and to "unconditional surrender." I deeply regret that I have not known of it "these forty years" instead of letting nearly fifty years pass "without God in the world." Praying that the paper may be the means of blessing to thousands of others . . .

Recent correspondence in two or three religious journals reveals the fact that a number of very earnest workers are depressed on account of the slow progress of their work. One who claims to have "received a filling of the Holy Ghost at a convention" thinks "there must be something wrong, since the blessing I anticipated in my work as the result of my own blessing has not yet appeared."

Of course we must be most careful not to lapse into a self-satisfied complacency with whatever occurs. A holy discontent is one of the conditions of progress. On the other hand, we must remember that being filled with the Spirit does not guarantee that a man will carry all before him. St. Paul, filled with the Holy Ghost, had to quit one city in despair; and our Lord's hands were tied at Capernaum by the unbelief of the people. We need great discrimination in speaking of what is likely to follow a baptism of the Holy Spirit. It is so easy to work according to a false standard.

Nothing can permanently sustain a Christian worker in an arduous task save devotion to the person of Jesus Christ. It is without doubt a noble motive to seek the good of the Church, or the bettering of an individual soul; but the Church does not always appreciate what is done on her behalf, and individuals are frequently most disappointing. In presence of these checks, workers are often tempted to relax their efforts—it hardly seems worth while going on with the work. But if the work is done to and for Christ, whatever the disappointments may be, the soul can say with the ancient prophet, "Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength." Remember his word to Samuel, "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me."

The deep things of God are only comprehended by those who go deep. If it is impossible for a shallow-minded man to embrace the mysteries of the physical world, and in some measure to become their master and exponent; it is still more impossible for a shallow soul to understand the significance of the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven. The sense of the unreality of God, experienced by many men of our time, is due, not to obscurity in God so much as to dissipation in themselves.

The ignorance and partisanship displayed by certain daily newspapers in matters of religion are deplorable. The gravest subjects are referred to in the same piquant and off-hand style that would befit the report of a cricket match or a prize-fight. A London daily, having a great circulation, has a leading article on the crisis in China, in which the philosophy of the Boxers is described as "eminently human and natural;" and the present conflict is practically charged to the account of Christian missionaries in China, who, "missionaries of a young faith" (sic), seek to change the beliefs of a venerable people, &c. —an effort which the Chinese resent.

We do not deny that one great element of the present revolt in China is found in a fanatical resentment of Christian teaching; but what is the reason of this resentment? It is the old story, "men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." It may please our modern leader writers to glorify or to apologize for "the hoary and magnificent heathenism of the Chinese;" to represent the Boxer as "a patriot, a zealot, a mistaken martyr;" and to depict the Celestial as a "calm and satisfied" being who "has passed through all the social problems that are vexing us to-day, and has arrived at the philosophic conclusion that happiness, attained through labour and the faithful observance of duty, is the supreme good;" but behind this there is moral and social corruption of the worst kind, and it is this rottenness that is now exhaling its poisonous vapours. In common fairness, a newspaper which discusses the question at all should give the whole truth.

From the Primate we have come to expect wise and uncompromising speech on all matters connected with temperance reform. His speech in the House of Lords a few days ago, upon the subject of Grocers' Licences, provoked immense hostility; and he received numerous letters daring him to repeat the statement, and also demanding the authority for his facts. Undaunted, the Archbishop last week returned to his charge, and proved his statement by reading the following report of the Committee of the Associated Scottish Life Offices:—

> The rate of mortality in Ireland among unlicensed grocers was 16·8 per 1,000; among licensed grocers, 22 per 1,000. In Scotland, among unlicensed grocers it was 12 per 1,000; among licensed grocers, 17 per 1,000.

Figures of this kind, coming from such a source, do not lie.

The almost unprecedented course taken by the Liverpool County Council in resolving, after a striking debate, to affix their seal to a petition to Parliament in favour of the Bill to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to children under sixteen years of age, leads one to hope that other corporate bodies may take a similar course. The action taken is the more remarkable, as in that city, it is stated, the licensees, in compliance with a request of the Watch Committee, have not for some few years back supplied drink to children under thirteen years old, and that therefore the condition of things is not quite so bad there as elsewhere, a fact which strongly accentuates the action taken by the Council in supporting in so special a manner the proposed limitation.

A brave and much-needed address was delivered by the president of the Social Purity Alliance at its annual meeting last week. Said the speaker:—

> Thousands of young men and women have their lives spoiled and ruined every year for want of a little preliminary advice and wise training, which it would be easy for their parents and teachers to give them. One of the greatest difficulties which reformers have to encounter is the idea of the inevitableness of moral evil. The plea that immorality is inevitable is the most hopeless, and in a certain sense the most wicked, that I know. To say that any form of moral evil is permanently inevitable amounts to a practical denial of God, and is a calumny on Him. Many forms of moral evil give way before a sound public opinion, and in the formation of this public opinion women have a great deal to do. If young men known to lead a "fast" life were excluded by ladies from association with their families, many young men would quickly make up their minds what kind of life to adopt—the respectable or the disreputable. Unfortunately, at present, young men find that both these lives are compatible, because they are admitted to respectable households.

These are wise words. If women, especially, would act upon them, vicious men would feel the ostracism.

A correspondent of the Daily Mail has just interviewed one of London's oldest coroners upon the subject of the epidemic of suicide. The coroner made light of the suggestion that these suicides were due to reaction after the late rejoicings. He then added some words, which are worthy of careful study, coming as they do from one who has had exceptional opportunities of observing the shady side of life. He said:—

> I always look for suicides after the Derby. After that event you always find that a certain number of shop assistants have absconded and a number of other people have committed suicide. They belong to the class of people—much too numerous nowadays—who want to get money without working for it. They fail, and then they go and jump into the river, or something of that sort. You will always find some suicides after Derby week.

The Rev. Chancellor Lias is writing an interesting and valuable series of articles on the "Rationale of Ceremonial" in the Church Family Newspaper. The chief value of this contribution lies in the fact that Professor Lias makes history speak for itself. He does not give his own private opinions, but shows exactly the course of historical development and retrogression. The summary of his argument finds voice in the following words:

We have seen that the Ritualist picks out the very century—the thirteenth—in which the blunders in doctrine and practice of an age of ignorance had begun to be formulated, labels its practice "our Catholic heritage," and strives by every means in its power to force that practice upon a nation which began to grow great from the very moment it cast that system of doctrine and ritual aside.

These articles deserve reprinting in a handy form, and a very wide circulation.

Recent public references to "Children's Eucharists" perhaps make it desirable that there should be no doubt as to the objectionable tendency of those services, and a little publication*, which originated at Clewer—a manual for the use of children, and prepared "on the conviction that such devotions before the altar in early life will best serve to form devout communicants"—certainly helps one to form a just estimate of the innovation. The Cathechism contains the following:

When did Jesus give his Body and Blood?
The same night He was betrayed.
Can anyone else do it?
Yes, his apostles, bishops and priests.
What are the outward visible signs?
Bread and wine.
What are they really?
The body and blood of Jesus.

And in another part there comes the address:

Dear children, our Almighty Lord God Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary, is now here with us on our altar to be worshipped by us.

Blessed be Jesus Christ in the most holy sacrament of the altar.

Blessed be the great mother of God, Mary most holy.

And the compilation concludes:

Grant me, O Jesus, to send for thy priest when I come to die, that he may bring Thee to be my strength.

Comment would be superfluous.

Another paper from a pervert who has not found in Romanism that peace and freedom from doubt which he was led to believe were the peculiar property of that system, appears in the current number of the Contemporary Review. It should be very helpful to those weak-minded Protestants who are lingering on the brink, for it certainly cuts the ground from beneath a number of misapprehensions in regard to the mental atmosphere, and the proud and vain pretences of Rome. In an outspoken way it affords evidence in justification of the recent utterance of a priest in one of the Romanist journals: "So far as my own personal predilections are concerned, I would rather see no more converts join the Church," for it shows that the perverts in most cases find it impossible to refrain from drawing comparisons between their present and past surroundings, to the disadvantage of the former, just as Newman and others did. But it goes further; it throws a lurid light upon the system of "farming out" masses, the abuse of indulgences, the extravagances in connection with Mariolatry, and the scepticism of large numbers of priests.

A modern writer has with much force pointed out that the practice of praying for the intervention of the saints has rendered it necessary for Rome to declare, in a line with the dogma of infallibility, that certain canonised persons have not entered into purgatory. Of late years, however, there has been an increasing scarcity of such saints, and the Vatican has apparently become less difficult to satisfy in regard to the qualifications for the honour of canonization, the rule as to three indisputable miracles having been relaxed in cases in which only an "aequipollent beatification," whatever that may be, is sought for. But though Rome may be changing its standard of holiness, it still retains its cumbrous machinery; and the recent ceremony at St. Peters, when two new saints were added to the calendar, serves to show how far Rome is behind the mimimum intelligence of the present day—not to say the obvious teaching of Scripture.

The Bible Readings of Prof. W. W. White are now being given at King's Hall, Newton Street, Holborn, on Mondays, at 5.30 p.m.; at Conference Hall, Eccleston Square, Belgravia, on Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.; and at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, Regent Street, on Fridays, at 12 noon. They are of exceeding interest to Bible students, and to all desiring information as to methods of study. The subjects are very varied, embracing sketches of Scripture characters and doctrinal and prophetic exposition, with preludes on prayer and other practical topics. No report can give an adequate idea of them. The lectures must be heard to be appreciated. Many will regret, when they are over, that they did not give themselves the advantage of hearing them.

A wise person recently informed the members of the small sect with which he is associated that Bible study in this country is at a discount, and that the Higher Criticism has effectually undermined belief in the Bible as an infallible revelation. The daily papers often give undue prominence to poor utterances of this kind. It would be to the interest of the newspapers if they would publish a digest of the Bible studies given by men like Professor White. A larger audience would be glad to have the reports, while the general public would understand how fascinating Bible study is when properly undertaken.

Some of the most popular services in the country are those in which Bible study forms the chief attraction. It is absurd to say that people have lost interest in the Bible. No doubt many are heartily tired of the wearisome comments which are often made upon it; but the honest study of the Bible itself is an unfailing attraction. We know of more than one church in which formerly very poor Wednesday night congregations assembled to hear an address, but in which now large audiences assemble for Bible study. More definite study and less sermonizing is not only needful—it would be infinitely more popular.

Preaching recently on behalf of a fund for the relief of the clergy, Archdeacon Sinclair stated that of the 13,890 incumbents in England and Wales, more than half are in receipt of an income of less than £180, that a large number of them and their families have not enough to eat and drink to keep them in good health, that in extremely cold weather many have no fuel, and that hundreds of them and their families have to be clothed with second hand garments sent by a charitable society. One cannot, therefore, but sympathize strongly with the movement which has for its aim the raising of these incomes to an average of £200 a year, for surely "the labourer is worthy of his hire."

A statement in the report presented a few days ago as to the Children's Country Holiday Fund, that the subscriptions for the year had reached over £14,000, and that the parents of children selected had added a further amount of £8,101, brings to mind the advice given by one of the characters in the now famous East End story, No. 5, John Street, to "make a lot about the young uns. There's your chance."

*A Cruel Wrong to Childhood. IV.

THE PROTEST OF PHILANTHROPY.

Sir George Williams:—"If you wish your children to grow up healthy, good, and prosperous, avoid sending them to the public-house, which is the greatest enemy to health, character, and prosperity."

The Late Samuel Morley:—"Children are constantly sent to public-houses to fetch beer and spirits, and are thus exposed to great temptation, and are frequently the witnesses of scenes of a most degraded character, which must have a bad influence upon them. I earnestly appeal to parents and friends of the children to do all in their power to discourage this dangerous custom, and thus to remove one, at least, of the many pitfalls in the path of the youth of our beloved country."

Lord Kinnaird:—"I am delighted there is a prospect of a Bill being introduced to prevent the sale of drink to children. I should hope the vast majority of our fellow-countrymen would be prepared to let their M.P.'s know they wish the Bill passed."

Mr. J. Storrs Fry:—"I think that the sale of drink to children, and also the serving of drink to children, who may fetch it for others, should be prohibited. There is, as things are now, not only the danger of children acquiring a taste for drink, but also of their becoming familiar with the public-house, and thus more likely to frequent it in after years."

Lady Henry Somerset:—"It is impossible to study the report of the Royal Commission, whether as an advocate of total abstinence or not, without being convinced of the evil of the sale of drink to children. I am thankful, therefore, that the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union is doing its utmost to press legislation on the subject."

Mr. J. B. Braithwaite:—"It is my decided opinion that the sale to children of intoxicating drink is a practice attended with untold evil; and that it is an evil which urgently claims the earnest efforts of the Legislature, with a view to its total suppression."

Mr. Richard Cory, J.P.:—"I am pleased to learn that a Bill to prevent sale of drink to children is to be promptly brought forward, which I hope will be passed, seeing it would prevent children from daily temptation, which has been the ruin of many, young and old."

*A twenty-paged pamphlet, entitled "The Sale of Intoxicating Drinks to Children," dealing fully with the subject, can be purchased at 1d. each, or 6s. a hundred. Orders should be sent to the Trade Manager, 60, Old Bailey, London, E.C.

Plays or Principles?

IT cannot be that God, who has implanted within us a love of beauty, and desire for happiness and satisfaction, can have done so for no other reason than to disappoint such longings! Avaunt the insinuation!

The inspired Apostle wrote: "I have no greater joy than to know that my children walk in the truth." His exultation was in some faint degree a reflection of the great Father's loving heart, which cannot be satisfied with anything less than his children's perfect happiness.

But the sources from which people seem to expect that desideratum, are frequently not more likely to be productive of it than is a fig-tree of thorns! It is not in the nature of things that are material to yield that which is spiritual, and as God has formed us for Himself, nothing less than God can satisfy the longing which He has implanted.

But apart from this, and the considerations of religion, these sources demand some investigation, some scrutiny, at the hands even of persons, who, while putting in no claim to be "religious," yet profess to be "high-minded," lovers of purity, admirers of all that is lofty and elevating, and devotees of that culture about which we hear so many boastings.

Surely they may pay too dear a price for the will'-o'-the-wisp which they call pleasure? Do they stop to inquire even superficially whether the modern drama, for instance, is likely to conduce to

PURITY AND HIGHMINDEDNESS?

Do the plots commend themselves to the thoughtful man or woman as likely to add to his or her culture? Based as so many of them are upon themes which find their parallel in a Divorce Court, it would scarcely seem that this is possible, and yet theatres are becoming so indispensable that to-day in England few provincial towns of any importance are without them.

But ought professing Christians to help, by their support and patronage, to make these places successful? God forbid that we should forget the injunctions of Matt. vii. It is not, indeed, becoming that any should judge his brother. But it is not in the spirit of offensive criticism, but in that of godly jealousy that we raise this question, and for the sake of the young in our Churches, who naturally look to their elders for a model of conduct on which they may base their own.

The name of God will be invoked by thousands upon thousands of devout worshippers on the coming Sabbath. Many of these claim to be amongst those to whom God has given what we may call special wisdom! They understand, to some extent, things which are spiritually discerned; an insight is theirs into matters which touch another sphere. What does the Apostle James set forth as one of the qualities of this Divine gift? That "it is first pure"!

We have heard it suggested that "if Christians lent the weight of their influence, it would have the effect of reforming the stage!" and that "the way to improve the world is not to keep aloof from it!" "But," says the proverb, "you cannot touch pitch and be undefiled."

A lady known to the writer who had been challenged as to her changed opinions on the subject of dancing, tried to defend her position by saying that it gave her a good opportunity of talking with men of the world, who kept outside the Christian churches. She "improved the occasion" by exhortations! What an enigma that décolleté woman would be to such men! (We have not yet heard of any encouraging results accruing from the said exhortations.)

It is probable that more professors of religion are attending the theatre to-day than in any previous period of its history; and yet, not content with countenancing the specific prohibition of Deut. xxii. 5 ("The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man"), nor exhibiting any revulsion of feeling at the shameful ballet, they will pay from half-crowns to pounds to get a comfortable seat at "The Sign of the Cross," or at a still more up-to-date performance which a daily paper designated as a "mixture of fine scenery and irreverence." Is this calculated to add to the Christian's pleasures?

It would be well to analyse the principles which underlie our conduct, for if behind the Sabbath-keeping, for instance, and the performance of the numerous duties and obligations daily devolving upon us, we find that the law of God is the incentive of our conduct, the basis of our actions, we should pause before yielding one iota to the specious arguments in favour of "breadth of view" now so frequently advanced! Principle must never be sacrificed.

God has food for our soul's nourishment which will satisfy us! If we drink deeply of the "rivers of His pleasure" we shall never again want to turn to "beggarly elements," nor to become possessed of broken cisterns.

Practical Interviews.

A SOURCE of very great annoyance to Mr. Moody in his pioneer Sunday school work at this time was the frequent disturbances which came from the lower class of the Roman Catholic element. Many of the boys would try to interfere with the meetings—broken windows and such disturbances being not the least troublesome expression of their disapproval. At last he felt that extreme measures must be taken, and he called on Bishop Duggan, who was prelate of the diocese. It was not an easy matter to gain access to so high a church dignitary, and a maid who answered his call at the door was not ready to promise him the audience he requested. Bishop Duggan, he was told, was busy and could not be seen, but young Moody had taken the precaution to step over the threshold and was not so easily thwarted. "Well, never mind," he said, "I will remain until he is at leisure," and without waiting for further invitation quietly passed into the hallway.

The maid was not at all sure that the bishop would care to be interviewed by the self-constituted missionary, but it was useless to attempt to dissuade him. He had come to see the bishop, and would wait if necessary for the remainder of the day or until the bishop could find it convenient to give him a hearing. When at length the bishop appeared in the hall, the young man very briefly related his mission, and said that he was engaged in a work for children in a part of the city that was being neglected by everybody else. It was therefore a pity, he said, that he should not be allowed to continue the work unmolested, and he requested the bishop to give orders to the parish priests to prevent all future interferences.

Bishop Duggan refused to believe that any of his people were to blame for the disturbances, to which Moody answered that his only reason for believing that the boys were Roman Catholics was their own statement to that effect. Bishop Duggan then replied that they represented the worst element in the church and that he had no control over them.

"Your zeal and devotion are most commendable on behalf of these people, however," he added, "and all you need to make you a great power for good is to come within the fold of the only true church."

"But," replied the young missionary, "whatever advantage that would give me among your people would be offset by the fact that I could no longer work among the Protestants."

"Why, certainly you could still work among the Protestants," was the reply.

"But surely you would not let me pray with a Protestant if I became a Roman Catholic?"

"Yes," replied the bishop, "you could pray with Protestants as much as ever."

"Well, I didn't know that," said the young man. "Would you, Bishop, pray with a Protestant?"

"Yes," said Bishop Duggan, "I would."

"Well, then," replied Mr. Moody, "I wish you would pray for me now, that I may be led aright in this matter;" and forthwith knelt where they had been standing in the hall. The Bishop and Mr. Moody both prayed.

But his efforts were not always attended with such immediate success. A man does not gain the strength to conquer others in a series of rapid victories alone, and often the result of his most earnest work was apparently little or nothing.

On his way home from meeting one night Mr. Moody saw a man leaning against a lamp-post. Stepping up to him, and placing his hands on his shoulders, he said:

"Are you a Christian?"

The man flew into a rage, doubled up his fists, and it seemed for a moment as if the missionary might be pitched into the gutter.

"I'm very sorry if I have offended you," said Mr. Moody.

"Mind your own business!" roared the man.

"That is my business!" the other replied quietly, and went on his way.

About three months later, on a bitter cold morning at daybreak, someone knocked at Mr. Moody's door.

"Who's there?" he asked.

A strange voice answered, and he said, "What do you want?"

"I want to become a Christian," was the reply.

Mr. Moody opened the door, and, to his astonishment, there was the man who had cursed him for talking to him as he leaned against the lamp-post.

"I'm very sorry," said the man. "I haven't had any peace since that night. Your words have haunted and troubled me. I couldn't sleep last night, and I thought I would come and get you to pray for me." That man accepted Christ, and the moment he had done so asked:

"What can I do for Him?"

He taught in the Sabbath school until the war broke out, when he enlisted, and was one of the first to be shot down, but not before he had given his testimony for God.

Contend for the Faith.

Whene'er the heart with trouble faints,
And tide of faith is sinking low,
Let us recall the noble saints
Who worshipped in the long ago.

Their floor—the green and turfy sod;
Their roof—the tender blue of heaven;
Their lamps—the silent stars of God;
Their creed—belief in sin forgiven.

Thus oft was service held of old;
They met in haste, in haste to part.
No shrine was theirs inlaid with gold,
But temple built within the heart.

They gathered in the open air,
Or in some still, sequestered place,
Of visible adornment bare,
But flooded with celestial grace.

If faith proved strong in stormy days,
And bore the fruit of saintly lives,
More full should be the prayer and praise
When storm is past, and calm arrives.

Mary G. Hunter.

The Registrar General's Report on marriages in 1898, recently issued, affords no evidence in support of the reiterated statements of some as to the growth of Romanism in Great Britain. The proportion of Roman Catholic marriages in that year, 40 per 1,000, is the lowest point recorded of late years, whereas the proportion of Nonconformist marriages has risen largely, the proportion being 121 per 1,000.

None greater than John the Baptist, yet . . .

Studies of John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

WHILST John's disciples were standing there, our Lord said nothing in his praise; but as soon as they had departed, the flood-gates of his heart were thrown wide open, and He began to speak to the multitudes concerning his faithful servant. It was as though He would give him no cause for pride by what He said. He desired to give his friend no additional temptation during those lonely hours. We say our kind things before each other's faces; our hard things when their backs are turned. It is not so with Christ. He passes his most generous encomiums when we are not there to hear them.

I. The Time Chosen for the Lord's Commendation of the Baptist.—It was when John had fallen beneath his usual level, below high-water mark, that Jesus uttered his warmest and most generous words of appreciation—"Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist" (Matt. xi. 11).

"But, dost Thou really mean, most Holy Lord, that this is the greatest born of woman?"

"Certainly," saith Christ, in effect.

"But he has asked if Thou art really the Messiah."

"I know it," saith the Lord.

"But how canst Thou say that he is greater than Moses, or Isaiah, or Daniel? Did they doubt Thee thus? And how canst Thou say that he is not a reed shaken with the wind, when, but now, he gave patent evidence that he was stooping beneath the hurrying tread of gales of doubt and depression?"

"Ah," the Master seems to say, "Heaven judges, not by a passing mood, but by the general tenor and trend of a man's life; not by the expression of a doubt, caused by accidents which may be explained, but by the soul of man within him, which is as much deeper than the emotions as the heart of

than the cloud-shadows which hurry across its surface."

Yes, the Lord judges us by that which is deepest, most permanent, most constant and prevalent with us; by the ideal we seek to apprehend, by the decision and choice of our soul, by that bud of possibility which lies as yet furled, and unrealized even by ourselves.

There is a remarkable parallel to this incident in the Old Testament. When we are first introduced to Gideon, the youngest son of Joash the Abiezrite, he is not in a very dignified position. He is threshing wheat in the wine-press, to hide it from the hosts of Midian, which devoured the produce of the entire country. There was no moral wrong in eluding the vigilance of the Midian spies, by transporting the wheat from the open country, where the wind might fan away the chaff to the comparative seclusion and unlikeliness of the wine-press; but there was nothing specially heroic nor inspiring in the spectacle. Yet, when the angel of the Lord appeared unto him, he said, "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour."

"Mighty man of valour!" At first there is an apparent incongruity between this high-sounding salutation and the bearing of the man to whom it was addressed. Surely such an address is far-fetched and fulsome; but events prove that every syllable of it was deservedly true. Gideon was a mighty man of valour, and God was with him. The heavenly messenger read beneath the outward passing incident, and saw under the clumsy letters of the palimpsest the deep and holy characters which were awaiting the moment of complete discovery.

II. The Outstanding Features of John's Character and Ministry to which our Lord drew attention. (1) His Independence. "What went ye out into the wilderness to behold? A reed shaken with the wind?" The language of the Bible is so picturesque, so full of natural imagery, that it appeals to every age, and speaks in every language of the world. If its descriptions of character had been given in the language of the philosopher or academist, what was intelligible to one age would have been perplexing or meaningless to the next.

When our Lord asked the people whether John resembled a reed shaken by the wind, and implied the answer in the negative, could He have more clearly indicated one of the most salient characteristics of John's career, his daring singularity, his independence of mere custom and fashion, his determination to follow out the pattern of his own life as God revealed it to him? In this he resembles the good Nehemiah, when he refers to the usual practice of men of his position, and says, "So did not I, because of the fear of God;" or the three young men who, when all the myriads fell down and worshipped Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, remained erect. In the singularity of his dress and food, in the originality of his message and demand for baptism, in his independence of the religious teachers and schools of his time, in his refusal to countenance the flagrant sins of the various classes of the community, and especially in his uncompromising denunciation of Herod's sin, he proved himself to be as a sturdy oak in the forest of Bashan, or a deeply-rooted cedar in Lebanon, and not as a reed shaken by the wind.

Many a saintly soul has since followed him along this difficult and lonely track. Indeed, it is the ordinary path for most of the choicest spirits of these Christian centuries. I do not say of all, because the Great Gardener has his violets and lilies in sheltered spots; but certainly most of the have not stood thickly-planted in the sheltered woodland, but have braved the winds sweeping in at the gates of the hills.

(2) His Simplicity. A second time the Master asked the people what they went forth into the wilderness to behold; and by his question implied that John was no Sybarite clothed in soft raiment, and feasting in luxury, but a strong, pure soul, that had learnt the secret of self-denial and self-control. Too many of us are inclined to put on the soft raiment of self-indulgence and luxury. We are the slaves of fashion, or we are perpetually considering what we shall eat, what we shall drink, and with what we shall be clothed; or we act as though we supposed that life consisted in the number of things we possessed, and the variety of servants that waited upon us. Whereas the exact contrary is the case. The real happiness of life consists not in increasing our possessions, but in limiting our wants.

So with dress. Our Master does not require of us to dress grotesquely, or to attract notice by the singularity and conspicuousness of our attire. We must dress suitably and in conformity with that station in life to which He has called us. But what a difference there is between making our dress our main consideration, and considering first and foremost the attire of the soul in meekness and truth, purity and unselfishness! They who are set upon these, may be trusted to put the other in the right place. But, on the whole, should study simplicity. It should not endeavour to attract notice by glaring colours or extravagant display. It ought not to seek a large variety of dresses and costumes, but to be satisfied with what may be really needed for the exigencies of climate and health.

THE TRULY CONSECRATED SOUL

So with service. It is not well to depend on others. If it is part of our lot to be surrounded by servants, let us accept their offices with grace and kindliness, but never allow ourselves to lean on them. We should know how to do everything for ourselves, and be prepared to do it whenever it is necessary. Of course, with some of us, it is essential that we should have servants, that we may be set free to do the special work of our lives. Nothing would be more unfortunate than that those who are highly gifted in some special direction should fritter away their time and strength in doing trifles which others could do for them equally well. Discover what you can do best, the one thing which you are called to do for others, and which probably no one else can do so well. Set yourself to do this, devolving on voluntary or paid helpers all that they can do as well as yourself, and perhaps better. It was in this spirit that the Apostles said, "It is not fit that we should forsake the Word of God and serve tables. Look ye out, therefore, men . . . whom we may appoint over this business; but we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the Word."

(3) His Noble Office. "But wherefore went ye out? to see a prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet." Nothing is more difficult than to measure men while they are living. Whilst the fascination of their presence and the music of their voice are in the air, we are apt to exaggerate their worth. The mountain towers so far above us that we are apt, in the absence of other mountains, or in our too great proximity to it, to think of it as the greatest of all the mountain-range. But it is not so, as we discover when we remove further. But subsequent ages, so far from correcting, have only confirmed of his forerunner. We are able to locate him in the Divine economy. He was a prophet, yes, and much more. To employ the predictive words of Malachi, he was Jehovah's messenger, the courier who announced the advent of the King, the last of the prophets—for all the prophets and the law prophesied unto John—and the herald of that new and greater era, whose gates he opened, but into which he was not permitted to enter.

But our Lord went further, and did not hesitate to class John with the greatest of those born of woman. He was absolutely in the front rank. He may have had peers, but no superiors; equals, but no over-lords. Who may be classed with him, we cannot, dare not, say. But probably Abraham, Moses, Paul. "There hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist." No brighter star shines in the celestial firmament than that of this brief young life, which had only time enough to proclaim the advent of the Lord, and after some brief six months of ministry by the Jordan, followed by twelve months in the gaol, waned here to shine in undimmed brilliancy yonder.

III. The Master's Reservation. "Yet he that is but little in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." John ushered in the Kingdom, but was not in it. He proclaimed a condition of blessedness in which he was not permitted to have a part. And the Lord says that to be in that Kingdom gives a greatness which the great souls outside its precincts cannot lay claim to.

The character of John was strong, grand in its wild magnificence—like some Alpine crag, with the pines on its slopes and the deep dark lake at its foot; he had courage, resolution, an iron will, a loftiness of soul that could hold commerce with the unseen and eternal. He was a man capable of vast heights and depths. He could hold fellowship with the eternal God as a man speaks with his friend, and could suffer unutterable agonies in self-questioning and depression. But is this

THE LOFTIEST TYPE OF CHARACTER?

Is it the ideal and most blessed? Assuredly not; and this may have been in the Saviour's mind when He made his notable reservation. To come neither eating nor drinking; to be stern, reserved, and lonely; to live apart from the homes of men; to be the severe and unflinching rebuker of other men's sins—this was not the loftiest pattern of human character.

There is more to be had by the humble heart than John possessed or taught. The passive and the active; the glen and the bare mountain peak; the feminine and the masculine; the power to wait and be still, and the swift rush to capture the position; the cross of shame as well as the throne of power. And if thou art the least in the Kingdom of God, all this may be thine, by the Holy Spirit, who introduces the very nature of the Son of Man into the heart that loves Him truly. "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven (i.e., who has all the qualities for which the Gospel stands) is greater than he."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 24. Psalm cxxxi.

THE psalm of the quiet heart. The most perfect expression of the spirit of a little child, such as our Lord bade us seek. It is rather interesting to mark its position, as following just upon the preceding bitter cry for forgiveness. Let those who are now in the depths, pass by an immediate transition, by faith in Jesus, through the Beautiful Gate into the aisles of this quiet Temple of Blessedness, on the walls of which the storms break in vain.

The haughty heart is full of its own self-esteem, and insists that others should fall down and do obeisance, as Haman did. And if one Mordecai refuses, it takes the pleasure out of the most prosperous circumstances. The haughty heart expresses itself in supercilious glances. Wouldst thou be delivered from it, think of the greatness of thy sins and unworthiness, of the greatness of God's forgiving love, and of the eternity in whose presence the distinctions of earth are so indistinguishable. At the distance of a mile or so above the earth, man's loftiest elevations are hardly to be distinguished from mole-hills.

Clearly the psalmist had not reached this blessed condition apart from some effort on his part. He had stilled and quieted himself. There had been a time when he had fed on the breasts of this world's consolations, had drawn his supplies from things of time and sense. But from all these God had weaned him, giving him other and nobler aspirations. At first, however, in this process there will be disturbance, whimpering, and feverish unrest. But if the will is true, these pass away. It is a great help to remember that the course which you will and choose will be that in which you will be ultimately satisfied.

Remember, O child of God, that you are a child on your parent's breast. You are a weaned child, but you are also "with your mother." Hope in God, and teach others the blessedness of hope, directed above material things, to Him who faileth not, nor forgetteth.

MONDAY, June 25. Psalm cxxxii.

In times of great rejoicing we must never forget the Davids, who, in their affliction, laid the foundation of the Temple of Joy. God does not forget them; and many a blessed revival of his work or deliverance for his church is attributable to the prayers and tears of those who have long since passed to their reward. Solomon may well remember David, without whose afflictions the temple had never arisen in its stately glory.

The singer recapitulates two scenes in the history of the ark. Ephrathah probably stands for Shiloh, which lay in the territory of Ephraim, while "the field of the wood" is a poetic term for Kirjath-Jearim (the city of the woods), whence David brought the sacred emblem to Jerusalem. It seems as though the singer were recalling also the prayers which were made on that memorable occasion.

The ark of our strength is the blessed Lord. He has arisen in ascension-glory to his place at the right hand of God. His priests, who are ourselves by his grace, must be clothed in stainless characters, not wearing their own garments, but putting on the perfect righteousness of Christ; and there should be gladness, a holy glee, in our religious life, which should greatly commend it to the sad world around. Let us pray these prayers, and then within the compass of our prayer will come the assurance of the answer. Compare vv. 8 and 9 with vv. 11-18. Notice how, item by item, God takes up his servant's cry, and answers it; yea, He does exceedingly more abundantly, beyond all that was asked or thought.

TUESDAY, June 26. Psalm cxxxiii.

How blessed it is to think of believers as constituting one great family! It is good and pleasant to see them in the smaller circles of earth, but what will it not be when they gather in the Father's House? Let us do all in our power to promote and cement this unity, forbearing from all words and acts which would mar its concord. At the same time, it should be borne in mind that the spirit of unity may demand, sometimes, the straight dealing with faults and the plain speaking of the truth in love. With girded loins we may sometimes have to wash one another's feet.

But love does not stay in those to whom it is primarily shown; it passes on and on, from us to our inferiors, and from these to others beneath them. Thus the oil of love and holy joy (communicated to our Great Head at his baptism) descended from Him to his immediate followers on the Day of Pentecost, and has been descending ever since, until it has reached even us, who are as the edge, or border, of his High-priestly robe. Oh that it may come more and more copiously on him who writes and those who read these words!

There were many miles of distance between the lofty Hermon range and the lowlier mountains of Zion. The division of Canaan into the Northern and Southern tribes was notoriously included in that wide reach of territory; and yet the moisture of Hermon was diffused throughout all Palestine. To the snows, and clouds, and dews of that great mountain range much of the fertility of the country was attributable. So from the Hermon of Pentecost blessing has spread through all the Christian ages, and the story of the love and unity of Acts ii. has always been an inspiration to Christian hearts.

WEDNESDAY, June 27. Psalm cxxxiv.

This psalm forms a worthy close to these exquisite psalms of ascents. The stream of pilgrims has reached the city, visited the holy Temple, and is on the point of retiring; but before they do so they greet the priests who had charge of the nightly service of the Temple, and had just come on duty. "Farewell," cries the pilgrim band, "see to it that ye fill the night with adoration and prayer. Let your voices arise through the silent watches of the night, and form a canopy of peace over the sleeping city."

God has many night watchmen still. Large numbers of his saints, such as policemen on duty, night nurses, watchmen, Christian sentries, and specially those who rarely get a night's full rest, because pain keeps them tossing on their weary couches, compose the Lord's night-watch. And as we, who are privileged to sleep deeply and soundly, consign ourselves to slumber, it becomes us to send a loving thought to all such—the day-watch saluting the night-watch; the active workers consigning the charge of the world to the intercessors and choristers.

And these in turn transmit their benediction. "The Lord bless thee out of Zion." It is an individual blessing, thee. It is well, in our intercessions, not to pray generally, but specifically and particularly. We do our work best when we make individuals the subjects of our solicitude—taking them as representatives of a class. Each one whom we pray for is dear to God, our Creator and Redeemer. We are in the current of his will, when we bless in his Name.

THURSDAY, June 28. Psalm cxxxv.

This psalm is a nosegay of flowers. It is not an original composition, but a compilation. The man of God has wandered through the garden of the Books of Psalms, already extant, culling from them choice extracts, which, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, he places together in one lovely bouquet. Any marginal reference Bible will give the sources from which the extracts were taken.

The chief themes, on account of which the psalmist calls for praise, are God's work in creation (5-7), and his mighty miracles on the behalf of his chosen people (8-12). The psalmist is bent on deriving encouragement for the present by the consideration of the great and blessed past. What a contrast there is between our God and the idols of the heathen!

Why is it that the generality of Christian people are so deficient in praising and blessing God that they need to be constantly exhorted to this glorious employment, which will engage us in eternity? Perhaps we do not give ourselves to cultivate this sacred habit, which needs the exercise of a determined purpose. Perhaps, too, we do not quicken ourselves by the stimulus of hymns, and psalms, and spiritual songs, to read or sing which in the early morning might stir our sleepy hearts. Perhaps we do not sufficiently consider, with loving particularity, the attributes and works of God, which call for praise. O my soul, what an undiscovered continent is here! How much blessedness would accrue to thee, if only thou wouldst traverse these hills and valleys, raising everywhere thine Ebenezers! (Compare cxv. 9-11 with cxxxv. 19-21, and see how trust turns to blessing.)

FRIDAY, June 29. Psalm cxxxvi.

There is a remarkable similarity between this psalm and the preceding one; but here a noble refrain is inserted after each clause. And what a wonderful conception this gives of the way in which a holy soul may view all things that are and have been. Here is a standpoint of vision, from which to view God's dealings with mankind—that all things are threaded by mercy and loving-kindness, which are in all, and through all, and over all.

You have seen Egypt smitten in its first-born; there is mercy there. You have heard the last cry of Pharaoh's drowning host, but there is mercy there. You have beheld the overthrow of Sihon and Og, but there is mercy there. You may not be able to see the mercy, because you behold all things under creatural limitations, and amid so much prejudice and error; but could you understand the alleviations and compensations, the general result of God's dealings with the great world of men, the entire scope and plan of Divine Providence, you would be able to say—

> His every act pure goodness is;
> His path unsullied light.

Ah, soul, I expect that thou hast had thine Ogs and Sihons, thy Pharaohs and Amalekites. Thou, too, hast been in Egypt, and traversed the weary desert. But God's mercy is over it all. There is mercy in thy privations and oppressions. Dare to affirm it. Dare to look into the face of God, and say: "How much Thou lovest me, that Thou shouldst take so much pains with me. My God, I trust the perfect love, the circle of whose extent I cannot compass, but the centre of which is in thy loving heart." Dare to believe that no package is delivered at thy door by God's Providence which has not been packed by his love.

SATURDAY, June 30. Psalm cxxxvii.

This is the plaint of a captive. It was sung by the exiles in Babylon; it might have been appropriated by John the Baptist in his dungeon, and by John the divine in the isle which was called Patmos. We seem to see the exiles gathered from the city life, in which the pride of their conquerors was so patent and distracting, to some natural oratory beside the Tigris or Euphrates, perhaps on the Sabbath Day. They had brought their harps with them; but to what use could they be put when the heart was breaking, and stifled sobs told the tale of an incurable grief? They hang their harps on the low monotonous willows of the land of their captivity, so different in aspect to the glorious mountains of their native land.

Suddenly a noisy band of revelling and insolent mockers intrudes on their silence, and demands that they should sing one of those sacred songs for which Hebrew worship was famed throughout the Orient. How could they sing the Lord's song in a strange land? We must not cast that which is holy to the dogs. Besides, there are moods in which the songs of the heart are necessarily hushed and the strings of the lute refuse to vibrate. Are you in a strange land? Have you been carried away into captivity by your sins? I do not wonder that of late the Lord's song has died down within your soul, and that his praise is unaccustomed. You cannot forget the past. But ask God to restore it to you, and you to it, that again the old gladness may be yours.

Prof. White's Bible School.

IT is satisfactory to find that Prof. White's Bible studies are again arousing deep interest. Certainly the expositions of the esteemed lecturer are consistently profitable, and one may hopefully anticipate that the attendance will continue to grow as the intelligence of his return from America becomes more generally known.

On Friday last Dr. White, according to the custom which he has adopted in his present course, began with a Prelude, the subject of which was "Estranged from Dogma; uncertain about the Scriptures; what shall I do?" The lecturer commenced by quoting from Carlyle and Charles Kingsley in support of the view that, in such light as we have, it is our duty to go forward, and said that people relegate belief to the realm of the intellect whenever

IT INVOLVES ACTION.

They live in the presence of their doubts, always looking out for difficulties. The tendency of the day is to underrate the importance of experimentation. The speaker illustrated his point by an anecdote of a scientific authority, who calculated that a ship could not carry sufficient coal to take it across the Atlantic; but while the scientist laboured to prove his case, a ship got across and with coal to spare. The only way to gain more knowledge is to act on what knowledge we have.

Continuing the prelude, Dr. White gave some advice to students of Scripture, advising them to be calm in the presence of a difficulty, and to allow for the possibility of an explanation. People are too apt to jump to the conclusion that solution of a problem is impossible. Moreover, as in the spiritual, so in the physical world: "In the sweat of his face shall man eat his bread." The speaker quoted the experiences of the American divine, Dr. Bushnell, who, while holding agnostic views, found himself at Yale during a revival. Dr. Bushnell faced himself with the question, "What do I believe?" Then he formulated the answer, "I believe in the ineradicable distinction between right and wrong," and from this foundation went on to examine the evidences for Christianity, until, in less than three weeks he was converted and took part in the revival. Dr. White now quoted, for the encouragement of his hearers, "Those that seek Me early (i.e., diligently) shall find Me" (Prov. viii. 17), and "Ye shall find Me, when ye shall search for Me with all your heart" (Jer. xxix. 13). As Edison gives himself, in his researches, to ascertaining and following the laws of electricity, so seekers in the spiritual life should live in harmony with the laws of truth, and if they will follow on in that spirit, they will come into the noon-day light and glory.

Proceeding to deal with the main topic of study, the

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS,

Dr. White said that, speaking generally, the letter is to be divided as follows: Chaps. i. and ii., Paul's personal vindication; iii. and iv., the setting forth of doctrinal exposition; v. and vi., practical exhortation. The key verse of the epistle is v. 25, "If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk." The speaker, observing that he would like to placard London, indeed the world, with these words: "The believer is free by grace and bound by love," instanced the two passages "By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified" (Gal. ii. 15), and also "As many as are under the law are under a curse" (Gal. iii. 10-14), as summing up the teaching of Paul and, indeed, of the New Testament as a whole. The Law demands our absolute obedience. It is not enough to "do pretty well," there must be complete compliance, but "there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" makes us "free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do . . . God, sending his own Son . . . condemned sin in the flesh, that the ordinance of the law might be fulfilled" (Rom. viii. 1-4). We are not set free, however, to do as we please, but as He pleases, in the strength which He gives us. The principle of the Law is, "do and live;" the

GOSPEL SAYS "LIVE AND DO."

The Gospel does not do away with works, but it puts them in their right position as consequent on the possession of spiritual life.

Dr. White next pictured a number of scenes suggested in the epistle:— (1) Paul and Peter in conference at Jerusalem; (2) Peter and Paul in controversy at Antioch; (3) God and Abraham in conference in Haran; (4) Ishmael and Isaac in controversy in Canaan; (5) the Spirit and the Flesh in controversy in the believer; (6) Paul, with chained hands, writing, in large letters, the last verses of the epistle. Some have thought Paul's words in chap. i. to be characterized by anger. This, however, is not so; he is righteously indignant at the false teaching which had been given. He smote sin ferociously, in love. We live to-day in a namby-pamby age, afraid to express our inmost conviction; but in Paul we have one who strenuously opposes a false Gospel (i. 6-9). He defends himself, too, from the charge that he is a kind of tramp, with a self-constituted mission, who had not seen the Lord, but had gathered his message at second-hand from other apostles. These attacks he thoroughly refutes in ii. 19, demonstrating that his apostleship rests upon a sure foundation. In the third chapter Paul appeals to the personal experience of the Galatians: "Received ye the Spirit by law or by faith? How did you by works, or by giving up works to be saved through Jesus Christ? If you are saved by faith, why do you go back to rely on works, instead of continuing in faith?"

BEGIN YOUR CHRISTIAN LIFE,

In this connection, Dr. White made a cogent reference to the ceremonialism of people of to-day, who, like the Galatians, backslide into various forms of "doing, that they may be saved." The Galatians were going back to "doings," and the Galatians of to-day are those who add to their lives penances and other forms of bondage in the spirit which seeks salvation apart from faith.

Dealing with chap. v., the lecturer dwelt on the contrast between the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit, which is "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance" (v. 22). If we are in proper relationship to Christ good works are the fruit. Or, to change the figure, we shall not only drink of the water of life, but rivers of blessing will flow forth from us. These great lessons of faith contained in the Galatians, Paul wrote with "large letters," in order to give emphasis to his words, and that men might glory, not in their works, but

ONLY IN JESUS CHRIST.

The Christian life is a miracle in its beginning. We are born, not of the will of man, not the decree of any body of men, not from a resolution to live a changed life, not from the will of the flesh, but we are born of God, and our continuance in the spiritual life is equally as miraculous as our commencement therein. "If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk." God loves us so much that He leaves us to take not a single step alone; it is by his power that we are enabled to continue in the performance of that which He requires of us.

Prof. White speaks at King's Hall, Newton Street, Holborn, on Mondays, at 5.30 p.m.; at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W., on Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.; and at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, on Fridays, at noon. He hopes, also, to devote some time to interviews with those who desire advice on spiritual matters. Communications respecting interviews should be addressed to the secretary, Miss Meager, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

Suffering in this world is both remedial and penal. When it is rightly received it is remedial. When it is resisted it becomes penal to him who resists, and admonitory to the spectator.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"Primitives" at Bristol.

BY A MINISTER.

FOR the first time in eighty years the Conference of the Primitive Methodists is being held in the city of Bristol. The proceedings opened on Wednesday of last week in the hall of the Y.M.C.A.

When the delegates had been received, the assembly proceeded to elect its president. The names of three ministers were received in nomination:—Thomas Mitchell, of London, retiring book-steward; Robert Bryant, who this year succeeds Mr. Mitchell at the publishing house; and Joseph Odell, of Birmingham. Nineteen votes were given in Mr. Bryant's favour, forty-four in support of Mr. Mitchell, and 119 for Mr. Odell. With the utmost heartiness the popular evangelist was accordingly elected. For the vice-presidency four lay representatives were named, and Alderman Adam Adams, J.P., of Lowestoft, who received 116 votes, was elected.

Rev. Robert Jones, of Bury, was elected as Conference Secretary. These positions having been filled, the Conference proceeded to distribute its other duties to delegates.

AN INTERESTING FUNCTION.

In the afternoon the new president was formally inducted. The Bristol Primitive Methodists attended in large numbers. Words welcome were spoken by the retiring president, Rev. Wm. Goodman. Into the hands of his successor he placed the copy of the Holy Scriptures and the Connexional Hymnal; and into his custody he committed the official chair.

Mr. Odell is at his best in the act of speaking. He is to the manner born. Of stately presence and kindly face, with a rich musical voice, and with the art of the elocutionist, it is a joy to hear him, and to see him when he speaks. His address from the chair was a timely utterance. The romance of his ancestry was well worth telling. It was a leaf from the book of the early days. Henry Higginson, the eccentric revivalist, who missioned the Bedfordshire village where the president's parents lived, was simply one of a noble band. That the clergyman should be angered at his advent, and should request Mr. Odell's father to drive him away, is by no means of the days of the past. In the open air the clergyman's henchman was converted, and became the henchman of the Methodist missionary. And more than that, the president's father began to preach, becoming in time a tower of strength in his own and the surrounding villages. Surely, the President exclaimed, none need wonder that he was what he was! There was in him the spirit of his father and of his father's father, Henry Higginson. The speech was really an appeal for the return to the spirit and method of the pioneer days. This was ideal Primitive Methodism. A deep impression was made, which will, undoubtedly, lead to truer consecration.

Alderman Adams was formally welcomed by the ex-vice-president (Mr. Wm. Windsor, of Manchester).

Rev. John Hallam, of London (secretary of the General Committee) announced the presence of Rev. Dr. Carman, who had come to this country to bring to all the Methodist Conferences the greetings of their brethren in the Canadian Churches. Dr. Carman, with strong emphasis, vindicated the union of all the Methodist bodies in Canada, and told of the triumphs that had followed their coming together.

It was natural that Rev. John Smith, who laboured on the mission-field at Aliwal North, South Africa, for many years, and who held the missionary secretariat for five years, should find the theme of the Hartley lecture, "Christ and Missions," quite congenial. The deliverance proved how thoroughly he knew the subject, and with what intensity it had enthralled him. He had a splendid audience.

On the second day the appointment of the conferential committees took place, and reports concerning the ministry were received.

A pathetic incident was the reading of the list of ministers who have entered into rest since the last assembly.

Seven cases were presented for the making of new circuits by the division of those existing. "Divide to multiply" is the Connexional arithmetic. Two of the applications involved a lengthy discussion, as the expediency of the changes was not conspicuous to many. In the end, the Conference agreed to one and all. In the new list of circuits, the following will appear: Burslem, Sunderland III., Hove, and Shoreham, Glasgow IV., Orrall, Hindley, and Portsmouth II.

At this Conference, Rev. Robert Bryant takes the office of the General Book-Steward. By the rule of the Connexion, his successor five years hence must now be appointed, and the nomination of Rev. Edwin Dalton, of Leeds, proved acceptable.

A deputation from the Bristol Free Church Council attended in the evening to assure the Primitive Methodists of the goodwill of the sister churches. Revs. Dr. Glover (ex-president of the Baptist Union), J. S. Simon (chairman of the Wesleyan Bristol District), and P. W. Darnton, B.A., were the speakers. The temperance societies likewise presented greetings.

MINISTERS IN THE MAKING.

On Saturday, the fourth day of the Conference, the reports of the Candidates', Students', and Probationers' Examiners were received. Seventy-three young men were recommended by the circuits as suitable for the work of the ministry; twenty-six of these have passed the various examinations, and will enter the Manchester College.

Of the present students, excellent reports were to hand from the examining committee, fourteen of the students having passed with honours.

This was also Young People's Day. For Sunday scholars a meeting was held in the Wesleyan Chapel, Old King Street, at 3 o'clock; and at 6.30 a Christian Endeavour rally took place in the Conference Hall.

Thus far the business of the Conference is well advanced, while the religious gatherings have been truly inspirational.

Bible Defence Union.

THE second annual meeting of the Bible Defence Union of Scotland was held last Thursday in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. Mr. William Quarrier occupied the chair, in the absence of Colonel Sir David C. R. Carrick-Buchanan, of Drumpellier, K.C.B.

Mr. Quarrier remarked on the sadness of the fact that at this time of day anyone should be obliged to defend the Bible. But, he said, the same state of affairs which crept into the Early Church, upsetting the simplicity of the faith that is in Christ Jesus, exists to-day; and though we are supposed to have advanced in intelligence, there is the same human character to deal with in the handling of the Word of God. We must adhere not only to a profession of Christianity, but to the reality. The Bible is a spiritual book, in which are revealed the will of God regarding man and the will of God regarding Himself. These two points are so closely connected that if one be taken away we lose our standing in the other.

Rev. John Urquhart said the contributions show how widespread is the conviction that such work is a necessity of the time, and the need does not grow less. The attack upon Sabbath schools—the only direction in which the Higher Criticism cannot yet boast a triumph—is now being pressed home; and so open and determined has this attack become that even some who have hitherto fostered and patronized the movement are becoming alarmed. It has been proposed that the Union should establish extra-mural classes for students in the universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow; and, if funds permit, a beginning is to be made next winter. The first course is to include a short series of lectures on the Gospels, with a second series on the Pentateu

World's Temperance Congress.

FOR the second time in fifty-four years London has been the rallying-ground of the delegates of the World's Temperance Congress. Since Saturday evening of last week, when the reception was held, there has been a series of gatherings largely attended, and in every way worthy of the cause they are intended to advance. Many of the delegates, indeed, figured on the platform on the occasion of the 1846 convention.

The opening session on Monday morning was presided over by Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., who despaired of obtaining any real temperance legislation from the present Parliament, and remarked that it would be a great calamity to the country if the next Parliament showed itself as impotent as this one. Mr. Bramwell Booth, speaking on the question of "Strong Drink and Work for Christ," urged that temperance men should in every House of Convocation, every Synod, every Corporation, and every denominational assembly. Rev. J. W. Horsley discussed temperance reform as the basis of other social reforms. In the afternoon, there was warm controversy on the necessity of Christians being abstainers. Canon Barker (chairman) lamented the Church's lack of moral earnestness in the matter. The enormous proportion of Nonconformist ministers who are returned as abstainers was a cause for thankfulness; but what about the Church members? Mr. E. C. Chorley called forth dissent by protesting against the denunciation of non-abstainers in the churches.

Tuesday was devoted to the consideration of

of temperance. At the morning session the chairman (Mr. W. S. Caine) spoke of the movement in India and the Far East. No fewer than 283 Indian societies are affiliated to the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association. Lord Roberts had told the speaker that the temperance movement added what was equal to two battalions to the effective strength of the Indian Army, or a gift of £400,000 a year. Pundit Dewan Marendra Nath stated that 95 per cent. of the native students in the colleges are abstainers.

Medical papers were read at sectional meetings, and the opinion of qualified authorities was unanimous as to the morbid deterioration of the physical organs and other evils as the result of the use of alcohol. Viewing the question from an economic standpoint, Mr. James Whyte estimated the loss sustained by the nation through drink at £500,000,000 per annum. A paper on railway temperance was given by Mr. R. A. Allison, M.P., who mentioned that there are enrolled in the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Association 6,500 men connected with the Midland, 4,500 with the North-Eastern, 3,900 with the London and North-Western, 2,200 with the London and South-Western, 2,500 with the Great Northern, &c.

LADIES' DAY.

On Wednesday, at the morning session and afternoon sectional meetings, the papers were chiefly devoted to the education of children and women's temperance work. Various reforms were advocated by Mrs. Hind Smith and Mrs. G. S. Reaney; while Madame Legrain spoke of the progress of the French Women's Temperance Union in Paris. The Women's Total Abstinence Union was described by Mrs. W. S. Caine. The World's Women's Christian Temperance Union was represented by Miss Agnes Slack. It has a membership of 250,000, and has enrolled nearly half-a-million children in the Loyal Temperance Legion. The National British Women's Temperance Association, for which Mrs. H. J. Osborn spoke, has over 1,100 branches. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt gave an encouraging account of temperance teaching in the United States. Lady Battersea held that women must co-operate with men, if temperance reform is to make any progress.

TEMPERANCE IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

One of the most enthusiastic gatherings of this day was undoubtedly the Army and Navy sectional meeting. Colonel J. A. Fergusson, of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in the course of his paper, stated that drunkenness had greatly decreased in the Army in the last generation, which in a large measure was due to the existence of bands of hope, &c. Mr. Conrad Dillon, hon. secretary of the Army Temperance Association, said his council had authorized the dispatch of a letter to clergymen and other influential persons throughout the country, begging them to persuade the friends of soldiers not to put temptation in their way when the men came home from South Africa.

THE PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION of the Congress was held in the evening in Exeter Hall, which was crowded. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who presided, said that the State could take up one of three attitudes in regard to alcohol. The first attitude, free trade in drink, was as dead as King Henry VIII. The second, that of restriction or regulation, had been tried for 400 years with the greatest minuteness and care, and, in spite of all this, the truth remained—that where there was drink there were crime, pauperism, insanity, misery, and degradation. He was firmly convinced that the only attitude of common sense, of justice, and of mercy, was that of prohibition. Prohibition was their ultimate object, but they would welcome anything that would diminish the volume of the liquor traffic, if it did not really strengthen, while apparently weakening, that traffic.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

asked what it was that was blinding our statesmen, and bidding us be content with conditions against which every man and woman should revolt? It was the worship of gold. The hour had come when the people would claim their liberty against the tyranny of a great monopoly and the power of millionaire brewers. Surely, now that Parliament had legislated to protect the birds of the air and the fish in the sea, there was some possibility of legislation to protect the children of our country.

Canon Wilberforce said that the liquor forces now announced with shameless effrontery that they would oppose even those partial reforms on which both the majority and the minority of the Royal Commission had agreed. Some compromise might be necessary, but he would not accept any temperance measure that did not give, as at least one of its options, power to the people to decide the licence question for themselves.

On Thursday morning Mr. John Colvile, M.P., presided. The subject for consideration was temperance legislation. Papers dealing with the progress of Good Templary, &c., were also read, and in the course of discussion, as to whether temperance workers should support Lord Peel's report, opinion was evidently divided.

In Time of War.

To Thee, Almighty God, we call
In time of greatest need;
Low at thy mercy seat we fall,
For those who fight we plead!

In war's fierce conflict be their stay—
Around them throw thy shield;
Let angels guard their warrior way,
On each dread battlefield!

The wounded soothe, the dying cheer;
Or, if with sin oppressed,
Hear Thou their cry, bow down thine ear,
Receive them to thy rest!

Oh! bid the trumpet cease to blow,
For war by land or sea;
Oh! bid the tides of goodness flow
With love, which springs from Thee.

Bid Thou the nations cease to learn
The cruel arts of war,
That men may for the Gospel yearn,
In regions near and far. M. S.

Y.M.C.A. Conference at Newcastle.

June 11—15.

HON. SECRETARIES IN CONFERENCE.

(Report continued from last week.)

MR. THOMPSON'S paper on Monday night on "The Hon Secretary—his Duties and Relation to the Work"—emphasized the importance of the hon. secretary's position, in view of the fact that much work would of necessity be left undone if such helpers were not available. The men filling such posts should be prayerful, aggressive, businesslike, willing to learn, able to teach, competent to lead others, also to develop latent talent and set every member to do something.

On Tuesday morning the first subject was "Difficulties peculiar to small Associations: How to meet them." It was urged that small associations should not create difficulties by attempting to do impossible things; but by confining their operations to legitimate Association work for young men, and by maintaining a spiritual atmosphere among the members, many difficulties might be averted. The next subject was "Special Opportunities of small Associations: How to utilise them." The opener contended that in small Associations there could be more personal dealing, the members being in closer touch with each other and the secretary. An interesting discussion followed.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who was present, and who was referred to as the oldest honorary worker, spoke of difficulties as blessings under another name.

In the afternoon this first Conference of Hon. Secretaries was brought to a close by a meeting for fraternal interchange of experiences and the transaction of necessary business in view of holding a similar gathering next year. The delegates to arrived on Tuesday in large numbers, mustering in all about 450. Those who were members of the National Council made for the Grand Assembly Rooms at Barras Bridge, where Alderman Sir W. H. Stephenson, president of the Newcastle Association, entertained them to luncheon. The usual complimentary speeches were made, and the half-yearly meeting of the National Council was then held, Sir George Williams presiding. In the report, presented by Mr. W. H. MILLS, the secretary, it was mentioned that the Associations at the Cape and in Natal have been busily occupied in work among the soldiers both on arrival in South Africa and on the field of battle. Reference was also made to the efforts so successfully put forth by the Soldiers' Christian Association, an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. In response to the invitation of the Royal Commissioners, an exhibit has been organized in the Social Science Department of the Paris Exhibition, which, while representing the different departments of Y.M.C.A work, will, it is hoped, be deemed worthy of notice by the jury on award. An interesting letter was laid before the meeting from Mr. Oatts, late of Glasgow, who is now visiting the Indian and Australasian Associations on behalf of the National Council. The usual reports of work in the various districts of the United Kingdom were made by the travelling and district secretaries.

In the evening the whole of the delegates, together with a large general company, gathered at the Hancock Museum for the inaugural reception. The host and hostess, Dr. and Mrs. William Murray, were unable to be present owing to family bereavement, but were represented by Dr. George Murray. An agreeable time of social intercourse was enjoyed, and much interest was manifested in the unrivalled collection of birds, for which the museum is famous throughout the world. The speeches were few, brief, and to the point, the official welcome being given by Sir W. H. Stephenson.

The BISHOP OF NEWCASTLE, whose sympathy with the work of the local Association ensured for him a hearty reception, joined in hearty greetings. His reference to the inter-denominational position of the Y.M.C.A. was heartily endorsed by the audience.

TOLERATION AND CO-OPERATION, said the Bishop, come, not from shallowness, but from depth. When they were really convinced of the truth of what they held, Christian people found that there was so much really common ground between those who loved the Lord Jesus Christ that they were glad to take advantage of that common ground as a sphere of common action. When he thought of all the various forces that were in the world making against belief in God, and against righteousness, it seemed to him that they ought to welcome opportunities of this kind, in order that men who were not ashamed of being Christians might together try to stem the torrent of unrighteousness, and do what they could for the common good. When he thought of what the Y.M.C.A. had already done, how they had helped their members to consecrate their whole manhood, body, soul, and spirit, to the service of God, he felt they must all be thankful, and unite in giving the Conference the heartiest of northern welcomes. These greetings were responded to by Sir George Williams on behalf of England, Mr. Jas. Sinclair for Scotland, Mr. G. Grubb for Ireland, and Mr. J. E. Baker for Wales.

WEDNESDAY.

The Conference opened with a devotional service, conducted by the Vicar of Jesmond, after which the roll-call was taken, showing, in addition to delegates from every part of the British Isles, visitors from Bombay, Melbourne, Durban, Kimberley, and Brussels. A letter of greeting was read from the International Y.M.C.A. Committee at Brussels, and, after a few preliminaries, the Conference settled down to the first subject—"The Mission of the Y.M.C.A.," introduced by Mr. J. E. W. WAKEFIELD, M.A., of Taunton. The mission he defined as simply and solely to young men, by young men. He would not undertake the invidious task of defining who were, for this purpose, young men. The definition would not altogether depend upon age. As to the best method by which their mission could be accomplished, it seemed to him that it would be chiefly by means of individual effort and testimony exercised towards one another in the sphere of every day intercourse. It might be only the few who could speak in public, but everyone could use personal influence. He urged that members of Y.M.C.A.'s should let their commercial honour and conduct be high and consistent with their Christian profession. A good example would accomplish more than much precept.

The speaker urged that the Associations should be modelled, not on the cold lines of an institution, but as much as possible on the type of that high blessing of English family life—the happy, REFINED CHRISTIAN HOME.

An important part of Y.M.C.A. work was to cultivate a taste for wholesome reading, and to develop the intellectual side of a young man's life, remembering that in the young men of to-day we have the leaders of the civic and national life of to-morrow. He also suggested that part of the mission of the Y.M.C.A. is to correct the erroneous idea that there is any connection between religious life and a narrow chest, untidy clothes, and an unkempt appearance.

Altogether it was a good paper, and led to considerable discussion—some practical, some not. Much was said about "class" prejudice. In the main it was felt that this should be as far as possible overcome, as in some places it is to a large degree already. At the same time, specialized work among young men in various trades, whose hours of work prevent them attending the Y.M.C.A. at ordinary times, was strongly commended. Mr. WAKEFIELD, in replying on the whole discussion, urged the importance of providing in the Association rooms on Sunday evenings after service hours a "home," to which young men would be attracted, and where the procedure should suggest a Christian home circle rather than a meeting.

The delegates then hurried off to the cathedral, where the BISHOP OF RIPON was the special preacher of the day. His text was Matt. x. 41, "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward," &c. It was an eloquent oration delivered with all the beauty of thought, wealth of language, and impressive earnestness for which Dr. Boyd Carpenter is famous. The keynote was that "the Lord seeth not as man seeth, but looketh on the heart." There are many standards by which men are judged, but in the text there was what he believed to be, the Divine standard of judgment, asking of men not what were their intellectual or physical attainments, their circumstances, their power, their wealth, but what were their moral sympathies. The prophet and the righteous man—the reformer—attain positions of great prominence among their fellows; but there are many who spend their lives in obscurity faithfully doing what they could. Were these poor waiting and working ones to secure no recognition? Nay, says Jesus Christ, if any man hears the prophet speak and his soul responds to the prophet's appeal; if any man sees the righteous man at work, and he, too, feels a thrill of righteous enthusiasm, and longs in his insignificant way to do his share in the great and mighty work of reform—that man, because he shows that he possesses the same moral sympathies as animate the prophet and the righteous man, stands, in the eye of God, though he may not hold pre-eminence amongst his fellow-men, on the same platform as the prophet and the righteous man.

He shall receive the prophet's reward and the righteous man's reward. But it was not enough that when they heard the prophet speak they were conscious of a passing thrill of emotion in their souls. They must identify themselves up to the measure of their power with the movement of the prophet. Christ has no sympathy for the man who sits upon the hedge. For Him it must be action up to the measure of a man's opportunity. In the great army of God the water carrier was needed us much as the man who leads the charge, and therefore, whether they be the prophet or the righteous man, or the obscure helper, they must discharge their work where they could, remembering that the secret of the inspiration of it was the man who did it without any thought of self. If the spirit of Christ be in them, they would know that no life was worth living which had not a love of service for Christ's sake.

Mr. T. H. BAINBRIDGE, deputy president of the local Association, was the host at the luncheon which followed. He is well known as the author of some useful booklets*, and combines with spiritual earnestness a practical sagacity which has made him a tower of strength to the Newcastle Y.M.C.A. Incidentally he mentioned that from the rentals of the shops, &c., forming part of the Y.M.C.A. building, a sufficient revenue would be obtained, not only to pay the interest on the mortgage, but to provide a sinking fund, so that eventually the Association would own an unencumbered and exceedingly valuable property. Certainly the whole scheme formed a striking object-lesson for the delegates from other Associations.

* CONSCIENCE AND SYSTEM and COUNSELS TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS. (2d. each. Morgan & Scott.)

In the afternoon a public session was held, when "Work on behalf of our Soldiers in South Africa," and "Y.M.C.A. Work in British Dependencies and in the Foreign Field," claimed attention. Speaking on the former subject, Colonel Philips, of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, who took the place of Mr. A. H. Wheeler, absent through illness, gave an interesting account of the work now being carried on among the troops in South Africa. There were twenty-two workers in the field, and a number of tents and iron rooms. As an illustration of the good which results from Christian work among the troops, he pointed out that every converted soldier who went abroad practically did the work of a missionary wherever he might be stationed. Mr. Kinahan, of Belfast, who went out with Mr. David Black, Secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., gave a résumé of his experiences in Cape Town, Kimberley, Paardeberg, Bloemfontein, &c. As one instance of how they had been able to help with their writing tents, Mr. Kinahan stated that 5,000 letters were written by the men in three days at Paardeberg. Mr. Davis, who had been attached to the Highland Brigade, gave an account of the spiritual work in which he had been privileged to take part. He instanced the anxiety of some of the officers and men to have one of the "Christian" tents pitched near their quarters; but he (Mr. Davis) had it placed near the railway, where it not only served the camp, but enabled the workers to board the trains filled with soldiers going to the front and the hospital trains with sick and wounded going to Cape Town.

Mr. R. D. PRINGLE, general secretary of the Bombay Association, devoted most of his paper to the work in India, with which he is personally conversant; but he gave some statistics which cover the whole of Asia. There are there to-day 248 Associations, with nearly 10,000 members. Twenty-four paid secretaries are employed, and twelve buildings are owned by the Associations. Progress has been so rapid during the last ten years, that as the work is organized still greater things may be expected.

The evening was devoted to a great public meeting at Olympia. The building, which will hold about 4,000, was two-thirds filled. Lord KINNAIRD, who presided, appealed for financial help to enable the Y.M.C.A. National Council to extend the work, especially abroad. The BISHOP OF RIPON'S speech was, in a sense, a sequel to his morning sermon. Then he spoke of the spirit which should underlie and actuate us in our service; at night he spoke on preparation for service.

Rev. J. T. FORBES followed with a lofty appeal on behalf of the high demands which the religion of Jesus Christ makes upon us. The Young Men's Christian Association exists in the interests of applied Christianity. The world does not complain that we are Christains, but that we are not good enough Christians.

ON THURSDAY

a Wesleyan minister (Rev. W. D. L. SLACK) led the devotional meeting, after which Mr. W. FULTON, of Belfast, dealt with the subject, "How to secure and retain the personal interest of members in the work." The problem is a vital one, and several speakers, in the discussion which followed, suggested that "the work" was too vague a term, and would have substituted "young men;" others, however, pointed out that the terms were synonymous. Mr. Fulton, in speaking of setting members to work, reverted to that which was so often insisted upon in this Conference, that valuable service could be rendered by those who used their personal influence among their fellows. He had evidently been reading the "Life of D. L. Moody" (which is a fount of inspiration for all Christian workers), and he pointed out that Mr. Moody began his career of usefulness, not by preaching, but by filling his pew at church with non-church-going young men. A host of suggestions were made, e.g., visitation, correspondence, variety in the work, brotherliness in the Association, &c.

An interesting feature of this morning's session was a fraternal address of welcome from the local

FREE CHURCH COUNCIL.

Between twenty and thirty members of the Council attended, and were received by the delegates standing. An address expressing sympathy with the work of the Association was read, and acknowledged by Mr. Dreghorn on behalf of the Conference; and then the delegates and deputation adjourned to St. James Congregational Church, where the Rev. J. H. Jowett, formerly minister of that church, but now of Birmingham, was the mid-day preacher. Taking his text from Isa. lv. 1 "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters," Mr. Jowett delivered an earnest and eloquent discourse.

The evening meeting brought together a very large audience in Olympia, under the presidency of Mr. T. H. BAINBRIDGE. Three special addresses were arranged upon important and cognate subjects:—"The Responsibilities of Youth," by Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A., of London; "The Temptations of Youth," by Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh; and "The Inspirations of Youth," by Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., of Birmingham. All three addresses were of a very high order, and aroused in the audience an unusual measure of responsive enthusiasm. Mr. Webster urged that the responsibilities of youth were greater even than those of later years; youth was the seed time, and the harvest of the future depended upon the sowing of the present. Dr. Smith said a young man's temptations were the dark obverse of his possibilities. He drew a vivid picture of the holocaust of young lives being sacrificed on and earnestly insisted that the only spirit that could arrest the seductive influences that surrounded young men was the Spirit of Jesus Christ. Mr. Jowett said young men must look for inspiration in their contemplations, and he besought them to concentrate their gaze—their lifelong gaze—upon Christ, in order that they might be uplifted and transformed by the power of his life and the radiant ideal afforded by his example.

The subject for the last morning of the session was "Equipment for Service." This was dealt with somewhat on negative lines by Mr. J. SINCLAIR, of Glasgow, who mentioned as hindrances to service moderate drinking, smoking, novel-reading, and theatre-going. About the first and last there was no difference of opinion; but a warm and not very profitable debate ensued in reference to smoking and novel-reading, especially the former. On the positive side of the subject it was pointed out that equipment was something more than consecration. A soldier may, with reason, be said to be consecrated to the Queen's service when he enlists, but if he cannot shoot straight and knows not how to handle his weapons, he is not equipped. So with the Christian, the process of equipment is of the highest importance, and must always be going on. Again, the principle which so dominated this Conference came up, and it was emphasized that though a young man might not be sufficiently equipped to preach a sermon, any man with the grace of God in his heart could live one.

A business session followed, when a provisional invitation was given by the representatives of the Liverpool and Birkenhead Associations to hold the Conference next year on the banks of the Mersey. An invitation for 1903 was tendered by the Bristol Association, and cordially accepted. The Association there will celebrate its jubilee that year.

The final Conference sermon was preached in Brunswick Wesleyan Chapel by Rev. Dr. JOHN SMITH, of Edinburgh, from Acts. v. 32, "We are his witnesses." It was an earnest and closely-reasoned plea for the perpetuation of a living, constant testimony to the saving power of Christ. What the Apostles did in the first years of the Christian era, men whose hearts have been touched must do to-day; but Christ must have full dominion over them if they would be living witnesses.

THE LATE MRS. GLADSTONE.

The Late Mrs. Gladstone.

AFTER lying for some time in a precarious state, Mrs. Gladstone passed away on Thursday last. She was in her eighty-ninth year—the same age as her distinguished husband when he died a little over two years ago. Her end was calm and peaceful. In the morning of the day, the whole of the household servants were ushered into the sick chamber to take a last farewell of their beloved mistress; in the evening she expired in the presence of the members of her family. The remains were interred in Westminster Abbey—in accordance with arrangements made on the death of Mr. Gladstone—on Tuesday last.

Mrs. Gladstone was a member of a family which became associated by marriage with several historic houses. The daughter of Sir Stephen Richard Glynne, of Hawarden, she early lost her father. It was in 1839 that Catherine Glynne became Mrs. Gladstone; she soon took a high place in public regard, and for many years was widely loved as a woman of high principle and noble Christian sympathies.

By 1839 Mr. Gladstone had been twice in office, and it was certain that he would eventually hold a more important post. "Look well at that young man," a friend had said to Miss Glynne, "he is going to be Prime Minister;" and, in giving her hand to the member for Newark, she knew well the arduous vocation which lay before her. It is recorded that at the very outset of their married life, her husband, forecasting his probable career, gave her a choice between two alternatives—to know nothing, and be free from all responsibility; to know everything, and be bound to secrecy. Fifty years later, Mr. Gladstone said to a friend, "My wife has known every political secret I have ever had, and has never betrayed my confidence."

Naturally shrewd, and entirely free from affectation, Mrs. Gladstone was withal bright in disposition and graceful in bearing. Visitors to Hawarden bore to the ends of the earth stories showing her dignified womanliness and practical wisdom. Few women of her generation had so wide a circle of attached friends. But it was in the home that she excelled. She had been a devoted daughter and sister; she was to the last an exemplary mother and head of a family; and, when one thinks of what she was as a wife, Mr. Gladstone's words about the Queen's marriage may, with perfect exactness, be applied to his own: "Even among happy marriages, it was exceptional; so nearly did the union of thought, heart, and action, both fulfil the ideal and bring duality near to the borders of identity."

Mrs. Gladstone was a deeply religious woman; her views were those of the High Church school, but in hope and love she went beyond her creed. Several objects of charity, growing out of the Oxford Movement, engaged her practical support. She was a pioneer of the free Convalescent Home movement, which grew out of the cholera epidemic which raged more particularly in East London in 1866. A large number of the sufferers were taken to the London Hospital, and regular cholera wards were opened there. Notwithstanding the extremely distressing nature of the sights to be witnessed, and the general fear of infection, Mrs. Gladstone moved about freely among the patients, doing the best she could to cheer them; and she soon had forced upon her attention the need of provision alike for the convalescents and for the orphans of those who died from the disease. As regards orphans, her exertions, begun on a small scale at Clapton, resulted in the setting up of an orphanage at Hawarden, where it has been maintained ever since. In respect to the convalescents, her appeals to the public were well responded to, and she opened at Snaresbrook Epping Forest, a convalescent home, which was transferred in 1869 to Woodford. It was carried on there until last year, when, owing to the increasing population of the neighbourhood and to other causes, the property was sold, a scheme being set on foot at the beginning of the present year for starting afresh in suitable premises somewhat further from London.

These and many other activities were the outworking of religious sympathy and warm-hearted concern for the well-being of others. May many be led to emulate the example thus set, and may the fragrance of a good name be influential of blessing for coming generations.

Bethnal Green Free Library.

THAT well-known institution, the Bethnal Green Free Library, has for many years fulfilled a useful mission in ministering to the educational and social requirements of one of the neediest of Metropolitan districts. Its work is of a more varied character than its name would appear to convey. Under the direction of Mr. G. F. Hilcken, the secretary, a number of new departments of work have been initiated, until the Library has come to be a kind of poor man's college, serving a large parish of 130,000 inhabitants. It is also well known as a convenient resort many of whom use the rooms for purposes of preparation and reference, while special facilities are afforded to working men who desire to make research with a view to patenting mechanical inventions. On the exterior of the building the advertisement sheets of daily newspapers are placed, for the convenience of the local "out-o'-works." In various ways efforts are made to wean the people from the public-house and the music hall, and to inculcate high and purifying lessons. The work is carried on, under the direction of a committee, without subsidy from the rates, and is therefore dependent for its maintenance upon the bounty of the public.

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS,

The annual meeting, held a few days ago, was numerously attended. In some introductory words, the Chairman, Sir. T. Fowell Buxton, expressed his confidence in the usefulness of the library, and said that he was pleased to think that it was yearly more and more appreciated by the people of Bethnal Green. He was glad to know that the habit of reading was increasing, because that habit was a good one. The present generation had been well educated, and we must see to it that the people are given

WHOLESOME LITERATURE.

That which was pernicious and degrading must be driven away.

The next speaker, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, M.P., after testifying to the good work done by the institution, suggested that volumes should be lent by such institutions to the inmates of workhouses, to relieve the tedium and monotony of their lives.

Rev. A. R. Buckland, who followed, pointed out that the conditions of life in the district lead to an early development among the young of a spirit of inquiry; while among adults, as anyone who had conducted evangelistic services in the common lodging-houses can testify, a remarkable thirst for knowledge is manifested. The legitimate desires both of old and young are met by the library, which at the same time

COUNTERACTS MANY EVILS.

Moreover, no Christian can undertake work in the neighbourhood without being frequently called upon to give reasons for his belief and statements, and the religious works in the library constitute a convenient means of education in this direction.

Other speakers included Sir M. M. Bhownagree, M.P., who, after recounting the many-sided activities of the institution, which, during the twenty-five years of its existence, has given instruction and help to upwards of a million of people, spoke of the need for securing more convenient premises, and urged that the Government should grant a site, which is at present vacant, near to the Bethnal Green Museum.

Lancing Homes of Rest.

THE anniversary of these Homes devoted to the poor, both men, women and children, attending the various mission agencies in the poorer districts of the metropolis, was commemorated the other day, by a gathering of friends from far and near. The afternoon meeting was held in the Dining Hall of the new Men's Home, the purchase of which was recently completed. Here, under the good Hand of God, joyous Ebenezers were raised, as the story of the conception and upraising of the Homes one after the other were unfolded by the founder and director, Mr. Chorley. The whole history forms one more happy instance of the way how many a useful and far-reaching work, bringing blessing, both temporal and spiritual, to hundreds every year, began in "a day of small things."

The result aimed at is not less spiritual than temporal, and from the most recent experiences it was made evident that the spiritual atmosphere at the Lancing Homes had been fruitful in the salvation of souls. The Gospel Hall attached to the Homes is further availed of by villagers, as well as the large body of patients in residence.

There are now four separate establishments, making up in all 140 beds. Perhaps the most interesting group at the happy meeting was that of the aged ones, received here to spend the closing days of their hard-spent lives in quietness and peace, who otherwise would be inmates of our workhouses. Only Christians who have proved faithful to the Lord are thus received, two of whom are over eighty years of age and another nearly as aged; but all are full of praise and gratitude for the provision thus afforded.

Mr. John McCall (one of the trustees) gave a very helpful address, and after a further session of praise and prayer, the party adjourned to a marquee on the lower lawn, and partook of refreshments; and after another inspection of the grounds, with their lovely sea views, which gave so much satisfaction, the London friends left to catch the trains.

Communications respecting Homes should be addressed to Mr. William Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, London, N.

The Houses of Rest.

REFERRING to the long and devoted labours of Miss Mason, of the well-known Houses of Rest for Christian Workers, her friend, Miss Agnes E. Weston, writes: "Miss Mason has personally carried on the Homes for nearly thirty-five years. Thousands of wearied workers from all parts of the world have found rest, refreshment, and spiritual strength under her roof; and still her work goes forward, although she has well nigh reached her seventieth birthday. Two fine buildings have been given to her in answer to prayer, and during this long term of years she has ever had enough to feed the large family that gathers round her board. Like Müller, of Bristol, she has told God her every need, and He has supplied it. Miss Mason will not ask for herself, but I ask for her, that the Christian public will give a birthday gift, to be applied to the work she loves, which would cheer her much." Communications may be addressed to Miss Weston, Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

Kensal Town Medical Mission.—With the object of providing the destitute poor with medical advice and medicine, this Mission continues its useful work in a needy district. Some 1,700 patients attended the dispensary during the last twelve months; while, in connection with the maternity branch, 161 women were attended and nursed in their homes. Besides the maternity nurse, the services of a district nurse have been maintained, who has ministered to 264 poor people in their homes, while 877 patients have received attention and relief. An opportunity is afforded candidates for foreign missionary service for gaining experience in medical work. The care and sympathy of the workers at the Home of Rest, Herne Bay, have been appreciated by a large number of convalescent visitors. The hon. secretary is Miss E. C. Thompson, The Cottage Gospel Mission, Kensal Road, W.

Metropolitan Colportage Association.

THE annual report of this society shows that progress has so far marked the year's operations that the accounts show a surplus instead of a deficit. Four new districts have been opened during the year, a total of fifty-four districts being thus occupied. Work of a substantial character has been done. It is stated that "the total sales amounted to £5,665, and, considering the fact that the increased distribution of low-price books continues as marked as ever, the output of Christian literature by the colporteurs is decidedly good." It is added that the gross profits have increased, while the number of visits from house to house also shows an increase, as well as the public religious services held.

In regard to the need of the work it is said: "In town and village alike we hear of the sacerdotalism which is unblushingly taught from the pulpits of our national church; and full often among the poor and ignorant, as well as the refined, it is with telling effect. We claim that the colporteur holds a unique position in counteracting this serious evil." It is claimed that the work is evangelistic and undenominational. Among the year's sales we note 9,860 Bibles and Testaments; books and packets, 131,517; Scripture texts and cards, 109,238; penny stories, 97,941. The sales from 1866 show a total of £215,989. The year's income, including profits on sales, was £4,306. The expenditure was £4,244. In addition to their sales, the colporteurs circulate a large number of tracts; they paid over a quarter of a million visits, and held over a quarter of a million meetings. The number of wholesome periodicals sold during the year was 243,495.

Field Lane Refuges.

THE many social and religious undertakings which have their headquarters at the Field Lane Refuges, E.C., were vividly described at the annual gathering, which was held at St. Martin's Town Hall.

Mr. Frank Bevan presided, and, after the preliminary exercises, Mr. Peregrine Platt, the secretary, gave a succinct account of the work. The Refuges are not ordinary shelters, where tramps may find accommodation, nor are they common lodging-houses to which applicants are admitted on payment. Admission is free, and those only are received whom misfortune has reduced to destitution and homelessness, and who are really desirous of obtaining work. The Bible Ragged Schools have over 1,000 scholars on the books. Crippled children in the neighbourhood of the schools are regularly visited and cared for. "The evils of intemperance are combated, and 232 pledges have been taken during the year. The Mothers' Meeting is one of the largest in London. Each meeting is, after the sewing is concluded, converted into a religious service, with a Gospel address, and the whole work is distinctively of an evangelistic character. The Ragged Church Mission service, held every Sunday morning at 12 o'clock, has assembled about 400 to 700 of the very poorest homeless men and women regularly for between forty and fifty years."

Archdeacon Sinclair, who followed, referred to the large dimensions to which the work had grown since the time when, fifty-eight years ago, it was founded by the great and good Lord Shaftesbury. Similar work was now being carried on by all the denominations, but this was a work in which he was delighted to find that members of all the churches were taking part.

Words of encouragement were also given by Revs. E. N. Sharpe and W. Pierce, the latter, speaking as a neighbour, bearing witness to the usefulness of the Industrial Home for Boys.

The New Clinical Laboratories, it is very pleasant to observe, recently opened at the Westminster Hospital, will not be used in any way for animal experiments. It is to be regretted that at other leading London hospitals a similar assurance cannot be given.

Gray's Yard Ragged Church.

So quietly is the good work carried on at Gray's Yard that comparatively few people are aware that in its Ragged Church, close to Oxford Street and Mayfair, there gathers every Sunday one of the most remarkable congregations in London. The capacious hall is crowded with an assembly of dilapidated and woebegone tramps, chiefly men, and no one who has witnessed the sight would feel inclined to dispute the aptness of the institution's title.

Doubtless many attend for the sake of the shelter and quiet rest, and others are attracted by the but excellent order is preserved, and the crowd listens with attention while the Gospel is preached.

The annual meeting in connection with this interesting Mission was held on Thursday afternoon last. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and Rev. W. R. Mowll gave a characteristic address. In the report which was circulated, we are reminded that for now sixty-five years a very direct Christian influence has been brought to bear, by means of the Ragged Church, on thousands of the poorest of the London poor. There is much cause for thankfulness to God that He should have put it into the hearts of so many of his children to unite in this service for Him and should have inclined others to provide the requisite funds.

The character of the work continues, as it must necessarily do, very much the same from year to year. The devoted band of workers undertake a difficult and discouraging task; but even amid those who have, it would seem, sunken to signs of blessing are by no means wanting. Various branches of the work continue their useful career. The fourpenny lodging-house is popular, £337 13s. having been paid for accommodation during the year. During the same period the soup kitchen has cooked and sold £300 worth of wholesome food, and out of its earnings has been able to hand £30 towards the general funds. The Ragged School, which is also conducted on the premises, includes in its operations many agencies which make for the well-being of poor children. The hon. secretary is Mr. A. G. Fraser, 22, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.

Open-Air Mission for Ireland.

The following extracts from the journal of one of our earnest helpers show that, although the work is up-hill in many places, the Lord is blessing the efforts of his servants to make known his love:—

"May 21, 1900.—Since this day week we have had the great privilege of preaching the Gospel to thousands of our fellow countrymen. At Waterford, our audience was large, and with the exception of a few lads, most attentive. At Fethard, a very large gathering, absolutely quiet and deeply attentive. Dungarvan, an audience which, for numbers, order, and devout attention, gladdened the preachers' hearts, and caused them to praise God for permitting them to take part in work so glorious. Mountmellick, quiet as ever, and many deeply interested. Tullamore, one of the very best Gospel meetings we ever held in the town. Roscrea, a very large gathering, splendid order (for Roscrea), only one potato thrown (here we have many a time been pelted and stoned!). The potato struck one who was inclined at first to be rowdy, and I fear hurt him; he remained perfectly quiet afterwards. Roscommon, a very large gathering, many feeling apparently the power of the Word. In all these meetings we felt, in a peculiar sense, the Lord's presence, and I cannot doubt that impressions, deep and powerful, were made."

The cost of travelling, which is the only expense on the mission, comes to about £35 a month. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Captain R. Wade Thompson, J.P., Clons Keagh Castle, co. Dublin.

Irish Notes.

Rev. A. P. Cronyn, senior curate of the Cathedral, Waterford, and formerly senior Captain of the 97th Regiment (West Kent), now at the front in South Africa, has been called up for service. Mr. Cronyn having resigned on half-pay, the Government has a claim on him until he is fifty years of age. Great regret is felt by his congregation, to whom he had endeared himself by his zeal and devotion, at his removal, and the hope is earnestly cherished that he will soon be permitted to return to his ministerial work.

The Committee of the Church Missionary Society have accepted offers of service from Rev. Walter Chadwick, son of the Bishop of Derry; from Rev. Thomas Rowan, curate of Delgany; and from Dr. Ashton Bond, a Dublin physician. Mr. Chadwick has had a sister working for some time as a missionary in Uganda.

It is to be regretted that High Church principles appear to be making progress in the South of Ireland. For instance, at a clerical meeting just held in Cork the subject of "Prayers for the Dead" was discussed, and it was "generally agreed (1) that there is an intermediate state; (2) that it is a state of gradual progress; and (3) that progress implies place and scope for prayer;" or, in other words, it was agreed that prayers for the dead were commendable.

The annual Methodist Conference is meeting this week in Belfast, under the presidency of Rev. F. W. Macdonald, of London. Among the delegates attending are Revs. Walford Green and Hugh Price Hughes, of London, and Bishop Hendrick, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church. During the century now closing, in spite of the losses from emigration, Irish Methodism has made vast numerical and material advances. It has doubled its membership and quadrupled its adherents, while its church property has increased fiftyfold. In 1800 it had only one little chapel in Belfast, which would seat perhaps a hundred people; but now it has nearly thirty chapels, with seating accommodation for 25,000 persons, and a splendidly-equipped college, besides numerous day schools. The past year, too, has been one of great spiritual progress; and, altogether, the Conference meets under most encouraging circumstances.

Country Holidays and Outings.

The advent of summer reminds us that many workers in London shops, factories and workrooms, will hope to be taken into the country for a brief holiday; and alas! many will be unable to see the beauties of Nature for more than a day or even an afternoon. In our London Young Women's Christian Association we have over 16,000 members, and we are anxious to enable many of these to spend at least one Saturday afternoon in the country during the next two months. We are thankful to the many friends living near London, who kindly throw open their grounds, and give hospitality year by year to parties of girls, varying from 20 to 100, on Saturday afternoons, and we should be very grateful if more could help us in this way.

We are also anxious to give those a week or a fortnight's holiday out of London who, through low wages, sickness, or trouble, cannot afford to pay for one themselves.

Could anyone help by lending a cottage, or by subscribing to the "Holiday Fund?" Subscriptions of two guineas will entitle to a free holiday of three weeks, or subscriptions of one guinea will entitle to a fortnight's assisted holiday, the candidate contributing five shillings weekly towards expenses.

Miss Butler, 13, Onslow Square, hon. sec. of our "Holiday and Saturday Afternoon" Department, will gladly give any information, and make all arrangements as to trains, numbers, &c.

Scottish Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

An appeal just addressed to Free Church congregations for a collection on behalf of the Colonial Fund, says:—"We have done much for the Colonies, and many rise up and call us blessed for what we have done; but there is great need and a loud call for us to do far more. If the Church would give us the money, we could send men to many fields that are ripe for the harvest. From Canada, Australasia, and South Africa requests for men and money to carry on the great work of bringing the influence of the Gospel to bear on new colonists, many of whom are our own people, come to us in unending succession."

Dr. Ross Taylor, Moderator of the Free Church, drew attention last week, in the Glasgow Presbytery, to an important element in the question of lapsing from church attendance. He said that so far as his own congregations was concerned, the chief trouble arose from the increasingly restless feeling among domestic servants. On account of the frequency with which changes are now made, mistresses allow their servants to go away without taking the least trouble to ascertain where they are going. He thought it was the duty of Christian people to manifest a different spirit, that every mistress ought to interest herself in the welfare of those in her employment, and that their career after leaving should be followed with some measure of interest.

Lord Provost Chisholm presided, a few days ago, over the annual meeting, in Glasgow, of the Religious Tract and Book Society. The report showed that, in addition to carrying into many houses literature which is exercising the very best influence, the colporteurs find frequent opportunities of speaking words of counsel and comfort, and that their visits have been greatly blessed. The number of men on the Glasgow staff is twelve, but the speakers were at one in declaring that this should be immediately increased. Mr. Daniel Graham, 43, Holmhead Street, is local superintendent.

By the death of Mr. James Bruce a prominent figure is removed from Y.M.C.A. circles. His connection with the Glasgow Association goes so far back that several years ago he was presented with an illuminated address on the attainment of his jubilee. Among other offices, he has held those of treasurer and president.

Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

The report of the recent six months campaign has been issued by the secretaries. The city, it will be remembered, was divided into eleven different districts. One hundred and thirty-four united missions of a fortnight each for adults were conducted, utilizing 136 different churches. Eighty-eight united missions of a fortnight each were also conducted for children in 118 churches. Thus it will be seen that 2,488 evening meetings were held, besides gatherings of business men and woman, meetings in public works, &c. Probably no feature of the Campaign was more encouraging than the efforts to reach the children of the city.

The most experienced workers are unanimous in saying that the interest manifested by the young during the campaign far exceeds any previous effort. It is estimated that 8,000 children were nightly gathered together in deep earnestness of inquiry; and the instruction imparted by means of blackboard lessons, "chalk talks," and object illustrations, must have a widespread and powerful influence upon the hearts and minds of those who are to be the citizens of the future.

While it is impossible to estimate the permanent result of the campaign, the immediate benefits of the movement are many. The life of churches which have hitherto taken but little part in evangelistic effort has been quickened and enriched; while workers of almost every denomination have been brought into closer touch and unity with one another in Christian fellowship and earnest soul-saving purpose.

The Deliverance of Abeokuta.

I WONDER if many of you know the story of the wonderful deliverance of Abeokuta, a town in West Africa, out of the hands of a cruel king?

It was in 1863, and war had been raging for some years in the Yoruba country. Several of the native Christians had been massacred; a fear was felt that if the King of Dahomey took the town of Abeokuta the Christians there, 1,500 in number, together with the European missionaries, would share a like fate.

No help was to be expected from England, and Captain Glover, the commander of the English sloops at Lagos, ordered the Europeans to abandon the town. The missionaries, however, felt that they could not leave their converts and determined to remain to the last. The negro tyrant, confident of his own strength, gave orders that Abeokuta should be destroyed and all Christians be put to death, and with this purpose he marched to within five miles of the apparently doomed town. There for sixteen days in March the Dahomian Army lay encamped, and every hour an attack was expected. But none came; and on the morning of the seventeenth day, the camp was found deserted! Like the Syrians of old (2 Kings vii. 6) the Dahomians had fled! and for no apparent cause.

Surely here we have an instance of a wonderful answer to prayer. The danger of the converts had been known in England, and both there and in Abeokuta itself, earnest prayer had gone up to God that He who had delivered Israel out of the hand of Pharaoh (Ex. xiv. 21-31), and Judah out of the power of Sennacherib (2 Chron. xxxii. 21), would also remember his people in Abeokuta. In England the petition was definitely made that the Dahomian army should return to its own land, and, if possible, without bloodshed. It seemed a great thing to ask, but the petitioners knew that it is nothing with God "to help, whether with many or with them that have no power" (2 Chron. xiv. 11), and their faith was justified. The Dahomian army went back to its land without a battle and almost without bloodshed! Truly "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

What God did in 1863 He can do again. His "hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear" (Is. lix. 1); and He who saved Abeokuta can also bring the terrible war in South Africa to a close. Let us remember our great privilege and duty to pray for our officers, soldiers, and for our enemies as well. It is a work in which all can join, children as well as grown-up folk, and surely it is one from which we will not hold back.

We believe God answers prayer,
We are sure God answers prayer,
We have proved God answers prayer—
Glory to his name!

Only One Mother.

You have only one mother, my boy,
Whose heart you can gladden with joy,
Or cause it to ache
Till ready to break—
So cherish that mother, my boy.

You have only one mother who will Stick to you through good and through ill,
And love you, although
The world is your foe—
So care for, and cherish her, still.

You have only one mother to pray
That in the good path you may stay:
Who for you won't spare
Self-sacrifice rare—
So honour that mother alway.

You have only one mother to make
A home ever sweet for your sake,
Who toils day and night
For you with delight—
To help her, all pains ever take.

You have only one mother to miss,
When she has departed from this;
So love and revere
That mother while here:
Some time you won't know that dear kiss.

You have only one mother—just one;
Remember that always, my son;
None can or will do
What she has for you.
What have you for her ever done?

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 24.

Our Eternal Destiny (Matt. xiii. 47-50).

THERE is a contrast, and yet a similarity, between this parable and that of the tares. In the latter we are taught that it is impossible in the present age to separate the evil from the good in the professing Church of Christ. In the former we learn that this separation will be made some day. We are bidden to cast the Gospel net into the sea of men, and take those who come, but every day we are all advancing towards that final discrimination when God will distinguish between good and bad; between those whom He desires to keep for his heavenly kingdom and those whom He will cast away as useless.

In fishing, the net is cast over a wide extent of water, and the fish frisk and frolic, unwitting of the fate to which they are every moment being drawn nearer; but as the fishermen draw in their net they make wild efforts to escape, to learn how sure and inevitable is their approach to the shore. It is thus with ourselves; with an inevitable pressure we are being drawn towards the discrimination of the judgment-seat of Christ.

What a confused mass of dead and living things are brought to shore by a net—weed, mud, shells, unwholesome and unpalatable fish, as well as those which are good for food, lie in a confused heap together. So is it with the professing Church; it embraces every variety of character, some good fish amid a great amount of rubbish, and there is no church, or congregation, or society, in which this mixture does not obtain. But the end is not yet. When the great net of the Gospel dispensation has been drawn to the shore of eternity, the angels will begin their work. With unerring judgment they will separate, and it will be nothing to them that the sea plant is lovely, or the useless fish beautiful in its gleaming colour; these will be certainly rejected, whilst the good fish, even though less beautiful in the marking of their scales, will be carefully gathered in the vessels.

The distinction which separates the good and the bad is determined by the service we can be to God. He wants those who can co-operate with Him in the work of redemption, who are living unselfish and consecrated lives, through whom his Spirit may work for the highest purposes of salvation. Those whom He rejects are selfish, worldly, and sense-bound natures, who have refused to be the implements and instruments of his redemptive purpose. It is easy for each one of us to decide as to which of these two classes we belong to. Have we entered into God's purpose in the life and death of Christ? Do we delight in mercy, self-sacrifice, and holy service? Are we willing to be associated with Christ and his cross and shame? If so, we have the qualities of good fish, and may anticipate the future without fear. If, on the other hand, we are shut up within ourselves, even though it be in the enjoyment of religion, without tears for men's sorrows or yearning for their salvation, we may question whether our lot may not be to be cast away upon the rubbish heap. Ah, what infinite regret, what weeping and gnashing of teeth, will be our portion if such is our irrevocable destiny!

If you are not sure about your condition, direct the eye of faith towards Christ; seek adoption into his family and the indwelling of his Spirit, by which that character is induced which co-operates with God in the salvation of others, and will be classed at last amongst the good fish that angels shall gather for God.

C.E. NOTES.

Wesley's Chapel, City Road, has now been secured for the all-day meetings on Friday, July 13. These meetings will commence at 7 a.m., and continue until 7 p.m., with a different leader every hour. At 7.30 the preparatory sermon will be preached by Rev. A. J. Palmer, of Folkestone.

Lord Kinnaird has consented to preside over the young men's meeting in the camp at Alexandra Park, on Sunday afternoon, July 15.

* * *

We hear that Pennsylvania is sending a delegation to the Convention 400 strong, in their own specially-chartered steamer, whilst the Boston delegates, numbering about 700, will sail from Boston in the steamer Saale, on Tuesday, July 3.

International S.S. Lessons.

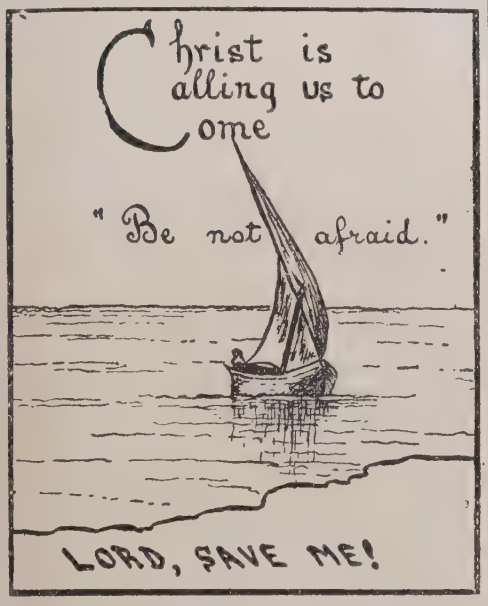
July 1, 1900.

"Christ walking on the sea." Matt. xiv. 22-33.

Golden Text: "Of a truth thou art the Son of God." Matt. xiv. 33.

Introduction.

Immediately after feeding the five thousand (lesson for June 17) Jesus went up into a mountain to pray, and sent his disciples over the sea of Galilee in a boat; they were a long time going, and while it was dark, Jesus came down from the mountain and went to them.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—We are each one on the sea of life in our own boat. Jesus Christ calls us to come his way. He says, "Be not afraid of the storms and difficulties; take me on board your vessel." Shall we not cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, save me, and guide me to the heavenly port."

We will study the lesson in two divisions: 1, Jesus; 2, The Disciples.

1.—Jesus.

Jesus and Prayer.—He was tried, but it rested Him to talk with his Father. Are we not inclined to ask: "Did Christ need prayer?"

THE Holy Christ; was prayer necessary for Him? Hard-worked Saviour; had He time to pray? Heavenly Son of God; should He pray?

We can only answer "Yes," for that is the answer we find proved in the Gospels (see Luke ix. 28; vi. 12; How infinitely much more do we sinners need to be found often at the foot of God's throne in prayer.

Jesus and Loneliness.—The word "alone" comes again and again in our Lord's life (23); "apart," "alone" (Luke v. 16; Is. lxiii. 3, 5; Mark xv. 34; John i. 29). He carried the sin of the whole world alone. It was the heaviest weight ever known; it hurt Him, but He bore it, your sins and mine added to it. Contrast Moses: Num. xi. 14; Deut. i. 9.

Jesus and Kindness.—Kindness is a word we can write across every lesson this year in the Life of Christ (25). He saw his tired, weary disciples (24) storm-tossed, and "toiling in rowing" (Mark vi. 48). Saw them right away up on the mountain and at once came down to comfort and help them (27). "Be of good cheer," wonderful words to put heart into a man. See same words to Paul (Acts xxiii. 11) and to John (Rev. i. 17, 18). "Be not afraid (27), more cheery words. Isa. xli. 10, 13, 14; xliii. 1, 2; lii. 6: "It is I," what more comforting?

2.—The Disciples.

(22) On the Lake, (24) storm, (25) dark (Mark vi. 48). In John vi. 17, it says: "It was now dark and Jesus had not come to them" (It is always dark till Jesus comes).

"The different "watches" were as follows:—The first from six to nine evening; the second, nine to twelve midnight; the third, twelve to three morning; the fourth, three to six morning, so that it was early dawn when Jesus came to his disciples (see Mark xiii. 35 for the four watches).

(24) Tossed about, rough wind. People get into this state now often; this is plainly told in Eph. iv. 14; Jas. i. 6, and until Jesus comes they will continue to be so. When He does come He brings a great calm with Him (Mark iv. 39).

See Peter, always to the fore, ever ready to speak (28-30). Jesus had just said, "Be not afraid," and now the bold apostle is full of fear—and why? He forgot to trust, forgot to keep his eyes fixed on his Saviour (Heb. xii. 2).

Let us pray Peter's words, "Lord save me," and then trust Him entirely to do it.

Jesus had to tell Peter, who thought he was so brave, that his faith was little (31).

"Lord increase our faith," let us not be weak and unbelieving (Mark xvi. 14; Luke xxiv. 25).

Points and Outlines.

The Great Sower.

There is but one true Sower; He hath done
His work for ever, not to be done again.
He sowed, we reap,—'tis well; and yet again
We sow and others reap; so goes the round
Of the great work of God on earth, each man
Knit to the other, and all knit to Him
Who is the centre of all work and life.

Horatius Bonar.

God's Word.

1. It is inspired (2 Tim. iii. 16).
2. We are commanded to search it (John v. 39).
3. Testifies of Christ (John v. 39).
4. Means of growth (1 Pet. ii. 2; Acts xx. 32).
5. Standard of truth (Isa. viii. 20; Acts xvii. 11).
6. Weapon of warfare (Eph. vi. 17).
7. Quick and powerful (Heb. i. 12).
8. It illuminates (Ps. cxix. 105).
9. It converts (Ps. xix. 7).
10. It should be in our hearts (Deut. vi. 6). Dwell richly there (Col. iii. 16).

E. S. Roberts.

The Seed is the Word.

1. What to sow. The Word of God (Luke viii. 11; 2 Tim. iv. 2). Be sure that it is the Word of God you sow.

2. Where to sow. Beside all waters (Isa. xxxii. 20; Ecc. xi. 1). There will be many saints in heaven, never known by the seed-sower here.

3. When to sow. Always, morning and evening (Ecc. xi. 6). Lay hold of every opportunity God gives you; you have but one life to live.

4. How to sow. In faith and hope; God will give the increase (1 Cor. iii. 6, 7). "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy" (Psa. cxxvi. 5, 6). If we would win souls for Christ, we must know what it is to weep for them, also with them (John iv. 35-38; Matt. ix. 37-38).

Seven "I Ams" of Christ.
(In John's Gospel).

1. I am the Bread of Life (vi. 35).
2. ,, the Light of the World (viii. 12).
3. ,, the Door of the Fold (x. 7, 9).
4. ,, the Good Shepherd (x. 11, 14).
5. ,, the Resurrection and the Life (xi. 25).
6. ,, the True Vine (xv. 1).
7. ,, the Way, the Truth, and the Life (xvi. 6).

All these for redeeming and receiving, saving and keeping, unto the uttermost "all who come unto God by Him."

A Questionable Endeavour.

There is no royal road to learning, nor to holiness Sometimes we hear prayer for a baptism of love, a baptism of power, a baptism of patience, and so on. Is not this an endeavour to find a royal road to these graces? But the Divine wisdom and power have made no such path. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. And all these graces are fruits of faith. We are to "add to faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love, which is the bond of perfectness." "Meditate on these things, give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting in all things may appear."

Distressed Governesses.—The Committee of the Jubilee Memorial Fund for Aged and Destitute Governesses have at present a large number of sad applications from ladies who not only lack the necessary means of existence, but are also in too broken a state of health to admit of any hope of even being asked to take an engagement. To afford these afflicted sisters in adversity a few weeks' holiday, it is desired to open a small Cottage Home of Rest, to be conducted on a practically economical basis, similar to that of the Annuity Fund, from which grants are made to twenty-four governesses. The head secretary is Mrs. L. A. Bowman, Woodstock, Riggindale Road, Streatham, S.W.

Other Lands.

In Northern Europe.—I.

By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

THE world is far more "one" than most people imagine. In travelling in Northern Europe I have been more impressed by the similarities of Christian belief, life, labour, and experience in that extensive region with those of religion in England and America than by the differences. God is one, the Bible is one, the Christian spirit is one; and hence, with certain natural and almost necessary variations, the products arising from these deep universal roots are alike. Thus the marked progress which we have seen of late years in the development of Christian agencies, spiritual life, and ecclesiastical liberty in our home lands is plainly discernible in Germany, Denmark, Sweden, and Finland.

During the last few months I have addressed series of meetings in the capitals of all these countries, as well as in St. Petersburg in Russia, and several of the leading cities in the Baltic provinces, and have been impressed everywhere with the recent progress of the work of God. In Germany there is going forward a marked spiritual revival, and hundreds of meetings for Christian fellowship and simple Gospel preaching are being held outside the walls of the stately conservative Lutheran churches all over the country; while of all denominations have been established for the cultivation of brotherly fellowship, the deepening of spiritual life and knowledge, and the widening of missionary interest.

In Denmark within the last twenty years no fewer than 400 halls for Gospel preaching and Christian fellowship have been erected by the Inner Mission. Though connected with the Lutheran State Church, this Inner Mission permits lay preaching in its halls, and associates with it the services of the most evangelical and earnest of the Danish clergy. The importance of this movement is very great, as it extends to every part of Denmark. In Sweden and Norway the number of evangelical Nonconformist churches has greatly increased within the last quarter of a century, and the beneficial effect of their example upon the established church is evident in the higher tone of its ministry and in the multiplication of Sunday Schools and other Christian agencies. In Finland, whose population of two millions is spread over a country considerably larger than England, have been erected in the principal centres, where the Word of Life is proclaimed from week to week to large congregations. Many of the best and most widely known hymns in England and America have been translated into German, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Finnish, and Russian, and are sung by tens of thousands to the tunes with which we are familiar. The convictions and feelings which seek the same expression in all these lands must be the same in their fundamental features. How long will it be before we cease to be national in our ecclesiastical sympathies, and become cosmopolitan? The Christian, as such, is of no nation, tribe, or tongue. The Church of God throughout all the world is one and indivisible, let men call its branches and members by what names they please.

FREE GOSPEL HALLS

After holding daily evangelistic meetings from the middle of February to the middle of March in Berlin and Copenhagen, with the help of Count Bernstorff as a translator, Count Pukler, Count Moltke, and other Christian workers, I proceeded to St. Petersburg, where I was the guest of the Princess Lieven and her excellent sister, the Princess Gargarin, during the month of my stay. Meetings were held every day, and often twice or thrice a day for various classes. These meetings were often crowded, and the Word was received with joy, to the edification and salvation of souls. There is much more of spiritual life in Russia than people in England imagine; for, owing to the restrictive and repressive measures which hinder evangelization and Christian worship among native Russians outside the Greek Church, a veil of silence has to be drawn over the movement in actual progress. I doubt whether there is any European country for which prayer is more needed than Russia; the population is so vast, being at least 120,000,000; the superstitions are so gross, the ignorance of its lower classes so great, the general religious spirit so strong, the bondage of the Church so considerable, and the strength of conviction and moral courage and devotion of the numerous converts to the simple Gospel of the New Testament are so remarkable, and without parallel in other parts of Europe, that prayer for its people has a wider, a more ready and more hopeful sphere, and is more likely to produce far-reaching results of spiritual blessing than similar supplications for any other population in Christendom.

Americans in Palestine.—II.

By REV. C. S. MASON, LL.B.

JERUSALEM to many is very disappointing—a city buried 130ft., crumbling walls, ruins, reminders of the dead past; all the sacred places in charge of the Moslems or the Russian Church—the very air pregnant with Mohammedanism. But we close our eyes to outward scenes, and as we contemplate that his kingdom is not of this world, we forget modern Jerusalem and think of the New Jerusalem, which He has prepared for them that love Him. "Glorious things of thee are spoken, Zion, city of our God."

It is true that the disputed sites, the mooted questions, the many traditions of the Latin Church, and the thousand and one legends, confuse, annoy, and perplex. But Olivet is there, Gethsemane is there, Calvary is there, and Mount Moriah—the undisputed site. Yes, and the mountains round about; these quicken our faith, and we believe. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth and even for ever more." So our hearts rejoice in Him, and the evidence of his redemptive power.

The hope of Jerusalem, yea, the hope of the world, is, the coming again of Christ—no longer the lowly Nazarene, but the Risen Lord and Saviour, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. The seed of the Gospel is being sown; the English Church, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Alliance Mission, and individual missionaries, are spreading the Gospel in Jerusalem.

We fear that the strange doctrines promulgated by the American Colony, through Mrs. Spafford, and her "mouth," as Mr. Jacob Eliahu (a Jew) is called, is contrary to the Gospel of Christ—forbidding to marry, except spiritual marriage; husbands separated from wives, as affirmed by Constantine Antoszevski (and by respectable witnesses in open court), whose story is vouched by the U.S. Consul, Mohammedanism, Catholicism, are bad; but a false religion in the name of Christ is worse.

On Sunday, March 25, a large number, over 200 of English and American citizens, gathered on what is known as "Gordon's" Calvary, about 4 p.m. for a Gospel service. The congregation sang many familiar Gospel songs, "Nearer my God to Thee," "My faith looks up to Thee." Rev. John D. Countermine, D.D., of Topeka, Kansas, gave a brief address on "The Great Preparation for the First Advent;" while Dr. Wilbur Chapman described the significance of the three crosses; and the present writer read Dean Milman's poem, "Bound upon the Accursed Tree." At 8.30 p.m. a memorial service was held in the parlour of the Grand New Hotel, in commemoration of Capt. John Wilson, of Cleveland, Ohio, who died at Jerusalem.

On Monday, the 26th, a cavalcade of fifty horsemen and women started for a camping tour through Palestine. A large outfit was provided—seventy-nine horses, sixty mules, ten donkeys, twenty-six tents, and ninety Arabian servants. When about three-quarters of an hour distant from Jerusalem, a number branched off, and rode to Ramallah, "The Hill of God," and visited the "Friends'" Mission. We felt its benign influence all about. Children cleaner and better behaved; houses and yards more respectable than elsewhere. Here we found a Christian Endeavour Society, the only one in Palestine, composed of twenty-three members, nineteen of whom are taking the Christian Endeavour Bible course of study. Arabian children studying the Bible as a text-book, and taught to put in practice daily the instruction received—a missionary work bearing immediate fruit. A regular Christian Endeavour service was held, conducted by Rev. Dr. Chapman. Appropriate addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Blackburn, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York; Rev. Dr. Gregg, of Chicago, Illinois; and myself.

The Arabian scholars took part, one, eight years old, repeated Matt. xi. 28-30, in English and Arabic. We found the mission building, a large, commodious, stone edifice, with clean dormitories, and finely arranged for the work contemplated. Every member of the American party, who inspected the work, felt that, indeed, missionary effort pays. Such a work is worthy of support, and deserves the prayers and encouragement of God's people.

The day on the shores of the Sea of Galilee was freighted with eternal interests; all the services had for their subject, "Jesus at the Sea of Galilee," and many were called upon to give their "deepest impression," made by the events in the life of Jesus clustering about Galilee. Rev. D. A. Medlar, D.D., of Pennsylvania, spoke of the wonderful influence of Jesus over the fisherman. Follow me, He said, and they left all and followed Him. Rev. Dr. Countermine was impressed with Christ's supreme mastery of the natural world. The elements obeyed Him. Terrible thing to resist such power. The land that rejected Him is desolate. What of the soul that rejects Him? Rev. T. L. Smith was deeply touched with the short, simple prayer by Peter, "Lord save me."—and Jesus did. Mrs. Dr. Young dealt with the human and divine life of Jesus. Rev. Dr. Hodge, of Nashville, Tenn., was struck with the thought that we must think in his vision, as well as walk in his footsteps. The day by the lake He loved abounded in sweet songs and hallowed thoughts, seasoned by his grace.

All along the journey Gospel services were held, in Palestine and Syria, where we found a grand missionary work carried on by the American Presbyterians. Surely the work at Jerusalem, Ramallah, Nazareth (Miss Dickson's school), Damascus, Sidon, Baalbec, Zahleh, and Beyrout is being blessed of God.

Ex-Officers of the Salvation Army.

THE ex-officers of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland have formed an association for mutual help and comfort. In a letter offering to supply all needful information to English and other friends, Mr. E. Armand writes:—"The Association, named L'Amicale (The Friendly), has for its object: (1) To create and to keep amongst the ex-officers of the said organization brotherly and friendly connections. (2) To supply its adherents with information and assistance of every kind. (3) To encourage, both spiritually and morally, those of its adherents who may be passing through special difficulties. (4) To interest itself in the different works in which its adherents are engaged, such as evangelization, missions, temperance, refuges, orphanages, &c.

"The Amicale publishes a monthly organ, L'Amical (The Friendly), price 2fr. yearly, which contains interesting articles by former Salvationist officers, but inserts nothing hostile to the Salvation Army. The need of such an association was obvious, seeing that after leaving the Salvation Army most of the ex-officers do not again meet one another, and many precious connections are thus severed. Many adhesions have been received not only from France and Switzerland, but also from abroad, by the Amicale, during the three months of its existence."

The committee of the association includes ten members, whose headquarters are in Switzerland. Letters to Mr. Armand should be addressed (for the present) 15, Passage Alphan, Paris.

Persecution in China.

CONFLICTING and confusing as the reports from China respecting the "Boxer" rebellion have been during the past few days, the gravity of the situation cannot be said to have been relieved. There is a tendency to doubt or ignore many of these rumours in the absence of official confirmation, but the destruction of telegraphs, &c., have rendered communication impossible.

A message from Hong Kong states that on Wednesday of last week all the foreign buildings at Peking had been destroyed, including various mission houses. The German Minister is said to have been killed, and hundreds of native Christians and servants of foreigners massacred. On Thursday, it is stated, English and American chapels at Tientsin and much Chinese property were destroyed by fire. At Yang-tsun ports there is considerable unrest among the natives. Although there does not appear to have been any actual outbreak, hostilities are threatened by placards calling upon them to "kill and burn," which are posted at Kinkiang, Nanking, and Wuku. From Wuchow comes the alarming news that a body of rioters, 5,000 strong, are at Kwei-hsien, in the Prefecture of Canton. Ten thousand Imperial Chinese troops are said to have been disbanded and joined the rebels.

The increasing distress has given rise to intense anxiety, and much prayer, both public and private, will doubtless be offered that God will, on the one hand graciously protect and succour his people, and, on the other hand, bring out of chaos conditions of peace which shall result in the extension of his kingdom.

Soldiers in South Africa.

CARING FOR THE WOUNDED.

IN a recent letter Mrs. Osborn Howe writes: "Six hundred men are lying sick at Bloemfontein. Halfway between there and the base a hospital and rest camp are opened to receive all who can travel down from the other overflowing hospitals. Here our men are working night and day for the sick and the convalescents. Condensed milk mixed with warm water is supplied in buckets for the sick in the train. How weak and exhausted these are may be gathered from the fact that two were taken out dead, two dying, and twenty-five hopelessly ill, from one train. For the poor convalescents—many of them mere shadows—we are preparing nourishing soup. We are getting our ladies' committee to have warm garments made, as the nights are extremely cold. I know there are many in England who would like to help in this way, but we have so much difficulty and expense in regard to boxes from England that we shall find it easier to use funds entrusted to us. The Lord is blessing the work, and 'out of the mouths of babes'—the young soldier converts—'He is perfecting praise.'"

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

FROM a recent report, it appears that this Mission continues its useful career. It has been opened now over eight years, and one very interesting feature is the correspondence between the missionaries and the seamen who have been blessed at the Rest. Mr. and Mrs. Knapman, who were in England last year on furlough, have now resumed their labours at Zanzibar. On April 1 a new branch of this work was established, about a mile distant from the Rest; this is a Gospel Medical Mission, and is intended to reach the native population, thousands of whom have not yet heard the name of Jesus. Mr. and Mrs. Waugh, who left our shores last year, take charge of this new development; their accounts of the opening services are very encouraging; over 100 Swahili were present, and were most attentive. Mr. Waugh is busy daily attending to the numerous medical and surgical cases; we would ask prayer for this effort to reach those who still "sit in darkness," and for those who have given themselves so willingly and joyfully to this needy island. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, 163, St. George's Street, London, E.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

WRITING from Poona, under date June 1, Rev. Dennis Osborne says:—"The contribution (£1,000) sent in cash is being dispensed for the immediate saving of the perishing around us. It is impossible to convey adequately the expressions of joy and gratitude with which such relief has been, and is being, received by missionaries and others. I have tried to keep in view the entire area of legitimate need in the following order:—(1) Saving of the perishing; (2) relief of the sorely needy; (3) rescue of children and their support; (4) preventive work on a limited and practical scale. I am not overlooking the necessity of reserving a fair share of the bounty in order to help forward the poor cultivator as he staggers to his feet when the rains come. He will need implements, seed to sow, and food to eat before the harvest comes. I hardly dare to speak of cattle, for these have all but perished from the face of the land, and will be costly to replace; hence hand-ploughs must be used largely to begin with, unless Christian beneficence comes still more generously to the rescue. The famine rages like a desolating fire in its train. Six millions on relief, thousands upon thousands dying of starvation or by disease induced by want, jackals devouring corpses that are lying unburied; in some cases beginning their ghastly feast before life is extinct! Can Christian people realize it? Thousands of young waifs of both sexes are wandering about ready to die! Shall they be gathered into Christian asylums, or be snared into living perdition and irretrievable ruin? Blow a trumpet blast so loud and so clear that it may resound through the length and breadth of the land and arouse the Christian people of England! The signs of the expected monsoons are yet distant and feeble. God keep this hapless land if the rains fail or are even delayed."

WITH UNTOLD HORRORS

Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institution, Agra, writes: "We have received from many different quarters appreciative notices of the value of the foods despatched to us. Cholera of a virulent type has broken out in all the famine districts. A panic has seized the workers in the famine camps; every creature who was able to leave ran away, and hundreds of them have been found dead in the jungles. This state of matters was reported to me by missionary friends all over the country, and their statements have been confirmed by Government reports." The Hon. Donald Smeaton, the commissioner appointed by Government to visit all the famine-stricken districts and relief works, reports that at the beginning of May "there were eighty-five millions of people affected by the famine in British India and the Native States, and yet the most trying months of the year were still to come."

FAMINE LEAFLETS.

A Y.W.C.A. secretary writes: "We ordered 200 copies of the leaflets*, and asked our members and friends each to take one and show it to those who had probably heard little of India's deep sorrow at this time, telling them they must bring us back at least one penny for each leaflet. The result has been that to-day we forward £5 for the relief of the famine." Our correspondent adds that she has written the above as "it might be a stimulus to others to do likewise."

FOOD SUPPLIES.

In addition to the amounts already acknowledged, we are pleased to mention that Mr. G. Beddow, of Messrs. G. Beddow and Co., is giving thirty dozen packets of A.B.C. cereals, and Mr. Ernest Carr, of West Walls, Carlisle, forwards cocoa essence and cornflour to the value of £7 10s. 10d.

*These leaflets can be obtained from our publishers at the following rates, post free: 100, 2s.; 500, 8s. 6d.; 1,000, 15s. They will be found very useful for distribution, either privately or at meetings, and cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of all into whose hands they may come.

The Basutoland Mission.

HAVING in 1896 visited Morija, its headquarters, I take a warm interest in the Basutoland Mission of the French Protestant Society. A graphic and instructive summary of its history, from 1833 to 1899, has just been translated from the French by its indefatigable hon. secretary and treasurer in England, Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, 32, Beresford Road, Canonbury, London, N., from whom, or from this office, copies may be obtained, price 3½d. post free. It would be a kindness if some of our readers would order a few and send them to their friends.

It is proposed to hold a sale in the West End, for which cards of invitation will be issued in due time. Contributions or articles for the sale will be gratefully received by Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, at the above address. Contributions sent through The Christian will be acknowledged herein. R. C. Morgan.

Christian Literature Society for China.

AN interesting meeting in connection with this organisation was held recently under the presidency of Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P. The chief speakers were:—Rev. Dr. Glover, of Bristol; Rev. B. Baring Gould (C.M.S.), and Mr. George Jamieson. It was shown that China is virtually governed by the literati, and, could sound Christian literature be diffused among them, much ignorance and prejudice would be removed. The Chinese have most erroneous notions of the intentions of the missionaries. Though there are about 200 different dialects, the written language is the same over the whole empire. There is plenty of scope for literature, but the Gospel should be kept well to the fore. We should sow sound knowledge and sound truth.

Information regarding the Society may be had from Rev. W. Fisher, hon. sec. and treasurer, 146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

A Model City.

PEOPLE living in the Northern States do not usually consider themselves behind the South in matters of progress and material good. Yet I saw a letter from a city called Waycross, Georgia, to-day which would show that the proud inhabitants of the Empire State, anyway would do well to take a leaf out of that Southern State. The writer of this letter says:—

"The population of this city is about 8,000, one-third being blacks. Morally, the inhabitants excel any people among whom I have ever lived. No intoxicants of any kind are allowed in the city or county, and 108 of the 127 counties of the State are prohibition. We have been here now fifteen months, and have not seen one person drunk or heard an oath or filthy word from either white or black!

"The city has five railroads running through it, with about forty trains a day, and yet is so quiet and orderly that every day seems like Sunday. The whites and blacks have separate schools and churches, but all have nice buildings, which are well attended.

"The whites have two Methodist churches, and the Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Wesleyans, and Romanists have one each; and the blacks have three Methodists and three Baptist churches. It is quite safe to say that there is no town of 8,000 inhabitant in New York, Pennsylvania, or Ohio of which such a favourable report could be written."

New York, May 31. Roger Martin.

The Evangelical Church of Italy.

FRIENDS of the Evangelical Church of Italy will be glad to learn that in view of the serious loss it has sustained by the death of Dr. McDougall, pastors, evangelists, and members have come into closer unity and into a more earnest singleness of aim to labour for the advancement of the Church entrusted to their care. "With one heart and with one mind," they are striving together for the faith of the Gospel. At the last general assembly there were present forty-nine pastors, evangelists, and delegates, one of the largest assemblies ever held. The president of the Church is Rev. Ludovico Conti, and the vice-president and secretary for foreign parts, Rev. Cav. Saverio Fera—well-known to friends of the Church in England and Scotland.

About Books.

THE STORY OF CONGOLAND.

IT is only once in a while that one has the pleasure of perusing a story of mission work that can compare in comprehensiveness and intrinsic importance with PIONEERING ON THE CONGO, by Rev. W. Holman Bentley (2 vols. 16s. nett. Religious Tract Society). It seems but yesterday that the civilized world was informed of the greatness of Congoland, its mighty waterways, and its millions of inhabitants. Yet knowledge and interest have steadily grown, and intrepid travellers have written books that have charmed and instructed stay-at-home people. The story is now retold, in impressive detail, from the moral and religious point of view.

The resident has many advantages over the traveller, and it is to one who has long resided in Congoland that we owe this welcome work. In the preface Mr. Bentley reminds us of the judgment, which has been frequently expressed, that the time has come "to place on record an authoritative account of the pioneer work which has been accomplished in the opening up of the Congo Basin, and the remarkable development of that country which has taken place since 1879." As in that pioneering, religious endeavour has moved side by side with material progress, it is well that a Christian missionary should supply the literary lack.

Verily, the progress has been phenomenal. In the words of Mr. Bentley: "Twenty-five years ago the region was unexplored, the 200 miles of cataracts and hilly country, commencing at Matadi (100 miles from the coast), effectively barred all access to the million and a-half square miles of the interior. To-day the region is known and charted over the whole of its area; while Government officers, missionaries, and traders, are carrying on their operations far and wide throughout the country."

THE MAPS WERE BLANK;

This work, which is in every way handsomely produced, some 200 illustrations and maps accompanying the letterpress, opens with a chapter on the ancient history of the region—1484-1670. They were days of Portuguese rule and influence, and Romanism was systematically introduced. Nothing was done, however, to give the Scriptures to the people, and education was altogether neglected; hence the populations were neither enlightened nor elevated. Then came the old slaving days—1670 to 1877—a period in which humanity was sadly wronged in all parts of Africa. In 1878 the Portuguese Government abolished the slave trade in all their possessions—not that the traffic stopped entirely for all that. Meantime, the Dark Continent had been crossed by Livingstone, Stanley, and Cameron; and the Baptist Missionary Society resolved to send the Gospel into the newly-opened field

It was in 1879 (under the auspices of the B.M.S.) that Mr. Bentley went to the Congo; and as he has witnessed the development of the country from that time to the present—political and social reconstruction, he undertakes in these pages a work for which beyond any others he is admirably qualified. He writes with ease and clearness, describing not simply his own operations, but the movement of civilization in its largest aspects. Now, for the first time, we have the story of the people and their language and religion told with interesting fulness. From the beginning it is a record of steady progress, and as one reads of new missionaries entering the field, and fresh stations being planted, one realizes in some measure the devotion of the workers and the blessing which God has accorded to their labours. It is a joy to find among the excellent illustrations striking photographs of many who have laid down their lives in the evangelization of Congoland. Many "of whom the world was not worthy" have done much in a brief space in this region, the diseases of which are gradually becoming better understood by pathological experts. They "being made perfect in a short time fulfilled a long time;" others have entered into their labours, and a native church has arisen for which we do well to give praise to God.

RELIGOUS AND MORAL ELEVATION—

Whether regarded as a compendious record or as a readable description, this is a remarkable work. It does for Congoland what Pastor Coillard has done for the Zambesi country. It deals with things temporal and spiritual, political and religious. Students of missions will here find a concrete instance of a church being planted and developing a large measure of native independence within the compass of a generation. As far as possible, the work of societies other than that with which the author is associated comes in for hearty notice. Those who like excitement will find some in these pages; those who stipulate a fundamental relation to human concerns will find it in every chapter. Over and beyond that, however, the book is a contribution, and an important one, to missionary literature, and we bespeak for it a large circle of readers.

Notwithstanding: An Allegory, by F. G.-B., is a constructive plea for sympathy. (1s. "Home Words" Office.)

Physical culture has its rightful place in educational affairs, and Sports for Boys, by Howard Spicer, is a handy volume in which information on the subject is pithily given. (1s. Melrose.)

In the brief and pithy Life of General Hector Macdonald, by David Campbell, the many notable incidents of this distinguished officer's career receive due recognition. (1s. Melrose.)

Some plain, pointed Gospel messages, and striking narratives of experiences in military life, are published by John Ritchie, Kilmarnock. The British Army, and other series, are suitable illustrated (6d. per 100).

Rev. A. C. Gaebelein, of the "Our Hope" Mission to the Jews, New York, has published Studies in Zechariah (one dollar. Francis E. Fitch, 47, Broad Street, New York City). Passage by passage, the book is carefully and suggestively examined, and the author's interpretations clearly given. Students of prophecy will welcome this little book.

A series of addresses by Rev. A. A. Cooper, M.A., published under the title of God's Forget-me-not, are the fruit of much careful thought, as well as patient study of method in the presentation of Gospel truth to the minds of the young. Each discourse is on a specific and appropriate theme, full of suggestive and winning earnestness. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Mr. Stanley Martin (50, Imperial Buildings, E.C.) has issued a book for the times, entitled Old Paths for a New Century; or, Foundation Truths for the Church of God. (2s. nett.) Fundamental teaching is set forth under twenty-nine heads, styled Articles of Faith, with continual reference to Holy Scripture and generally accepted standards of doctrine.

The poem, Be Filled with the Spirit, recently reproduced in our columns, may be had in leaflet form from the author, Mr. Alfred Walters, Billingsgate Christian Mission, 19, St. Mary-at-Hill, London, E.C. (9d. per 100, post free.) Another poem, on John v. 6, is entitled Wilt thou be made Whole? Many will read these leaflets to spiritual profit.

Real Pictures of Clerical Life in Ireland is a substantial volume of sketches by Rev. J. Duncan Craig, D.D. It was originally issued many years ago, and now appears in a second edition, to tell once more of evangelical testimony borne years ago in the Sister Isle, under social and political conditions that were trying in the extreme. The chapters number seventy, and they describe persons and incidents of great interest, and typical of Irish life and character. (6s. Elliot Stock.)

We have from time to time spoken of the helpful character of the writings of Mr. James Van Sommer—always loyal to Scripture, and characterized by that insight which comes of deep acquaintance with revealed truth. A work recently issued, entitled Free Scripture Studies and Free Christian Service, is designed especially to help young Christians. The pages embody the thought and experience of fifty years, and we trust they will have many readers. (Paper covers, 2s.; cloth, 3s. The Author; "Cuffnells," Wimbledon Common.)

The Curse of Manhood. It is a remarkable proof of the great value attached to Mr. Henry Varley's lectures to men that another edition, making the 170th thousand, has just been published. Written with great care and chasteness of expression, this pamphlet of about 80 pages contains information which should be in the possession of young men everywhere. Indeed, for men generally, this lecture is of the highest moment. It is not matter for surprise that Canon Wilberforce has written "Henry Varley's grand lecture." The author has received more than 20,000 letters of thanks and inquiry from men in all positions of society in connection with this vital subject. (6d. Alfred Holness.)

Who's Who is an annual dictionary of great value in the office and of interest in the home. For over fifty years it has been appearing, and satisfying the inquiries of the newspaper reader and the man of affairs as to the social, educational, and professional connections of authors, politicians, and other men and women of name and note. Year by year new features have been adopted, and the issue for 1900 has 1,100 full pages. There are preliminary tables and lists that will decide a thousand questions, the lists including one of pseudonyms and pen-names, and another (a welcome feature) of proper names peculiarly pronounced. The biographies are, of course, brought up to date, and they include the names of quite recent accessions to the roll of fame. (3s. 6d. nett. Adam & Charles Black.)

Personalia.

Dr. A. T. Pierson will occupy the pulpit of Bloomsbury Chapel during the month of August.

Dr. Thornton is resigning the See of Ballarat which he has occupied for a quarter of a century.

Rev. F. C. Spurr is leaving England on June 25 and will not be back until the first week in September.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke is to spend the month of August in Newfoundland, on behalf of the Colonial Missionary Society.

Rev. John McNeill is planning to spend July at Spittal, Berwick, and is expected to preach in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church on the Sabbath.

Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler, secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association, is making satisfactory progress towards recovery, and hopes to resume his official duties in a few days.

Rev. Jas. Watkin, minister of Prince's Road Church, Liverpool, for the past eight years, has accepted the invitation to succeed Rev. J. Tolefree Parr in the pastorate of Surrey Chapel, London.

Owing to failure in health, Mr. W. T. Piper, who has been associated with the West London Mission from its commencement, has, under medical directions, decided to proceed to Australia.

Many will hear with regret that Mrs. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, Haifa, Mount Carmel, has passed away. Mr. Joseph, who is at present at Liverpool, is in very poor health.

Rev. W. R. Skerry, after a pastorate of eleven years, has resigned the charge of the Baptist Church in Denmark Place, Camberwell. He has undertaken service in connection with the Baptist Union and its Fund for Assisting Aged Pastors. This Fund has not been equal to the demands made upon it in recent years, but it may now be expected to make greater progress.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Midlane celebrate their golden wedding next year, and some friends are hoping to raise a testimonial fund in recognition of the occasion. For over fifty years Mr. Midlane has been a constant Sunday-school teacher and preacher of the Gospel; but he is, of course, best known as a hymn writer. His composition, "There's a Friend for little children," has been translated into various languages, including Chinese.

The Red Marked Testament.

PRAY allow me the great privilege of announcing that there will be a French edition of the Red Marked Testament issued very early in July by the Oxford Press, at Amen Corner, London, E.C.

This special effort has been induced by the opening of the Paris Exhibition; and one gentleman, hearing of it, has ordered 10,000 copies to be sent at his expense to the McAll Mission in Paris.

Many English exhibitors may be glad to promote the circulation of this excellent and complete copy of the New Testament in the French language.

Dublin Believers' Meetings.

THESE gatherings were held last week at the Merrion Hall, and from commencement to close proved a season of great spiritual refreshment. The leading feature in the addresses was the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. The foreign mission field was represented by friends from Central and North Africa, China, Straits Settlements, and South America; and it was very pleasant to see friends from England, Scotland, and the country parts of Ireland.

Jewish Holiday, Sick, and Fresh-Air Fund.

THE Committee of the Foreigners' Branch of the London City Mission warmly thank your readers who last year helped them in relieving distressed poor families in the winter, and in sending during the summer over 2,500 weakly people and ailing children for a day, a week, or a fortnight to the country or seaside—an unspeakable boon, as many letters received by the Society's seven missionaries to the Jews testify. There is much sickness among the Jewish little ones in our great "East End," and the Committee are arranging to send as many away as they are able this summer from "Slumdom" to pure air. Mr. F. A. Bevan is treasurer, and Mr. Jas. Dunn the secretary, 3, Bridewell Place, London, E.C.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE prayers that have ascended on behalf of this work are being abundantly answered. The closing meetings at Edmonton were times of blessing. The Rector of the parish gave a lessed testimony to work in the tent. His own son ad been savingly converted, and had decided to give is life to preaching the Gospel.

The closing meeting at Ilford on Thursday last was haracterized by thanksgiving, those present mani-esting pleasure at what their eyes had seen of revival. n particular, a number of ladies gave thanks that so any of the girls in their Bible classes had found the aviour. Forty or fifty persons rose to signify that they ad sought the Lord during the past month in this tent. large number of girls from Dr. Barnardo's Homes who were unable to attend the gathering) had also eceived blessing.

At Wood Green the Brothers WEAVER commenced week of services on Sunday last. The tent was rowded. Mr. Bewley's subject was "Repentance." good number of persons were dealt with in the nquiry room that was formed by drawing a curtain cross one portion of the tent. Friends from the ospel Hall and the Congregational Church gave aluable assistance.

The work at Stratford goes steadily forward. The ast week has been a memorable one. It is encouraging o see the crowds thronging the tent on week nights. Iundreds of working men attend and show willingness o hear the Gospel. Mr. CHARLES INGLIS and Miss NGLIS were preaching and singing in the tent during he week, and God has owned his Word. The inquiry oom has been filled with men and women seeking the aviour, and the workers have been greatly cheered at he many whom they have been the means of leading o Christ.

Fulham Tent was opened on Saturday evening last. n Sunday, Mr. W. R. LANE commenced a week of ervices. Mr. LEONARD WEAVER and Mr. W. S. VEEDEN (the American singer) were there also on unday. The tent was filled, and many came to the aviour. A lady said that she had been praying for he mission, but she had no thought that her own aughter would be among the first to come out and ive herself to Christ. Lady HOPE rendered good ervice in dealing with the anxious.

At Clapton, Mr. ROWLAND EDWARDS and other iends have been labouring. The evening service was time of refreshing, quite a number openly confessing esus. A mother came with her two children to the ont of the platform seeking salvation. It was very ouching also to see a brother and sister coming hand hand, and taking the penitents' place. Many seekers ame forward, and hundreds stayed until after ten clock. Clapham Road meetings are described as a ontinuous scene of awakening. Under the ministry of he Brothers Weaver numbers have sought the Lord. n Wednesday night a gentleman was passing on the ar on his way to commit suicide. He said God led im to alight and enter the meeting. The Holy host convicted him of sin and of God's great ve, and he yielded there and then. He had tempted suicide three times, only to be mercifully revented, and ultimately saved.

At Harlesden, Mr. JOHN T. VINE preached on unday last, and the power of God was manifested in he conviction and conversion of a large number. Ir. W. R. LANE had conducted services during the eek, the meeting growing in numbers night by night. vidently the "deep ploughing" of the preaching ad much to do with the ingathering of Sunday.

Mr. N. GOAD has had some remarkable experiences Wimbledon. One night two friends followed him he left the tent, one of them yielding to Christ on he spot. An aged couple, for whose salvation their mily had been praying that very day, both sought he Lord. The work here is solid and growing in terest. On Sunday Mr. and Mrs. HARRISON and Mr. RADBROOK were preaching, and there were several nteresting cases of conversion.

The office of the London Tent Campaign Committee is at 1, Gresham Street, E.C. A. G.

☞ "Under Canvas" is the title of a new alfpenny periodical, issued in order to give detailed escriptions of the work in connection with the ondon Tent Campaign. The first number contains, addition to pithily written accounts of revival cenes, and remarkable conversions, articles cal-ulated to prove stimulating to workers, and also a rief life-sketch, with portrait, of Mr. Leonard Veaver. Under Canvas is to be issued fortnightly. Morgan & Scott.)

A Mission in Cornwall.

The Canon Missioner of Truro (Canon HOSKYNS) has completed an itinerant mission in the china-clay district of Cornwall. He was assisted (says the Western Morning News) among others by a son of the Bishop of Exeter, Rev. CYRIL BICKERSTETH, and a son of the first Bishop of Truro, Rev. HUGH BENSON, who came down specially to devote themselves to this work. The mission lasted three weeks, the principal feature being midday services at the clay pits. These were readily attended by the men, with the full consent and encouragement of the "Captains," who, although many of them are Nonconformists, readily made preparations for the purpose. Open-air and other services were held in the different hamlets. The people everywhere listened to the message with an interest and attention which has been very encouraging.

A six-weeks' tent mission has been held at Lower Sydenham by Mr. W. COLLARD, sailor evangelist, with encouraging results. Backsliders have been restored, and those who have not attended a place of worship for years have been deeply convicted.—Mrs. JENNIE WALKER conducted a Gospel temperance mission at Brentwood last week. Her earnest efforts were the means of blessing.

The Magic Lantern Mission. — The work of this organization continues to prove useful in attracting large audiences to Gospel services, especially at the hall in Bristol, which is situated amid a dense working-class population. The hall is too old for further use, and it is hoped to erect new and more commodious premises before the commencement of next winter's work. The cost of site, large hall, and schoolrooms, &c., is estimated to amount to £3,000. The founder and hon. secretary is Mr. William Stewart, 6, Waverley Road, Redland, Bristol.

A Temperance Appeal.

PRESIDING at the public demonstration in connection with the World's Temperance Congress, the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY delivered an address on the progress of the temperance movement.

Dr. Temple said that he had prepared the message practically to the whole world, to all who had any sense of duty, to all who cared for their fellow-creatures. The progress of the movement had not only been conspicuous in the growing number of its supporters, but also in the successful manner in which it had coped with argument after argument against it. He could remember and the sneering smile, and then they faced the more serious arguments when insurance societies hesitated to insure the lives of abstainers. But now they never heard that argument. He had quoted in the House of Lords some statistics prepared by Mr. Whittaker, and had said that even the lives of licensed grocers were not so long as those of unlicensed grocers, and he had had letters daring him to say it again. Well, he would say it again, and on good authority. The Associated Scottish Life Offices, after a careful inquiry, stated that the rate of mortality among unlicensed grocers in Ireland was 16.8 per 1,000, and among licensed was 22.8; in Scotland, unlicensed 12.0 per 1,000, and licensed 17.0. These statistics showed that shortening of life went on with increase of sale, and yet the Legislature stood aloof and made no movement. They might stop all other dangerous trades, but this one thing was to have an immunity, and they were to behold it pursuing its dangerous course.

THE AGE OF RIDICULE,

We must, the Archbishop exclaimed, repeat the argument. We have a plain task, and we have a complete answer; and whether we stand on moral or scientific grounds, we are satisfied with our position, and know it is impregnable. But the one foe was the indifference of men to one another's welfare. It was terrible to contemplate; it was astonishing that there should be any who said it was nothing to them. He knew there were good men who stood aloof, and who could not see what others saw, and were shut up to their own personal experience; but it was terrible that Christians could go on disregarding the very spirit of Christ's teaching, and say, "What is the misery of my brother to me?" The task lay before the temperance workers of making them feel the terrible evil; they must seek to surround the victim of intemperance with sympathetic help, and to remove the terrible mass of temptation. As a minister of the Gospel, he said this was their imperative duty. He called upon every man who desired to do his duty to study this question, and if only temperance workers would hold on their course and march steadily together, he had little doubt but that their cause would prevail, for he was certain God had blessed it.

Mr. Sankey's Movements.

MANY will be glad to learn that Mr. Ira D. Sankey is getting quite a number of invitations from friends in England to hold his "Service of Sacred Song and Story." Among the places already booked are Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Dublin, Belfast, Bath, Bristol, &c. Towns and cities wishing a visit should communicate with us without delay.

English Theatrical Women in Paris.—Mr. William Forbes writes that distress has been caused by the bankruptcy of a theatrical manager. Several English women were left penniless. They had been on half pay for some weeks. Mr. Forbes has been able to make arrangements to help some in distress, and also to hold Gospel meetings in connection with his work for theatrical women. Dr. Anderson, at whose house these gatherings were held, and who gave medical advice and medicines where needed, has been enabled, through the generosity of an American lady, to provide food for the hungry until they are able to leave Paris.

Obituary.

REV. A. BEN OLIEL.

MANY will hear with sorrow that Rev. A. Ben Oliel, for over fifty years missionary to the Jews, and some years resident in Jerusalem, has passed away. After a period of weakness in the United States, he expired on June 1. He has left a widow and a large family. Some of the children are still too young to fight the battle of life. The Jewish Herald says: "We deeply sympathize with Mrs. Ben Oliel and family in the great loss they have sustained. May the Lord guide, comfort, and sustain them in their sorrow. May the Lord send help speedily for the widow and orphans is our prayer."

REV. T. D. PHILIP.

The death at Graaf-Reinet of Rev. Thomas Durant Philip, B.A., removes one of the most respected names from the missionary roll of South Africa. He was the son of Dr. John Philip, who in the early years of this century wielded so much influence in Cape Colony. Born in Capetown, he was educated in England, but left in 1844 for India, having been appointed to labour at Calcutta in connection with the L.M.S. However, it was not deemed advisable for him to proceed farther than the Cape, and for more than half a century he laboured in South Africa. More recently he was minister of the native church at Graaf-Reinet, and later a tutor at Lovedale.

DR. BEHRENDS, BROOKLYN, U.S.A.

Many readers at home and abroad will share the sorrow felt throughout the United States at the death of Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D.D. A son of a Lutheran minister, he early associated with the Baptist body, and later joined the Congregationalists, holding pastorates in which he did good service.

In 1882, he was called to the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn, where he ministered until his death. Keenly sensitive to changes in theological belief, and instinctively conservative, he cherished warm sympathy with Christians of widely different views. Dr. Behrends has left a lasting impression as a minister of the Gospel, and a defender of the evangelical faith.

THE EARL OF AIRLIE.

News of the death of this nobleman, who was killed while fighting near Pretoria, on Monday of last week, has occasioned heartfelt sorrow in both military and civil circles. His services to his country have been conspicuous, and his interest in the highest welfare of those under his command has never faltered under the severest circumstances. A few days before his death the Earl, as Camp-Commandant, opened the Enslin Camp in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association. He himself supported two readers—one for his former regiment, the 10th Hussars, and one for the 12th Lancers, of which detachment he was colonel at the time of his death. He served during the Afghan War of 1878-9, and also took part in the Soudan and Nile Expedition, and was wounded at Abu Klea and El Jubat. He went out to South Africa in October, and was wounded early in the campaign.

REV. R. GILLESPIE, SEN.

Intelligence has been received of the death by cholera of Rev. R. Gillespie, sen., Irish Presbyterian Missionary in India. For some time Mr. Gillespie had been acting as Vice-President of the Government relief works at Borsad, in which capacity his common sense and administrative abilities were highly appreciated. Mr. Gillespie had an almost perfect knowledge of Gujarati, and last year he preached the Gospel in some eighty towns and villages. He had been nearly thirty-two years in India, where his eldest son is also a missionary, and his eldest daughter is the wife of another missionary. It will be remembered that some months back we printed a communication from Mr. Gillespie, descriptive of the relief operations at Borsad. In addition to his efforts in connection with government work, Mr. Gillespie toiled devotedly in connection with rescue of orphans.

REV. C. STEWART THOMPSON.

This esteemed worker, whose sudden death is announced, was a pioneer missionary among the Bhils of Rajputana for nineteen years and a-half, working under the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Thompson won the confidence of the timid and suspicious hillmen by his unceasing labours for their good and by his residence in their jungles and villages. He established twelve elementary schools, and did a great deal of simple doctoring. He studied their language and published a Bhil grammar. He refused to take furlough to England until, after sixteen years' exposure to weather and rough fare in the Bhil jungles, broken health compelled him to go. On his return to India, finding the Bhils threatened with famine, with characteristic energy he threw himself into measures for their relief. He turned all his schools into relief centres, chiefly for children. He opened out new centres, and early in May the number being fed daily was 5,000. He died of cholera about May 19 while visiting his kitchens in the Idar State, and was buried at Kalbay, a village in the midst of the Bhils.

Church of England.

By an error it was stated in this column last week that the Bishop of Sierra Leone had spoken at a missionary gathering at Barnet. Dr. Taylor Smith is not at present in this country.

The Bishop of Marlborough has resigned the office of Bishop-Suffragan in the diocese of London, which he has held since 1888. He will retain the title by which he has hitherto been known, and will continue to be rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate. Bishop Barry, who has frequently taken the Bishop of Marlborough's place during the latter's illness, will now succeed him in the permanent charge of the West London deaneries as assistant bishop, but without any territorial title.

The annual Conference of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union of clerical and lay members of the Church of England, held in York, was attended with blessing. The sermon of Professor Moule, on Phil. iii. 3, gave a high spiritual tone to the proceedings. The papers of Professor Moule and Rev. W. R. Whately, on "The Church as Visible and Invisible," were valuable. The Dean of Norwich spoke on "The Duty of Evangelical Churchmen;" and Rev. Dr. Hughes-Games followed on the same subject. Professor Margoliouth's address, on "The Written Word as the Rule of Faith," was full of thought. Rev. W. Odom, Vicar of Heeley, Sheffield, was unanimously elected president for the ensuing year.

Speaking at a recent meeting of the Ladies' League, Lady Wimborne said the League believed that Ritualism could be overcome, not by agitation, but by education, and they proposed to arrange for about 200 lectures to be given during next winter. The Bishop of Sodor and Man said the League had been formed not a moment too soon. Liberty was one thing, but license was another, and in his opinion the limits of comprehensiveness had long since been overstepped. Just now England thought of nothing but news from South Africa, but when the strategy of Lord Roberts had been crowned with final success the attention of the people would be drawn to this matter, and unless the Protestant character of the Church was maintained they would rise in rebellion against the Establishment.

Congregational.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's thirty-first anniversary of settlement as pastor of Latimer Chapel, East London, was celebrated on June 14, Rev. E. T. Egg, of Woodford, presiding. Mr. T. Clark, secretary, presented a report of the results achieved during the ministry, referring expressly to the Pastor's East London Mission and relief work.

At the Wycliffe demonstration at Lutterworth, arranged by the Young People's Department of the Twentieth Century Fund, there was a large attendance. Rev. H. E. Brierley, of Leicester, presided over a meeting which crowded the Congregational Church. After hearing an address from Dr. Guinness Rogers, the friends visited the church, and examined the many relics of Wycliffe.

On behalf of the Liverpool Board of Congregational ministers, Rev. George Brock has addressed to the Bishop of Liverpool an expression of the great pleasure with which they join in the general welcome given to him on his consecration to the high office of Bishop of the diocese. Although they belonged to another Christian communion they rejoiced to recognize in Dr. Chavasse a firm supporter of those great principles of Evangelical religion they held most dear, and they felt that, beneath all the differences which separated them from the Established Church of the country, there was an agreement as to the great truths of their common Christianity which was of far greater moment than all the questions which divided them.

Baptist.

Mr. Geo. J. S. Sherrell, of the Baptist College, Manchester, has accepted a unanimous call to the church at Chepstow, Mon., and hopes to commence his ministry on August 5.

Two large congregations assembled at the East London Tabernacle on Sunday last. Mr. Henry Varley was the preacher. The service at night was felt to be one of peculiar solemnity and power. In the after-meeting quite a number confessed their reception of the Word of Life.

In the course of his inaugural address as Moderator of the Lancashire and Cheshire Association, Rev. F. Overend, of Bacup, said that the Baptist Twentieth Century Fund represented a great forward movement in the denomination. The raising of the fund was a recognition of what they owed to God, to their fathers, their principles, and their country. The historical place of the Baptists was an honourable one, and they must be determined that in the new century their place should not be less, but greater.

The anniversary services of the church at Westcliff (Pastor A. C. Sidey) were held on Sunday, June 10. In the morning Mr. Dickens (missionary from Egypt, and formerly pastor of Herne Bay Baptist Church) preached. In the afternoon Mrs. Dickens gave an account of her work amongst the Egyptian children to the scholars, and in the evening Pastor W. J. May, of Rayleigh Tabernacle, occupied the pulpit.

The lease of Dugdale Street (Camberwell New Road) chapel and schools expires in June, 1901. The freeholders have promised to extend the lease for another twenty-one years at the same ground rent—£7 10s. per year—and have promised to give the free use of the chapel and schools for that period, without rent, providing the buildings are renovated, which will cost about £100. If the necessary funds are not obtained, the buildings will go over to the freeholders. It would be a matter for regret if the buildings (worth £3,000) are lost for want of £100 to spend upon them. The address of the pastor, Rev. John Waite, is 2, Foxley Road, Brixton, S.W.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan Soldiers' Homes at Aldershot are being put to great use at the present time by the many thousands of troops with whom the camp is filled. Probably never since their erection have they been better attended or the centre of so much spiritual blessing. Including Pirbright, which is in the Aldershot command, though several miles off, there are four Homes, and each of them is crowded with soldiers each evening, Sundays included.

A new Wesleyan chapel has been erected at Branscombe, in the Devon and Dorset Mission. For some years the old chapel has been condemned in the heart and mind of the worshippers, as well as by the ominous cracks in the walls, and at length it was determined that there should be a building in Branscombe worthy of Methodism. Under Rev. Arthur Martin the scheme was commenced and has been brought to a most successful issue. Many incidents of self-sacrificing devotion might be given illustrating the earnestness of the people in the matter.

Rev. G. S. Hornsby is the newly-elected president of the Methodist New Connexion. In the course of his presidential address, he said that at the close of the first century of their Connexional life their Connexion showed no signs of old age, and the opening years of the second century were brighter and fuller of promise than any of the years of the past. The flowing tide was still with them. God's blessing had rested upon the faithful preaching of the Gospel, and they returned increase upon increase.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Watson preached at the opening of a new church at Wallasey. The building, which provides accommodation for 425, is intended to take the place of the old mission hall established twenty-five years ago by the late Mr. E. Billington. The mission will be in charge of Rev. Matthew Muir.

The removal of Rev. Henry Crombie from Finchley to Liverpool, as pastor of Fairfield Church, is a loss to the Presbyterian community in the North of London. Mr. Crombie was the first pastor of the church at Finchley, and under him it has made good progress, and now a second church has been established at Muswell Hill.

Speaking at a gathering of North Wales Association of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist body, Rev. D. Lloyd Jones said the number of communicants had trebled during the last sixty years, but he often doubted whether they followed the steps of their forefathers in seriousness and consecration. Intellectual and spiritual energy was wasted on too many things, instead of being used to advance religion and purity in the country.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Liverpool, Rev. S. R. Macphail, moderator, in the chair, Rev. Dr. Johnson said he thought it right that they, as part of a great Christian brotherhood, should notice the death of Dr. Ryle, the first Bishop of Liverpool. They were all agreed he was always standing for the old faith and ever ready to defend the truth as once delivered to the saints. It was equally fitting and becoming in them to give a kindly welcome to the successor of that good man. The Bishop, who had recently come into their midst as a spiritual force, would do work in lifting up and in sweetening the spiritual life of Liverpool, of which there was very much need. Rev. William Watson warmly seconded the resolution, and it was unanimously adopted.

Open air work continues to make progress at Marylebone Church (Rev. Dr. Hanson). In addition to the usual services at the corner of Edgware Road, conducted by Rev. J. Telfer on Sunday afternoons, meetings have also been commenced at the close of evening service. A special feature of these services is the singing, under the direction of Mr. A. R. Musgrave, the organist and choir-master, who is an enthusiastic evangelistic worker. This supplementing of the ordinary church services meets with the cordial appreciation of Dr. Hanson, affording as it does another outlet for the activity of the workers, as well as bringing the Gospel into contact with the vast crowds who throng the Edgware Road on Sundays.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. JAMES FORBES, of Cults, who was Moderator of Cupar Established Presbytery, died on June 9, after a short illness brought on by apoplectic seizure.—Aged eighty, Rev. JAMES DUNCAN, of Penicuik.—Mr. J. M. COOK, for many one of the deacons and treasurer of Salem Baptist Church, Cheltenham.—Aged sixty, Rev. EDMUND TEBB. He entered the Free Methodist ministry in 1863. In 1890 he was compelled permanently to give up active service.

Bible Flower Mission.—The superintendent of this Mission (Mrs. W. W. Turton, 110, Cannon Street, E.C.) writes:—"The season for gathering grasses to store for winter use has again come round. People have little idea how valuable they are, especially when properly dried before being sent to the depôt. Text-holders, flowers, green, and wool are in perpetual demand during the summer, and cards are always welcome. We shall be glad to receive lavender bags for the invalided soldiers now in Netley Hospital."

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

AS a striking illustration of the power possessed by the liquor traffic, we notice with pain and indignation Mr. Balfour's reply, given on Monday night, declining to give facilities for passing the Bill for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to children under sixteen years of age. To affirm that the measure is a controversial one is to misrepresent the vital issue, and practically to ignore the supreme importance of the Bill. To state this, in the face of the expressed conviction of nearly 200 members of the House that the Bill should be passed in the interests of the children of the nation, shows clearly that there must be other reasons which possess the mind of the Government.

What are these reasons? Is the principal one to be found in the power which the liquor traffic as such possesses in view of the general election? When we recall the speech of the Prime Minister in the House of Lords, and his contemptuous references to the heroic band of temperance reformers, we are dismayed. The question is forced upon us by the recent utterances of our Governmental leaders; and we ask, are they making a bold and dishonourable bid for the solid vote of the most powerful monopoly that this country knows—a vast vested interest which is doing more to degrade and demoralize the people than all other businesses put together?

It is with hearty sympathy that we commend the following, quoted from "Facts and Opinions on the Sale of Drink to Children":—

There are many men and women who send their children regularly to public-houses for the dinner and supper beer, who seldom or never enter such places themselves, and who scarcely realize what is to be met with inside. To such we would commend the description of a thriving public-house presented to us in the pages of The Times newspaper: "For a scene of horrid vice, and filth, and lust, and fury, all drawn into one point and there fermenting, a man might search the world over and not find a rival to a thriving public-house in a low gin-drinking neighbourhood. Is it, then, astonishing that of such scenes as these an eminent judge should say that the working-man often enters a public-house respectable and leaves it a felon?" Such testimony, in addition to what the following pages afford, will, it is hoped, be a convincing reminder to thoughtless parents of the unsuitable associations of the public-house, at any rate so far as their own boys and girls are concerned.

The crisis in China has evoked a widespread newspaper correspondence upon the question of Christian Missions in that benighted country. A large number of correspondents seem to take it for granted that the riots in China are due solely to the presence of Christian missionaries, and in many cases the letters published demand the recall of the missionaries as the only solution of the difficulty. Mr. David Christie Murray has the place of honour given to him by a London daily, and he devotes an entire column to preaching against Christian Missions in inner China. Mr. Murray declares that he does not assail the principle of Christian Missions, but he uses specious arguments against their continuance in China, since the Chinese evidently do not care for the truth of the Gospel.

On the other hand, Mr. Stevens, the clerical secretary of the North China Mission, writes:—

One thing is certain with regard to the serious trouble now distressing all who have interests in China, and that is that whatever happens diplomacy cannot withdraw its official representatives, nor will commerce withdraw its traders. There is another thing equally certain—Christians must not withdraw their missionaries.

It would be well for Mr. Murray and all who think as he does to ponder this sentence. The Boxer objects to the foreigner because he is a foreigner, whether he be merchant, missionary, or diplomat: it is the West that he hates. Yet correspondents who clamour for the recall of missionaries are silent about the recall of merchants and diplomats; they are willing to go to war in order to retain these in China. They would have the Gospel withdrawn from China, whilst men who are after gold must remain at all costs.

Meanwhile, the state of China is fast becoming revolutionary, and there is no doubt that a very large number of Christian workers, if not the whole of them throughout the empire, are in imminent peril. The blind fury and shameless cruelty of a Chinese mob are proverbial. It is surely the duty of all Christian people to send up unceasing prayers to God that the present turmoil of passion, which has seized those teeming millions, may be overruled for good, and its very hindrances be transformed into a means of furthering the Gospel. It has often happened so before, and we earnestly hope it may prove so again. The danger of European complications is another peril to be remembered in prayer, especially when the binding sense of a common danger will have given way to the realization of conflicting interests.

Britain, truly, has her hands full just now in a diplomatic and international sense. The still unfinished war in South Africa, the Ashantee rising, the Chinese imbroglio, and the Indian famine, are troubles each of which would be enough to deal with singly; but in combination they threaten to tax our utmost resources. We are reaping one of the penalties of a world-wide empire in being thus engaged in so many parts of the world at the same time. The demands made on the national self-restraint, generosity, and public spirit are not without their high moral and spiritual aspects. How a people, like an individual, behaves under clouded skies, and in the face of sudden and complicated difficulties, is one of the tests of its greatness; and the magnitude of our present troubles is a measure of the demands made on our highest qualities.

For nations as well as individuals the hour of judgment comes, and it verily appears as if the European Powers are now to be brought to answer for sins of past years. So-called Christian nations have set at nought the rights—physical, moral, and spiritual—of non-Christian peoples, who now in China turn upon their oppressors with terrifying effect. As for ourselves, we may speedily reap what we have sown in connection with the opium iniquity. The Chinese people are what they are largely through our action. We forced upon them opium from India; they adopted the pernicious habit, and for years have produced the drug for themselves. They despise us, our missionaries and philanthropists notwithstanding, and would massacre us, or thrust us forth as "foreign devils."

Lord Salisbury's striking appeal to missionaries at the Bicentenary meeting of the S.P.G. contained certain important points that are not often brought home to the minds of their supporters at home. The contrast he drew between the moral influence of the ancient pioneer missionaries, who went forth into unknown dangers, prepared to accept martyrdom without hope of ever being avenged by their countrymen or co-religionists, and the reprisals and "concessions" for outrages on them immediately demanded nowadays by Christian Powers, is one that accounts for a great deal of the present trouble in China, and gives colour to the coarsely hostile attitude of the Chinese to all missionary work. The lesson, though a painful and difficult one, is obvious. The appeal to the secular arm on the part of the friends of missionaries must be discounted, and the prudence and tact advocated by Lord Salisbury, who is evidently sympathetic with missionary effort, in spite of his Foreign Office experience, must be cherished as the highest safeguard, next to devotion and faith, possessed by the servant of Christ in the foreign fields.

The Premier counselled prudence, on the ground that the position of the missionaries is closely mixed up with that of secular powers, and because the secular powers, in justice to their own subjects, cannot allow their death to go unavenged. The question raised by Lord Salisbury is complicated and grave. He might, and should, we think, have gone much farther, and have spoken about the way in which much of the business is carried on by the Europeans who follow in the wake of the missionaries: the shoddy stuff that is sold to heathen because they are heathen; the introduction of vile and deadly drinking customs; and the conduct of the settlers in foreign lands—things which make the foreigner suspect our good faith. The natives class all Europeans alike, and immoral European settlers neutralize by their lives a great deal of the good which is attempted by missionaries. On the other hand, there are serious disadvantages, as well as advantages, in missionaries clinging to their own national rights and customs. The most successful missionaries have been those who have renounced even their country for Christ's sake, and become one with the people whom they have sought to evangelize.

In an address to the students of New College, Dr. Marcus Dods recently expressed the conviction that the immediate future will require, on the part of the preacher, greater sincerity of faith and diligence than any past age, because of the more subtle character of the forces which are opposed to Jesus Christ our Lord. Perhaps the most striking part of his address was that which dealt with the enemy called "the world."

The world has always been more successful in converting the Church than the Church has been in converting it. The hold of the world is deep and inveterate; and the preacher must be conscious that the force that is with him is greater than that which comes against him. In our day the childish craving for pleasure is a veritable poison in our social life.

We are grateful, too, that the Professor exposed, with such thoroughness, the colossal ignorance of many able and responsible literary men who approach religious questions. It is time that their grotesque misrepresentations of the Gospel should be exposed.

Dr. Dods gave an excellent definition of the essential principle of Protestantism in the following words:—"God and the soul close together, the soul recognising and responding to God." In these simple words the whole paraphernalia of intermediaries, which have been instituted or exercised by Popery in all its forms and developments, are swept away, and that is exactly what Luther and the Reformers endeavoured to do, leaving clear the one true Mediator Jesus Christ as the Way to the Father, and the one Book which reveals Him to the world. It is needful to re-emphasize this principle in these days of renascent ecclesiasticism and clerical assumption, and to do so perpetually, intelligently, and soberly. To such a principle the German Emperor gave his enthusiastic support the other day when he fearlessly proclaimed himself determined to "raise the Protestant cause to honour, and to remain true to it till death."

It is a little significant, that at one or two "Quiet days" recently held for the special benefit of preachers, the same subject of "Passion in Preaching" should have been chosen for consideration. One of the addresses delivered at Hereford is full of good and weighty things, which might with advantage be pondered by all who preach the Gospel in any way. The speaker, Rev. A. Hoyle, said:—

Preachers do not let themselves go as our fathers did; they are correct, diplomatic, serious, moderately earnest, but seldom passionate..By passion, I mean just this—a living man on fire: God master of his mind.

And we might add that true passion—according to the etymology of the word—is the soul suffering, and borne down by a conviction of the truth which he proclaims. "I believe, and therefore have I spoken." When the truth seizes a man, and penetrates his entire nature, he cannot help declaring it with passion. Passion of that kind is a sine quâ non in the declaration of the Gospel.

An ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, in speaking to an audience of ministers last week, expressed his deep conviction that the work of pastoral visitation is unduly neglected in modern Church life. He considered that a knowledge of what is going on in his congregation is a matter of the first importance to the minister as a preacher, and that the efficiency of the preacher is largely determined by his acquaintance with his people and sympathy with their lives. The time spent in gaining this acquaintance is often far more fruitful than the hours spent in the study.

On the other hand, no amount of visiting can relieve a teacher of Christian truth from that work of study which is absolutely necessary if he is to bring forth out of his treasure "things new and old." The difficulty with many ministers is to do these two things well. It is a difficulty, however, which might be easily solved if Christians would revert to the Apostolic type, and revive the work of "exhorting one another daily." Then the work would not all rest upon one pair of shoulders, but be distributed among many. The benefits that would accrue from intercourse of this description are indescribable. The early Church was kept alive, on its social side, by this fraternity. It is to be feared, however, that such Christian intercourse is an extinct thing in many modern congregations.

The English Church Union, through their President, Lord Halifax, at the annual meeting held last week, formally accepted the manifesto in regard to the doctrine of the Real Presence—a measure which is not likely to bring about a peaceable solution of the ritual difficulty. To the ordinary mind it will doubtless be impossible to read the declaration as anything but a profession of belief in the Roman doctrine of Transubstantiation. Note the words:—

In the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper the bread and wine, through the operation of the Holy Ghost, become in and by consecration verily and indeed the body and blood of Christ, and that Christ our Lord present in the same most holy sacrament of the altar under the form of bread and wine is to be worshipped and adored.

To discuss questions of ritual in the face of this statement of faith would simply be to strain out gnats and to swallow the camel of an essential and vital difference, a difference as wide as the impassable gulf which separates Protestantism from the darkness and superstition of Rome with its enslaving sacerdotalism. The fact that Lord Halifax claimed to represent 40,000 members of the Union points to the urgent need for combined action on the part of those who have no sympathy with this movement to Romanize the Church of England.

The true "inwardness" of the sacerdotal position was revealed in unmistakable terms by Lord Halifax. Speaking of the "Real Presence," he went on to say:—

Christ's visible presence is, indeed, withdrawn from us, but we believe that He is with us invisibly. . . . This presence He, who, in the days of his visible sojourn upon earth, was subject to his own creatures, now vouchsafes at his altars, according to his own institution, at the voice of his Church. We have no need to ask with Mary Magdalene where his sacred Body has been laid. We have that Body given into our keeping as often as we will. We possess Him in the Holy Eucharist, and, possessing Him, we repeat in each Eucharist what He did at the Last Supper in the Upper Chamber—we offer Him, sacramentally present under the outward and visible signs of Bread and Wine, to the Father, as the Lamb that has been slain, in commemoration of that death and passion by which He made a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the whole world.

Then his lordship went on to defend the confessional and prayers for the dead. How entirely divided is the notion of the believer offering Jesus Christ sacramentally "to the Father" from the Scriptural view of the completed sacrifice offered once for all "without the gate"! The Bible represents our Lord as offering Himself, never as being offered by the believer, either personally or through a priesthood. And the perfect Sacrifice having been offered once in time, was offered for ever. No priest can add anything to its efficacy, though he may by his superstitious rites obscure its meaning and hide its glory.

Analyzing the recent annual report of a suburban free library, a correspondent points out that while definitely religious books formed only a little more than 1 per cent. of those in actual circulation, prose fiction formed as large a proportion as 75 per cent.; and he asks whether, as it is clearly impossible to keep young people from indulging in novel-reading, their parents, teachers, and the grown-up friends do their duty in educating their literary tastes? The word "fiction" covers an endless gradation of literary standards; there are novels that are good, bad, and indifferent, in every degree of merit or mischief. It may be taken for granted that young minds are not necessarily evil-disposed till at least they have been contaminated, and the very best way to counteract such contamination is to train the mind in wise choices and healthy repugnances, so that by inward consent the mind may instinctively turn aside from the unhealthy and the profane.

Is the Armour of God Wearing Out?

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

EVERY attentive reader of the religious journals must observe how generally they lament a decrease in the number of conversions and a falling off in the admissions into membership by "confession of faith." Many reasons are suggested for this declension; and one of the most startling is that old methods are worn out, and revivals have become obsolete, and that this "advanced age" requires entirely new methods and a new style of preaching, and what is called an "up-to-date Gospel." If this be true, it is so serious a truth as to demand universal attention. Is it true?

No one can read the New Testament honestly without seeing what the methods of the early Apostles were. They believed in prayer-meetings; they preached a simple but very rousing gospel of repentance of sin and faith in Jesus Christ; they had a baptism of the Holy Spirit; they strove to save souls and bless their fellow-men by deeds of practical beneficence. In fighting sin, and error, and human misery, their greatest leader exhorted them to "put on the whole armour of God." The weapons of that panoply were "truth" and "righteousness," and a "shield of faith," and the "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God;" and these were to be backed up by prayer and supplication in the Spirit. Eighteen centuries have rolled away; but the Holy Spirit has not changed, the Bible has not changed, human nature has not changed, God's promises have not changed; and yet we are told that the methods and the weapons of these successful early Christians have worn out, and this age of advancement demands something new!

Patrick Henry's famous "lamp of experience" is a most valuable utensil, and it throws a strong light on in the churches and the community outside of them. The experience of Christian churches, even in these later days, has always been that solid success has followed the legitimate use of the old gospel-weapons when attended by the blessings of the Holy Spirit. It is affirmed that now the churches are losing their hold on the peoples, and that both in city and country the percentage of attendance on church services is steadily falling off. This may be true; and in order to fill empty pews some pastors have been tempted to resort to certain sensational devices. Such devices have no permanent value; like the use of alcoholic stimulants, there must be an increase of the dose, and a final reaction to feebleness is almost certain to follow. To draw people to the house of God is very well; but unless they are drawn to Jesus Christ, and to a better life, the supreme purpose of attending Sabbath services is not attained. An industrious minister, who carefully prepares practical evangelical sermons, and maintains thorough pastoral visitation, and wisely directs the working machinery of his church, rarely fails to hold his Sunday congregations. The weapons from God's armoury are not worn out yet; when they are, Christianity may go into bankruptcy.

No one who carefully observes the state of things in our land will seek to belittle the difficulties which evangelical religion has to contend with. Worldly prosperity has demoralized multitudes of rich church members, and the gulf between wealth and poverty is widening. Brains and culture in our colleges are increasingly drawn into other pursuits than the pulpit. There is a lowering of the observance of God's day, and hundreds of thousands of immortal beings bury their souls every Sabbath morning under the unclean blankets of a godless Sunday press. I fear, too, that household religion is at a lower ebb than formerly, and family worship is too much neglected or made an empty form. The atmosphere is charged with scepticism and the young breathe in the malaria. Is there as much fervent, faithful preaching to the unconverted, as much personal effort to win souls, and as much earnest, untiring, loving work for the Master as when the sowers went forth bearing the precious gospel-seed and came in again rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them?

This is no time for blind and boastful optimism; neither is it a time for a blear-eyed and blasting pessimism. Let us face painful facts—not as cowards or as compromisers with error, or as carelessly content to see things grow worse. If the artful adversary can persuade Christ's churches that the old Gospel armour wielded with such mighty power by the Wesleys, the Whitefields, the Guthries, the Finneys, the Lyman Beechers, and the Spurgeons is wearing out, then there might well be a jubilee in hell over our suicidal folly! May God in his infinite mercy forbid!

The Greater "I."

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

THERE is an "I" which is obnoxious; such is found in the Pharisee's prayer, when he says, "I thank," "I am not," "I fast," "I give," "I possess;" on the other hand, there is the hallowed I of Christ's vast personality, where no self is seen or heard. Let us note seven of these holy "I's."

I. The "I come" of Obedience. "Lo, I come" (Psa. xl. 7). There is no holding back on his part, but an intense desire to fulfil what is written. Do we bound forward, like David's mighty men when their king wanted a drink from the well of Bethlehem, to fulfil our Lord's directions, as He commands us in his Word (1 Chron. xi. 18; John xiv. 21)?

II. The "I lay" of Consecration. "I lay down my life" (John x. 17). Out of love to us, He willingly laid down his life for us. Are we willing to give our all to Him, like Mephibosheth, when he said of his inheritance and Ziba, "Let him take all" (2 Sam. xix. 30; Rom. xii. 1)?

III. The "I say" of Assurance. "I say unto you" (John v. 24). Christ desires we should be assured of our safety in Him, and that all fear of condemnation should be removed. Are we as intent and as instant to plead with Him in earnest prayer, like Esther when she pleaded for the lives of her people (Esther viii. 3; 1 Thess. iii. 10)?

IV. The "I give" of Peace. "Peace I give unto you" (John xiv. 27). Christ would have his people calm with his own peace, so that the storms of doubt should have no power over them. Are we as anxious that nothing in our life should disturb Him, like the bride in the Song of Solomon, when she says, "I charge you . . . that ye stir not up, nor wake my Love, till He please" (Cant. iii. 5; Rev. ii. 4)?

V. The "I will" of Response. "I will do it" (John xiv. 14) is Christ's promise as to his answering prayer. Are we as ready to respond to the world's appeal as it cries to us for the Gospel, like Macedonia of old (Acts xvi. 9, 10; John iv. 35)?

VI. The "I delight" of Willingness. "I delight to do thy will" (Psa. xl. 8) is the glad word which leaps to Christ's lips as He comes to fulfil his Father's pleasure. Do we have fellowship with Him in doing God's will, like Isaac in his going with Abraham, although that meant being offered on the altar of sacrifice (Gen. xxii. 6; Matt. xi. 29)?

VII. The "I go" of Preparation. "I go to prepare a place for you" (John xiv. 3). Christ's desire for our present well-being, as well as our future glory, is aptly put in this gracious promise. Are we as constant and earnest in preparing ourselves for his return, like the honoured servants, who will be found with girded loins, burning lamps, and expectant hearts (Luke xii. 35-38)?

The Highland Temperance League.—With the object of promoting the cause of temperance among the Highlanders of Scotland, this League continues its efforts with steady persistency, and with many tokens of successful endeavour. The nineteenth annual report records developments in directions which cannot fail to result in the extension of the Society's influence and utility in the cause of temperance. The hon. secretary and treasurer is Mr. A. Blackhall, 2, Academy Street, Inverness.

Thoughts on Patience.

IF we could only learn to wait more trustfully. We are so anxious; we cannot believe all will be well; that however dark the night, the dawn must come.

We crave for the flower the morning after we have sown the seed. We cry for results, for conversions, ere we have entered the Master's vineyard.

"Rome was not built in a day." Great things may require eternity to reveal them. A lifetime is but a day to God. Let us journey with patience. The result of works we set our hand to may never be seen here. We may be doing a little—thousands are doing a little for God—yet all by his wonderful power is pieced together into one beautiful mosaic, fit for Heaven's Glory. Eternity will reveal to us manifold beauties wrought by many hands, and when we recognise how our little work has just pieced in, we shall say, "If I had but known! I thought my efforts were in vain."

Often in material things we have more patience than in things spiritual. Think of the wonderful patience God has with us, forgiving us a thousand times when we have strayed from his path. Let us learn a lesson from his infinite, loving patience, then we shall the more easily bear with that friend who, seemingly, will never leave the evil ways; bear more brotherly with the faults of many, never giving up hoping, trusting, believing. It is a lesson to the uncharitable, who are so ready to slur a character, when to-morrow may have revealed a truer manhood. Some are so impatient; they condemn a friend, when perhaps another day would have revealed their mistake, and shown them their friend's noble qualities. Patience is indeed

A PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

Patience—I would whisper it to the disappointed soul on the verge of despair. Patience—I would say to the heart-broken mother who has prayed long and urgently for her wayward son. Patience—I would speak to the heart bowed down with grief; for, sustained by God's grace, the bright hope of immortality instils in the bereaved heart a patience that enables it to journey along the earthly path—which their loved ones know no more—and to see afar off the spires of the heavenly city, that day by day become nearer to expectant eyes.

Patience—what is love without it? As a nightingale without its song. What is service without it? As a rose without its scent. What is life without it? As morning without the glory of the sunrise; as the heavens without the incomparable splendour of the stars. A mother's patience—who can comprehend a mother's love without it.

Patience—the very word paints in imagination lurid pictures. As the word echoes on the air, we can see John Bunyan throughout those weary years, waiting, waiting, and whilst waiting, giving to the world his immortal work, which has been a second Bible to many. We see Florence Nightingale, whose eyes, full of such tender compassion, were as twin lights of joy to many a wounded soldier on the dark battlefield; and Sister Dora, Elizabeth Fry and a host of others; all patient heroes and heroines, who have so nobly won God's Victoria Cross, which, graven on the heart, is not left within the tomb, but is carried triumphantly into the precincts of the everlasting home.

Patience is a flower, planted by the Heavenly Gardener in the heart. His love alone can nurture it and bring it to perfection. By its perfume we are encouraged to plod on, may be over a rocky path, through many deep waters; yet in the gelid breath of trouble the blossom withers not, but still cheers us on, until it is laid upon the altar, in the land beyond.

A Stratford Mission.—The Sunday School, Band of Hope, and children's services of the Francis Street Mission, Stratford, continue to be maintained with much blessing to the young in the district. The attendance of the children is encouraging, and the workers have the joy of witnessing many results of their efforts in the cause of Christ. Annual report from Mr. F. Boyd, 75, Chichester Road, Leytonstone, E.

Mr. Moody in the Civil War.*

A WAR incident that Mr. Moody frequently repeated occurred after the battle of Murfreesboro'. "I was stationed in the hospital," he said. "For two nights I had been unable to get rest, and being really worn out, on the third night I had lain down to sleep. About midnight I was called to see a wounded soldier who was very low. At first I tried to put the messenger off, but he told me that if I waited till morning it might be too late. So I went to the ward where I had been directed, and found the man who had sent for me. I shall never forget his face as I saw it that night in the dim, uncertain candle-light. I asked what I could do for him, and he said that he wanted me to 'help him to die.' I told him I would bear him in my arms into the Kingdom of God if I could, but I couldn't. Then I tried to preach the Gospel. He only shook his head and said:

"'He can't save me; I have sinned all my life.'

"My thoughts went back to his loved ones in the North, and I thought that even then his mother might be praying for her boy. I repeated promise after promise, and prayed with the dying man, but nothing I said seemed to help him. Then I said that I wanted to read to him an account of an interview that Christ had one night while here on earth—an interview with a man who was anxious about his eternal welfare. I read from the third chapter of John, how Nicodemus came to the Master. As I read on, his eyes became riveted upon me, and he seemed to drink in every syllable. When I came to the words, 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life,' he stopped me and asked:

"'Is that there?'

"'Yes,' I said.

"'Well,' he said, 'I never knew that was in the Bible. Read it again.' Leaning on his elbow on the side of the cot, he brought his hands together tightly, and when I finished he exclaimed: 'That's good! Won't you read it again?' Slowly I repeated the passage a third time. When I finished I saw that his eyes were closed, and the troubled expression on his face had given way to a peaceful smile. His lips moved, and I bent over him to catch what he was saying, and heard in a faint whisper:

"'As Moses lifted up—the serpent—in the wilderness,—even so—must the Son of Man be lifted up:—that whosoever—believeth in Him—should not perish,—but have eternal life.'

"He opened his eyes and said, 'That's enough; don't read any more.' Early next morning I again came to his cot, but it was empty. The attendant in charge told me that the young man had died peacefully, and said that after my visit he had rested quietly, repeating to himself now and then, that glorious proclamation, 'Whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.'"

The Supreme Attraction.

"Marred more than any man's," yet there's no place
In this wide universe but gains new grace,
Richer and fuller, from that marrèd Face!
O Saviour Christ, those precious wounds of thine
Make doubly precious these poor wounds of mine;
Teach me to die with Thee the death divine!
All wounds and woes of flesh, once made thine own,
Add colour to the rainbow round the throne,
And save from loneliness saints else alone.
Beloved ones are hurrying in, and all
The ground is strewn with blossoms they let fall,
In haste to enter life's high festival.
Heaven beckons me, I press me toward the mark
Of my high calling—hark, He calls, oh hark!
That wounded Face moves towards me through the dark.

A Burning and Shining Light.

Studies of John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

OUR Master, Christ, was on his trial. He was challenged by the religious leaders of the people because He had dared to heal a man and to command him to carry his bed—his straw pallet—on the Sabbath Day. He was therefore accused, and, so to speak, put on his defence.

Of course we must not for a moment think that our Lord was lax in his observance of the Sabbath, but simply that He desired to emancipate the day from the intolerable burdens and restrictions with which the Jewish leaders had surrounded it. It was his desire to show, for all after time, that the Sabbath was made for useful purposes, and specially for deeds of mercy, beneficence, and gentle kindness. The Lord Jesus was maligned and persecuted because He was the Emancipator of the Sabbath day from foolish and mistaken notions of sanctity.

In this case, the Lord, being on his trial, proposed to call witnesses. He said, in effect, "If I were in need of witnesses, I would put in as evidence on my side, first, your own holy Scriptures; for as you search them you will find they speak of Me. Secondly, I would put in evidence the works or miracles I do—the miracles of love and help, of comfort and blessing. Is it likely these miracles could have been performed by a blasphemer, by one who did not deserve your confidence? 'The works my Father gives Me to do, they bear witness of Me.' Thirdly, I would put in evidence the witness of my Father: He hath borne witness to Me by an audible voice, which was heard at the time of my baptism. Fourthly, John, who is now lying in the dungeons of Herod's castle, would bear witness of Me; ye did send to him, and he bore witness to the truth." Then the Lord Jesus passes an eulogium upon the Baptist, which is very touching: "He was a burning and shining lamp."

There is a great distinction between shining and burning: shining is the light-giving, the illuminating that comes forth from the enkindled wick; but

IT CANNOT SHINE UNLESS IT BURNS.

The candle that gives light wastes inch by inch as it gives it. The very wick of your lamp, that conducts the oil to the flame, chars, and you have to cut it off bit by bit until the longest coil is at length exhausted. We must never forget that, if we would shine, we must burn. Too many of us want to shine, but are not prepared to pay the cost that must be faced by every true man that wants to illuminate his time. We must burn down until there is but an eighth of an inch left in the candlestick, till the light flickers a little and drops, makes one more eager effort, and then ceases to shine—"a burning and shining light."

Obviously, then, we have first the comparison between John and the candle, or lamp; then we have the necessary expenditure, burning to shine; and, thirdly, we have the misuse that people may make of their opportunities.

I. The Lord's Comparison.—"John was a burning and shining lamp." In the original a great contrast is suggested between lamp, as it is given in the Revised Version, and light. The Authorized Version put it thus: "He was a burning and shining light;" but the Revised Version puts it thus: "He was a burning and shining lamp," and there is a considerable difference between the two. In the first chapter of the Gospel, the Apostle John tells us, speaking of the Baptist, that he was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light that all men might believe. "That was the True Light, which lighteth every man coming into the world."

What is the process of lighting? The wick of the candle is simply brought into contact with the flame, and the flame leaps to it, kindles on it, without parting with any of its vigour or heat, and continues to burn, drawing to itself the nourishment which the candle supplies. So let Jesus Christ touch you. Believe in the Light, that you may become a child of the Light. Take off the extinguisher; cast away your prejudice; put off those misconceptions; have done with those unworthy habits; putting them all aside, let Jesus kindle you. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come." "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead; and Christ shall give thee light."

We were kindled, that we might kindle others. I would like, if I might have my choice, to burn steadily down, with no guttering waste, and as I do so to communicate God's fire to as many unlit candles as possible; and to burn on steadily until the socket comes in view, then to light, in the last flicker, twenty, thirty, or a hundred candles at once; so that as one expires they may begin burning and spreading light which shall shine till Jesus comes. Get light from Christ, then share it; and remember that it is the glory of fire that one little candle may go on lighting hundreds of candles, one insignificant taper may light all the lamps of a cathedral church, and yet not be robbed of its own little glow of flame. Andrew was lit by Christ Himself, and passed on the flame to Simon Peter, and he to three thousand more on the Day of Pentecost. Each of these spread on the precious flame, as the pilgrims in Jerusalem on Easter Day, who first and spread it throughout the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, till every torch is ignited. Every Christian soul illumined by the grace of God thus becomes, as John the Baptist was, a lamp. But there is always the same impassable chasm between these and the Lord. They are derived; He is original. They need to be sustained and fed; He is the Fountain of light: because, as the Father hath life in Himself, He hath given to Him also to have life in Himself, and his life is the light of men.

II. The Inevitable Expenditure.—"He was a burning and shining light." If you would shine, you must burn. The ambition to shine is universal; but all are not prepared to pay the price by which alone they can acquire the right to give the true light of life. There are plenty of students who would win all the prizes, and wear all the honours, apart from days and nights of toil; but they find it a vain ambition. Before a man can become Senior Wrangler he must have burnt, not only the midnight oil, but some of the very fibre of his soul. Conspicuous positions in the literary and scientific world are less the reward of genius than of laborious, soul-consuming toil. The great chemist will work sixteen hours out of twenty-four. The illustrious author acquires, by profound research, the materials which he weaves into his brilliant page. Such men shine because they burn.

But this is pre-eminently the principle in the service of Christ. It was so with the Lord Himself. He shone, and his beams have illumined myriads of darkened souls, and shall yet bring dawn throughout the world; but, ah, how He burned! The disciples remembered that it was written of Him: "The zeal of thine House hath consumed Me." He suffered, that He might serve. He would not save Himself, because He was

BENT ON SAVING OTHERS.

He ascended to his throne because He spared not Himself from the cruel tree. Pilate marvelled that his death came so soon, and sent for the centurion to be certified that in so few hours He had succumbed. But he did not realize that in three short years He had expended his vital strength so utterly, that there was no reserve to fall back upon. There had been an inward consumption, an exhaustion of nervous power, a wearing down of the springs of vitality. He shone because of the fire that burned within Him.

If the Christian worker longs to benefit the poor slum district in which he is located, he must be prepared to live amongst the people and expend himself. Presently, in his hollow cheeks, his sallow complexion, his attenuated form, his diminishing strength, you will see that he is paying the price for his 100-candle illuminating power, because he is being consumed. Every successful worker for God must learn that lesson. You must be prepared to suffer; you can only help men when you die for them. If you desire to save others you cannot save yourself; you must be prepared to fall into the ground and die if you would not abide alone; there must be with you, as with Paul, the decaying of the outward man, that the inward man may be renewed day by day. You must be prepared to say with him, "Death worketh in us, but life in you."

If you burn, you will shine. The burning and the shining do not always go together; often the burning goes on a long time without much illumination resulting from the expenditure. Those who are rich in gifts and natural endowments cast in much, and the poor cast in all their living; this they continue to do, year after year, and none seems to heed the awful cost at which their testimony is given. Moreover, to use a well-known phrase, the game hardly seems worth the candle. The area they influence is so limited, the souls affected so few, the glimmer of their light, like a street-lamp in a fog, hardly reaches across the street or to the ground. Sometimes it appears only to make the darkness denser and thicker. In many cases, the saints of God have burnt down to the last film of vital energy and expired, and there has been no shining that the world has taken cognisance of. Their bitter complaint has been, "I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain." But even these shall shine. They shall shine as the stars for ever and ever in that world where all faithful souls obtain their dues.

For the burning and the shining, God will provide the fuel. The fire which burnt in the bush needed no fuel; "the bush was not consumed." With us there is perpetual need for the nourishment of the fire of love and the light of life by the administration of appropriate fuel. The oil must be supplied to the lamp. The fire cannot be kept burning on the altar apart from the incessant care and attention of the priests. But be of good cheer; He who hath begun a good work will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ. All grace will be made to abound towards you, that you may have all sufficiency for all things, and abound to every good work.

THE LORD WILL GIVE GRACE and glory; no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly. God will supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus.

III. Christ's Warning against the Misuse of Opportunities.—"Ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light." The Greek word rendered rejoice has in it the idea of moths playing around a candle, or of children dancing around a torch-light, as it burns lower and lower. It is as though a light were given to men for an hour, for them to use for some high and sacred purpose; but they employ it for dancing and card-playing, instead of girding up their loins to serious tasks. "You were willing," says the Master, in effect, "to rejoice, to dance and sing, in his light. You treated his ministry as a pastime. As long as He spoke with you about the coming kingdom, you listened and were glad; but when he began to call you to repentance and warn you of wrath to come, you left Him." He is now like an almost extinguished lamp. His hour is all but done.

With what eager care men should prize these fleeting opportunities, not listening to the preacher's voice, as of one that can make a pleasant sound from the harp or organ, not seeking merely the delight of the ear or intellect; but taking heed to hear for eternity, receiving in meek and retentive hearts the precious grain as it falls from the sower's hand, and giving diligence that the best possible results may accrue.

O children of the sunny market-place, playing giddily throughout the long afternoon, take heed lest your opportunities of preparing for the serious work of life slip away unimproved, and you find yourselves face to face with death and judgment without a screen, without hope, and without God. John executed in prison, Jesus nailed to the cross, the Apostles and martyrs done to death on the scaffold and at the stake—and the ship drifting on the rocks, without a warning voice to arouse the thoughtless crowd of dice-throwers and dancers to the certainty and nearness of their doom!

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 1. Psalm cxxxviii.

PRAISE leads to confident faith. As we give thanks for God's lovingkindness and truth, we gird ourselves again to trust Him. Great as God's promises were, we feel that He has done exceeding abundantly above them all, and that we may reckon on Him to our journey's end. He will have respect to our least cry; will revive us when our courage droops; will lay an arrest on the wrath of our enemies; will save us by his right hand from the evils we dread, and will perfect that which concerns us.

The last of these assurances is very delightful. God cannot rest content with an incomplete and unfinished plan. There are no half-completed pictures in his gallery, no abandoned torsos in his studio. When He really puts his hand to the salvation of any soul, He pledges Himself to perfect the good work until the day of Jesus Christ (Phil. i. 6). Each life is a perfected whole. It does not always seem so. We say, in our ignorance, that the life-work was not finished, the influence not matured; that the sun has gone down while it was yet noon; that the shaft of life is snapt and broken near the base. But it is not so. There is a completeness in God's work, which we should acknowledge if we knew all.

O soul, thy twilight shall grow into the perfect day of knowledge; thy garden plot, strewn with seeds that do not appear, and distracted with weeds, shall yet be filled with flowers and fruits; thy chequered spring shall unfold into summer. God's stories end rightly, there is a proper "Finis" to them all. And our guarantee of all this is that his mercy endureth for ever. He grows not weary. He cannot fail, nor be discouraged. He cannot forsake the work which his own hands have taken up. There are no failures in his creation, though a good many pieces of his workmanship there have been marred and spoilt by self-will.

MONDAY, July 2. Psalm cxxxix.

With what force this conception of the nearness of God bears down at times on our souls! That He knows everything about us:—our thoughts as they glance through our minds, our secret resolves and purposes, our hopes; that we can never elude or escape that perfect knowledge, which is always winnowing our path and our lying down; that it has always been so, and will be for ever and ever—what a wonderful and awful conception is here! If only we would take time to ponder it, it would grow more and more luminous and thought-compelling. Your life and mine are motes that glance in the all-encompassing light of the Infinite One.

But what comfort and blessedness there are in the thought to those who know that God is Love. He knows us thoroughly, "but He loves us better than He knows." He knows all, but He sympathizes with an infinite tenderness. He knows all, but He breathes in just so much grace and strength, patience and fortitude, as we require. He knows all, and He sets Himself to winnow away what is selfish and evil, and to leave only whatsoever things are lovely and of good report. The condemned criminal shudders to feel that he is always under the observation of the inexorable eye that watches him day and night through the eye-hole in the door of his cell. The babe, on the other hand, or the beloved friend or wife, loves to live always within the view of love. Such is our life beneath the tender, holy love of God.

But what an arrest is thus put on sin! How can we grieve Him who watches us so closely and lovingly? How eagerly we should endeavour to do whatsoever things are pure and lovely in his sight. Can I say with Hagar, Thou, God, seest me? Then surely I must be willing even to return to the difficult life from which I have fled, taking up and bearing its yoke, enduring as one who sees, and is seen by, the Invisible; but always assured that He is not forgetful, but is always thinking of his children.

TUESDAY, July 3. Psalm cxl.

In my reading I refer such a psalm as this to my conflict with the evil one, whom Bunyan calls Apollyon. Of course, some who read these words are sensible of the malign plottings of a Doeg or Ahithophel; but for the most we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the wicked spirits in the heavenly places. Evil, violent, imagining mischiefs, continually gathering for war, a serpent's tongue and adder's poison, hiding a snare, spreading a net and gins—how true these expressions are of the constant opposition and malignity with which we are opposed! If only we realized that we were in an enemy's country, and that every advantage that could be taken against us was being utilized, and every device to secure our fall was being laid in our path, we should be more on the alert, and prepared by prayer and faith to withstand in the evil days.

A curious word has of late come into vogue, and we often hear of "slimness." It is applied to an adversary, whose tactics are not straightforward, but devious, deceptive, and disingenuous; who nimbly escapes from pursuit, and baffles the pursuer. But no foe is more tactical and elusive than our great antagonist, who by his many emissaries, and his traps which so precisely fit our nature, is ever engaged on planning our overthrow. His is no frontal attack, but by secret surprises, and midnight raids, and deceitful ruses and stratagems.

What need there is to cry to God to cover our head in the day of battle, to frustrate the attempts of our unscrupulous foes! And in answer to our cry, we shall receive the comfortable assurance that God will maintain our cause, so that we shall have reason to give thanks to his name, whilst we dwell for ever in his presence.

WEDNESDAY, July 4. Psalm cxli.

This psalm is for the morning. As the incense rises, so prayer should rise. It is sweet to God. It is on earth what the intercession of Christ is before the throne. The ancient saints stood to pray, and lifted up their hands. There is nothing we need more as we go forth into the day than that God should put a sentry before our mouth to keep the door of our lips. What we speak very largely determines what we are. St. James says the tongue is the rudder of the whole body, and this is true. If you repress unkind words, you will cease to think unkind thoughts. What you utter tends to become a habit of the inner life. The ungodly say our lips are our own; the child of God desires that every word in the mouth should be beneath God's control. It is a good thing to cultivate the habit of silence: people who are always talking are like cisterns with a leaking tap. It is almost impossible to talk to people for an entire afternoon without saying foolish and uncharitable things which we shall have reason to regret. Besides the keeping of the lips, we need to claim the preoccupation of the heart with love, and faith, and hope, that there may be no room for evil things.

There are two kinds of people whom we are always meeting; some reprove us with love in their heart, although their words may sometimes hurt us; and others prove to our discouragement and undoing. Let us bend meekly beneath the former, and for the latter let us cry to God the Lord, that He may not leave our soul destitute. If you are afraid of snares, the best way to avoid them is by lifting your eyes from the ground unto the Lord (vv. 8, 9).

THURSDAY, July 5. Psalm cxlii.

The cave was dark and probably shared by rough and lawless men with whom David had little real sympathy. His gentle and devout spirit must often have been greatly wounded by their want of sympathy. But he never failed to cry and to make supplication to the Lord. Your life may be equally troubled; see that it is equally full of supplication.

Is your spirit overwhelmed within you? Have troubles accumulated to such an extent that progress seems impossible? Does it seem as though you must succumb? Be comforted by remembering that God knows your path. It is the predestined way. Before ever the heavens or earth were made, it was prepared. God knows all the perplexities and difficulties, how the way it lends itself to snares, how dark the shadows that fall on it, and fearsome the rush of the torrent by its side; but He chose it, because in his inscrutable wisdom He knew that this was the readiest way to your home, the one in which you will be most thankful hereafter that you have travelled.

The soul is often overwhelmed with the sense of its loneliness. All faces are averted. No one seems to care. We had thought to make our refuge in our strong friends, our store of resources, our expedients—but all fail us, that we may be driven to avouch God as our Refuge and Portion.

Like most of the psalms, this ends with a gleam of light. The encaged soul anticipates its liberation. The righteous shall yet gather round it with congratulations, and God will deal bountifully. Can you not hear, O beleaguered one, the pibroch of the Highlanders? Reinforcements are on their way, and through long lines of pickets you shall be brought out of your imprisonment.

FRIDAY, July 6. Psalm cxliii.

There are two things about which the soul of man is anxious. It looks back into the past, and finds so much failure that it can only trust the forgiveness of God; it looks forward into the future, and longs to be sure that it will come at last into the land and home of the upright; for this also it turns to God, asking to be led thither.

God will not enter into judgment with thee, soul, if though art united by faith with Jesus Christ. No man living can be justified apart from Him, but by Him all that believe are justified. Remember the distinction between forgiveness and justification. In the former, the blame of sin is gone; but in the latter, the justified are treated as though they had never swerved, or given God a moment's pain.

O memory! How much we owe thee in the days of our pilgrimage recalling the blessed past! And yet those bright gleams of retrospect seem to intensify the agony of the present moment, and make the persecution of the enemy more bitter. From memory let us turn to Faith and Hope; these cannot be disappointed. To-morrow morning at dawn we shall hear Lovingkindness stand outside our windows, and calling up to us. We shall be caused to hear the announcement of God's very present help.

Dost thou wish to know the way? Lift up thy soul. God will teach thee to do his will; He can make the most stupid pupil understand. His Spirit is very loving; do not be afraid to trust thyself to his leading. The love of the Spirit is tenderer than the tenderest!

SATURDAY, July 7. Psalm cxliv.

This psalm savours of the rocky caverns from which David and his men emerged to do their fighting. Every day the chieftain asked God to teach him how to fight, and found in Him the complement of his need. Everything he wanted he found in the universal provision of God's nature. Happy will you be, dear friend, if you can take upon your lips the appropriation of the second verse!

What a marvellous conception opens in the fourth verse! Saul is but a breath. The persecutors that had come out with their hurtful sore are but the shadows that pass across the hills. From all such we appeal to God to bow his heavens and come; to touch the mountains, to send forth his arrows, and to rescue us from the rising floods which threaten to overwhelm. And when the storm is passed, the child of God sings his new glad song—celebrates his rescue and deliverance.

The closing verses, from the twelfth, seem to have been added at a later time—perhaps by David, after he had become established in his kingdom. They describe a summer afternoon of prosperity, when the sun shines brightly upon the land, and sons grow up from plants to trees, and daughters resemble the carved figures that support the beams of a palace. Would that life for you and me may end thus, after the battle and storm of earlier days. No breaking in of the foe, no need to go forth in defence, no outcry in the soul; but the halcyon calm and peace of the happy and satisfied life!

The Mildmay Conference.

OPENING MEETING.

WHEN the time arrived, last Tuesday morning, for the opening meeting of the forty-fourth annual Mildmay Conference, some measure of sunshine had replaced the deluging rains of the previous day. A quiet spirit of expectation Godward seemed to hold those assembled in the Great Hall. Judging by this well-attended gathering, Christian interest continues to find strong attraction in the spiritual privileges and the valuable instruction upon all-important topics afforded by the historic Conference, which has set the pattern for so many other gatherings of a similar kind throughout our own land and all over the known world.

The general subject of the Conference was "Praise," and, very appropriately, the Hon. R. Moreton, who presided, requested all present to rise and sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." This was immediately followed by the hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty." Lord Polwarth, whose state of health prevented his presence in the chair, sent a telegraphic message directing attention to Isa. xii. After a portion of that chapter had been read, Rev. D. B. Hankin led in praise and prayer. In this, special reference was made to troubles in with earnest petition that the work of the Lord be not hindered in the latter land.

The famine-stricken ones, and those in danger abroad, were subjects of sympathetic remark by the Chairman. Was the nation ever in such a condition as at this moment? How it calls for the prayers of God's people, and their praises for the mercy that has been ours for many years. Let us thank God for the quietness and peace enjoyed by us here in England. The Lord raise men from the ranks of the people to fill the places of his departed servants, such as our beloved brethren, D. L. Moody and G. H. C. Macgregor.

After another hymn, Rev. Hubert Brooke prefaced with prayer his address upon the particular aspect of the general subject which had been set down for the morning's consideration, namely, God as

"THE BLESSED OBJECT OF PRAISE."

The nature of God Himself is a large subject; but we may learn much of Him, relatively, from consideration of the praise which is his due. A force in large measure unused by the Church, is that of praise. In comparison with the power of prayer, we have thought little of the mighty power of praise. God has a foundation for that praise, which is a sacrifice ordered and taught of Him. The speaker traced in Leviticus and other scriptures the expiatory, dedicatory, and eucharistic or thanksgiving sacrifices. The first two sacrifices brought to God, those of Cain and Abel, illustrated respectively acceptance and rejection of the offerers. The thankoffering which did not rest upon expiation, was not satisfactory to God. Praise can only be acceptable to Him when it rests upon the lower foundation of through the perfect sacrifice of Christ, and upon consecrated lives. What are we doing with our pardoned lives—keeping them for ourselves, or giving them to the Owner? For praise, five Hebrew roots are used, signifying to kneel, to celebrate aloud, to sing in a set composition, to confess in the presence of those who care not for Him, and to commend Him to others. Every one of these ideas is of use to us when we would know how to praise God; and four of them are strikingly exhibited in the early verses of Psa. xcv. Praise appropriates the salvation of God (Psa. cxviii. 19). It prepares a way for divine deliverances (Psa. l. 20, R.V.); and it builds God a temple from which He is never absent, in the praises of his people (Psa. xxii. 3).

Rev. J. B. Figgis followed in earnest prayer, asking for the manifestation of God in all the things around that are calculated to distress the Christian mind. A hymn of praise was sung, and then Colonel Morton read out various requests for praise and prayer. The war had been overruled to the salvation of many souls among soldiers, through various Christian agencies; and this is, indeed, a cause for grateful praise. Naturally, prayer for China itself, and for the Lord's workers there, amid the dangers of the present crisis, had a large place in the requests. The subjects of sale of drink to children, and the Sunday closing of public-houses, were other matters of supplication; and the whole of these requests were gathered up in a comprehensive petition voiced by Mr. W. B. Sloan.

The closing address was delivered by Rev. J. G. Train. What an unworthy instrument, said he, is the mouth; and what wondrous grace that God should give us to say, "Open Thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise." It is a wholesome thing, antecedent to any consideration of praise itself, to the object of praise. We see Him through a medium which accommodates his glory to our poor vision. It is ours to contemplate God, most high and holy, in the face of Jesus Christ. It is well to look from God's gifts to God Himself, the Giver; to look away from the graces He bestows through Jesus Christ our Lord, to Him the God of all grace. All the great doxologies of Scripture are characterized by pre-occupation with God, with expressions of worship, pure and simple. There is a marvellous wealth of doxology in Scripture; and, among other illustrations of that fact, we may trace the things referred to in that picture of the angels (Rev. vii. 12) who take up the anthem and the great multitude that no man can number.

What are the things that contribute to such pre-occupation with and worship of the blessed object of praise? First, the experience of reconciliation. The Apostle Paul hardly touches the question of personal salvation without breaking forth into doxology.

THE PRINCIPLE OF RECOLLECTION—

"forget not all his benefits" (Psa. ciii.)—is another essential. If we are forgetful of God's benefits, we are little likely to give Him his due of praise. This points to the extolling of meditation. "My meditation of Him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the Lord," said David. The experience of instruction at God's hand also contributes to his praise; for the more we know of his truth, the more we praise Him. Therefore, let the Word of God dwell in us richly. There is an intimate connection between the indwelling Word and the singing heart of the Christian. The practice of the presence of God, or prayer, is indispensable to pre-occupation with Himself. Prayer is most essential in order to praise. "In his temple"—that is, in God's presence—everything voices his glory.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE JEWS.

There was a large attendance at the meeting held in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Sir William Stirling, who conducted the meeting, commented upon Psa. cxxxv., with its opening exhortation to praise and its closing appeal to "bless the Lord." It was remarkable, he said, to read the arguments used to induce praise in us. "God is good." What a lever this should be in our hearts to lead us to God. God intended the people of Israel for a certain purpose. The Jews could console themselves for what they had lost in the Temple, the Ark of the Covenant, the precious things of Solomon, and the destruction of Jerusalem, for they had rescued and preserved the precious Word of God. For this we shall ever be indebted to the Jew.

The absence of the superintendent, Rev. J. Wilkinson, through indisposition, was a source of regret, as for thirty-three years he has pleaded the cause of the Jew at Mildmay. His place was taken by his son, Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, who set forth the claims of Israel upon all Christians, and told how prayer for the needful support had been at all times answered. He surveyed the field in which the society labours, and enunciated the principles upon which it works. The land of the Jews was desolate, and the people were scattered, and God's law was broken. But there is a day coming when Israel will be restored, and their land shall be made fruitful. It is for all Christians to take their position with the despised Christ, in seeking out the Jews, whom God had never ceased to love, even in their blindness and hardness of heart.

Referring to the principles adopted in the work, Mr. Wilkinson said it was always sought to present the Gospel to individual Jews. God works among the Jews in various ways—by hidden streams, not by influencing nations, but individuals. Coming to the practical results of the Mission, the speaker remarked that at the Mission House the work had so extended, that some fifty to sixty thousand Jews heard the Gospel yearly. It was gratifying to learn also that, since the initiation of the work, no year has closed with the Mission in debt, although the diversion of public generosity into unusual and specific channels during the past six months has prevented projected developments.

IN THE EAST END OF LONDON

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in the course of a few remarks, expressed the opinion that strenuous efforts should be made to oppose any who sought to prohibit the admission of aliens to our shores, which movement he believed was promoted with the object of preventing Jews from landing in this country.

PROFESSOR WHITE'S BIBLE READING.

At the Bible Reading on Tuesday afternoon, in the large hall, Professor Wilbert W. White commenced a series of three addresses on the Book of Psalms.

After quoting words of various mediæval and modern authors, from Luther to Gladstone, appreciative of the Divine inspiration of the psalmists, and on the characteristics of the Book, Professor White, in harmony with the general subject of the Conference, emphasized the place occupied by Praise in the Psalter. He went on to define the relationship of prayer to praise, pointing out that the former includes (1) Adoration, (2) Thanksgiving, (3) Confession, and (4) Petition.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS falls into five divisions, each concluding with a doxology. The first division ends with Psa. xli.; the second with Psa. lxxii.; the third with Psa. lxxxix.; the fourth with Psa. cvi.; and the fifth with Psa. cl., the glorious conclusion of which may be described as a closing doxology. Examining the Book, we find in it traces of its authorship, its chronology, and its liturgical use. Dr. White reviewed these, and went on to sketch the historical background, dwelling especially on the Psalm of Moses, which "breathes the spirit of the weary wilderness," and that which describes the children of exile hanging their harps on the willows in Babylon. If we had no history of the Jews for a thousand years, we could largely construct it from this book, which throws important light on the records of the Jewish people. The Psalms belong, as a rule, to or to times when, in national darkness, individual singers were revived.

The speaker also pointed out some of the methods adopted by the writers in what may be termed, in the highest sense, the poetical structure of the Book. A characteristic of Hebrew poetry, in which it so conspicuously differs from most of that of other nations, is that it is lyric and not heroic, and for this reason—that the Jews worshipped, not heroes, but God. Another striking feature is the prominence of the personal element; and in this connection Dr. White read Psa. cxxxix., which shows the writer, not philosophizing about human character, but, sitting in the presence of Jehovah, realizing his sinfulness, and praying God to take the evil out of his life. After specifying other psalms in which the cry of the individual soul is heard, Dr. White concluded with a telling appeal for closer study of this wonderful devotional book of the ages.

Prof. White's Bible School.

THE subject of Dr. White's prelude at Queen's Hall on Friday last, was "The Prayer Life of Paul." The lecturer first alluded to the characteristics of Paul's prayers: (1) Thanksgiving (e.g., Phil. i. 3); and (2) Seeking the earnest prayers of the brethren (Rom. xv. 30-33). "I beseech you. . . that ye strive (agonize) on my behalf." Paul prayed for spiritual things, and herein lies a lesson for us. Our prayers are apt to be on a low plane; we are apt to seek merely temporal blessings. In Eph. vi. 19, too, we find Paul, an old man of perhaps sixty-four or sixty-five, who had been a preacher for many years, yet writing to a company of believers, asking their prayers; a fact which should remind believers that they are continually dependent on God. We do not receive at one time strength that will last through coming days. We are powerless unless continually sustained by grace. Illustrating the Christian's walk by systems for supplying electricity to cars, Dr. White said we must live not by the "storage battery," but by the "trolley" system. In the former case a car carries stored electricity, and as soon as the supply is exhausted the car stops and the lights go out. In the latter an from the car, comes into contact with a "living" wire, and derives its power therefrom. The wire extends right along the route. So we need to be constantly appropriating the strength of God in order to manifest spiritual life.

Dr. White proceeded to the main subject for consideration, "The Function of Law and the Work of Grace," the latter part of the topic being considered in connection with the Fruit of the Spirit. The lecturer said that the Epistles to the Romans and the Galatians are companion letters. Both, it is important to remember, are addressed to believers. It is probable that Galatians was written first, and that Paul subsequently elaborated his thoughts in Romans. In both a great deal is said of the Law and the Spirit. The works of the former and the fruit of the latter are placed in contrast. In Rom. x. we have the position clearly stated. Paul is anxious that Israel "may be saved." Now, the one that doeth the law shall live thereby, but Moses, debarred from entry into the Land of Promise, affords a striking example of the fact that could reach salvation by the law. Indeed, who can say, "I demand justification by the law because I have kept the law"? No, we must admit that we cannot be saved by attempting to fulfil the law; but herein is the grace of God manifest: He does not put aside the law, but He fulfils it.

This tenth chapter, Dr. White next went on to point out, shows us the two kinds of righteousness, (a) of the law, (b) of faith. The law is always saying "You must do something." But all that needed to be done has been done. Must we go up to heaven to bring Christ down? (x. 6). No; He has come down already. Must we bring Him up from the grave? No; He is already ascended. What, then, is the solution of the difficulties of those who are so set upon "doing"? It is the word of faith—"with the heart man believeth (not 'doeth') unto righteousness." Dealing with the character of this belief, Dr. White observed that it is more than the mere acceptance of a series of propositions, since belief calls for action. We must test the statements, and prove them experimentally, for ourselves.

Turning temporarily to Galatians, Dr. White said the Epistle has for its topics the greatest matter which the mind of man can grasp. In chapter iii. there is a practical application of the great truth which is being dealt with by the Apostle. God spoke to Abraham, and Abraham believed, "and it was accounted to him for righteousness" (iii. 6). Abraham, at this juncture, had gone out "not knowing whither he went." The sceptical in habit seek to "know" and then "do," but the reverse is the true method; when God commands we must "do" and then we shall "know." In Gal. v. 4 the position is strikingly put: "If we go back to seek justification by the law then we are fallen from grace." Here Paul is referring, of course, not to individual salvation, but to the system and method of

SALVATION BY GRACE.

We must be saved by grace wholly, or we must keep the law wholly. Going back to Gal. iv., the people are returning to the bondage of legal observances; they "observe days" and Paul is "afraid of them." Not that it is contrary to the will of God, for example, for Sunday to be observed, but we do not observe the day in order to gain merit with God, and to be saved thereby. We are in an entirely different attitude. We do not observe in order to be saved, but because we are saved. People, too, say prayers to God, simply because they feel it a duty; but this again is another form of the bondage with which Paul deals. Prayer must be, not a legal performance, but the outcome of faith. The speaker next gave a brief outline of the salient points of the various chapters in Romans, which he described as the great "law" treatise. He especially alluded to chapters ii. and vii., which deal with the law (the word occurs twenty-one times in chapter ii., and twenty-three times in chapter vii.), and with chapter viii., in which the word "Spirit" so frequently occurs, and concluded with a powerful insistence on the glorious truth that, united to Christ, we shall "bring forth fruit unto God" (Rom. vii. 4).

Bridge of Allan Convention.

THE Scottish National Convention for the Promotion of Practical Holiness was opened in the tent at Bridge of Allan, by the holding of a preparatory prayer meeting, on Monday evening (June 11). The various meetings were more largely attended than in former years, and one notable feature was the unusual number of ministers who were present. The chair was occupied by Dr. William Ferguson, of Kinmundy, the familiar form of Mr. Robert Wilson being much missed from the platform; and the programme contained the names of more Scottish speakers than before.

On Tuesday the early morning prayer meeting was conducted by Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie), whose voice had not been heard before in the tent. The subject of Mr. Muir's address was "Hereby we know that we know Him, because we keep his commandments" (1 John ii. 3).

THE PROCESS OF SANCTIFICATION.

At the forenoon gathering, Rev. Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh) gave a Bible reading, based on Ezekiel xxxvi. 23-31, in which he pointed out the resemblance between the teaching of the prophet and that of Paul, in humbling men before God. God could find no motive in man for working his wonders of grace, and the work had, therefore, its motive in Himself alone in sanctifying his people. He deals first with sin. "I will sprinkle clean water upon you," was taken along with "the washing of water by the Word." It was shown that with the impact of some thought in the Word of God, our own unclean thought is, for the moment, displaced, and that this process must be repeated infinitely by the deeper study of the Word of God. The next step was "from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." The idols were not put away, but his people were separated at heart from them. Their heart was as a tree torn up by the roots and transplanted into new soil, where the old life became atrophied at the extremities, and a new life radiated from the heart. A new heart was given, and at the centre of this a new spirit. For us in New Testament times, this new spirit means God's Spirit.

As when a white garment is exposed to the air it becomes dull and tainted, so religion has often a dulness, a lustreless feature in it. This was done away in the fulfilment of the promise "I will also save you from all your uncleanness;" so that our religion should become a thing of beauty, and a joy for God and man. Further, to perfect his divine life, God made use of everything in the past through memory, recalling their past evil ways in the day of their sanctification. How often in times of great quickening He seems to be repeating Himself! The days to come shall be as the days that are past, but yet more abundant; and He is yearning to repeat Himself in all. Yet, as is said of Christ, He is not willing to trust Himself to us in all his fulness of power and glory, for He knows what is in man. Only when a heart is fully surrendered to Him, and no ties with the world or sin are willingly kept unbroken, will God use it for the demonstration of his willingness to bless.

PROBLEMS FOR CHRISTIANS.

After Dr. Smith's address, a special meeting was held for ministers and Christian workers. Rev. William Muir called attention to several of the problems with which the Scottish churches are face to face. He instanced two facts brought out at the recent General Assemblies—(1) that a continuous falling-off has been going on for some years in Sabbath schools all over the country, and (2) that fully one-third of the people of Scotland are outside of all church influences. He said these facts call for serious and sober consideration, though he himself had not yet been able to find how they were to be overcome. Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast) followed with an address, dwelling on the Lord's figure of the harvest, as indicating the number and value of the souls to be saved, as well as the urgency of the work: the harvest must either be reaped or lost. Pointing specially to the words "Jesus saw the people," Mr. Montgomery complained strongly of the ignoring by Christians of the facts to be found at their own doors and in their own streets.

The sultry weather of Monday and Tuesday culminated on Wednesday in a thunderstorm of such violence that for some time no speaking could be heard in the tent, and a considerable portion of the time was given up to singing. The Bible reading at the morning gathering was by Rev. John Young (Greenock), who gave much helpful teaching as he led his hearers from point to point of the events recorded in the Gospel of John, as occurring after the raising of Lazarus from the dead. The meeting for ministers was addressed by Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), Rev. Charles G. Moore (London), and Rev. Dr. Robertson (North Berwick). Simultaneously a gathering of ladies was held, at which the speakers were Mrs. Penn Lewis and Miss Ferguson.

On Thursday morning the Bible reading was given by Mr. Montgomery, subject, "The Divine Sufficiency" (2 Cor. iii. 5). At the outset he showed how the human constitution leads men to lean on or cling to someone stronger than themselves; and that the great sin is to wander away from God. The Apostle's own thorn in the flesh was used to illustrate the sufficiency of the deliverance from tribulation—not by the removal of the thorn, but by the bestowal of grace. Tribulation is used to reveal our relationship to God; and it is by bitter experiences that the people of God have to be brought to a knowledge of the width and wealth of their inheritance. "A holy life is not always to be attained at a jump, but the great means to it is

KNOWLEDGE OF THE BIBLE.

Give it plentifully to the children. The battle of the future is to be fought over them. If our children have the Spirit, and live out the Word, a generation will arise possessed of more than giant strength, resisting every temptation and every enchantment."

The missionary meeting was large and enthusiastic. The China Inland Mission was represented by Mrs. Menzies, Kaffraria by Rev. Mr. Stirling, Zululand by Rev. Mr. Scott, India by Rev. Mr. McKay and Miss Paterson; and the work among soldiers by Mrs. Todd Osborne.

On Friday, the closing day of the Convention, the Bible reading was given by Mr. Moore from Mark viii. A very solemn warning was uttered against tampering with deeds of darkness, turning away from the light at any point of duty, or encouraging unwillingness to know and live in the will of God: any one of these being shown to result in arrested development. It was pointed out that we follow in the footsteps of the disciples when we fail to make use of any trying providences to secure greater nearness to Christ, and to obtain greater help from Him. To be kept from need is not the condition to be desired—when we have received blessing we may expect to have harder duties. "A smooth life deteriorates character—a life of wants and hardships develops and ennobles character. Watch your life. God puts into it some pressing need that is fitted to bring you back to him." Later in the day addresses were given by Revs. John Sloan (Shawlands, Glasgow) and Robert Stevenson (Gargunnock).

Much definite blessing has been received through the meetings. The praise and testimony hour was a source of glad surprise. Many returned to give thanks for what they had received; while another large company expressed their desire to know the fulness of the spiritual life, and to be clothed with power for service. The Convention has, indeed, been a memorable experience.

The Excessive Heat.—In view of the inconvenience occasioned to speakers and others by the oppressive heat, Mr. John Elliott, evangelist, 19, Melville Street, Torquay, recommends a simple remedy: "Instead of drinking a quantity of cold water, put both wrists under the tap or a basin for a few minutes; they will cool, and draw down the hot blood from the head, causing the lips to become moist. A small quantity of water will then satisfy the thirst."

"Primitives" at Bristol.

CONFERENCE Sunday, June 17, will be long remembered. Beginning at seven in the morning, the meetings were continued till nearly ten at night. The pulpits of the Free Churches of Bristol and neighbourhood were supplied by the members of Conference. In the three parks, camp meetings were held in the afternoon, and it was reported that at many of the services souls had been saved. At the business session on Monday morning, a Wesleyan minister of Pennsylvania, U.S.A., applied for admission to the Primitive Methodist ministry, but the request could not be granted.

THE JUBILEE FUND.

Rev. Thomas Mitchell, who has been the secretary of this Fund since its inception, delighted the Conference with the news that the whole of the £50,000 had been raised. Mr. W. P. Hartley joined in the congratulations. One-fourth of the money, it should be said, was given by Mr. Hartley.

There are only three or four Primitive Methodist missions in Ireland, though the Connexion has been working there for more than half-a-century. It was now proposed to give them up. The Quarterly Missionary Committee questioned the wisdom of spending money which was largely obtained from poorer places than Belfast. A long discussion was given to the matter, and finally it was agreed to give the Belfast missions one more chance if the several stations can be formed into a unit.

The Sunday schools continue to flourish. There are twenty more schools this year than last. The income of the schools is the highest ever reached, viz., £68,668 16s. 1d. The secretary (Rev. Danzy Sheen) has travelled 11,000 miles during the year, and taken part in 407 meetings.

AN EXTENSION SCHEME.

Mr. W. P. Hartley has elaborated a scheme by which immediate advantage can be taken for the buying of sites and the building of chapels in London, the suburbs of provincial cities and towns, and holiday resorts. It is the borrowing of £100,000, to be lent to trustees, with or without interest, to be repaid on an arranged scale. To meet the interest and repayment, £5,000 per year will be sought in voluntary subscriptions.

Mr. Hartley has shown his kindly interest in the ministry by his care for the College and his repeated gift of books to the circuit ministers. At the great Conference speech-meeting, Mr. Hartley was the recipient of the ministers' gifts. These included an album, with ministerial photographs and pictures of the Connexional Institutions, a clock and vase, a silver salver with Worcester ware, and tea service silver-mounted. These last were given to Mr. and Mrs. Hartley. The speakers at this meeting were Revs. A. T. Guttery, of Newcastle, H. J. Pickett, of Northampton, and the President of the Conference.

On Tuesday morning (June 19) the Church Extension Fund was before the Conference. The Assembly would hear of no delay in this important matter. Mr. Hartley, as is his wont, has set the generous example. For three years, he will give 25 per cent. on the contributions to this Fund. Apart from this, £3,000 were promised at the Conference.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Rev. John Smith was the speaker at the morning conference on Wednesday. The ladies held their meeting in the afternoon, when Mrs. Parr (who has returned from Australia with her husband after a ministry of ten years), Mrs. Buckenham (the widow of the late Rev. Henry Buckenham, who died on the field), Miss Perritt, the young people's evangelist, and Miss Moseley (who is going to South Africa to join her future husband) delivered earnest addresses.

The evening gathering was a triumph from beginning to end. No better chairman could have been found than Mr. Thomas Lawrence, the treasurer of the African Fund. It was an ideal missionary meeting in the sense that the speakers were real foreign agents—Mr. Fairley having spent eight years in Fernando Po; Mr. Batt, thirteen years in Aliwal North; and Mr. Parr, four years in West Africa and ten in New South Wales.

THE UNION QUESTION.

On Thursday morning the report of the Joint Committee of the Union with the Bible Christians was submitted. It was simply the tabulation of the votes registered in the district committees and circuit quarterly meetings on the proposals. These were unfavourable to union. Forty-three votes were given in support in the committees of the districts, 1,826 against, while 220 were neutral. In the circuits, 2,402 agreed, 9,583 disagreed, 988 did not vote. The Joint Committee did not feel free to make any further suggestion, but Mr. Thomas Lawrence proposed that a committee of an equal number of Primitive Methodists and Bible Christians should be constituted to preserve fellowship and fraternity between the two denominations.

The committee reports that far more remains to be done before the Church has done its duty to its own poor.

At the concluding session, Rev. J. O. West, rector of St. Philip's, led the devotions. The third draft of stations was confirmed, and some discussion took place as to filling the vacancies in the college.

It was decided that next year's conference should be held at Sheffield.

North-Eastern Hospital for Children.—The annual report of this institution shows that 792 children were treated in the wards during 1899. In the out-patient department 16,665 children received (including nearly four thousand accident and emergency cases), while the total number of out-patients was 59,203. The hospital, which is situated in Hackney Road, Shoreditch, N.E., serves an extensive district, comprising Bethnal Green, Hackney, Enfield, Walthamstow, Tottenham, etc. Impelled by force of circumstances, the committee have undertaken a scheme of enlargement, involving the expenditure of about £40,000. Towards this amount £6,000 has been subscribed. The secretary is Mr. T. Glenton-Ker, and the city office of the hospital is 27, Clements Lane, Lombard Street, E.C.

Scotsmen in London.

A REPRESENTATIVE Scotch gathering of ladies and gentlemen filled the rooms of the Caledonian Christian Club, 24, Guilford Street, Russell Square, on the occasion of the thirteenth annual meeting of the Club, and the first of such gatherings in the new premises. The visitors were impressed with the improved position of the Club, its cheerful outlook on beautiful fields and gardens, and the homely appointments of this Scottish institution.

The report submitted by the secretary, Mr. Arthur Robertson, gave evidence of a year's earnest and successful work. The youth of our provinces stream into London. Yesterday they bade a tender farewell to home friends; to-day they are in the mighty roar and swirl of "Tempted London." To-morrow they will definitely choose their business spheres, and probably within a few hours of their arrival their companionships on the upward ascent of virtue and honour, or on the downward grade of moral and social ruin. As far as Scotland is concerned, this residential Scottish Home stands at the parting of the ways. Its open door, kindly welcome, temporary accommodation, and helpfulness to the stranger "alone in London" have been a veritable blessing, and has the warmest gratitude of many homes in the country.

A cheering note in the report was, that a visit paid by the secretary to Liverpool has led to the forming of a strong committee in that city for the purpose of starting a Scottish club on the same lines. It is, indeed, most probable that similar clubs will, ere long, be established in many great centres. It has been a most serious problem to all our churches and Y.M.C.A.'s how best to prevent the leakage from all our congregations, caused by removals to the Metropolis and other cities, and how best to secure that the thousands who annually begin city life should be linked with Christian churches and associations. No one who has had any experience among the masses of young men and women in London can fail to deplore how many there are who neglect the Sabbath and the sanctuary, and have cut adrift from all that they held sacred in the homes and surroundings of their youth.

Some 230 young men, mainly from Scotland, were received during the year. Of these, 130 became resident members for longer or shorter periods, giving for residence and board £525. Nearly 100 other fresh arrivals were guided to safe and suitable lodgings. The various agencies of the Club, such as reading-room, library, recreation, musical evenings, lectures, the labour bureau, the private inquiry department in search for lost ones, aid to needy countrymen, along with the sociable homely appointments where the family altar and the "big ha' Bible" hold their inspiring sway, are doing a work which cannot be engrossed in any report or estimated in money columns. The financial statement was full of hopefulness. The prompt rallying of Scottish friends to secure the present premises evinced their real interest in the work. On account of the purchase of lease and initial expenses, there is at present a debt of £150, which, it is hoped, will soon be paid.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. Robert Morton, and among those who spoke were: The Right Hon. J. A. Campbell, M.P., Colonel Morton (Mildmay), Rev. A. Matheson (Belgrave), and Rev. J. Oliver Dick (College Park).

London City Mission.—The annual gathering of foreigners in London, held in connection with the London City Mission, took place last week at the residence of Mr. F. A. Bevan, Trent Park, Barnet. Sixteen nationalities were represented. In the course of the proceedings, addresses were given by Mr. Bevan and other friends.

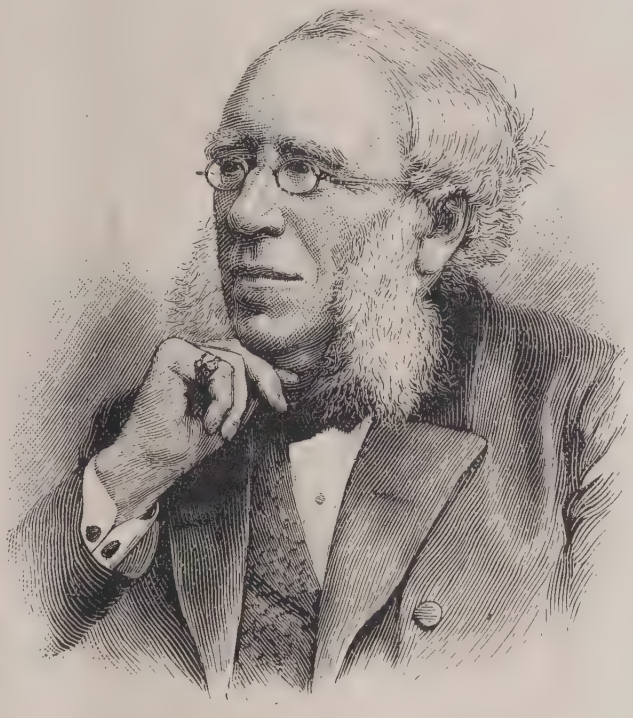
Dr. E. Bean Underhill.

A VERY remarkable man, not only in the esteem of his own denomination but in that of the Christian Church generally, is the subject of our present sketch. His long official connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, extending, as acting or as honorary secretary, over more than half a century, the prominent part he has taken when leadership has been required on behalf of civil and religious liberty, the versatility of the gifts with which he has been endowed, the marvellous retention still in their vigour of his intellectual powers, though in his eighty-seventh year—these and other considerations more than justify the estimate that Dr. Underhill is a very remarkable man. Our readers will peruse with much interest the particulars we are able to record of this distinguished servant of Christ.

The early life of Dr. Underhill was spent in the city of Oxford, where, whilst a lad, he was a pupil of Rev. James Hinton, who not only ministered to the church of which his parents were members, but also conducted a school which, in its day, was one of considerable importance. There can be little doubt as to Mr. Hinton's salutary influence upon the plastic mind of his scholar. A business vocation followed, reaching over several years; but its engagements permitted considerable leisure for reading, of which he was not slow to take advantage; and who can gauge the stimulating effect of residence in a University city upon a susceptible mind? Through marriage with a daughter of Mr. Collingwood, the University Printer, associations were formed which naturally tended to develop still further literary tastes.

About this time the question of entering the ministry was seriously entertained, various preaching engagements having been undertaken with much acceptance. Moreover opportunity to give himself to reading, meditation, and prayer was afforded by removal from Oxford to a quiet village near Stroud. In this rural home, where ministered the Rev. Thomas Newman, of Shortwood, Mr. Underhill resided for some five or six years; and whilst there he consented to edit the greater part of a valuable series of works published by the Hansard Knollys Society, publications intended to vindicate the rights of conscience, to which the pen of the editor himself largely contributed.

But the question of entering the Christian ministry, as that of adopting the literary profession, was determined by an important event which occurred in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, viz., the resignation of the secretaryship by Rev. Joseph Angus, D.D., on his acceptance of the presidency of the College at Stepney, now Regent's Park College. This took place in 1849. For some little time the committee of the Society had been considering the desirability of appointing two secretaries. To fill the vacancy, attention was directed to Rev. Frederick Trestrail and to the subject of this sketch, both of whom accepted office. In the sphere thus opened up Mr. Underhill found ample and congenial scope for his distinctive and well-trained abilities. The earlier years spent in business, the period which followed of retirement devoted to literary pursuits, all tended to prepare the man for his new post of responsible duty.



From Photograph by Messrs. Melhuish and Gale, Ltd., 58, Pall Mall.

It is of course impossible, in the space at disposal, to do more than refer very briefly to some of the more important services rendered by Dr. Underhill to the Society during his half-century of official connection with it. Five years after his appointment, he undertook, at the urgent request of the committee, a deputation visit to India, an undertaking of a much more serious nature than to-day, with its more difficult mode of travel. The visit extended over two years and a-half, all the stations of the Society being personally inspected. The instructions dealt with matters of great moment. The famous College at Serampore was in danger of being permanently alienated from the purposes of its distinguished founders, and becoming simply a secular institution. By prudent counsels and satisfactory arrangements, the long-standing grievances which had unfortunately arisen between the authorities in London and in Serampore were entirely removed, and a complete "reunion effected of all portions of the mission work commenced under the auspices of the Society." Dr. Underhill greatly rejoiced that this event should have been brought to pass during the time of his sojourn in the East, and that the duty of making the necessary arrangements for the future conduct of the College should have fallen to his lot.

In the conferences held with missionaries, most useful discussions took place as to the best methods by which the truths of the Gospel could be brought home to the hearts of the natives. The deputation rejoiced to find that they one and all felt the oral preaching of the Gospel to be the instrument appointed by the Lord Jesus Christ for the conversion of men; but it appeared to him that a closer appeal was wanted—a more direct bringing home of the truth to the consciences of individuals than itinerant and bazaar preaching allowed. He consequently urged, notwithstanding the difficulties presented by the social habits of the people, that the missionaries should make domiciliary visits, or by availing themselves of the usages of politeness they should endeavour to reach single persons, such as the heads of families and shopkeepers, and, in the quiet intercourse thus obtained, press home with affectionate earnestness the truth as it is in Jesus.

Many other questions, such as the desirability or otherwise of maintaining boarding-schools, the importance of native churches supporting their own pastors, the allowances made to missionaries and native agents, the position and prospects of the Mission Press, all alike demanding careful handling, were duly considered. Dr. Underhill closed his report to the committee in the following terms, indicative of the spirit with which he had all along been animated:

> In laying down the powers with which, by your kindness, I was invested, I cannot but express my warmest thanks for the kindness which has been reposed in me and for the unceasing prayers presented on my behalf. Surely God has heard your supplications, and given me the blessings you have sought. It will be my constant endeavour to excite and sustain the interest of God's people in the noble enterprise of evangelizing India, that vast and magnificent empire which it has pleased the Most High to place in the hands of our country for its rescue from the grasp of direful superstition, and for the removal of moral and spiritual evils, destructive alike to the temporal and everlasting welfare of the numerous myriads which inhabit it.

It may here be mentioned that advantage was taken of the knowledge Dr. Underhill had acquired by the Committee of the House of Commons, which at the time was deliberating upon the great changes about to be effected in the government of India. It was felt that his opinions and information might be of value, and his evidence was thankfully received.

Two years after his return from India Dr. Underhill undertook a further deputation visit—this time to the West Indies—having as his colleague the late Rev. J. T. Brown, of Northampton. It was important that the Missionary Society should have such reliable testimony as these gentlemen would be able to afford as to the real condition of the churches since the days of Negro emancipation, three-fourths of the adult people at the time of the visit having formerly been slaves. Whilst the deputation naturally found the influence of old prejudice and superstition to some degree at work, they were able to give a very encouraging report of the sincere piety and ardent zeal of the native Christians. They said:

> Notwithstanding many causes for solicitude still existing, the Society, by its agents and under the blessing of God, has done a work in the island, both social and religious, which demands manifold thanksgivings to the Great Deliverer and Redeemer of men, and inspires gladdening hopes for the future.

In the year 1869 the committee felt it needful to request Dr. Underhill to undertake a third deputation visit. Difficulties had arisen in connection with the work at Cameroons, on the West Coast of Africa, and it was felt that the secretary's presence might help towards their removal. At the call of duty this important visit was paid, and the object contemplated was fully attained, though at severe personal cost, Mrs. Underhill, who had accompanied her husband, dying on the African shore.

Over and above those general duties belonging to the office of a missionary secretary, Dr. Underhill has laid the Society he has served under no little obligation by his contributions to its literature. Through his early literary opportunities he had gained a remarkable facility in the use of his pen. Few writers have acquired greater readiness and accuracy in composition. Shortly after his Jamaica visit, he published his volume on the West Indies. A smaller book, entitled "East and West," had a large circulation amongst Baptist churches. To biography his pen has made several valuable contributions: the character and deeds of such celebrated men as Dr. Phillippo, of Jamaica; Alfred Saker, of West Africa; and Dr. Wenger, of India, having been placed upon permanent record. And since his retirement as honorary secretary he has by no means been idle. Though free from the burden of office, the pen of the ready writer has found frequent employ. His sympathies with the Christians in Jamaica being as keen as ever, he grew righteously indignant over the disturbances in that island during the régime of Governor Eyre; hence "The Tragedy of Morant Bay."

We have said that Dr. Underhill in early life contemplated entrance into the ministry. Theological questions have ever attracted his serious thoughts, and, as an evidence of this, nine years ago he wrote "The Divine Legation of Paul the Apostle," a work which will well repay perusal. He has more recently reproduced various valuable papers, which had appeared at different times, and are now presented in a volume entitled "Principles and Methods in Missionary Labour."

Dr. Underhill has filled with rare ability other offices than that of Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, some of which he still holds. This is the case with the Treasurership of the Bible Translation Society. This Society was brought into existence a short time previous to Dr. Underhill's official association with the Mission, being occasioned by the withdrawal of the pecuniary assistance formerly given to Baptist missionaries, on the ground that they declined to deal with the words relating to baptism, by transliterating, instead of translating, in the way requested, or by using terms unobjectionable to Christians of other denominations supporting the Bible Society. Dr. Underhill, feeling that the right of the translator to translate as his conscience required should be held inviolate, has ever been a faithful advocate of the principle upon which the Bible Translation Society was founded; and his contention still is that "the obvious course would have been for the Bible Society to aid all parties, as had been the custom, and to leave translators to deal conscientiously and untrammelled with the sacred text as they are entitled to do."

Another office Dr. Underhill has filled since 1880 is that of the treasurer of Regent's Park College, an institution in whose welfare he has shown the deepest interest, and in the management of which his judgment and experience have been of signal advantage.

It was not to be expected that the Baptist Union would pass over a denominational leader who had rendered such conspicuous services when an opportunity arose to recognise his work. Consequently, in 1873, he was honoured with a hearty call to fill its presidential office, a position which, with dignity and usefulness, he admirably sustained. By the London Baptist Association he has been similarly honoured, and the church at Gunnersbury, in which he took a prolonged and generous interest, is a permanent memorial of his year of official service. It may be added, that for many years he has been an invaluable member and officer of the church at Heath Street, over which the Rev. William Brock is pastor. Our readers will, we are confident, after perusing this brief sketch of so eminent a servant of God, prayerfully desire that the days which still remain may be full of Divine peace, and that from the hallowed home in Hampstead, where he and Mrs. Underhill reside, there may be an abundant entrance ministered into the Father's house above.

The Indian Famine.

THE latest news from India is far from reassuring as to the arrival of the expected monsoons. According to official advices, the situation is unaltered. Frequent showers have fallen in the Deccan and elsewhere, but the copious general rain, so urgently needed for the ploughing and sowing of autumn crops, holds off. Writing from Simla, on May 31, the special correspondent of The Standard said: "Springs have long ago dried up; wells show no water; even the large rivers are now mere trickling threads of water, meandering through a wilderness of hot rock or burning sand." Cattle have perished by the million, and the outlook is in every way one of increasing gravity. It is to be hoped that Christian people will continue to strengthen the hands of the missionaries, at this time, by prayer and practical aid.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

In the course of a letter to Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, Mr. Alfred E. Bower, of Abu Road Station, Central India Railway, says:—"Every man's heart is throbbing with compassion for these poor starving people. Two of my inspectors, with other subordinate officials, are daily feeding a large number of poor famished people. This morning I saw dogs worrying a corpse, and as I am writing the wail of starving children is in my ears. Wherever one goes the path is beset by 'human skeletons.' We all subscribe, but cannot assist all, but with help can keep a few going until better times."

A special correspondent of the Calcutta paper, The Englishman, pays a tribute to the efforts of the missionaries. He says:—"In your travels through the affected areas, and especially in a congeries of Native States like Rajputana, where the suffering and the distress are more acute than in any other part of India, you come across many evidences of the quiet, unostentatious but excellent work the missionaries are doing, both in aiding and supplementing the efforts of the Government officers and in bringing before the proper authorities scandals and abuses, which, in this time of intense pressure, might otherwise pass unnoticed. The best official organization is a poor substitute for the undivided attention, the generous kindly Christian sympathy the orphans receive from the

who have devoted their lives to the Master's work in India."

The same writer observes:—"At Ashpura, in the great famine of thirty years ago, the Scotch Presbyterian Mission established an orphanage, and now when Rajputana is in the grip of a famine of unparelleled intensity, the Mission has again cheerfully accepted the same responsibility. To the English mind the word 'orphanage' suggests a pile of bricks and mortar, but in India climate and custom bring expenditure upon construction within very small limits. . . In normal years a big bund hard by, constructed during the last famine, holds up a splendid sheet of water; but a few shallow pools are the only signs of moisture in tank. By the time the famine is over the Society calculate that 1,200 orphans will be left under their control.

Rev. F. S. Stevenson, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, writes from Paranti:—"The generosity of your readers deserves better recognition than one writing in the midst of famine work can attempt to give. . . . The Bhils, who chiefly inhabit the mountainous districts (which railways leave untouched), have been almost wiped out in parts. One great difficulty, too, is the timidity of the people. Many will rather die than surrender themselves to government on the relief works. Most, even, of the intelligent labourers believe that hospitals are arrangements for their destruction and the ceaseless funerals from them and the poor-houses naturally confirm this belief.

Korea and Her Children.

"WHERE is Korea?" said Mrs. A., in a soliloquizing tone. "Isn't it down by Greece?" "No, dear madam," was the response—"not the Korea I come from; that is up to the north-east of China, and distant fifteen hours by steamer from Japan."

"And what is your work?" pursued Mrs. A. "My work, dear madam, is amongst the destitute children. It is not fair to let the Roman Catholics get all the children. In Seoul, the capital of Korea, near the Japanese quarter, surrounded by hills, stands the Roman Catholic Cathedral, a very fine building, on a magnificent site within ten minutes' walk of the electric tram-car which runs across the city from the west to the east gate and down through the south gate to the river Han Kang, where we cross by the ferry and connect by the railway with the port of Chemulpo, twenty-eight miles distant. Close to the cathedral, in a beautiful situation, is a large orphanage containing 400 Korean children, both boys and girls, and at Chemulpo there is another for 100 children, both establishments conducted by the French Sisters."

Now the question is, Shall we, the people of Protestant England, allow this state of things to continue? Shall we let the Roman Catholics get all the children?

On one of the coldest days of last winter, when the thermometer registered nine degrees below zero, an Englishwoman, one of the few in Seoul, was riding in a rickshaw up the wide thoroughfare leading to the West Gate when she heard sounds of wailing proceeding from a sack lying by the side of the road. She knew if she turned the sack over she would see a wretched little child, starving with cold and hunger, and perhaps covered with sores.

ALL RAGS AND MISERY,

What did she do? She went by on the other side.

But she came back again before she had gone many yards, ordered a "Jicky" man to take the child to the Home for Destitute Children. Arrived there, nobody would touch him; he was a boy about eleven years old. By dint of much persuasion the coolie was induced to carry away his clothes and bury them, and on being put into a tub, it was found that he had a sore as large as a dinner plate on his body! What was to be done?

The other eight boys all slept in one room, and it would not do to let them catch the itch. Again the Jicky man was called in, and we started for the hospital. But here we were met by the doctor, who sorrowfully said that the child was "not a hospital case."

"Not a hospital case!" we exclaimed. "No," was the sorrowful reply, "for if we took in all these cases, we should be over-run. We can only take in 'Paying Patients.' But the Roman Catholics can take them! They have got 500 of them. Then why cannot we? They know the value of the children. They know that in a few years they will be young men and women."

Mrs. Samuel Moffett, wife of one of the most devoted missionaries at Pyeng Yang, who supports a little girl in the Home, writes as follows to the Lady Superintendent:—

Dear Miss Perry,— . . . I so often think of what the training of those children means for the years to come. Surely it is our right to hope and pray that every girl may become a Bible-woman, and every boy a preacher in the broadest sense of those terms; that is, that every child shall be given to God and used of Him for good among this people.

I suppose there is not a missionary working in this land who does not feel more and more the great need of more and better trained native assistants. The Church of the future will need them sorely, and in the young men and women, the boys and the girls, lies the hope for this. May God's blessing rest constantly upon you both and the little ones for whom you care.

Pyeng Yang, February 28, 1900.

Nogurie, our eldest girl, about eleven years old, prayed the other day, "Please God, send money to buy our rice and clothes. Tell somebody we have not seen, and know nothing about, to send it." "The Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear."

"I was an hungred, and ye gave Me meat. I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink. I was a stranger, and ye took Me in."

Anyone wishing to know more of the Home may address me for particulars at Esbourn, Lawrie Park, Sydenham, S.E. I have just come from Korea for a year's furlough, and will be glad to conduct missionary meetings wherever invited. Korean costumes. Our treasurer in England is Mr. W. Roger Jones, of the Missionary Pence Association, Exeter Hall, Strand.

A Visit to Neukirchen.

To begin with, what and where is Neukirchen? It is a village in Rhenish Prussia, hard by the old town of Moers, where Gerhard Tersteegen was born. It is a remarkable village, by reason of the fact that it is the home and centre of a group of deeply-interesting Christian institutions. For two generations Neukirchen has been the head-quarters of an agency for the care and training of destitute or neglected girls—the Erziehungsverein, or Education Union. A thousand or more young people have enjoyed the benefits of the work, being placed in Christian families, and helped out into happy and honourable careers.

A younger organization is the Neukirchen Mission Institution—the comprehensive term for an orphanage, a training college for missionaries, and a society having Gospel agents in distant and needy fields. It is just twenty-two years since the late Pastor Doll founded this work; as time has sped, the organization has expanded, alike in departmental variety and religious influence. The work has all along been conducted on lines similar to those followed by the late George Müller, of Bristol; the Lord's people have been led to answer prayers offered to Him who is at once "Father of the fatherless" and "Lord of the harvest" of the world.

Broad as the Evangelical Alliance in its basal principles, the Institution has been a blessing to many. At the present time there are some 200 persons, old and young, for whom the Lord graciously provides while they are engaged in his business, or are being prepared for future service. The foreign mission spheres are in Java and East Central Africa; in each field there are nine workers. The brethren in training have consecrated themselves to the Lord. Their equipment combines the industrial with the intellectual, so that, when thrown upon their own resources in distant spheres, they will be able to build houses and plant food-stuffs as well as to preach the Gospel and teach the people. Among the dear children who are being nursed for the Lord at Neukirchen, are some whose parents "finished their course with joy" as evangelists among the heathen.

The small village in which this important Institution has grown up is, indeed, a privileged place. For many years it has enjoyed the oversight of godly ministers, and the parishes around have been similarly blessed. Drunkenness and mendicancy are unknown; and other immunities coming under the head of outward benefits of Christian life and influence are realized by the general community. Periodical conferences on the spiritual life have been held with great profit, and among those who have found joy in occasional assistance is our venerable brother, Dr. Baedeker.

During a recent visit to Rhenish Prussia, I was delighted to observe the many tokens of Divine blessing upon the work of the Neukirchen Mission. The spiritual credit of the Institution has told to the praise of God in the district; Gospel publications and evangelization have been signally fruitful of good. The director is a man of God, and he has the co-operation of a staff like-minded. Like all true workers, they have anxieties, but they find continual encouragement in the faithfulness of God. Communications may be addressed to Inspector Stursberg, Missions Haus, Neukirchen, Kr. Moers, Rhenish Prussia, Germany.

J. W. T.

Adeline, Countess Schimmelmann.

While this devoted and honoured servant of Christ is particularly popular among Scandinavians and Germans, the story of her life and the persecutions she has endured for the sake of the Gospel, have become familiar to Christians in all lands. Any account of her evangelistic work cannot fail to interest those who follow with prayerful sympathy her earnest and fruitful labours.

Her recent services in New York, Brooklyn, and district have resulted in many being drawn to Christ. In the course of an address at the Central Baptist Church, Brooklyn, the Countess told of a meeting she held in Hamburg in a theatre, when nearly all present were anarchists. When she mentioned the name of God, there were hisses and howls of disapproval. Several men rushed toward the platform, and one of them struck at her with a cane. Laying her hand gently on his shoulder, she said: "You are my guest, and it is not seemly for you to behave thus in the house of a lady." The man was abashed, and withdrew with his followers, though in a few moments they returned and took seats in the audience. When she mentioned the name of Jesus, they laughed; but while she repeated earnestly and prayerfully the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin," there fell upon the wild audience a solemn hush. She now spoke of that meeting as through the Blood of Christ to win and subdue the worst of men. At the close of the service in the Central Baptist Church, a man dressed in sailor's garb came from the audience, and taking her by the hand, said, with deep emotion, "Countess, I was converted in that meeting in Hamburg where you spoke, and have been serving Christ over six years. I came across the river to-night that I might see you and tell you about it."

At the close of an address in German the Countess requested all who would accept Christ to raise their hands. A tall, intelligent German was almost the first to comply. He related that he owned six saloons, and was furnishing a seventh. He had now accepted the Saviour, and would at once give up the business. In the same meeting a gentleman of wealth and culture came forward to say that he had for the first time realized a distinction between knowledge and possession. Hereafter he would not simply know Christ—he would possess Him in all his fulness.

English-speaking Girls in India.

The World's Y.W.C.A. has organized work among English-speaking girls in India, and has at the present time sixteen workers in the field. Mrs. Hatt-Noble, writing from Leckhampstead, Reigate, says:—"Miss Reynolds (secretary) having recently visited India, brings back urgent requests for consecrated Christian ladies to go—to Kandy, Ceylon, one of the fairest spots on earth where the climate is most healthy; to Bangalore, which has the great advantage of having a fixed English population; to Ootacamund, to Cawnpore, where there are the railway people, the woollen and leather mills, and the people within the civil lines; to Calcutta, which has an enormous number of English-speaking girls within its boundaries; and to many other places, where the need of true workers is so desperate.

THREE DISTINCT INTERESTS—

"Have we no responsibility for India, and even more for our own fellow-countrywomen, cut off from all that is most precious in our lives in the homeland? I shall be glad to communicate with anyone willing to go forth."

Rev. Francis Paynter, late rector of Stoke-next-Guildford, writes: "Having made, last winter, a missionary tour through India, I thoroughly endorse the above letter, and believe this to be a most pressing need."

In Northern Europe.—II.

By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

From St. Petersburg I travelled to the Baltic provinces, re-visiting Réval at the invitation of Baroness Uxkull, and then journeyed to Helsingfors, the capital of Finland, where I held a series of evangelistic and missionary meetings in a large Gospel hall and in the principal hall of the University. There was a special suitability of these services to local conditions in which the hand of Providence could be clearly traced. One of the most remarkable Christian workers I met in Finland was the Baroness Matilda Wrede (pronounced Vrada), who for the last eighteen years has devoted the whole of her time and energies to evangelising the prisoners of that country, conversing with them individually in their cells, including the most hardened and desperate cases, and helping in various ways discharged prisoners. The 7,000 prisoners in Finland call her "Our Matilda." By her Christian spirit, heroic courage, and womanly tact and sympathy, she has won an open door for the message of the Gospel to the hearts of hundreds and thousands of these hardened criminals, many of whom have become bright and consistent Christians. Again and again has her life been in danger from prisoners whose mental balance has suffered from long confinement, but God has always protected and delivered her. "I did not mind dying," she said to me, "for I am prepared for death; but I did not want people to misjudge and falsely accuse my poor prisoners, and reproach my work among them, on account of the violence of any towards me who were not in their right minds." On one occasion a prisoner in chains with the chain which confined his wrists. Unable to speak or utter a sound she could only look at him, and the look led him to unloose the chain and let her go. I went over the large prison in Helsingfors with her, where there are between 400 and 500 prisoners, visiting many cells, and was deeply moved by what I saw of her work for God in this most difficult and unattractive sphere.

IN ALL THE PRISONS

TRIED TO STRANGLE HER

I felt more than usually in touch with the Spirit of Jesus Christ in those guarded corridors and cheerless cells. He seemed to walk those corridors and enter those cells in the person of this delicate and devoted woman. My joy was exceeding great when I heard from her that she herself had been converted to God through the preaching of a brother from our Missionary Institute named Orest, whom I sent to Finland to preach the Gospel there, after a brief visit I paid that country about nineteen years ago. And she in her turn had been the means of starting dear Dr. Baedeker in his great work among the prisons of Finland, Russia, and Siberia, as he himself told me. Thus, when we find it after many days. Experience shows us that our labour is not in vain in the Lord.

From Finland I proceeded to Sweden, at the invitation of Prince Bernadotte, the son of the King of Sweden and Norway; I had the privilege, while holding meetings in Stockholm, of staying in the hospitable house of this Christian prince, whose excellent mother, the Queen of Sweden, I had visited many years ago in a previous journey. I also visited in my recent journey, at her invitation, the Crown Princess of Denmark, and found in her indeed a sister in the Lord. "Not many rich," or titled, or noble, has God called by his grace to the saving and transforming knowledge of his truth; but here and there are such to be met with, whose light shines with clear brightness for Jesus Christ, amid the dark surroundings of worldliness, unbelief, and superstition; and perhaps in no part of the world are there more such Christians to be found in the upper classes than in the countries of Northern Europe.

The Two Egos.

MANY boys and girls will know that ego is the first personal pronoun of the Latin language, It appears in the word "egoist," which describes the man in whom "I" bulks too big.

The New Testament speaks of two "egos." One appears in the familiar words of the apostle, "No longer I" (Gal. ii. 20). The other is spoken of by Christ our Lord in words addressed to his disciples in the upper room, "I in you" (John xiv. 20; xv. 4; vi. 56).

Now, the teaching of the Gospel concerning these two egos is that Christian life consists in the supplanting of the Self ego by the Christ ego.

This is evident when we think of the beginning of Christian life. The most carefully described conversion in the New Testament is that of Saul of Tarsus; and we read that the first outcry of the arrested man was, "Who art Thou, Lord?" and the second, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Both questions point the same way; namely, to the expulsion of self at the entrance of Christ. On the instant, as he lay there blinded by the excellent glory, it began to be with Paul, "not I, but Christ," and in his Epistles he consistently describes conversion in terms which tally with that great experience. "Put off the old man, which is corrupted according to the deceitful lusts, and put on the new man, which after God hath been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth." Conversion, in a word, is the eviction of the old ego—"no longer I"—and the installation of the new—"I in you." So intensely did Martin Luther believe this to be the radical change wrought in a man at his conversion by the Holy Spirit that he used to say, "When any one comes and knocks at the door of my heart, and asks, 'Who lives here?' I reply, 'Martin Luther used to, but he has moved out, and Jesus Christ now lives here.'"

And the change which took place at conversion continues through life. We are not to revert to the old ego. Some of Paul's converts in Galatia evidently did, and he reproved them. "Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now being made perfect in the flesh?"

Christ comes not as a visitor to our hearts, but as a lifelong resident. "Abide in me, and I in you." "We will make our abode with him." Christ in us is the source of spiritual life (Rom. viii. 10). Christ in us is the hope of glory (Col. i. 27), which simply means that we can live a life like Christ's only as He lives in us, and can hope to rise to where He dwells only as He dwells in us. Christ alone can rise to the level of Christ, just as water returns to its own level again.

Think of the difference that this fact realized makes in the hour of temptation. Many a lad falls a victim to impurity, many a girl to vanity, because they do not think it possible to overcome. "I was made that way, and I can't help it." No doubt you were; but remember, it is "no longer I, but Christ in me" now. It may not be in the old ego to trample the young lion and dragon underfoot; but it is in Him who comes and whispers, "I in you." You have it in you to conquer now, because you have Him in you, and He has overcome, and He is as strong as ever He was. Lay hold on that, and you go down to the hour of temptation as the well-trained student enters the examination-room, conscious of power to stand the test, and to step triumphant to the other side.

Then dare to believe that the fact is a fact, and act on it. Instead of consulting the self ego, consult the Christ ego. Christian Endeavourers are pledged to do so:—"I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do." Not my likings now, but his. O Christ, my Master, what wouldst Thou like? His will, his word, his way, will supersede yours. The first thought will not be "I," but "Christ." It will be "none of self, and all of Thee." "No longer I" will be your attitude in will and work, and in your calmed and joyous heart a quiet voice will whisper day by day in sweet refrain, "I in you."

18th Quarterly Prize Competition.

April to June.

RULES.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN.
   IV. Those between FIFTEEN and EIGHTEEN.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and your AGE last birthday.
5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. ☞ Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Tuesday, July 10. The results will be announced on July 19.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.
11. Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly. NO PAPERS can be re-examined after the lists appear.

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

TOPIC FOR JULY 1.

"WHEN IS A NATION SAFE?" (Deut. xxvi. 1-11.

THE strength of a nation does not consist in its armies or battleships, but in the character of its people, and specially in the purity and holiness of its home-life. Alas for Great Britain if the idea should ever predominate that our safety must be secured by becoming a military people. Our population can never be manipulated in the way in which Continental peoples are; our Empire is too far-extended for us to be able to preserve it by force of arms. Only so long as God is on our side shall we be safe, and God will be on our side only so far as we are a strong factor in the moral well-being of the world; and we shall only be this when our homes, and our peoples, the character of our civic and domestic life, is sweet and pure, religious and God-fearing. God must bring us into the land of promise, and God must keep us there; and this He will do only when we act upon the principle of vv. 6 and 7.

A simple and beautiful custom is described in this paragraph. The artless peasantry place the first of their fruits, of their garden produce, of their cornfield, of their olives and vineyards in baskets, and carry them with reverent joy to the selected place at the sanctuary. One by one they utter the simple formula of the third verse. How few of us acknowledge the goodness of God after times of agony and fear! Still fewer can say that they have come into all the promises of God.

Taking the basket from the suppliant's hand, the priest set it down before the altar, and again the Israelite takes up the words of the litany suggested in vv. 5-10. We must never forget the hole of the pit from which we were digged, never forget the evil bondage, the cry for help, the interposition of God, and all the mercy and goodness which He has caused to pass before us. We must not take these things as a matter of course. And let us see to it that we accompany our expressions of thanksgiving with the bringing of the first of the fruit.

The first of the morning hours; the first allotment of our weekly wage; the first day of the week; and perhaps with those who keep poultry, or trees or gardens, we may literally dedicate the first of everything to the Giver of all.

Notice the distinct injunction of v. 11, "Thou shalt rejoice in all the good," &c. So many seem afraid of joy. They fear if they are too happy God will send some trouble as a makeweight. I was reading only the other day, in a recent story, of the way in which one of the characters on any specially happy occasion would always throw in some doleful remark which would tend to depress the exuberance of joy on the part of herself and friends. How different is the spirit of this command, "Thou shalt rejoice!" The fruit of the Spirit is joy. Rejoice in the Lord always. Even when things do not appear good, let us dare to be thankful in all things, and give praise for all. All our Father's gifts are good, whatever be the wrappings or packing cases in which they come to hand.

How beautifully the law of Moses insists on unselfishness in its constant reiteration of the names of the Levite and the stranger. It is as though every home had its Levite. It may have been a kind of private chaplain, the teacher of the children, a preacher of righteousness. Having no home of his own, he would live with some hospitable family as in the case of Micah. Besides sheltering the Levite, the Jewish householder would throw open his doors to the stranger, as Ruth the Moabitess. The national exclusiveness opened its doors to men and women of other races and religions. In our case, the stranger might be the young Christian, fresh from the country to the great city, the lonely body at Christmas time, the delegate to the convention. Let your joy flow over to these!

C.E. NOTES.

The programme of the World's Convention is now practically complete. In addition to arrangements already announced, simultaneous meetings are to be held on the evening of July 14, at the Royal Albert Hall and the Alexandra Palace.

* * *

On July 16-18 the Convention will be in session at the Alexandra Palace. The general topic is to be "The Old Power for the New Age," with such subdivisions as "The Dawning Age and its Problems," "The Missionary Outlook," and "Pentecostal Power." Rev. C. M. Sheldon is to speak on commercial life. On the morning of July 18 "Messages of the Churches" will be given by the Bishop of London, Revs. J. G. Greenhough, Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Parker, and Dr. J. Watson.

* * *

Lady Henry Somerset and Canon Barker take part in a temperance demonstration. Professor White is to lecture on "Bible Study;" Dr. Horton is to speak on "The Day of Rest;" and Rev. John McNeill conducts an evangelistic service; while Rev. Dr. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavour Society, will give the presidential address. The following speakers, among others, will also take part:—Revs. Dr. Clifford, Dr. Handley C. G. Moule, A. Connell, W. L. Watkinson, Dr. Lorimer, Dr. Barrett, and Th. Monod.

The musical arrangements, which are under the direction of Rev. Carey Bonner, include organ recitals, a service of praise, led by the choir; and a cantata, to be given by junior members. Tickets to the Convention will be issued by most railways at reduced fares.

* * *

Rev. H. E. Fox, the well-known Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, will be one of the speakers at the Monday evening missionary demonstration.

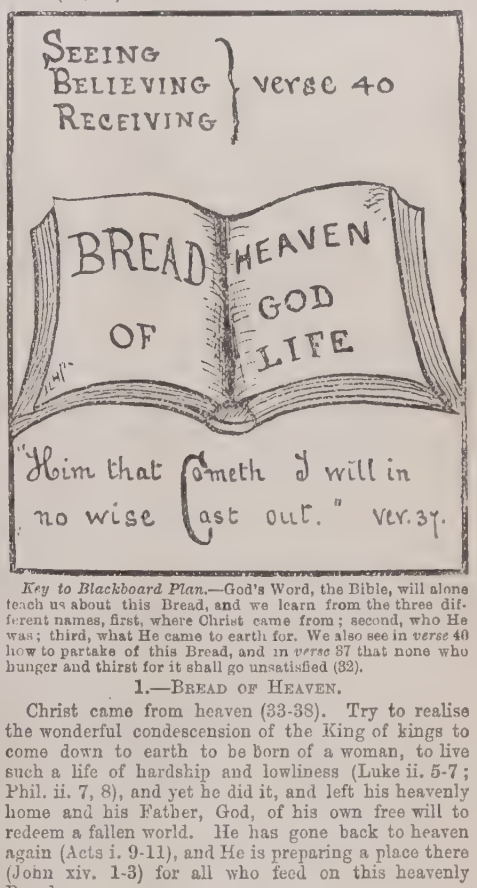
Jesus the Bread of Life.—John vi. 22-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Jesus said unto them, 'I am the Bread of Life.'"—John vi. 35.

INTRODUCTION.

IT was the day after the feeding of the 5,000 and the night that Jesus walked on the sea, that He teaches his disciples a great truth by reminding them of the bread with which He fed the 5,000, and then showing them them the true Bread from heaven, and that the feeding of those people had a far deeper meaning than any one of them had understood (26, 27).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—God's Word, the Bible, will alone teach us about this Bread, and we learn from the three different names, first, where Christ came from; second, who He was; third, what He came to earth for. We also see in verse 40 how to partake of this Bread, and in verse 37 that none who hunger and thirst for it shall go unsatisfied (32).

1.—BREAD OF HEAVEN.

Christ came from heaven (33-38). Try to realise the wonderful condescension of the King of kings to come down to earth to be born of a woman, to live such a life of hardship and lowliness (Luke ii. 5-7; Phil. ii. 7, 8), and yet he did it, and left his heavenly home and his Father, God, of his own free will to redeem a fallen world. He has gone back to heaven again (Acts i. 9-11), and He is preparing a place there (John xiv. 1-3) for all who feed on this heavenly Bread.

2.—BREAD OF GOD.

God set his seal on this true and living Bread (27). He gave the Bread to hungry souls (32). His will was carried out by Jesus, the Bread of God (38). God's purpose of "life eternal" was fulfilled as well (33; Matt. iii. 17, xvii. 5, xxvi. 39; John v. 30, iv. 34; Acts ii. 22; 2 Pet. i. 17). All these references show us how Christ was from God, and how God was satisfied with his life and his sacrifice.

3.—BREAD OF LIFE.

"Lord, evermore give us this bread" (34). So said the disciples, and so let us pray with all our hearts. It is the Bread of Life, and we are dead unless we eat, and eat frequently of it.

As hunger and thirst go together in our bodily needs, so do they for our souls; Christ supplies them both (Ps. xlii. 1, 2; John iv. 4-14; vii. 37; Matt. v. 6). If you know nothing of this, then without delay ask to be made hungry and thirsty for the Bread of Life and for the Living Water.

This is the attitude we all need to be in (Luke viii. 40). "Gladly received Him, waiting for Him" (40). "To have life" is not to see only (36); it is to believe (47-54); it is to receive (51).

Let us get verses 53-58 well into our minds. "Except ye eat, ye have no life." "Whoso eateth hath life;" and notice also in the middle of all this teaching comes that beautiful promise (37), "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out"—"I will never, never, cast out" (John x. 28; 2 Tim. ii. 19). Then—

"Come to the Saviour now.
He gently calleth thee."

The Zambesi Industrial Mission would be glad to receive applications from earnest Christian workers for mission service in British Central Africa. Age between twenty-three and thirty. Unmarried men, having a knowledge of some useful trade, such as carpentry or gardening, will be preferred. Full particulars can be had from Mr. Caldwell, 1, Gresham Street, E.C.

Stockwell Orphanage.

AN occasion which is looked forward to with eager expectancy and joy by the inmates of Stockwell Orphanage is Founder's Day. The annual festival of this year, held on Tuesday of last week, was a day of general rejoicing in the neighbourhood, while the number of visitors to the institution during the afternoon demonstrated how wide is the recognition of the labours of the deceased founder of the institution. The Orphanage is but one of many tokens of the large-hearted and revered C. H. Spurgeon, and while his name and remarkable gifts as a preacher of the Gospel are universally acknowledged through the widespread circulation of his sermons and books, the servant of God assuredly lives in the works which owe their existence to his genius.

The Orphanage provides Christian education as well as maintenance, for 500 fatherless boys and girls, and for these Tuesday was a memorable day. The proceedings for the most part consisted of musical drills, processions, and exhibitions, which afforded delight to a large concourse of friends of the children. The inmates are a happy family. The absence of any uniformity in their dress is one of the many pleasing features in the directing of so responsible and important a movement. Their performances throughout the day were warmly appreciated, and furnished abundant evidence of the care bestowed upon their physical and intellectual training.

In the centre of the grounds a large platform was erected, and here the children, bright and happy, were arranged. An abundance of streamers, bunting, and flags lent a festal appearance to the surrounding buildings of the institution; while the strains of music and the singing of the children veiled the pathos and tragedy which lie behind these young lives, now so gay and promising.

At the meeting in the evening, in the Memorial Hall, a large number of the visitors assembled. The tender and affectionate regard in which the memory of the founder of the institution is held was naturally manifest, and many tributes of sympathy and esteem were offered. A pathetic incident was the reading of a message of greeting from Mrs. Spurgeon, who for some time has been laid aside by sickness, praying that the gathering might prove a "happy and enjoyable reunion, full of blessed and sweet memories of the beloved servant of God, whose works do follow him as the years roll by." At the close of his first year as president, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon announced that all was well, and warmly acknowledged the efficient services of the helpers who had gathered round him and helped to maintain the work. The Chairman (Mr. W. W. Thompson) looked upon the institution as the most fitting memorial to the life and labour of the one whom he considered to be God's greatest gift to the century and generation.

The financial statement, read by the secretary, Mr. F. G. Ladds, was of an encouraging nature. The announcement that the year closed with a balance in hand, and that an increase of subscriptions had been realized, was received with much satisfaction.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon paid a touching tribute to the devotion of his revered father to the Orphanage, and formed a bouquet of the flowers of the beautiful personal qualities which shone out from his life in the many gracious deeds by which he is remembered.

Rev. C. W. Vick spoke in warm appreciation of the Orphanage, which he described as a home of homes with a family of families. In every sense it revealed the spirit of the founder.

Rev. A. Connell, in a brief and earnest address, advanced three reasons why the Orphanage claimed their support. One reason was that so long as Evangelical religion abides in this country, the works of Charles H. Spurgeon will continue to be blessed. Another reason was because of its simple humanness. This was understood by those who knew not what it was to have the blessing of a father's smile and a mother's embrace. His third reason was because the work was so much in harmony with the spirit of the teaching of Christ. They trained these fatherless children both for service in the present life and for the life beyond.

Mr. Fegan's Homes.

THE lease of our Little Wanderers' Home, Greenwich, having expired, it became necessary to find suitable premises in which to continue the good work carried on there in the rescue of young waifs and strays since 1879.

NEW INDUSTRIAL ORPHANAGE.

My Council and I have felt too that, both as regards economy, the physical development, and the moral welfare of our boys, there would be many advantages in a country environment, and that it would be prudent to acquire some freehold site which offered scope for future extension of the work, or removal thither of some part of the work now carried on at Southwark. The premises, known as were submitted to us, and having been carefully inspected, were found to be very substantially built, in a good state of repair, and generally most suitable for our purpose.

ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE, STONY STRATFORD,

It is stated that the land (with playing field in the rear, in extent about four acres) and buildings cost nearly £40,000. Through the kindness of a friend they were secured for £4,500 only.

Alterations, machinery, fittings, furniture, will cost about £2,600, and a new wing, including sanatorium and workshops, another £1,800. This will provide a thoroughly equipped Orphanage and Industrial Home for 350 boys, who will be housed, fed, clothed, taught good trades, and educated under evangelical Christian influence.

The neighbourhood is very healthy, there is a very good supply of water, and the premises are so well built that when they are adapted for our use, the up-keep will be very small for many years to come.

A few friends have, during the last fortnight, subscribed £3,400 towards the purchase money. Circumstances were all unfavourable for obtaining help for such a purpose just now; we therefore take this encouraging response as a direct answer to the earnest, believing prayers of many friends—especially of the dear people at our home Mission, who, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, have been pleading with God night by night, that he would move the hearts of his people to send in the purchase money by the day appointed.

A book of eleven views (17in. by 15in.) has been beautifully got up by our printing department here, and gives a capital idea of the exterior and interior of the buildings, front and rear. It will be sent, post free, to any of our friends for 2s. A similar book of views (9in by 7in.) can be had, post free, for 4d.

The chapel is a very fine edifice, and when cleared of some ecclesiastical ornaments and symbols not consistent with simple, evangelical teaching, and seated throughout plainly but comfortably, will be in the neighbourhood generally, which presents a great field, as large numbers of men employed at the L. and N.W. Ry. carriage works, and of young women at Messrs. McCorquodale's printing works at Wolverton, live thereabouts.

No debt will be incurred in alterations, furniture, &c., or in building the new wing, nor will any part of the premises be used till the whole are paid for.

My Council and I are all of one mind that this is a wonderful God-given opportunity, and I regard this as quite the most important step the Lord has enabled me to take during the thirty years he has given me the privilege of serving Him amongst "Nobody's Boys" in this great city. May many young hearts be won for the Saviour there, and young lives be trained in honourable, self-supporting industry.

J. W. C. Fegan.

Jews at Mildmay.

ONCE again poor Jews of East London, among whom the Mildmay Mission to the Jews carries on its work, have been welcomed to tea at the Conference Hall, Mildmay. On the first day the party consisted of 300 Jews and Jewesses, whose behaviour was excellent, and their gratitude for the interest taken in them very great. During the evening a meeting was held on the lawn, and addresses given by Rev. Charles Inwood, Col. Morton, and Mr. Samuel Wilkinson. We doubt if the attention has ever been so earnest to the old, old story of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ.

The following day 110 Jewish children were similarly entertained. In this case the company was limited to those on the books of the evening night school for children at the Central Hall, Philpot Street, E. The little ones thoroughly enjoyed the outing, and the games provided for them. After tea a short meeting was held, presided over by Rev. John Wilkinson, at which Col. Morton addressed the children. Their recital of Scripture and the singing of Christian hymns reflected great credit on their teaching; and it is a thing to inspire praise and hope to see how the quick Jewish intelligences of these children have laid hold of Christian truth. With some, it seems to have sunk into the heart.

Bookbags for Sailors.—Miss McLean, Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Dock, will be glad to receive bookbags for distribution among the Japanese sailors visiting this country. At the end of this week 260 are expected at Portsmouth, and Miss McLean is desirous that they shall be supplied with Christian literature.

Friedenheim Hospital.

"TAKE care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee." So reads the text which meets the gaze of the visitor to Friedenheim, and standing in the spacious hall one cannot but realize how fittingly it expresses the purpose and ministry of the institution. The inmates of this "Home of Peace" comprise those who are in the last stages of illness, when rejected or dismissed as incurable by the general hospitals. Others whose insufficient means and friendless condition prevent their being properly cared for in their declining days are here nursed with tender sympathy and Christian love, while waiting submissively for the inevitable.

Aged and infirm fathers and mothers, who have borne bravely the weary struggle of bringing up their families, left desolate in old age; young men and women, unable through sickness to earn their living, and none to help them; neglected orphans, are all welcomed to the Home, where endeavour is made to soothe their bodily pains, to comfort and cheer their hearts, and to lighten with the Gospel of the love of Christ the sometimes rapid and sometimes slow passage through the valley of the shadow of death.

On the ground-floor we find the men's wards. There are three of these, and three beds are reserved for cancer cases. The compartments are in all respects well appointed, and every comfort is provided, even to a charming conservatory, which forms a delightful resort for the patients. One of the men recently admitted has served for eight years in India and Burmah under Lord Roberts and Sir George White. Withal, the of the sufferers attest their happiness, and while one's heart aches to hear the different tales of sin, suffering, and woe from their lips, it is all the more encouraging to realize that there is "light at evening time." The texts with which the walls are studded are simple Gospel messages, appealing to the heart and conscience of the indifferent or speaking peace to the troubled in spirit.

One young man came as an infidel. Opposite his bed was John iii. 16, and as he lay lingering on the point of death the words sank into his heart. One day towards the end, with almost his last breath, he declared to his sorrowing mother that he believed the text, and passed away in peace. In the women's wards there is the same evidence of comfort in sorrow and joy in pain. In one of these a young wife of twenty-one, in rapid consumption, lived only a few weeks in the Home, bearing her affliction with quiet submission. One night, as the Sister went her last round, she said: "I am so sorry you are breathless to-night." "Yes," she replied; and her last words were a prayer that God would receive her into "his beautiful palace," with her husband also.

The occupants of the children's nursery are amusing and happy. Here, as elsewhere, the nosegays and bouquets are innumerable, and the constant prattle of the patient little sufferers maintains the brightness and joy of the room. Picture books, toy-cupboards, &c., speak for themselves as to how the weary hours are wiled away.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING, which was held a few days ago, the esteemed founder and superintendent of the institution — Miss Davidson — welcomed a large number of friends and supporters. The chair was occupied by Mr. John Langton, F.R.C.S., who spoke of the institution and its staff in terms of warm appreciation. Rev. Darlow Sarjeant emphasized the self-abnegation which characterized the efforts of the superintendent and the officers, who are inspired in their labours by the "Great Physician." Lady Hope spoke of the need of such an institution in the face of the sorrow, sin, and misery which exist on every hand. It is not always a case pronounced as incurable was hopeless, for in several such instances patients had been nursed back to health, and had happily recovered.

Miss Davidson reviewed the history and progress of the movement—from its unpretentious inception at Mildmay to the present time. Dr. A. T. Schofield added a few words of encouragement, remarking that the relief afforded was threefold—bodily, mental, and spiritual.

The Hospital is open to visitors two afternoons a week, and Miss Davidson will be glad to welcome any friends interested in this institution. She may be addressed Friedenheim, Upper Avenue Road, Swiss Cottage, London, N.W.

Mr. F. N. Charrington's Jubilee.

A LARGE and representative audience gathered at the Great Assembly Hall on Tuesday of last week, to celebrate the fiftieth birthday of Mr. F. N. Charrington, the esteemed founder and superintendent of the Tower Hamlets Mission.

The capacious building was simply but effectively decorated for the occasion with festoons and draperies in the national colours, while many flags and bannerets fluttered gaily from the balustrades of the galleries. The proceedings were in the nature of a hearty family gathering, rather than an orthodox public meeting, the audience consisting largely of East London artisans and their wives—plain work-a-day people who had been brought to Christ in connection with the Mission, and who had come together to praise God for

of the work and to wish the founder "many happy returns of the day."

The programme bristled with interesting features. For two hours or more prior to the commencement of the meeting proper, both during and subsequent to the public tea, opportunities were utilized by well-known evangelists and friends to give words of kindly encouragement to the members. Then, at the invitation of Lord Kinnaird, who took the chair, Mr. E. H. Kerwin made a statement which showed that in recognition of the occasion the sum of £2,800 had been raised. This amount, which it was hoped would be increased to £3,000, is applied to the reduction of the building debt. Mr. Kerwin went on to recall the salient facts in connection with the inception and progress of the work.

The familiar retrospect was received with hallelujahs. Tears were in many eyes as the speaker referred to the former desperate character of some who had been brought in—pugilists, dog-fighters, pigeon-fliers, and would-be suicides. In the mission offices, Mr. Kerwin has preserved the with which some who are now toiling for the master, had intended to destroy themselves. After adducing statistics, and recounting the labours of the staff of voluntary workers, the speaker concluded with kindly references, in the name of the audience, to Mr. Charrington and his efforts for the evangelization of the people.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who followed, rejoiced in the fruitful character of the Mission, and compared the unhappy condition of those who live selfishly with the joyful experience of those who follow the lines marked out for them by God. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, of New York, testified that the influence of the Assembly Hall girdles the world. Every temperance worker and every evangelistic toiler in the slums of the great cities had received stimulus from the stand taken by Mr. Charrington against the drink traffic. In hearty words, Mr. T. A. Denny said that as the Lord took David from the sheepfold, so He took Mr. Charrington from the brewer's vat. They were assembled to give fervent thanks for the good which had been done. Mr. R. C. Morgan next traced the foundation of the work to the revival movement of 1859, and to the consequent commencement and development of religious and philanthropic agencies in the East End.

It was now Lord Kinnaird's duty to present to Mr. Charrington, as representing the Mission, a cheque for the sum which had been raised. In doing so, he said they were assembled to give glory to God, and, he trusted, to re-dedicate themselves to the Lord's service. After referring to the improved social condition of the district, Lord Kinnaird said the Great Assembly Hall was itself a testimony as to what could be done by a few men of faith. It had encouraged Christian workers to undertake large things for God. It was a matter for satisfaction, that while drink shops and places of amusement continually strove to attract the people, the doors of the Great Assembly Hall, too, were open nightly.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, in returning thanks, said that he felt himself to be merely the figure-head, representing those who had borne the heat and burden of the day. People remark, "What numbers of people you must get from the West End to help you!" The workers, however, are those who have been converted in the Mission. Mr. Charrington went on to show that the evangelistic character of the Mission is well sustained. On the previous Sunday thirty persons had entered the inquiry room, and on the Monday six more. He prayed that the blessing which had accompanied their efforts in the past might be with them in the future in an increased measure.

Barbican Mission to the Jews

ON Friday last the foundation-stone was laid of the new Mission Hall, in course of erection in the Whitechapel Road, in memory of the first president of the Mission, Prebendary Gordon Calthrop.

The rector of Whitechapel (Rev. J. A. Faithfull) allowed the use of St. Mary's Church Room for the first meeting, which was held at noon. The president of the Society (Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe) conducted the proceedings, which were of a devotional character throughout.

The Chairman, in reviewing the past, spoke of the dispensations of Providence towards the work, and pleaded for definite trust in God for the future. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins commented upon the Aaronic benediction—"The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace." Many helpful and inspiring thoughts and consolations were deduced, and the meditation was indeed a time of spiritual refreshing. Addresses were also given by Revs. S. T. Bachert and J. B. Barraclough, who spoke of the needs for further advancement in carrying the Gospel to God's ancient people.

The afternoon ceremony on the site of the new mission buildings was numerously attended. Prebendary Webb-Peploe again presided, and made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Mission, and the efforts put forth to save the wandering sons of Israel. Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, in giving the financial statement, made the favourable announcement that £4,500 had been subscribed towards the sum required. The total cost of the building, with site, would be about £7,500.

The foundation stone was formally laid by by Mrs. Gordon Calthrop, who was afterwards the recipient of the silver trowel. Rev. Prebendary Barlow paid a tribute to the memory of the first president of the Mission. He remarked on the devotion to the office of his successor, Archdeacon Sinclair, and referred to the unremitting energy of Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, in the interests of the mission.

Rev. H. E. Fox, in a few earnest and practical remarks, spoke of the numerous encouragements for missionary effort among Hebrew people, especially when the work was regarded from the side of God's covenant with his chosen nation. Rev. Canon McCormick, D.D., referred to the life-long interest taken by the late Preb. Gordon Calthrop in the Jews, and spoke in hopeful terms of the strenuous efforts now being put forth to bring them to acknowledge and receive Christ as their promised Messiah.

Closing words were spoken by Rev. A. R. Buckland, and the singing of "The God of Abraham Praise," terminated the proceedings.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE willingness of the people to hear the Gospel, is shown by the large attendances at the tents, some of which are filled to their utmost capacity. Our hearts have been deeply touched by the manifestations of Divine blessing, which have been graciously accorded.

On Sunday last, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison preached at the Clapham tent to large numbers, and with signs of the Spirit's presence. Messrs. Rowland Edwards, S. Levermore, and McAusland have commenced a week of meetings at Wimbledon. At the evening service on Sunday, there were some instances of blessing. The tent at Forest Gate was opened on Wednesday last, by Mr. Leonard Weaver.

The Weaver Brothers have been much encouraged at the growth of the meetings at Wood Green, both in numbers and power. On Sunday afternoon, Pastor D. J. Findlay, St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, gave the address. One of his sayings was, "If you have any reason why you are not a Christian, have it set in brass, and hang it for everyone to read." A Christian young man in one of the business houses repeated this to an unconverted fellow. At two o'clock the next morning he was awakened from sleep. It was the same young fellow in soul agony. He said, "I have been thinking of reasons for my not being a Christian, and can't find one. Do point me to Jesus." The workers' hearts have been greatly cheered at the quietness in the after meetings, and the many anxious seekers. On Sunday evening the evangelist was Mr. W. R. Lane. Notwithstanding the very bad weather in the evening, the tent was crowded in all parts, many standing and others not able to enter. Mr. Lane preached on the words "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," and some anxious souls were dealt with at the close.

During the past week Mr. Charles Inglis and Rev. J. T. Vine have been preaching at Harlesden. The meetings have been of an encouraging character. At the meetings on Sunday last, the Weaver Brothers were the missioners. At the men's meeting there was blessing, and at night the tent was filled Thirty-two persons rose seeking the Lord.

At the close of the Saturday night meeting at Fulham, conducted by Rev. D. M. Cameron, a man who had been a member of a Y.M.C.A., and a worker in a Scottish Mission, asked to be prayed for. He had fallen through drink, walked to London, and wandered aimlessly into the tent. He cried, "O God, I have wandered far from Thee." There is little doubt that he is really restored and saved.

In the children's meetings, blessed work has been done in several tents, but, on account of the rains, the meetings have not been so largely attended. The interest, however, still continues, and many have waited to the after-meetings to be dealt with.

A. G.

The tent at Stratford has recently been the scene of rejoicing over many souls. Mr. James Gracie and myself found many who were expecting blessing when we began on Sunday, June 17. Never have I seen the Spirit's work more clearly manifest. On that day, over thirty voluntarily came forward and gave their addresses, wishing me to write to them and lead them to Christ. On Monday the meeting was still more solemn, and numbers again spontaneously were found seeking workers to help them to the Saviour. One good woman brought me 10s. as a thankoffering for her husband's conversion. A man said: "I've come eight miles to be saved to-night." A firm in the Broadway put off their Bible class on Monday evening, and at the end of the week five of them had been blessed. The head of the firm was present; he is quite deaf, but said to me: "I have not heard a word you have said, but it has been my privilege to pray for you all the time you have been speaking." On Thursday evening the rain came down in torrents, and we hardly expected we should have any meeting, but were amazed to find scarcely any diminution in the large attendance we have seen at these meetings. On Friday another large gathering assembled, and till a late hour we were busy taking the names and addresses of the anxious.

Chas. Cook.

Mr. Josiah Nix has just returned from a very delightful trip to Norway, and will conduct special services in the Grand Theatre, Blackpool, on Sunday, July 1, and will commence the special mission to the herring fishermen at Fraserburgh on July 8.

Mr. Bob Johnson conducted meetings at Ascot during the recent race meeting. A man and his wife, the former of whom was once a Christian worker, were turned from evil ways of life; they left the racecourse trusting in the Saviour.

At Ascot Races.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

TWENTY of the evangelists of the Open-Air Mission took the field, including Major J. C. Cox, Mr. Ned Wright, and Mr. B. Barry Wake. Morn, noon, and night each day, testimony was borne for God, and the Gospel was faithfully preached, while choice literature received widespread distribution among the multitudes who thronged this fashionable but evil place. Here are some outstanding incidents:—A fine young fellow attended the racecourse for the first time in his life on Tuesday, the first race-day. We were about to conclude our morning meeting, feeling somewhat discouraged by the slack attendance, when he was providentially directed to us and at once showed signs of spiritual concern. His happy surrender was complete. It was a touching sight to see him kneel, and as simply as a child yield himself to the Saviour.

During the scene just noted, three young minstrel girls approached bearing mandolines, and saying, "May we serenade you, gentlemen?" After a few earnest words the bold smiles died away. The two younger were sisters. The Divine Spirit touched their hearts, and showed them the peril of their dangerous calling. We entreated them to leave it and seek other occupation, which I have good hope we may be able to procure them. Finally, tears of penitence were seen coursing down cheeks hardened all too early, and all our brethren were deeply affected as they knelt with us and sought the Lord. They left, each in possession of a marked Testament, and resolved never again to seek the racecourse.

"On the third evening," says a worker, "bags of flour were thrown at us during the meeting, covering our clothes. As we were leaving to go home, we were violently assaulted by an organized mob of over 100 tipsters and roughs, and all the way to our lodgings they were very brutal. Four or five of our men were struck on the head and kicked badly. For fifteen minutes we had to endure this treatment, though not the slightest provocation had been given. I and another St. John's Ambulance man who was with us gave first aid to the wounded."

Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

THE RACECOURSE MISSION.

By the kindness of Mr. Minchin, the tent of the Racecourse Mission was erected on his field, facing the course. The most important feature of our work was the distribution of the Word of God. Some 15,000 Gospels were given away. Not only were the general public dealt with, but also the showpeople, bookmakers, and the servants attending upon the aristocracy; nor did we overlook "clubland" itself. On the cover of the Gospels is printed, in bold type, "What must I do to be saved?" and "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house." Care is taken so to present the book that the texts can be read at first sight. On one of the copies being handed to a very respectable-looking man, he read it aloud to two of his friends, adding, "That is true, and I know it." Turning to us, he said, "I was once a Sunday-school teacher, but I have fallen away." After further conversation, and giving him words of counsel, we parted on the understanding that we would both pray about his condition. At our meeting on the course the Holy Spirit rested upon the assembly in a marked manner. Men and women were in tears, and appeared to be deeply convicted. When we knelt to pray, the hush was impressive. We were glad to see our brothers of the Open-Air Mission also vigorously at work. On one of the days some of our workers joined hands with them for an hour's meeting. It may be mentioned that two of the cases of conversion (man and wife) at Epsom have been visited, and we rejoice to say that they are still praising the Lord.

O. L. Heatley, Sec.

Mr. Henry Varley's Meetings.

The services at Wimbledon Tent have been highly appreciated, and the Bible readings and addresses given by this well-known servant of Christ have proved fruitful. Large numbers tell of fresh light thrown upon the sacred Scriptures, and many believers have been built up on their most holy faith.

On Sunday last Mr. Varley was again at the East London Tabernacle. Deep interest attached to both services, which drew large and interested congregations. At the close of the evening meeting Mr. Varley referred to his projected return to Melbourne, Australia, at an early date, and, in view of the fact that those assembled would never meet again, pleaded with all believers present to give their testimony to the power of divine grace not only to save, but to keep the believer until that Day. The preacher proposed that all present who had been brought to Christ from ten years since to forty or even fifty years past should confess the fact. Some hundreds bore their testimony to the faithfulness of the Lord in preserving them until that day. Mr. Varley then appealed to those who, for one year past and backward to ten years, to give their witness. The response was quiet, blessed, and inspiring, hundreds rising. A final word to those who, from the immediate past to twelve months since, should testify, and again a goodly number gave witness how they had been brought to Christ, Thoughts by Mr. Robert Chapman.

AT the annual fellowship meetings, held in Grosvenor Street Chapel, Barnstaple, the venerable Mr. Robert Chapman (now in his ninety-eighth year) was present and took part in the proceedings. Commenting upon selections from Psalm cxix., he said: "If I can say, 'O, how love I thy law,' then my circumstances do not rule me but I rule them; they have no dominion over me, but I have them under my feet. Again, 'Consider how I love thy precepts'—that is to say, let my obedience give joy to Thee, my God and Father. How vast a difference between one child of God and another, not as to life eternal, but as to communion, as to pleasing God, as to not wasting life, and how great the difference between living to get from God and living to give to God."

"Walking with God makes the heart to break out as the psalmist does in the last verse, 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep.' This self-knowledge is the fruit of walking with God. Thus we discern the infinite holiness of God, and judge our obedience by what has been our aim. The child of God here is not referring to any outward act of disobedience. The true meaning is found in Rom. vii. 14, 'I am carnal.' The apostle does not say 'I was carnal,' but 'I am carnal.' And then in v. 17 he does not say, 'sin that breaks out of me,' but 'dwelleth in me.' And further he adds, 'O wretched man that I am,' not unhappy man, but 'afflicted one that I am!' This portion is, I fear, commonly greatly misunderstood. It has not to do with any action, any word that a third person can hear, with any stirring of the feeling that may appear in the countenance. It refers to the deep, heavenly conscience, judging the wandering thought."

The Anti-Saloon League.

AT Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. Noon Prayer Meeting on Monday there was a numerous attendance. Mr. R. C. Morgan introduced Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, New York, a delegate to the World's Temperance Congress, and identified with the American Anti-Saloon League, who gave a vigorous address on the achievements and prospects of the movement in America. There two powers are seeking to become predominant—the Christian Church and the saloon—the one constructive and the other destructive. They were hopelessly antagonistic to each other. Both could not possibly be in the right, one or the other must be wrong; and if the public-house were allowed to govern the land, and assert its influence on modern civilization, the Church would not be unhindered in its ministry to the world.

As illustrating the enormous sale of drink in the United States, Dr. Henry said that, in fifty years, the average consumption had increased four times as rapidly as the population. The Anti-Saloon League has been organized to counteract the evils of the drink traffic—the crimes, political and domestic, which were the direct outcome of the saloon. Formed six years ago in Ohio, its development has been so extensive that, at the present time, there are 175 workers engaged in its campaign against the drink traffic. Of these, 125 are ministers of the Gospel. No fewer than 7,400 local organizations are now working against the dram shop. The basis of the League was Protestant and interdenominational.

The time had come when it was needful for Christian people to realize it is their business to overthrow the wrong. They had in the States 179,000 churches, 15,000,000 in the Sunday-school, and 400 Christian colleges; and the speaker urged with fervent emphasis the importance of all the forces within the churches, combining to seek and save the vast numbers who were on the verge of ruin through the evils of the saloon.

Prayers were afterwards offered for the Divine blessing upon the movement, and the furtherance of all efforts for the advancement of the cause of temperance.

Dr. Henry is preaching on Sunday next, at the Edinburgh Castle, Rhodeswell Road, E., on "The Three Scarlet Sins of London."

Midnight Meeting Movement.—Sir George Williams entertained some women of the West End at Exeter Hall to a strawberry feast last Wednesday night. A large body of voluntary workers distributed 400 cards of invitation throughout the locality, and the guests came in directly they knew of the gathering. An open meeting was kept going from half-past ten till midnight, after which personal conversation took the place of more general addresses.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

"The book certainly deserves and will well repay perusal. It will be particularly helpful and illuminating to those who are engaged in 'teaching and preaching a living Gospel to a world of dying men and women.'"—Daily Chronicle.

"Mr. William R. Moody has ably discharged the filial duty of giving to the world a faithful portrait of his father. No one can study it without feeling impressed by the uniqueness of the evangelist's personality and by the striking results he achieved during his life of self-sacrifice and devotion."—Leeds Mercury.

"We commend the volume, with its charming illustrations and hundreds of pages full of interest, to all who revere the memory of one of God's greatest workers."—Examiner.

"The book ought to be read if only for this, that it shows much of the noble, great, and enduring qualities that characterise the American people."—British Weekly.

"The really interesting and inspiring story this volume has to tell . . . will enable English readers to appreciate the devotion, zeal, and ability which marked the whole of his (Mr. Moody's) career."—The Record.

"The story is told so that we see the whole man. . . . The narrative is brightened throughout by a great variety of characteristic anecdotes and sayings, most of which will be fresh to the general public. This volume is a grandly inspiring portrait of a grandly inspiring man."—Christian Endeavour.

SOME PERSONAL TESTIMONIES.

Mr. IRA D. SANKEY says:—

"This biography will prove very satisfactory to Mr. Moody's friends. It will be an inspiration to the millions who knew of his work and were interested in it."

Dr. N. DWIGHT HILLIS says:—

"A faithful, interesting, and discriminating study. All who loved Mr. Moody will be charmed by his son's story."

Rev. Dr. CUYLER says:—

"I have just finished reading your truly admirable Life of your glorious father; and it more than satisfies me. Biography is difficult work, especially when the author is embarrassed by either a sad lack, or (as in your case) by an overabundance of material. Your method of classifying the salient features of such a wonderful career under various heads is very happy and successful. I hope to see its circulation run up to a million."

Anxiety in China.

In view of the increasing anxiety felt for the safety of British subjects, missionaries, and native converts, which is shared more particularly by Great Britain and America, a prayer meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday of last week. The movement was supported by the London, Church, Baptist, Wesleyan, China Inland, Church of England Zenana, and Methodist New Connexion, Missionary Societies, as well as the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, and the Friends' Foreign Missions Association.

Rev. H. E. Fox, secretary of the Church Missionary Society, conducted the meeting, which was one of deep solemnity and intense earnestness. The Chairman remarked that the gathering was not for discussion, still less for denunciation. It was not to protest against the attacks made upon Christians, for they considered it beneath their position to attempt to justify the position of missionaries. They had met because they believed in God, and it was delightful to think that so many were drawn together round the throne of God in prayer. Not only was it so in our own land, but simultaneous gatherings were being held in New York, Boston, Glasgow, and Edinburgh.

A period of silent devotion followed, and Rev. A. D. Cousins offered prayer that the Dowager Empress and her counsellors might be guided by divine wisdom in the crisis through which China is passing. Rev. R. Lovett (Religious Tract Society) and Pastor Frank White followed with earnest supplications.

Rev. J. Sadler, who has for many years been labouring in Amoy, spoke feelingly of the devotion of the native converts, and the possibilities of the Kingdom of God in China. It is a mistake to think that real difficulty exists in bringing her people to the Saviour, for there are thousands of native converts in whose hearts have been kindled the love of God. Many are still groping in darkness for the true light. He had heard many cries from the Chinese which he could never forget; but no cry had pierced his heart so much as that of a native:—"Oh that so-called Christians here would confess Christ, then would the regeneration of the Chinese be an easy matter." Mr. Sadler asked for prayer that those who went from Western shores should be led to glorify God; and that the Powers of the West may be moved from on high to adopt the right course in taking any action.

The topics suggested by the speaker were mentioned in the prayers which followed, offered by Revs. Marshall Lang, W. Hackney, and others.

The intercessions of the assembly will doubtless find a pathetic response in many hearts filled with sorrow and suspense. These will join in the prayer that, while God's judgments are in the earth, "the inhabitants of the world shall learn righteousness."

Personalia.

Bishop Clifford, of Lucknow, has arrived in London. His address is 37, Kensington Square.

The Bishop of Liverpool has accepted the office of President of the Daily Prayer Union and Worcester Tract Society, vacant through the death of Bishop Ryle.

Rev. E. P. Cachemaille, clerical secretary of the South American Missionary Society, is about to make a tour in South America to visit some of the Society's stations in Argentina, Paraguay, and Chile. He expects to start from Southampton in the Royal Mail steamer, Clyde, on August 17, and to be away four months.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, M.A., has resigned the post of Home Superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society as a result of recent domestic sorrows. In accepting this resignation, the Committee have expressed their high esteem for Mr. Macartney, and their tender sympathy with him in his heavy trials. His wife died very suddenly in May, and his son, Lieutenant Macartney, of the Royal Fusiliers, is only slowly recovering from a dangerous wound received in the relief of Ladysmith.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. Dr. Porter, vicar of All Saints', Southport, has lately received the sum of £1,500 from a donor for the purpose of providing the parish with a new day school.

Rev. E. A. Stuart recently gave an address on Missionary Apologetics to a goodly gathering of students and their friends at St. John's Hall, Highbury. He gave five reasons for the support of foreign missions:—(1) Self-interest advises it; (2) Duty compels it; (3) Pity demands it; (4) Gratitude prompts it; (5) Your spiritual life requires it.

Bishop Chavasse, in accepting the post of President of the Liverpool Diocesan Sunday School Institute, writes as follows:—"Thirty-six years ago I began my work for God as a Sunday school teacher, and the Sunday school has a very warm place in my heart." It has been arranged to hold a conversazione to meet the Bishop in St. George's Hall on Friday, July 6.

Dr. Harpur (C.M.S.) has returned to Omdurman from a tour 100 miles up the Blue Nile to Sennaar. His most interesting journal concludes with the following striking sentence:—"After what we have seen of the earnest efforts of our British officers to administer justice and relieve the sufferings of the people committed to their care, we cannot but feel that a brighter day is dawning on the Soudan, and that, however indirectly, the influence of Christianity is already being brought to bear upon its people."

In a report of the work at St. James', Holloway, Rev. Marcus Rainsford says that the spiritual work of the church is vigorous and active, and he trusts growing. There are seldom any vacant seats on Sunday evenings, and that represents about 1,800 people. St. James' has always kept the work of foreign missions prominently before the people. The financial help sent by the parish this year to the C.M.S. amounted to £517 9s. 8d., and two members of the congregation have been accepted for service in the foreign mission field.

Congregational.

Rev. Caleb G. Haymes has resigned his pastoral charge at Chapel End, near Atherstone, Warwickshire, which he has held for twenty-six years. Mr. Haymes, who has been in the Congregational ministry nearly forty-three years, has settled at Nuneaton.

On Wednesday, July 4, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road (perpetuation of Surrey Chapel), celebrates its 117th anniversary at the public meeting in the church at 7.30 p.m. Some interesting features of its work are to be shown by the aid of the limelight lantern.

At the quarterly meeting of the Manchester District Congregational Association, the chairman, Rev. J. Ross Murray, delivered an address on "The Pulpit and the Press as affected by the New Paganism," in which he offered a strong protest against the tendency prevalent in a large part of the Press of the day to disregard moral considerations in political affairs.

The disused burial ground at the back of Colliers Rent Mission Hall in Long Lane, Borough, S.E., has, through the generosity of Lyndhurst Road Church, Hampstead, been converted into a pleasure ground for the children of that squalid and overcrowded district. Though small, the new open space will be a boon to the neighbourhood.

Queen Street and Russell Churches at Dover have arranged terms of amalgamation. The churches are within two minutes' walk of each other, and stand in undesirable positions for places of worship. A site for a new church having been acquired in High Street, and the Russell Street pulpit having become vacant, a fitting opportunity occurred for the churches to approach each other. Rev. F. B. Basden (of Queen Street) is to be the pastor of the united church.

Changes in Pastorate.—Rev. Charles P. Tinling has become pastor of the church at Wavertree, Liverpool; Rev. Arthur Cannon, of Eastborough Church, Scarborough; Rev. D. Stanley Lamb, of Queen Street Church, Burslem; Rev. Evan Keri Evans, of Priory Church, Carmarthen; and Rev. John Thomson, of the church at Littlehampton.

Baptist.

The Baptist Church Hymnal is issued this week. It may be had with or without music. The profits, as with those upon the sale of the present Psalms and Hymns, will be distributed amongst the widows of ministers and missionaries of the Baptist denomination.

In connection with the anniversary services recently held at St. Paul's Church, Skegness, the pastor, Rev. George Goodchild, gave some account of the position of the building scheme, and after reviewing the rise and progress of the church, expressed the belief that, by God's blessing, a great work would be done.

In connection with the West Midland Baptist Association meetings at Coventry, a conference was held on "Our Church Meetings and Church Life." Rev. J. M. G. Owen (Birmingham) urged that the family life of the church should be more earnestly cultivated, and that more use should be made of the church meetings to deepen the spiritual life of the churches.

At the annual meeting of the Suffolk and Norfolk Baptist Home Missionary Union, Rev. T. Evans, the chairman, made special reference to the Twentieth Century Fund, and said the organization needed to bear special and distinct witness to evangelical truths, and its testimony against Ritualism, Romanism, Rationalism, and indifference. As a denomination, the Baptists had not, perhaps, been sufficiently aggressive in the past.

Call (accepted).—Mr. Lewis C. Hammond, of Dunoon College, to Borough Road Church, London, S.E.

Methodist.

The Mission Band at Liverpool Road Wesleyan Church, N.E., is doing good work in lodging-house and public-house visitation and in open-air services. Every member is pledged to active work in the interests of the Kingdom. One branch has done much good by the distribution of Gospel tracts.

An extension of the Great Queen Street Wesleyan Circuit, London, has been made by the erection of a new chapel at Gospel Oak. A satisfactory feature of the society here has been the manner in which its members have sustained the attendance at the early prayer meeting on Sunday mornings. On the first Sabbath in the new building, the church parlour was filled, and a blessed time was spent in praise and prayer. At the morning service Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached from Acts ii. 37.

The annual meetings of the Wesleyan Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association have been held at Sheffield. The proceedings were hearty, and the retiring president, Major Barnsley, gave an encouraging address to local preachers, in the course of which he advocated the study of the biographies of Whitefield, McCheyne and Brainerd, and expressed the fervent wish that the local preachers, as a body, might catch the spirit and become imbued with the Master's passionate longing for the souls of men.

Presbyterian.

On Sunday last Rev. Henry Crombie closed his pastorate of seven years at Presbyterian Church, Finchley, having accepted a call from Fairfield Church, Liverpool.

Resignation.—Rev. John Williams has resigned the pastorate of the church at Dolgelly, having accepted the secretariat of the English Home Mission Fund for North Wales.

Changes in Pastorate.—Rev. P. H. Griffiths has become pastor of Cruglas Church, Swansea: Rev. Ellis J. Williams of the church at Corris; Rev. R. H. Fisher of Morningside Church, Edinburgh; and Rev. James Beveridge, of Bell Street Church, Dundee.

Society of Friends.

St. Austell Friends have made a house-to-house collection on behalf of the Indian Famine Fund, realising about £50. It was expected to realise a similar sum from the villages in the district.

The old Meeting-house in Frodsham Street, Chester, after being closed for many years, has been reopened. Henry G. Coventry, representing Hardshaw West Monthly Meeting, was acceptably present at the first meeting. Friends visiting this ancient and historic city will be glad to hear of the above, and their presence will be welcome to Chester Friends. The meetings, for the present, will be held at 11 a.m. every First-day.

At Westmoreland quarterly meeting, held at Kendal, some time was devoted to a conference with the Home Mission Committee's deputation. In this some of the practical points dwelt upon were the place of organization and the value of new methods in the spreading of the Redeemer's Kingdom; the avoidance of a slavish imitation of the methods of other people and other churches; classes for children and Bible-reading for adults, held in private houses, as introductions to the houses and hearts of those occupying good positions in life; the duty to provide means of study, and, in some sense, of training, for Friends drawn to engage in vocal ministry.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Sarah A. Lucas, an active and generous Baptist to the end of her long life.—Salem Baptist Church, Boston, has lost one of its oldest members by the death of Mr. Robert Sharman, who has for fifty years acted as deacon and superintendent of the Sunday-school.—Mr. Henry Rickards, senior deacon of West Cliff Baptist Tabernacle, Bournemouth.—On June 10, Edward Lawrence, of Merthyr Tydvil (shortly following his beloved wife). An earnest Christian musician, greatly esteemed and beloved.—Mr. Robert Stark, well-known and esteemed as a Christian worker. His pastor, Rev. Thomas Curry, of Aston Tyrrold, writes of him:—He wore himself out in the service of the churches. Besides public work, his private correspondence was large. He gave up Saturday mornings to write letters of consolation to any who were in trouble."

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. E. A. Rumball, care of Mr. Savill, blacksmith, Abridge, Essex; Miss Chance, 21, Emma Street, Hackney Road; W. Brundish, 29, North Cray Road, Bexley, Kent; Mr. Lawes, 8, West Street, Aylesbury, Bucks; George J. Thompson, 55, Derbyshire Street, Bethnal Green Road, London, E.; George H. Weekes, Town Mission, Lancaster; Mr. Taylor, Home Missionary, 15, Ventnor Road, Portland, Dorset (for sailors); Miss E. Hulme, Seend Cleeve, near Melksham, Wilts; Miss A. Adams, 210, Glyn Road, Lower Clapton, N.E.; F. E. Hall, The Manse, Shefford, Beds (Anti-Romanist).

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

Following the Newcastle Conference of British Associations, the annual conference of Y.M.C.A. general secretaries was held at Filey from June 16 to 23, and was attended by upwards of fifty officers, including some of the best known workers in the country. Courses of lectures were delivered by Mr. Basil Hewer, of the London Central Association, on "Association Meetings and their Organization," and by Mr. A. K. Yapp, the National Council's representative for Lancashire, on "The General Secretary in Relation to the Departmental Work of the Association." A series of daily lectures to the secretaries was given by Rev. Dr. Stalker, of Glasgow.

The recently-appointed General Secretary of the Glasgow United Association, Mr. Christopher Richard Irving, received a warm welcome to his work on Wednesday last. After words of greeting from Mr. David Dreghorn (president of the Association), Mr. Irving referred to the responsibilities of his position, and outlined some plans of work for the future. The meeting was stirred by an address from Mr. W. A. Campbell, who spoke on the power of God as manifested in revival, and the ministers of the city were represented by Revs. Harrison Gower, Dr. P. McAdam, and others. Lord Provost Chisholm said he felt that, among all his engagements, there could be no meeting more proper for him to attend in his official capacity. He recognised that he was there amid a quickening spiritual atmosphere.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IT is a sign of the times that Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell's remarkable book on The Temperance Problem and Social Reform has reached its seventh edition (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). Probably a wiser and a more honest book has never been written upon this subject. The present edition is considerably augmented.

The Spectator has not generally been counted amongst the friends of total abstinence, but in a striking article it has given utterance to a modified temperance programme that is worthy of attention. It advocates three principles as among the few practical methods of reform: (1) Total abstinence as a personal habit for all who are in danger of alcoholism; (2) severe legal penalties for drunkenness in public, even though the element of riotous or disorderly conduct be absent; and (3) the imposition of the heaviest duty practicable on intoxicants. Recent experience teaches that if we cannot get the reforms we would like, we must take what we can get—at first—and gradually demand more. The drink evil is so great that any diminution of it is better than none.

The deplorable state of morality in London makes the work of such a society as the National Vigilance Association a necessity, and the refusal of Parliament to intervene in the exhibition of immoral plays doubles this necessity. While many of the provincial large towns have made considerable strides in regard to public morals, London is worse than it was thirty years ago, and it is growing more and more like Paris every year, with the added disgrace that the worst of Continental cities cannot show such scenes on its streets as may be nightly witnessed "down West," in full view of the representatives of law and order. A steady crusade should be carried on to cleanse our thoroughfares of shameless incentives to vice, and to raise the tone of social sentiment, lest the fate of some notorious ancient cities befall the greatest of modern cities.

A recent development has possibly brought the modern stage down to its lowest level, and is of a nature to justify a very strong protest in regard to the manner in which the duties of the Examiner of Plays are performed. It was bad enough to have the most sacred names invoked upon the stage either in oaths or in mock prayers, but with the advent, a few years ago, of the so-called "religious drama," or, in other words, of plays dealing with early Christian times, a deeper depth of gross irreverence was reached. The downward course has proceeded until at the present time a drama is being performed in London, respecting which a secular daily contemporary has felt called upon to say:—

> We take exception to the make-up of ——, who appears in the likeness of the most sacred figure known to us as a people. Such a presentation is the more gratuitous and objectionable, because it serves no definite purpose. Even if it did, it would be totally indefensible, for a mixed holiday audience does not approach its evening recreation in the spirit of Ober-Ammergau devotees.

Despite the seeming failure of Mr. Samuel Smith's recent action in reference to the demoralization of the stage, one would like to know how it was found possible to pass the play in question, seeing that, some time ago, one in which John the Baptist was a central figure was, very properly, rejected by the Examiner.

A Halfpenny Hymnbook has been compiled from "Sacred Songs and Solos," containing 157 specially selected hymns and choruses which have proved their efficiency in Gospel effort. Workers in tents and the open air, as well as those conducting brief missions, will find this collection invaluable. (3s. per 100. Morgan & Scott.)

There are two stories of the late Bishop Ryle which are characteristic of his kindly and Christlike spirit. They are told on the authority of his successor, Bishop Chavasse.

> When a struggling clergyman with a small country living, Dr. Ryle denied himself in every way he could, even to wearing a thread-bare coat, in order to devote his earnings to poor depositors who lost their money through the failure of his father's bank. Again, when promoted to the See of Liverpool, Bishop Ryle refused to put aside or to invest on his own account any money he might have over from the income of his See, but divided it year by year among the poor parishes of Liverpool, gladdening many a struggling clergyman's heart by a cheque for £50 or £25.

Our bishops have to run the gauntlet of manifold criticism from friend and foe. If the facts were all known, there are probably many such incidents and traits that are true of others as well as our late reverend leader, whose career of beneficent activity "adorned the doctrine" he preached for so many busy and gracious years.

It was when the crowd pressed upon Jesus so persistently that neither He nor his disciples had leisure even to eat, that He "kept withdrawing Himself into the desert to pray." Singular action, but most radical and necessary. He who would help the crowd to its true life must keep the background of his own life clear from human obstructions, reserving it exclusively for intercourse with God. A worker's energy is soon exhausted, and unless it is perpetually replenished by God, the work will become mechanical and useless.

Rev. William Crosbie, writing in The Examiner, points out certain indications that the "psychological moment" (to turn Bismarck's famous phrase to spiritual uses) has come for a great onward and upward spiritual movement in the churches. The opening of the world to the preaching of the Gospel; the federation and warm brotherhood of the home churches; the spreading of the spirit of prayer, in all directions, evidenced by the numerous prayer unions that are everywhere found—all these significant facts in combination present a ground for prayer for the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Christian world generally. He urges Christian people everywhere "to put themselves more in line with God for its hastening." God has > all the equipments and endowments the church needs for the evangelization of the nations, and for the establishment of his kingdom everywhere among men; and He is simply waiting, and yet in his waiting is working, quickening, influencing, leading on, and will not cease until the church, self-emptied, purged, and putting away from herself all false and weakening dependencies, casts herself wholly, and by a great faith, upon Him and upon the resources of his power and grace.

One of our leading preachers took occasion recently, in a sermon addressed to young men, to warn his hearers against fashionable doubting of religious truths. His words are worth reproducing:—

> There is a fashion in doubt, as there is a fashion in dress. Many men borrow their doubts from their neighbours. When a few renowned persons proclaim their scepticism, there is always a crowd of third-rate persons ready to follow in their train. It is a cheap reputation which they thus win, and it is paltry to the last degree. Whatever doubts you have, let them be your own. . . . When a man proclaims himself an honest doubter—taking great care to emphasize his honesty—I at once suspect that person. Really honest men never parade their honesty. An honest man is like a child—he speaks out what is in his heart without ever suspecting that he is saying anything exceptional. Honest doubt exists, that is quite certain; but the doubt that officiously and loudly proclaims its honesty is not honest doubt.

The flood of criticism on the part played by modern missions in international disputes which has followed in the wake of Lord Salisbury's temperate and statesmanlike speech at the Bicentenary of the S.P.G. is a symptom of the times. There is a cultured contempt, even where there is no savage hostility, felt by millions of our fellow-countrymen for those who devote themselves to the evangelization of their fellow-men, and such occasions as the present invariably call it forth. It is well that the fact of such hostility should be known.

Its failure to justify itself in argument is only a proof that it is the result of misunderstanding or passion. Indeed, the man of the world cannot understand the temper that "interferes" with another man's religion and tries to supplant it by the Gospel. Such conduct is "foolishness" to him. And yet it is this temper of solicitude for the spiritual welfare of others which has marked every age of true faith since the Saviour died for men; and were it not for such a spirit, we should ourselves be in heathen darkness and ignorance still.

To accuse the missionary of being the chief cause of the present tragic situation in China is not only false, but absurd. Incidentally the missionary in that great country is causally related to it, but only because the Chinaman fails to draw a true distinction between those who serve him for Christ's sake, and those who serve themselves through him for the sake of money-making. It is the presence of the foreigner to begin with, and then, perhaps, the extraordinary picture of the civilized countries of Europe preparing to partition China under their various governments, that has roused that country to such fierce resentment. Possibly a revelation of the dumb, instinctive, but powerful resistance of the Chinese to all interference with their national integrity will turn the envious eyes of Europe on the Celestial Empire into directions more profitable and less perilous to their own peace of mind. In that case, the present trouble may, in the near future, be one of the divinely-appointed means for the higher conquest of China by the Cross.

Some idea of the extent of our national responsibility in regard to India may be formed when we remember that the Marquis of Dufferin once stated that, although the average landholder, trader, ryot, or handicraftsman, is decidedly better off than he was thirty years ago, the "fringe" of necessitous persons in the country may be counted in millions, and the population of about 300,000,000 is increasing by about 28,000,000 annually.

In the first Indian famine of which there is any record, nearly 10,000,000 perished, and twenty-two have occurred since, 5,000,000 perishing in that of 1876-8. The field is so vast that all the Indian Government can do is to provide, for a large portion of the starving, only sufficient food to keep body and soul together. The share left for the public is, therefore, illimitable, and the words spoken by Sir Robert Hunter at Oxford, on the occasion of the previous famine, are just as applicable to-day:

Every shilling that you give will keep a poor widow or an orphan for a week; every sovereign may save some bereaved family from being broken up.

Day by day the utterances of the Extreme High Church party are becoming more clear in regard to the points of difference which distinctly mark them off from their brethren, and it is well that it should be so. Preaching recently before "The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament," an Association which is forming branches over the country, Rev. Mr. Ommanney said:—

And after the words of praise there comes the consecration. The priest takes the bread into his hands; and, after the example of the institution of Christ, he says: "Take, eat; this is my Body," and consecrates it into the Body and Blood of our Lord. The consecrated sacrifice thus made he presents before Almighty God. . . . the priest comes down the altar steps and places in their hands the Body and Blood of Christ.

And speaking of "the Mass" he said:

The Mass is the way in which all the faithful servants of God—those in heaven and those on earth—are united in the worship of God . . . the Mass is the way in which we can rightly approach God. . . . When we think of the holiness of God our hearts sink down. But we can come to the Father through the image of his dear Son provided in the Holy Mass.

Of this doctrine, utterly foreign as it is to the Word of God, and to Protestantism, the Church Review speaks as "the central point" of the High Church movement, and it refers to the Lord as "having entrusted Himself in the tabernacle, upon the altar, to their guardianship and care." Between all this and Cardinal Vaughan's definition of the "little white Host," what line of demarcation is there? and could not any Romanist agree to the same journal's summary of the rest of the "sacred deposit:"

The worship of our Lord upon his altar throne, the treasury of his Precious Blood in the Tribunal of Penance, the devotion of the faithful to the Most Holy Mother of God and all the saints.

The parochial machinery of the Romanists does not appear to be quite perfect, if we may judge from the proceedings at the recent Catholic Truth Conference, where a suggestion was made for its improvement under the guise of a scheme "for the encouragement of thrift among Catholics." The scheme, however, appears upon examination to be nothing more or less than a scheme of life assurance, with, underlying the praiseworthy and unselfish suggestion, a more potent idea of obtaining help for the R.C. Missions in the "financial stress" in which, it was admitted, so many are now found. Under the much-vaunted plan, however, not only would an amount fall due to relations in case of death, but "£10 would become due to his Mission," as the insurance would thus result "in a financial benefit to the priests as well as of bringing them in more easy contact with their parishioners for their spiritual as well as their temporal benefit." It is not quite easy though to see where the Catholic Truth comes in.

It is impossible to travel in out-of-the-way districts of Italy without hearing much about the poverty of the Pope, and of his imprisonment in Rome; and a good trade is being done in Naples and other southern towns in the sale of straws from his bed. The Pilgrims who recently visited Rome, however, left behind them £1,520,000, collected as "Peter's Pence" in all parts of the world, and it is rumoured that Leo XIII. is not satisfied with the amount, and has requested that it may be largely added to before the end of the year. The Pilgrimage was unsatisfactory in other respects, the blasphemous ceremony in which the Pope is enthroned and carried round St. Peter's having been preceded by a disgraceful riot and a free fight between the French and the German pilgrims, which was allowed to run its course, the Italian Government refusing to interfere in a religious ceremony.

A bill is now before the French Chamber in which power is granted for dealing summarily with editors and publishers of daily papers who abuse their privileges by circulating treasonable and offensive matter. By this time the measure will have become law. The French are, doubtless, taking this step in order to protect themselves, and they are acting none too promptly, for great numbers of French halfpenny papers have for a long time past exceeded all bounds of decency. Not only has our own beloved Queen been most offensively caricatured both in letterpress and drawing, but even the French President has been constantly subjected to literary outrage. The new Act provides a severe penalty for these journalistic brigands. Naturally the implicated papers are furious at this menace of their ways; but all right-minded people will be thankful that the scandal is at last to cease.

Those who spend their hard-earned money on various "short cuts" to fortune, in the form of newspaper competitions, would do well to read the evidence in the case brought forward against the Sports Review last week. It is time such methods of swindling money out of the credulous and foolish, who devote hours of their time, and more brains than they can spare, to drawing up lists of "winners" at races and similar uncertainties, should be exposed. One successful competitor for a purse of £3,000 was fortunate enough to get £50 on account. Another got nothing. Eight hundred and seventeen names of successful competitors (mostly fictitious) were advertised, among whom £57 16s. was divided! The result of the trial is that two persons involved in the business have been convicted of an attempt to defraud. So far, this is satisfactory. The evil, however, will not be cured till those who take part in these fraudulent competitions are made to share in the same penalty as their tempters. While there are fools there will be rogues, and when the folly is voluntary and wilful it should be brought home to those who show it that they are only less guilty than those who take advantage of their weakness.

The enormous circulation of some of the Sunday newspapers is a disquieting sign of the times. The Editor of Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper told a fellow-journalist the other day that they now have a sale of 1,250,000 copies a week, of which 700,000 are printed and circulated from 1 o'clock Sunday morning. It is said that what makes the extraordinary popularity of this paper is its wonderful summary of the week's news and life. The pity of it is that 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 people practically spend their day of rest, not with their thoughts on eternal realities, but in retrospect of the stress and turmoil, the vice and sorrows, of the past few days. It is good to know something of the events of the week; but it cannot be good that the soul's out-look on God should be crowded out by such details as fill our newspapers. Those who thus spend their "Lord's Day" miss one of the highest privileges and noblest influences of life.

The Curse of the Land.

IT is continually a matter for surprise that the enormous power for evil existing in the liquor traffic arouses so little the moral sense of the community as a whole. On every hand is seen the splendour of the licensed drinking houses and the enormous outlay involved to attract crowds to these centres of social demoralization. The marked increase of drunkenness, the way in which thousands of respectably dressed women enter and stay in front of the public and private bars, is simply abominable. The modest reticence of youths, maidens and women is being literally destroyed by these miscalled licensed victuallers, and the clean, sober and thrifty habits of the people are being undermined wholesale. Dissolute and drunken characters are manufactured in every direction. The death grip of this huge monopoly is about the neck of liberty. It fetters the Houses of the Legislature, prevents honest social reforms, and handicaps the highest and best interests, both of the Church and world. Never in this closing century was there a greater need than now for an intelligent and holy war against this vast liquor traffic which threatens the very existence of the liberty and welfare of the British people. The need for a forward movement in strong and zealous opposition to this monstrous traffic must become the burning question for the first year of the new century.

During the past six years a powerful and organized State opposition to the drinking saloon has existed in the United States, where tens of thousands of vigorous men and women are banded together to fight this traffic, which Sir Chas. Buxton well called a prominent factor in the tremendous conflict which hell wars against the interests of right on earth, and peace and heaven. We are glad to announce that steps have been taken to inaugurate and testimony, in regard to this vital question, at Exeter Hall, on Friday, July 13. It is to take the form of a meeting of representative men in order to initiate a movement to fire the public mind against this social wrong, the licensed liquor traffic. Dr. Henry, of New York, who is one of the State Secretaries of the Anti-Saloon League, has been secured to address this meeting, to which 1,000 public men, ministers, and others interested in social reform have been invited. This gentleman, whose burning words fired the crowded audience assembled on Monday week at Aldersgate Street, will give one of his thrilling statements, showing the deep need which exists for war against this huge vested and legalized iniquity.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

JUNE 26—28.

THE various gatherings of the Mildmay Conference were well attended on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last week. The morning and evening meetings were presided over by the Hon. R. Moreton, and were occasions of deeply interesting and instructive meditation on themes pertaining to divine truth. The general subject was Praise, and on Monday morning (as reported in our last week's issue) the aspect presented was "The Blessed Object of Praise." The process of thought was full of profit, as believers were led to consider (on Monday evening) "God's Delight in His People's Praises."

On Wednesday, attention was directed to "Some Special Motives to Praise," and "The True Spirit of Praise." The concluding day, Thursday, was devoted to "Seasons and Occasions of Praise," "The Bliss and Blessing of Praise," and "The Future History of Praise."

Tuesday Evening.

God's Delight in his People's Praises.

By Rev. N. VICKERS.

The whole arrangement of the subject of praise must be divided into two parts: the Divine and the human; and, to-night we begin in Scriptural order, with praise in relation to God Himself. We have the authority of God's Word—directly in a few passages, indirectly in many—for the statement that He takes pleasure in the praises of his people. Our praise arises from realization, first, of God's being, and then, of his beneficence. Two kinds of praise arise from what God is in Himself. The first of these is extolling praise, in which we recognise the greatness, the blessedness and the sovereignty of God over all his creatures. We magnify the Lord, and He is pleased to accept such praise. But there is a higher style of praise—and the central idea thereof is holiness. At once our thoughts go to the sublime vision of Isaiah in the Temple, where the seraphim who veil their faces, acknowledge antiphonally the holiness of God. At the burst of the praise of the holiness of God, the doors swing open, and the Lord manifests delight by filling the house with his splendour.

PRAISE WHICH ADORES HIM;

When we study the beneficence of God in his grace and applied mercy, there arise two kinds of praise, closely allied by nature, if not by practice: thanksgiving and thanks-living. God has a peculiar pleasure in receiving the grateful praises of his people. But, as a matter of experience, Christians more frequently pray than praise. In God's estimation, praise is more important than prayer. God showers his blessings from heaven; and man sends up from the earth only mists of thanksgiving. In 2 Chron. v. 13, 14, we read how God gave a luminous token of his heart's delight in the gratitude of his people.

Thanksgiving is good, but thanks-living is better. The first without the second is like a seaweed growing without root. We are to show our gratitude by

TURNING GOD'S MERCIES INTO PIETY.

Praise is not the mere service of song, it is the life of the spirit; and if we are not moving in harmony with the Divine will, day by day, it is a mockery to sing the praises of the Lord. The highest sort of praise that God accepts from his children is the psalm of a holy and close walk with Himself. In order rightly to understand something of the perfection of our God, we magnify his greatness, adore Him in his holiness, thank Him for his mercy, move in response to his grace; and the Lord is pleased with that sacrifice of praise.

The question, Whose praise is God especially pleased with? will carry us further into our subject. God has pleasure in other praises than ours. He is pleased with the mute but powerful eloquence of all his works. Then the atmosphere of heaven is angelic praise. If I may dare to institute a comparison as to the feelings of the Almighty, I venture to believe that God has the highest delight in receiving the praises of his redeemed people.

THE GREATEST WORK OF GOD

is his Church; not the beautiful orbs of the sky, not the bright-winged angels of heaven, but sinners saved by sovereign grace, and growing into the likeness of God's dear Son. Isa. xliii. 21, tells us that God made Israel to set forth his own praises; and Eph. iii. 21 says that glory is to be ascribed to God in the Church by Jesus Christ.

This idea is clearly seen in the progression of that grand old hymn, now well-nigh 1,500 years old, the "Te Deum." It opens with a representation of the earth bowing in adoration before the Almighty. The strain is caught up in heaven; and cherubim and seraphim unite to praise the Lord. Presently, the voices of the holy dead join in the majestic hymn—apostles, the earliest heralds of the Cross; prophets, faithful proclaimers of the divine will; martyrs, witnesses unto death for the divine truth. And ere the hymn dies away into silence, we have a vast multitude uniting their voices in the song of the universal Church, as it praises the triune God. There is set forth, in grand and sublime language, God's purpose in respect of praise—that the Church, bought by the blood of the Lamb should best please Him therein.

When we come to that mysterious but blessed and true Book, the Apocalypse, we have a picture, full of grace and glory, in the two chapters iv. and v., which, in my judgment, should never be separated. John is permitted to look through an open door into heaven. One sits upon the throne, pure with unsullied holiness, glowing with untarnished righteousness and justice. There is a threefold song of praise. The living creatures celebrate the eternal being of God; the four-and-twenty elders voice his creative power and genius; but when we come to chap. v. there is a new song entirely. The living creatures and the elders join in the theme, which is redeeming love. Then the great circle of angels join in what can be but an echo of that song; for they cannot claim that Christ hath but they sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." After their song, still united to that of the Church, a vast number in heaven, earth, and sea crowd around to join in the hymn of praise, saying, as they glorify God, "Blessing and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." God is there enthroned upon the praises of his redeemed people; symbolized in the temple praises, realized in the heavenly places. It is the song of the Church, that new song; and in it God has a peculiar delight.

I ask a further important but difficult question, Why does God delight Himself in the praises of his people? I do not presume to answer fully; but something of the reason may be apprehended. We add to the beauty of the Church when we praise our God; but we cannot add a particle of lustre to the infinite and eternal glory of God. The calm lake in the summer sun, reflecting the light of heaven, increases the beauty of the landscape, but adds nothing to the brightness of the sun. Why, then, should God be pleased with our praises? First, because true praise—of the heart, lip, and life—is God's own work; and when He realizes his ideal, He is thrilled with gladness. Artists and poets know something of this pure pleasure when their take form. In your praise and harmonious life, God sees and hears that which has come from his own hand; for praise is of celestial origin. Psa. xxii. is worthy of careful study, and especially the verse that speaks of praise. The Revisers have given it correctly, "Of thee cometh my praise in the great congregation" (25). True praise is a work of grace, in which God sees the realization of his own ideal, and is satisfied.

It may be that God has peculiar delight in the praises of his people, because true praise is the fair fruit of a genuine repentance. When the heart has been subdued, and God has come into it and filled it with Himself, then praise comes up to Him out of a once broken heart, and God is pleased to receive the fair fruit of a sinner's repentance. Praise is the fair fruit of thankfulness to Almighty God, that his love has come upon, distinguished, converted, and changed us. The praises of God's people are his delight, because such praises honour Him by the faith that is beneath them. Doubt breaks all heart-strings. Scepticism never sings sonnets, has never composed hosannas. Faith alone will go into battle with a psalm, and down to the grave with a hymn upon its lips. The faith which honours God is the basis of real praise; and so He is pleased to receive the praises of his believing people.

The last reason is an eminently practical one. God is delighted with praise, because it is an active thing that touches every part of our being. Religion touches the heart as well as the intellect. Praise not only manifests thanksgiving to the Lord, but there is a of the soul itself. All our spiritual being, by the exercise of true praise, comes into the glow and sunshine of the perfections of God, and we are changed into the same image from glory to glory. The Church of Christ will not fully realize the claims and blessed power of praise until we stand in the pure atmosphere of heaven, and see God face to face. But shall we not endeavour day by day to praise Him as perfectly as we possibly can?

The hymn of praise for the closing century has yet to be written. Shall the salient feature of that anthem be science, which has made wonderful strides? But I humbly dare to say No. Shall it be the wonderful growth of nations? No. Will it be the marvellous increase of commerce and the accumulation of wealth? No; there is something grander than these. God will have no pleasure whatever in your song, unless the dominant note be, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive blessing, and honour, and power, and glory for ever."

Appreciation of God's Character.

By Rev. PREB. WEBB-PEPLOE.

The solemnity of our subject lies in its sublimity; and it is one upon which I can only hope to throw light incidentally, and not by direct exposition, nor even by application. I believe that a large proportion of the Church of Christ is in no sense prepared to enter into the depths, heights, beauty, and glory of the subject now to engage our attention; and therefore the speakers solemnly feel their unfitness to present it as it deserves. It is difficult to point to a single volume amid the flood of literature in which the subject of praise is adequately handled. The aspirations of men have not attained to the vastness, magnificence, and true sublimity of the subject; and we wait for the day when we shall see our Saviour as He is, ere we can duly render praise to God.

For myself, I do not discover that the word praise has any direct relation to thanksgiving; nor do I find that the word is directly kindred to, or actually synonymous with, any other that I meet with in God's Word.

In 2 Chron. v. 13, the people are praising and thanking. The word bless is used 124 times in Scripture; and, in every case, with regard to our appreciation of God's goodness to man. Extolling is simply lifting up and exalting; and worship involves much more than the word with which we are dealing. Dictionaries fail absolutely: expositions and commentaries seem to give no help at all; and it would be presumptuous for us to attempt an abstract definition of this marvellous word. It must suffice to recognise the fact that it occurs throughout Scripture almost invariably as appreciation of God for Himself alone, without regard to anything that He has conferred upon us. The abstract idea of praise is admiration, if you will, but something far deeper than what is conveyed by the common words to which we are accustomed.

Praise, as an English word, occurs twice in Genesis. Jacob's wife calls her fourth son Judah, and says, "Now will I praise the Lord;" but that name does not represent the Hebrew word used for the praise we render to God. The idea there is rather lifting up with extended hand, as when we commend God to the observation of other men. The two Hebrew words translated praise, are not practically one. The commoner word means "to shine, to be clear;" and it expresses the brightness, glory, majesty, beauty, and perfection of the Person praised, rather than the attitude of the praiser. The abstract idea includes clearness of sight, colour, and sound; absolute transparency, with inherent perfection. This is what we propose to bring as our simple offering to Jehovah.

This latter word for praise first occurs in Ex. xv. 11, where Moses instructs the children of Israel in their song of gratitude for deliverance from Egypt; and at once we learn a humbling lesson. Man, so long as he remains upon earth, is not able to offer true praise to God, because of man's infirmity through the fall. God can only hope to raise man's praise by Himself beginning the work of approach. As God's redeemed people begin to appreciate his character, they should be able to praise Him for what He is. When they were asked to do this, Israel, in their carnality, turned away and were separated from God for century after century. The purpose of Christ's coming embraces the idea of man's appreciation, appropriation, and approach Godward; for redemption contemplates until he is able to enjoy Him fully in all the Divine attributes.

MAN'S APPROACH TO GOD,

In that same chapter we discover the special attributes God displayed in his dealings with Israel. First, and pre-eminently, there was his mercy; then his majesty, glory, justice, and power. From these we pass to the central thought of holiness; and it is this which must be not only thought of and acknowledged, but appreciated and appropriated, if men are to give God the praise which He deserves and expects. Holiness being the main feature of the Divine character, God can accept nothing unreal, such as the praises, so called, of those who hire others for the splendours of a mere musical performance; or that ritual and routine, styled worship, which has naught to do with the soul and spirit of man. Until he is akin to God, man cannot praise Him; and unless we have learned to appreciate and enjoy what He is, we cannot offer anything, under the splendid title of "Hallelujah," which is acceptable to God.

Now we come to the special reason, as I believe, why God delights in the praises of his people. Praise is not for God's own personal satisfaction, nor is its purpose that man shall adulate the Deity, after of a humble person seeking the favour of a greater. God desires, above all things, that man should be like Himself, instead of separate from Him; and that is the meaning of 1 Pet. i. 15, 16. In learning to appreciate the qualities of God, man is able to enjoy Him and to become more and more like Him. It is for their sake, and not his own, that God will appreciate our praises when we reach the throne of glory, not for anything that we are in ourselves, but because He has made us, through his Son and by his Spirit, that which He originally designed man to be. When man fully appreciates God, then he will praise Him as he ought. Again and again, when we study the Scriptures, with this thought in mind, we find that we are called to praise the beauties of holiness, because holiness is God's essential character, and He communicates it to us. When Jehoshaphat's singers showed appreciation of God's glory in that respect, He gave the people victory over their enemies (2 Chron. xx. 21, 22).

As a rule we do not search the New Testament for enlightenment upon praise and its meaning. Here and there it is incidentally mentioned, as in the beautiful opening to the Epistle to the Ephesians, chap. i. 6, 12, 14. Not until we come to Rev. xix., do we meet with the word Hallelujah again, in the New Testament; and there you have the word six times. A voice from the throne—what a striking expression!—calls for praise to God. Surely that is the voice of the blessed Saviour, the Head of the Church, calling upon all whom He has redeemed to praise "our God," the majestic name with which the Scriptures open and close. It is when God in all his majesty fills the soul, on the sea of glass, in the presence of the throne, that the universal multitude, saved and redeemed, lift up their voices in one splendid ascription of praise to God for ever and ever.

Turning back to the scenes of earth, our search as to praise takes us to the 150 Psalms, written long before the doctrines of redemption were fully known. How is it that the old worthies of those days were able to take the attitude of praise in a way which leaves us far behind them? The answer is that the Psalms contain the expressions of the soul with regard to God; while, in other Scriptures, God reveals Himself to the soul. Here the soul is and the deeper you go into the majesty, glory, power, and holiness of God, in experimental appreciation, the more will your soul express itself in terms like those of the psalms. Starting with the opening expression of the book, "Blessed is the man," the psalms seem to be vying one with another to pour out praises to God, until you sum up the whole with, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Hallelujah." All earth's joys and all heaven's hopes are wrapped up in the power of the soul to rise from the enjoyment of blessings given to the enjoyment of God for what He is. The highest and noblest aspirations of every Christian must be, that the soul may be liberated from the shackles of sin, the scorn of the world, the taunt of the devil, and the attractions of the flesh, until we rise into the very presence of God, without a shadow of the fear of Israel at Sinai, without any of the terror that the disciples felt when they fell upon their faces before Christ, because they were still under the burdens of the flesh. Oh! to have the aspiration now, and the enjoyment hereafter; so that, whether we pass through death or Christ comes, we may be lifted into the splendid position where, seeing God as He is, we shall be like Him, and all the beauties of his holiness shall be communicated to our being. Then shall we not only bless Him, and lift up his glory before the universe, but because of the filling of our soul with what He is, we shall say, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Wednesday.

Special Motives to Praise.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER.

O sing unto the Lord a new song, sing unto the Lord all the earth (Psa. xcvi. 1).

The new century should be greeted with a new song. That, I suppose, is the thought that led to the choice of the special subject which we are considering. And one welcomes the decision, and thanks God for the time when one can push aside present sorrows and anxieties, and fasten upon the faithfulness of God and his supreme and unchanging worthiness to be praised. Praise is a subject which more or less includes all others; for just as the tones of the natural voice are an index of man's physical condition, so the quality of our praises indicates our spiritual state. The prophet Isaiah was not able to join the praises of the seraphim when he had that wonderful vision of the glory of God in the Temple at Jerusalem; he could only pour out his wail: "Woe is me, for I am undone, for I am a man of unclean lips." On the other hand, when David could declare "My heart is fixed," not wavering, but constant, steady, firm, he was able to say, "I will sing and give praise with the best member that I have."

Not merely do we greet the new century with a new song, but we sing because we have a new experience in our hearts; a new revelation of Jesus Christ has brought us to new surrender, new consecration, new faith and love; and I think we ought not to be content with any blessing which does not result in a new song. We sometimes sing—

> Roll in, thou wondrous tide, roll in;
> Break down the barriers of all sin,
> And call thou forth fresh song within.

Surely the Pentecostal blessing has not reached full tide in our souls until the new song bursts out from our hearts.

I should like to mention three special notes of praise:—First, God's general goodness and mercy to all mankind. Secondly, God's special goodness and mercy to our own nation. Thirdly, God's distinguishing and peculiar mercy and goodness to his own believing people. I call upon you first to praise God as men, then as Britons, and then again as Christians.

I. God's Universal Goodness.—How the psalms are full of it! Of course, we must turn to that book. God has only given one inspired hymn-book to the Church, and that book teaches the unity of the two covenants:—as we sing the songs of Zion, we are called upon in humility and godly fear to remember that we did not bear the root, but the root bears us; and if the natural branches have been cut off, it is only by faith that we can stand. Our verse from Psa. xcvi.

CALLS UPON ALL THE EARTH

to sing unto the Lord; and Psa. c., perhaps the most familiar of all, opens, "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands." We are to praise God for his goodness to all mankind—for our creation. Whatever may be the tendencies and temptations to sin, whatever the environment of man, of one only do we read in Scripture that it would have been well for that man if he had not been born. Scripture teaches us that there is enough of the original make in the lowest child of Adam to justify praise to God for his creation. Endowed with immortality, entrusted with free will, man is made for goodness and purity, made in the image of God; and while Scripture tells us that God's mercies are over all his works, and that the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord, surely man, as the last and the highest of God's works, ought to praise Him most of all for which are wrapped up in his creation. We call upon the Eskimo of Labrador, the Fuegians of South America, the pigmies of Central Africa, even the most degraded races of the world, and the most worn-out worldlings of this materialistic age, and say, a good God made you and placed you here, giving you aspirations after truth and holiness, which may be fully satisfied in Jesus Christ the Son of Man, who gave Himself for man's redemption.

II. God's Special Mercies to us as a Nation. The last verse of Psa. cxlvii. may be applied to our case: "He hath not dealt so with any nation." The Church of Christ is not national but universal, and the Jerusalem that is above, which is our city home, is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour. But I do not think this heavenly citizenship is meant to exclude all earthly patriotism. God made the home, the nation, the fatherland, and though our relation to Jesus Christ is to transcend all other, and our keenest, our first thought is to be for the kingdom of God, established throughout the whole world, we have a lawful and a right interest in

OUR OWN COUNTRY AND OUR OWN NATION.

And what special mercies have we been receiving as a nation during the past year! God has come very near to us. War is one of his sore judgments, and God has sent that judgment upon us. He has unsheathed the sword, and very many are the families that have felt the bitterness of death. God has been speaking to us as a people, and we may turn to the book of Amos and read things that are distinctly applicable to our own nation. In chapter iv., five times over comes the mournful refrain, "Yet have ye not returned unto Me, saith the Lord." You have it in the 6th verse, "I have given you want of bread, yet have ye not returned unto Me;" in the 7th verse, "I have withholden the rain, yet . ;" in the 9th verse, "I have stricken you with mildew, yet . ;" in the 10th, "I have sent among you the pestilence, yet . ;" in the 11th verse, "I have overthrown some of you as Sodom and Gomorrah,

YET HAVE YE NOT RETURNED UNTO ME."

Is not God saying just that to our English nation? Is He not saying, "I have given you sore trouble in your cities, and you have been shocked by the revelations of Darkest England? I have sent trouble into your commercial circles, with strikes and lock-outs; also grievous trouble—famine and pestilence—in India, yet have ye not returned unto Me. I have sent upon you trouble in South Africa, and slain your sons with the sword, yet . . ; I have been sending you threatenings of still more grievous troubles in China, yet have ye not returned unto Me"?

Surely God has come very near to us in judgment; and we ought to praise Him for his judgment. We ought to thank God that as a nation we were not left to sleep on in indifference, and continue in forgetfulness of Him—that we were not left to our flippancy, materialism, love of pleasure, and self-sufficiency. God's very judgments have been transfigured with mercies. How good God has been to us in spite of all our sins! What mercies in connection with the war in South Africa; how we ought to praise Him for a general like Lord Roberts, who favours the observance of the Lord's Day, gives his influence to the temperance movement, and puts his trust in God in prayer. How we ought to praise God for the many so-called accidents of the campaign, incidents of deliverance, narrow escapes with danger and defeat averted. How we ought to praise Him for his goodness that the nation sprang to arms when it did, that our colonies poured forth their help so that there was no need for conscription.

How good God has been to us as a nation, not only in the matter of this war, but

ALL ALONG OUR HISTORY.

We have been saved from foreign invasion, and since the Protestant accession, by the advent of William of Orange, civil war has been unknown. Moreover, our reforms have been carried through without rebellion, and among other immunities may be named conscription, professional politicians, unjust judges, dishonest paper currency, and lotteries. "He hath not dealt so with any nation." "It is God that maketh men to be one mind in a house." For this we praise Him.

Also, let us thank Him that for more than sixty-three years He has spared to us our beloved Queen, giving that august sovereign such grace and wisdom that, by her thoughtful consideration for all her subjects and self-sacrificing devotion to their good, she has won the enthusiastic affection of a free people. Therefore we praise God for his mercies to us as a nation.

III. Let us consider God's Distinguishing and Peculiar Goodness to his Believing People.

THAT WORD, "DISTINGUISHING," is not liked by some; but it represents something that must not be overlooked. The work of creation is universal, and so also is redemption; but the work of the Holy Spirit is distinguishing in its results. In John xiv. 16, 17, we read: "I will pray the Father, and He will give you another Comforter . . . the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive." The world has to praise God for the possibilities wrapt up in its creation; the English nation has to praise God for the special privileges vouchsafed to it as the most favoured of all the nations of the earth; Christians have a still deeper obligation, arising out of distinguishing favour. The question arises—are we among those who cannot receive the Spirit of Truth, or are we amongst those who know Him because He dwelleth in us? He must be in us before we can know Him; we must receive Him into our hearts—we must be born again. The world cannot receive the Spirit of Truth. They want to see and know; but the Spirit must be received before this can be realized. When He dwells in us, He is the Comforter; we are not alone—

NOT ORPHANS OR DESOLATE,

but to us the words of our Lord, in verse 18, apply: "I will come to you." This was said to men who were apostles, and had been three years in the school of Jesus. Their thoughts would have been largely occupied with memories of Christ's work and example; and yet, but for the blessing which afterwards transformed their lives, they would have been orphans—comfortless. You cannot praise God in this manner until you can say, "The Comforter has come."

We may know God's distinguishing goodness and mercy in the work of the Holy Spirit—the work of redemption and sanctification. Can we with truth take upon our lips the words of 1 John iii.: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God. Beloved, now are we the sons of God"? The first result of sonship is Separation—separation from the world—"the world knoweth us not," does not own us. The second result is Sanctification—the blessed hope purifies, the Spirit transforms and lifts us up above the present world—Heaven owns us. Let us praise God for making us his sons, and giving us the hope of seeing Christ very soon. The new song which we are invited to sing has three qualities. It is (1) Unto the Lord; that is more than can be said of many melodies. It is (2) From the Lord; unless the Lord teaches it, we cannot sing it. It is (3) Of the Lord; "The Lord is my salvation and my song." "O Lord, I will praise Thee; though Thou wast angry me, thine anger is turned away; and Thou comfortest me." "The Lord, Jehovah, is my strength and my song."

The Comeliness of Praise.

By Pastor W. Y. FULLERTON.

Praise ye the Lord, for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely (Psa. cxlvii. 1).

There is so much in this verse that three other psalms have to be quoted to put it together, and the whole of the three are bound in one great overwhelming call to praise. Milton said, "There are no psalms like the Psalms of David, no politics like the politics of the prophets, and no statesmanship like the statesmanship of the Sermon on the Mount." There are a great many songs about praise, a great many calling you to praise, but comparatively few of praise. There are many sermons about the Gospel; but comparatively few, I am afraid, Gospel sermons. The Psalms of David begin with a call to separation—of the man who does not deal with the evil thing, and end with a PERFECT TORRENT OF PRAISE.

The whole book ends with Hallelujah. Two reasons for praise are: What the Lord is, and what praise is—what He is, what it is. What a God He is! The One who made the stars, moulded the rain-drop. Think of the glory of the universe! See how, even in the shadows, his goodness appears. Some would have it without shadows. I believe there are no shadows in the desert of Sahara, neither is there beauty—nothing to admire. God is even in the shadows. We may thank God that here all our joys.

Are touched with pain,
That shadows fall on brightest hours;
That thorns remain,
So that earth's bliss may be our guide
And not our chain.

So you can praise Him even for the shadows. God has made us with a small capacity for pain, and a great capacity for joy—with a short memory for pain, with a long memory for pleasure. He guides our life, and not a sparrow falls without our Father. They do fall, but not without Him. He lets sorrows come, but not without Him. Look also to the ways of God. "He made known his way to Moses," and his acts to the children of Israel." What favour He brings to his people! "He hath not dealt so with any nation," as He has with our nation. But God has that other "nation," that holy nation,

THAT CHOSEN PRIESTHOOD,

and there we see his ways most perfectly. Think of his redemption—the spring of it, the way of it.

Get down before the cross if you want to get into the spirit of praise. Believe the record of it, that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures—

Bearing shame and scoffing rude,
In our place condemned He stood,
Sealed our pardon with his blood.
Hallelujah! What a Saviour.

Think of his purposes. He comes to beggars, and sets them among princes. He comes to men who like sin, and makes them hate it, so that those who have had experience of sin may by and by be raised to the perfect height of holiness in the presence of his glory. If He has saved you, praise Him, not only for his work, but for his way. Then, not only is God such a great God, but when He works it is with a magnificence and ease that is worthy of God. He speaks and it is done. It is true in creation, and also in grace. In joy and in sorrow, praise God. Merely to spend a holiday with some is to find them out; but of such as dwell in God's house, we read, "they are still praising Him." When God turns our captivity, we are our mouth is filled with laughter, and our tongue with praise.

LIKE THEM THAT DREAM,

We might learn all the praises of the Revelation. That of chap. iv., to praise God for creation; that of chap. v., for redemption; that of chap. vii., for salvation. God not only redeems, but brings us through and out of tribulation. We might learn the praise of chap. xi., that Christ takes the crown and the power, and reigns; of chap. xiv., the new song, the song without words, that can only be learnt by those who are without fault before the throne of God. That of chap. xv., the song of Moses and the Lamb, all enemies drowned in the sea; Christ brings us through, and all our foes are gone. In chap. xix. we have the final song after Babylon has fallen; the bad woman, the apostate church for ever defeated; and the good woman, the true church, comes to the day of her espousal.

The other cause for praise is based on what praise is. If we praise God as we ought, we shall be kept from praising ourselves. We shall value God's gifts more if we praise the Giver. In asking God for a blessing, we should thank Him for the blessing that is coming. If your joys abound, praise God. It will add a new joy to your joy. If you are in sorrow, praise God, and you will find something for praise even then. An old lady in humble circumstances had her attention drawn to her which smoked badly. She replied, "Is it not a blessing I have something to burn?" By-and-by some one offered sympathy with her because she was compelled to eat crusts. "Is it not a blessing that I have teeth?" was her happy reply. In a few years it was noticed that only two teeth remained, which again called forth the compassion of a friend, who was rebuked by the remark of the patient, submissive soul, "What a blessing my two teeth are one above the other."

Finally, we should also praise God because

HE IS GOING TO PRAISE US.

"Therefore, judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, and then shall every man have praise of God." If we are to spend eternity praising God, we will commence to praise Him here.

We do not sing enough. In the words of a dear friend of mine, and known to many of you, the late C. H. Spurgeon:—

Hallelujah! O my Lord,
Torrents from my soul are poured!
I am carried clean away,
Praising, praising, all the day.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 8. Psalm cxlv.

COMPARE the first and last verses of this very beautiful psalm. The psalmist vows that he will bless Jehovah's name for ever and ever; and then realizes that all flesh will do this also. It is as though his herald voice led to a chorus of never-ceasing adoration. "There was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest." One holy soul may be provocative of myriads more.

The theme of the psalm is God; and the psalmist delightedly passes from one phase to another of God's being and attributes, as a bee from flower to flower, drinking of their honey. The Lord is great (3); the Lord is gracious (8); the Lord is good (9); the Lord upholdeth (14); the Lord is righteous (17); the Lord is nigh (18); the Lord preserveth (20).

The one-thought of the psalm, on which all others depend, as beads on a thread, is all creation is full of happy creatures, who live on his loving kindness. Cheyne translates v. 16, "Thou fillest everything that lives with goodwill." God has only to open his hand, and the desires of every creature are met to the point of full enjoyment. This is a perpetual comfort to souls oppressed with the enigmas of Providence, and of the Divine dealings with the children of men. All around us there is so much happiness. Take, for instance, one summer day, when from the little green lizards upwards there is a perfect murmur of enjoyment in the stilly heat. And can you not trust Him, O child of man, who art made in his image, and redeemed by precious blood? Dare to believe that He will hear and save you.

MONDAY, July 9. Psalm cxlvi.

This and the four following psalms are the Hallelujah psalms, with which the psalter closes. Each begins with Hallelujah. They were probably composed for use in the second temple. In the lxx., this psalm is ascribed to the authorship of Zechariah and Haggai.

The key of the psalm is verse 5, which is the last of the twenty-five "Blesseds" in the Psalter. What can life bring of blessedness greater than to have the distinct realizing consciousness that Jehovah is one's Help and one's Hope? It is not enough to know that He is all this generally, or that He has been so in the past, and will be so again in the long future. But to have a particular place in his heart, and to know that there is an individualizing bond between Him and us, is blessedness indeed.

Here are nine present tenses, which set forth what God is prepared to do for his children (7-9), showing that He is the complement (i.e., the completement) of all our need. The hungry heart, longing for knowledge, love, faith, may turn to Him. The oppressed and those imprisoned in the iron bondage of circumstances, the blind and the bowed down, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow—none of these can appeal to Him in vain. It is quite true that many of these classes suffer terribly, and the promises of the Scriptures appear to be often unfulfilled. But this is due to the want of prayer and faith on their part. Just as redemption is accomplished for all, but must be accepted and appropriated by each individual, so the divine help and comfort must be humbly and believingly beckoned and welcomed by the beleaguered soul.

TUESDAY, July 10. Psalm cxlvii.

It has been thought that this psalm was sung when the new walls of the city were completed in the days of Nehemiah. It befits the restored soul, which has come back from long exile to rest in God, as its all-sufficient Helper.

Mark the characteristic present tense, which pervades every verse. God is no absentee landlord. He is nearer than breathing. In Him we live, and move, and have our being. And his work in the world of Nature beautifully illustrates his dealings with his children. Does it seem to thee as though, with so many myriads to attend to, He cannot give thee minute or individual care? Hush thine anxieties: each of the stars has its name by which He calls it. Is thy life gloomy with many dark and cloudy days, with drifting clouds and flooded lands? Remember, that it is only through clouds and rain that He can make the grass to grow upon the mountains for the wild creatures, and the result of all thy sorrows will be a rich carpet of verdure. Is it winter with thee, the air full of blinding snow-flakes, and rime everywhere, as if ashes had been powdered over trees and stones, and the ice-king has bound the waters in his iron chain? Yet, be of good cheer: thy winter is for a purpose; nothing better prepares for spring than the pulverizing of the ground in the hand of the frost; as soon as winter has done its work, his warm wind will gently steal across thy desolation, and all the frost and ice will hasten away. Sad heart, be comforted! God is with thee. Will He take so much care in the garnishing of the world of Nature, which, at the best, is but the apartment of thy life, and will He neglect thee, for whom He gave his son to die? O storm-tossed, winter-bound, desolate soul, there are springs and summers waiting for thee, in far-away millenniums, which will satisfy thee.

WEDNESDAY, July 11. Psalm cxlviii.

On this psalm, the Benedicite, the Apocryphal Hymn of the Three Children is based. It is that in brief. The psalmist is not content that he or his people should have an exclusive prerogative of praise; he especially longs that Nature, with her myriad voices, shall take up the strain. And his desire is fulfilled in the mighty anthem from every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, whom John heard saying, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." With the ears of our spiritual body we shall one day hear that mighty response.

It is interesting to turn these words from the imperative to the indicative mood, for already the heights and depths around us are full of praise. The sun leads the chorus, and the moon plays upon the silver harp. The stars "quire to the young-eyed cherubim." The deeps praise God as they commemorate the depths of his love; the mountains, as they tell of its height; the fruit and forest-trees, as they declare the fertility of his mind: to use the expressive words of Isaiah, "they clap their hands." O my soul, why art thou so still? Has not God given thee occasion for the highest praise? Redeemed and dumb! Saved and silent! Delivered from the horrible pit and made near unto Him without one word of gratitude! If thou canst not invent a psalm of praise of thine own, have some book of praise at hand for thy matins and evensong, and recite what other glowing hearts have written till thine own heart is aflame.

Remember that there is a praise note in the fire of tribulation and the hail of persecution, and the stormy wind of sorrow fulfils his word as much as the balmy breath of prosperity.

THURSDAY, July 12. Psalm cxlix.

Israel was made a nation, and delivered from Babylon, that it might lead the praises of a redeemed world. "This people have I made for Myself," said God, "that they might show forth my praise." Let us recall here those great words of the Apostle Peter, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a people for a possession, that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Pet. ii. 8, 9). It is very needful to ponder these words. We are too apt to take all God's gifts as a matter of course, instead of turning from them to Him with praise.

The children of this world do not generally associate joyfulness with obedience to our King. They are inclined to think that consecrated souls are dull and sad. An advertisement for a Christian companion the other day, insisted that she must be cheerful, as though cheerfulness were not the Christian's normal state. But how foreign such behaviour is to the joy-note of this psalm: "Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King." In the days of the Maccabees and of the Ironsides, the suggestion of v. 6 was literally realized. With us it is fulfilled in a far nobler and spiritual sense. The pride of worldly success and victory may not be yours. Your lot may be a very humble and obscure one, but let it be your consolation that the Lord takes pleasure in you, and that He will beautify you.

FRIDAY, July 13. Psalm cl.

This psalm is a worthy close of the Psalter. Ten times the cry, "Praise Him," rings out, and ten is the number of completeness. Think for a moment of all that has preceded, of the tears and groans, and wailings for sin, of all the questionings and perplexities about the ways of God, of all the feeble faith and disappointed aspiration! And now it all finishes thus! May it not be that life itself, at last, will finish thus—in unclouded blessedness? Will not the Misereres be forgotten in the outbursting Jubilate? Will not God justify Himself before the eyes of all people in the sunny gladness of his saints? Ah, how our hearts will leap when we see Jesus encircled by such praise as this, when every knee shall bow to Him, and every tongue shall confess that He is worthy, since He was slain, and redeemed to God, by his blood, men of every kindred, tongue, and tribe.

Is is interesting to notice the concluding words of each of the five books of Psalms. The first three end with Amen and amen, the firm expression, says Dr. Kay, of faith's reliance on God's truth. The fourth ends with Amen, Hallelujah, as though faith was beginning to be lost in joyful realization. The soul not only assents to God's ways, but rejoices in them. But, finally, when God's salvation stands forth in its complete and perfect beauty, there is only one ever-enduring anthem, Hallelujah.

It is pleasant, finally, to note the remark of Hengstenberg, the great commentator: "As with the life of the faithful, and the history of the Church, so also with the Psalter; in spite of all its cries from the depths, it runs out in a Hallelujah." So may it be for thee, my reader, and for the writer of these notes.

SATURDAY, July 14. Proverbs i.

Wisdom is more than intelligence. It is not only the clearness of the well-furnished head, but the uprightness of the holy heart. It is not an intellectual excellence only, but a moral excellence as well. There is no true wisdom which does not rest upon a threefold basis of truthfulness, righteousness, and purity, in heart and life. The wisdom of this book is sanctified common sense; it is that insight and knowledge which are the portion of a pure and holy heart. Often we have met a mother-wit and shrewdness of discrimination, a balance of judgment, which were the result of a holy life and communion with God in his Word, which put to shame those who were merely crammed with the learning of books and schools.

Yes, and there is more than this. Looked at more closely, wisdom becomes a person. "When He prepared the heavens, I was there." As we look back into this ancient book, we see the forecast of Him who was the power and the wisdom of God. In Jesus there is the highest embodiment of wisdom, and it is He who cries without, and utters his voice in the streets. It is against Him that Folly, which appropriately stands for the world, is always pleading and contending. And between these twain, every one of us must choose.

After the general introduction to the book, we come, in verse 8, to its exhortations. How tenderly the voice of Inspiration addresses erring men! "My son," such is its honeyed speech! And with what a reward does Wisdom acknowledge our response to her appeal. She causes us to dwell safely and quietly from the very fear of evil. It is not simply that we are secured from evil, but from the very fear of it. The pious soul is not greatly perturbed though mountains are carried into the heart of the seas. The heart throbs no faster, the blood flows no quicker, though the heavens pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt. Above every storm we hear the voice of Jesus saying, "It is I, be not afraid."

"Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

THE midsummer gatherings in connection with the various home and foreign missionary undertakings which have their centre at Harley House were held on Friday last. As usual, the occasion brought together a large number of supporters. There is so much to be said and done at these meetings that one meeting does not suffice, and the proceedings have accordingly come to include an afternoon assembly in Harley Chapel, succeeded by a conversazione and garden meeting in the grounds of the Harley House, and an evening gathering. This programme was again followed, and the entire gathering proved to be full of stimulus.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, spoke some characteristic words of encouragement, and Dr. H. Grattan Guinness gave some account of his recent evangelistic tour through Northern Europe, which has recently been described in our columns. He spoke of a notable awakening in Russia and Sweden which followed the preaching of Lord Radstock. He also described a visit to Egypt, alluding to the vast improvements in administration wrought by the British occupation, and recounting an interview with a Christian Nubian who had been trained at Harley College, and who is now proceeding southward in connection with the work. Dr. Harry Guinness followed, outlining the scope and results of the many maintained in connection with Harley College and Doric Lodge, the respective training centres for men and women from which so many workers have gone forth into the foreign field. The past year has witnessed a continuance of blessing, especially in connection with house to house visitation in the slums, while the public service of the students has been owned in the spiritual enlightenment of many souls. Berger Hall, with its meeting-rooms, and accommodation for many classes, is, although but little known outside East London, a flourishing institution, chiefly notable for its vigorous and fruitful efforts to grapple with the problem of reaching and evangelizing a vast city population.

Dr. Guinness was able to give a satisfactory account of the condition of

THE FOREIGN WORK.

On the Congo the need is such as to call for the dispatch of another party of workers. Three new stations are to be opened, and a steamer is be built. The new work in India is full of promise, while, in conjunction with friends in Canada and Australia, fresh advances are being made in South America, chiefly in Peru and Argentina. Equatorial Africa, also, presents further opportunities, of which advantage is being taken. From former students, scattered throughout the foreign field, come tidings which generally tell of spiritual progress.

In view of the disturbed condition of the Chinese Empire, special interest attached to the address given by Mrs. F. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness), who, in reviewing the present position, ascribed much of the enmity manifested towards foreigners by the ignorant natives, to the who had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people. On her arrival in China, Mrs. Taylor was warned "not to expect sudden conversions," but her experiences of the Lord's working had caused her to believe in them more than ever, and she encouraged the students to hold firmly to revival principles and methods. Mrs. Taylor related two cheering instances in which native women had been influenced during turbulent times. They had felt great concern as to the safety of the missionaries, and as consequence of visits of inquiry had been brought under the sound of the Gospel. One of these interesting cases, a woman of remarkable strength of character, now regularly walks twenty miles to attend a Sunday service, traversing a dangerous country, infested by robbers and wolves, and having, on account of the usual deformity of foot, to commence her journey on the Saturday morning.

At the evening meeting, a number of addresses were given by missionaries returning to the Congo, Rev. Archibald G. Brown delivering the charge.

Scottish Notes.

By Our Own Correspondent.

FROM the twenty-first report of the Dundee Mission to the Out-door Blind, just issued, it appears that the work has been carried on with a remarkable measure of success. The number of persons on the roll is 174, of whom sixty are variously and profitably employed. Of ten cases dealt with last year for restoration of sight, five were successful.

In connection with a fortnight's evangelistic mission conducted in Canal Street Church, Paisley, by Rev. William Baird, some sixteen persons professed conversion, while 248 boys and girls were dealt with and received the covenant card. The meetings were a source of blessing to many, and a stimulus to workers; the time was one of special quickening and reviving.

Rev. C. M. Sheldon received an enthusiastic reception last week at Dundee. A large audience assembled to hear him lecture, in the course of which he gave expression to his conviction that there is place in the community for a Christian daily newspaper, and that such a venture ought to prove a success. At an after-meeting, to which many remained, he made an interesting statement about the enactment and working of the Kansas Prohibition Law of 1881, which has been a great blessing to the city, and is supported by all the public men.

A report from Gillespie Church, Glasgow, tells that the holding of the Sabbath evening evangelistic meeting entirely in the open air during the summer months has been attended with the most encouraging results. It is found that many young men and women who will not enter a church or hall will stop and listen when the Gospel is carried to them in this fashion. Ready listeners are also found in a large lodging-house, to which the workers find their way later in the evening.

The Bible Booth is being sent out on its annual round of visits to fairs and race meetings in the West of Scotland, under the charge of Mr. Daniel Graham, of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland.

The School Board of Edinburgh is in communication with its teachers as to the spread of cigarette smoking among the children. Members and masters alike recognise the greatness of the evil, and are combining to take all measures in their power to lessen the practice. It is intended to place a circular-letter on the subject in the hands of all parents in the city, asking their co-operation in dealing with it. We venture to think that such advice will be largely thrown away so long as the smoking habit remains so common among the teachers themselves.

Dr. Ross Taylor has been nominated to preside again over the closing Assembly of the Free Church, on October 30 next, and the committees of the two churches have agreed to nominate Principal Rainy as moderator of the first General Assembly of the United Free Church, which is to meet on the two following days.

In connection with a visit from Dr. Laws, of Livingstonia, the Free Presbytery of Auchterarder invited to a special meeting recently all their own workers and those of the United Presbyterian congregations south of the River Earn. A large gathering of delegates and friends came together, over whom Rev. G. A. F. Knight presided. Instructive and stimulating missionary addresses were given by Dr. Laws and Dr. Porter (Blackford).

Jews at Christian Meetings.—Mr. Samuel Wilkinson writes to correct an impression erroneously deduced from his address at Mildmay Conference, to the effect that in connection with the Mildmay Mission fifty to sixty thousand Jews attended the Gospel meetings during the year. These figures apply to attendances, not to individuals, many of whom are present again and again.

Bible Training Institute.

THE closing day of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, last Thursday, was made the occasion of an interesting reunion of former students. Nearly sixty friends from all parts of the kingdom—a number being foreign missionaries at present on furlough—assembled to meet those now going forth. A large part of the day was spent in helpful fellowship and intercourse, ideas being exchanged on the different aspects of Christian work in the light of such experience has had been gained. This more private part of the proceedings was closed by an address from Lord Overtoun, full of counsel and encouraging words to the young people.

In the evening a large public meeting was held, when Lord Overtoun said all hearts had been made glad by finding that wherever the students had gone God's blessing was resting upon them, because Jesus Christ was in the first place; and even their esprit de corps had been used for the winning of souls. Speaking of the Bible as the basis of all the teaching, he pointed out that the very number of the foes who attack the Book constitutes a proof of its vitality. The work is ours, because we are called to it, as well as God's: "many would get a blessing if, instead of waiting for God, they realized that God is waiting for them."

Mr. John Anderson (Principal) reported that the students enrolled for the session had numbered seventy-seven, of whom three had gone to South Africa (two as reservists to join the Army, and one as a Scripture Reader), while twenty-six were about to leave. The Gospel meetings conducted during the year by the staff and students had numbered 1,232, with about as many open-air services. Two summer missions just closed in Glasgow had been among the most fruitful in the history of the Institute. Grateful mention was made of the cordial support and help received from her Majesty's Commissioners and the officials in connection with visitatons and Bible classes in prison.

Addressing the outgoing students, Rev. Dr. Paton indicated the way in which the Bible meets three great needs of human nature, supplying—(1) an infallible guide for conduct, (2) a supreme authority in matters of faith, and (3) a guarantee of immortality. A warm testimony to the widespread interest in the Institute came from Rev. George Gladstone. "Take a text," was his advice, "and find out what the Spirit of God means in it. There you will find room for grammar, dictionary, reading, meditation, and prayer. When you have discovered it, go and tell that."

Several of the young men and women gave expression to their gratitude for the instruction received, and for the fellowship of the home life; while visitors from far and near added their witness that after years had proved the soundness of the foundation laid.

A Good Testimony.

SISTER CONSTANCE, Lady Superintendent of the Doughty Street Home and Mission, in a recent report, says:—

"One of the converts of the Mission, a Mrs. R., who was formerly a Roman Catholic, had a visit from a Ritualistic Sister.

"'Do you attend such and such a chapel?' asked the Sister, naming a Roman Catholic Chapel.

"'No,' said Mrs. R.

"'Then do you go to the one in Clerkenwell?' was the next question.

"'No,' replied Mrs. R.

"'Then where do you go?' asked the Sister.

"'I go to the Mission Hall in Cross Street.'

"'What! to those Baptists? Do you know they have no doctrine?'

"'Well,' replied Mrs. R., 'if they haven't any doctrine, they have got Christ, and, what's more, I've got Him too, now; but I hadn't when I attended the Catholic Chapel.'"

Further particulars of this work in a very needy district of the Metropolis, may be had from the headquarters, 59, Doughty Street, W.C. The hon. secretary is Rev. A. B. Middleditch, 4, Melita Villas, Finchley, N.

Christian Endeavour.

In view of the approaching congress at the Alexandra Palace (July 13-20), the following article by Mr. John Willis Baer of Boston, U.S.A., a prime mover in the Christian Endeavour cause, is important as setting forth clearly what are the characteristics and aims of this great movement:—

TO a wonderful degree Christian Endeavour is a trustee of the posterity of the Church of Jesus Christ. Look at its history. Born in Williston Church, Portland, Maine, February 2, 1881, without blare of trumpets; and in nineteen years God has developed a world-wide movement. In 1881, one society, in one church, of one denomination, in one city, in one state, in one country; to-day nearly 48,000 societies, in as many churches, in over forty denominations, in every state and territory in our own land, in all countries, and in all missionary lands. Christian Endeavour with its three and one-half millions of members. Behold what God hath wrought. Its present numerical strength, which is the least of its successes, is in itself conclusive proof that Christian Endeavour is not man's invention. What is the secret of Christian Endeavour's success? is a most natural question.

First: Christian Endeavour has certain recognised principles which are innate and inherent, such as the covenant obligation involved in the actual member's pledge. Humanly speaking, the pledge is considered the backbone of Christian Endeavour, and without it there can be no real Christian Endeavour Society. Here it is:—

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do, that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Saviour; and that just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavour to lead a Christian life.

As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at, and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavour prayer-meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting of the Society, I will, if possible, send at least a verse of Scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll-call.

Every active member is expected to make that covenant with God and to be true to it. It appeals to the heroic in young people, and it is an earnest and definite reminder of daily duties. I also believe that fidelity to the pledge has taught many a young Christian to transfigure the word "duty" to "privilege."

Second: the Christian Endeavour Society is a religious organization. Its heart is

THE PRAYER MEETING.

If you wish to feel the pulse of the Society, put your finger upon the prayer-meeting. Truly does Christian Endeavour engage definitely in social, civic, humane, philanthropic, benevolent, and missionary work, and is increasingly becoming an important factor in developing all the phases of a well-rounded Christian life; but its incentive to all the outward expression of life is found in the prayer meeting. Christian Endeavour is first a religious society in a local church, of which it, like the other child of the church, the Sunday school, is a subordinate part. Its motto is a rallying-standard held aloft with enthusiasm, promoting denominational loyalty. Christian Endeavour is not undenominational. That word has no rightful place in its vocabulary. Each local society is of the same denomination as the home church of which it is a part. Each local society owes no allegiance to any organization outside of its own church, and next to Christ is amenable to no other authority than that of its own pastor and its own church. The real Christian Endeavour Society fosters an intelligent spirit of self-repecting denominationalism, and at the same time is an enemy to blatant and arrogant sectarianism.

"FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH,"

Third: God led pastors and churches throughout the world to adopt the principles which Dr. Clark had first planned for his own young people in Williston Church; thus in his own way Christian Endeavour became an interdenominational and international movement. What one pastor found was good for the young people in his Congregational Church, thousands of other pastors in other churches adopted for their own young people. Hence Christian Endeavour stands for spiritual fellowship, and is a mighty factor in having a part in answering our Lord's prayer "that all may be one." The pledge is the backbone of Christian Endeavour; the prayer-meeting is its heart; interdenominational fellowship of its young people, with common principles, a common name, against a common enemy, battling for a common Master, is its crown.

The history of this great missionary and evangelistic force is comparatively

SHORT IN YEARS, BUT LONG IN ACHIEVEMENT.

With modest and teachable spirits the young people have made a large place for themselves in the Church, in society, and in the world. Christian Endeavour is known first and foremost by its personal devotion to our divine Saviour Jesus Christ; by its strenuous loyalty to the local church and denomination; by its practical demonstration of Christian fellowship; by its stand against the saloon, the gambling den, and the brothel. It stands for temperance, for Sabbath keeping, for a pure political atmosphere—in a word, for righteousness.

MR. J. WILLIS BAER.

Let us turn our faces to the future, for I believe Christian Endeavour is only beginning to appreciate what God intends to do with it if it remains true to Him. Christian Endeavour has for a purpose no less wide and lofty than the bringing of the world to Christ. There may be dangers ahead. I borrow the answer of the old pilot who, when asked by a timid passenger on the St. Lawrence Rapids, as the boat plunged down stream, whether he knew every rock and shoal in the channel, replied, "No, but I know where the deep water lies." President Clark, the founder of Christian Endeavour, has avoided many a rock and shoal, to be sure; at the same time he has attempted to keep the prow of Christian Endeavour "where the deep water lies." Christian Endeavour is yet to make new progress, but it will be by sticking to the old lines. Its many meetings and conventions must hold up higher ideals and remain loyal to its fundamental principles. With all its success, Christian Endeavour must as ever remain

ITS ULTIMATE AIM

AN INFLUENCE AND NOT AN INSTITUTION.

It must truly keep abreast of the times, and keep step with the onward march of progress. It has its recognised place in the church, and it must always be in and not outside of the church. Its individual members must grow as they go. God will never let Christian Endeavour stand still. It is no longer an experiment; it is a real factor in the life of the Church and the world to-day. The inspiration of numbers is always an incentive, but even that must be overcome by the Spirit of God compelling the rank and file individually to submit themselves to the will of God.

FREE FROM ENTANGLING ALLIANCES, never handicapped by the fancies of a few, Christian Endeavour must give itself completely to the life of the Church in a deeper spirit of consecration, and thus unselfishly, by hearty co-operation with the older people of the Church, have its part in entirely obliterating the line that separates old from young. God speed the day!

We and Our Children.

PASTOR THOS. SPURGEON'S recent remark about the remarkable hereditary character of the personnel among the Metropolitan Tabernacle workers (not only in the pulpit, but among the diaconate, the Sunday school, and the students of the Pastor's College), raises an interesting and important question. The secret of descent from father to son in spiritual ideals is one that many devout and sorely-tried parents, who find their boys and girls showing interest to anything but the Lord's work, would gladly learn. They are puzzled and pained by their failure to imbue their children with due regard for the services and activities of the church in which they are brought up, and, with a pained and helpless surprise, they watch them drifting into worldly ways in spite of all their example and appeals. Sometimes they doubt themselves in the matter; sometimes they doubt God. Having done their best, they cannot understand that their home training should seem to be thrown away.

We were interested, on a recent visit to the church at Sunderland, founded by the late Mr. A. A. Rees, and now presided over by Pastor F. E. Marsh, that the same "hereditary personnel" is to a great extent to be found. We recall a saying often used by Mr. Rees to the effect that he "knew many parents who themselves once left the world for the Church, but who subsequently left the Church for the world for the sake of their children."

How are Christian people to imbue their children with their own enthusiasm and devotion in spiritual effort? Obviously they can never ensure results by the wisest dealings or the holiest influences; for each child is a free agent and possesses the dread power to turn away from God under the most favourable circumstances. But there are principles of training which should never be forgotten. Children should be familiarised with, and exercised in, such aspects of church life as they can enter into from their earliest years.

The intense and absorbing interest of spiritual work for others should be unfolded to them as occasion serves. Their sympathies should be directed into practical channels from the beginning. As far as possible, without laying a burden on them, they should have a personal part and place in some corner of the Lord's Vineyard. And their debt of personal gratitude and love to the Saviour should be stirred into warm realization, so that the constraint of his love may be felt as a part of their life.

The Protestant Governesses' Home supplies the need often experienced by governesses requiring temporary rest while awaiting engagements, as well as those who cannot afford to bear the entire expense of a few days at the seaside. The distress in the decline of life is painfully severe amongst those who have often been delicately reared and accustomed to comfortable homes. The funds have also helped many bordering on starvation, with no prospect but the workhouse. For fifteen weeks one, a semi-invalid, was kept from want by weekly grants. The bracing air, bright surroundings, and peace of the Home, restore courage to grapple with the inevitable, and patience to bear the struggle for a livelihood. Miss Clementina Kingdon, 22, Chatham Place, Brighton, is the superintendent.

Sir Samuel James Way, Bart.

NEXT to the war, the subject which has of late commanded most attention in Parliament is the Bill by which it is hoped to weld into one Commonwealth the hitherto separate, and in some respects antagonistic, colonies of Australia. The section which involved most anxiety was that which aimed at restricting the functions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as the supreme court of appeal in colonial causes. At this time, therefore, the personality of the distinguished judge who sits on that Committee as the representative of the whole of Australasia is of special interest—an interest which will be intensified in the case of our readers by the fact that he is eminent not only as a lawyer, but as a leader in many philanthropic and religious activities.

Sir Samuel Way is a native of the old country, having been born at Portsmouth in 1836. His father, Rev. James Way, may be regarded as one of the pioneers of the Bible Christian Connexion, for he entered its ministry at its eighth Conference. Those who know anything of the privations endured by the circuit preachers of those days will not need to be told that the future Chief Justice was born into a home where there was constantly felt the pressure of narrow means. It provided, however, a training for certain valuable qualities of character which would not, perhaps, have been so thoroughly cultivated in easier surroundings. On one occasion Mr. Way was talking to a brother minister, who acquainted him with his intention of leaving for some better-paid ministry, on account of the difficulty in providing for his family on such a small salary. In reply to the suggestion that he should do the same, Mr. Way expressed his sense of obligation to the Bible Christians, to whom he owed his conversion, and his firm belief that, if he continued in the work to which he was called, he might trust God to see that his children did not suffer. It is pleasing to know that this man of faith lived to see his eldest son raised to the highest judicial position in South Australia before the termination of his own active ministry, and the other members of his family enjoying much prosperity and influence in the same colony.

In 1850 Mr. James Way gave another proof of his devotion to duty when, although an ex-President of the Conference and among the foremost leaders of his Connexion at home, he undertook the task of founding a mission at the Antipodes. In their first years in South Australia, which was just then in an exceptional condition owing to the gold rush to Victoria, Mr. and Mrs. Way had to endure experiences as trying as any they had faced in their hardest times in England. Their son Samuel, who had previously spent some time at the connexional school at Shebbear, remained for a while at a private school at Chatham; but shortly afterwards followed his parents to Adelaide, where he entered a lawyer's office. In 1861 he was admitted as a practitioner, and in ten years was a Queen's Counsel. In 1875 he was appointed Attorney General, in 1876 Chief Justice, and in 1891 Lieutenant Governor. In 1897 he was selected to represent Australia on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and last year received the honour of a Baronetcy. He is an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford and LL.D. of Cambridge, and has been for seventeen years Chancellor of the University of Adelaide.

Sir Samuel Way is distinguished among his fellow colonists not only for his success in his profession, but for his practical interest in many forms of religious and philanthropic activity. In South Australia it has become almost a matter of course that the Chief Justice shall be invited and shall accept the invitation to become the head of every enterprise for "the common weal." And in this case "head" does not mean "figure-head," for every post which he fills involves much painstaking personal attention. It is no little thing for so busy a man to find time to be present at committee meetings of the Children's Hospital, or to acquaint himself with the detailed history of the many missionary and evangelistic societies, at whose meetings he discloses a breadth and accuracy of knowledge that would do no discredit to an expert deputation.

His brief visit to England in 1897 gave an indication both of the catholicity of his sympathies and of his readiness to help good causes even when on a holiday. It was the Diamond Jubilee year, and he was in great request for many official and social functions. Nevertheless, the first entries made in his engagement-book were of religious meetings, and nothing was allowed to displace them. He presided at one of the special celebrations of the Sunday School Union, took part in the Methodist New Connexion Centenary, visited the Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Bible Christian Conferences, addressed the West London Mission Anniversary, attended the speech-day at the Leys School, and spent a day in examining the working of the "Darkest England" scheme in London and at Hadleigh. A specimen programme of three days will illustrate his activity when he was by no means in good health. On the August Bank Holiday he travelled from London to Exeter and gave a powerful speech in the evening from the chair of the missionary meeting in connection with the Bible Christian Conference. He returned to town by the night mail, and delivered a judgment on Tuesday morning at the sitting of the Judicial Committee. He was travelling westward again later in the day, opened a bazaar at Ilfracombe on Wednesday morning, addressed the Conference at Exeter in the afternoon, and gave a reception in the evening.

Perhaps the most interesting missionary meeting over which he ever presided was one held in the saloon of the steamship Empress of Japan, in November, 1891, somewhere between Vancouver and Yokohama. The presence on board of several missionaries bound for China had provoked much discussion, generally unfavourable. The Chief Justice's first words, "I am myself the son of a missionary," followed by his warm advocacy of missions, did something to make the objectors more careful in the expression of their opinions for the rest of the voyage.

It has already been made clear that Sir Samuel Way has not been weakened by the successes of his later life in his attachment to the little church of which his father was a minister. Of this attachment he has given many generous proofs—as, for instance, in his presenting to the Connexional College at Shebbear, in 1891, the title-deeds of the farm adjoining, in the homestead of which the first Bible Christian Society had its origin. He had purchased this farm some time previously, in order that it might not be alienated from the denomination. When he visited Washington, in the same year, as a member of the Methodist Œcumenical Conference, the fidelity of so distinguished a man to the Church in which he had been trained attracted much attention.

Last New Year's Day, however, he entered a wider ecclesiastical relationship, as on that date the Wesleyan Methodists, Bible Christians, and Primitive Methodists of South Australia united to form one church. Sir Samuel Way has himself contributed largely to the success of the union movement. In fact, a few years ago he took part in what might almost be called a union campaign, speaking at pro-union meetings in the chief towns of several colonies, and doing much to break down the hesitation with which the proposal was regarded by many members of the two smaller churches. He has taken this position in the conviction that amalgamation will increase the practical efficiency of the denominations concerned, and enable them to meet more adequately the spiritual needs of the scattered population of Australia — a conviction which we heartily pray may be abundantly justified by results.

Communion.

As, when some precious friend is far away
My heart still follows, and with his communes,
And mutual trust and love our spirits join,
And sympathy to happy thought attunes;
So, dearest Lord, of all friends best and chief!
Grant that to Thee my soul may ever turn,
'Mid life's strange windings feel Thee ever near;
And still in all thy guiding Hand discern.
For what from Thee can ere thy child estrange;
Shall life or death divide, or sorrow rend?
Nay, He who died to save still lives to keep,
The one eternal, ever-loving Friend!

Annie E. Lyddon.

Women Guardians.—The fact that two women have been admitted by a large majority as members of the Jewish Board of Guardians, is interesting, as showing how the Jewish community is changing its views and practice. So rapid has been the adoption of more modern ideas in regard to the exclusion of women from Jewish bodies, there are now only two important ones, the United Synagogue and the Board of Deputies, to which the old rule still applies.

Home Missions.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE operations of the St. Giles' Christian Mission increase, as the years go by, in variety and extent. "Every year some 500 friendless juvenile offenders are admitted into our Boys' Homes, about 20,000 free breakfasts are supplied to discharged prisoners, and an average of 6,000 prisoners are assisted with employment, tools, &c. The superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, acts, indeed, as a kind of benevolent overseer of the criminal population of the land. His efforts to lead degraded men and women to a better life, and a personal knowledge of the Saviour, have been blessed with a large measure of fruitfulness. Nor has work stopped short there, for the

of those in gaol have been saved from imminent starvation. At the Boys' Homes, in Brook Street, Holborn, at the various local stations in the vicinity of our metropolitan prisons, at the country Homes at Maldon, and in various other centres, the Mission makes good progress with its philanthropic work; while in Little Wild Street, Drury Lane, amongst a vast population of slummers—considerable numbers of whom are, by profession, Romanists—the evangelistic agencies which have been carried on for so many years are maintained with increased vigour.

At the annual meeting of the Mission, held at the Mansion House, some account of the work was given by Mr. Frank A. Bevan, who said that the Mission had been in existence for forty years, and went on to add that when a man is sentenced his wife and children are, in a sense, sentenced too. It would often seem that their punishment, though undeserved, is the heavier of the two. Troubles surround them in battalions: mental distress, bodily privations, hunger, cold, the forsaking of friends and relatives, all these and more come upon them, making their lot so sad that even the hardest-hearted must be touched to pity.

At this crisis the Mission steps in, and with prompt assistance and tender sympathy does much to lighten the otherwise almost unbearable burden. No one, not even the poor women themselves, can tell what some of these desolate wives suffer. It is to be remembered that they do not parade their misery, and seek to trade upon it, for generally Mr. Wheatley hears of it first from some kindly official, or, as is frequently the case, ascertains it in the course of his daily prison visitation work. The Homes at Maldon, in Essex, have done good work in this connection. They have sheltered helpless little children during the father's imprisonment, and have enabled the mother to go to work in a situation found for her. By this means she has been in a position to save her home from ruin, and to welcome her husband back again on his release.

Then the Mission works largely amongst friendless juvenile offenders, and, believing that "prevention is better than cure," is most anxious to prevent "first convictions." Mr. Bevan thanked those gentlemen who hand boys over to the Mission instead of sending them to prison. "Familiarity breeds contempt," and by some perversity of human nature, the generality of boys seem to consider that undergoing a sentence, is something to be proud of! Mr. Bevan concluded by reviewing the many branches of the work, and appealing for a larger measure of sympathy and support.

Speaking from the chair, the Lord Mayor (Sir A. Newton) said that magistrates are often in a dilemma; they do not like to consign youths to prison, and, on the other hand, they have to administer justice. They find, however, a happy solution of this difficulty in the ready aid of Mr. Wheatley. If the St. Giles' Mission were a State undertaking, it could not be conducted in a better way; while, at the same time, it manifested a tender sympathy with those in need. The discharged prisoner has a terrible prospect before him on leaving the gaol, and at such a moment, when succour is needed, he finds a hand outstretched to help him.

The next speaker was Mr. W. Wheatley, who reminded his hearers that those aided by the Mission are people unable to help themselves. The various Homes were doing a good work, and many criminals had taken advantage of the help afforded them. Mr. Wheatley emphasized the spiritual character of the Mission.

After appreciative words from Col. Sir C. E. Howard Vincent, a number of gentlemen connected with the police-courts and sessions gave illuminating testimonials. Mr. De Rutzen said he found it impossible to adequately describe a hundredth part of the good done by the Mission. He had been a magistrate for twenty-five years, and could say that not a day passed without finding the Mission useful. The work is one

OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

It dealt with a mass of people which require all the experience of Mr. Wheatley and his friends to cope with. It befriends those who have no friends, and should be generously sustained. Mr. R. D. M. Littler (chairman of Middlesex Sessions), who has to deal with the largest criminal population outside the Metropolis, said that he had handed over to Mr. Wheatley many hardened offenders, and the experiment had proved highly satisfactory.

Representing the prison authority in England, Mr. E. Ruggles-Brise, C.B. (chairman of Prison Commissioners), dealt with the great decrease in the number of youths sent to prison nowadays as compared with ten years since, and said that one of the contributionary causes to this state of affairs was the St. Giles' Christian Mission. Closing words in a similar strain came from Mr. M. Crackanthorpe and Alderman Sir W. P. Treloar, the latter voicing the general feeling of the meeting in expressing the hope that the gathering would prove a stimulus to the work.

Mrs. Meredith's Work.

THE well-known religious and philanthropic work, commenced and organized by Mrs. Meredith in the interest of discharged female prisoners, continues its career, as the years go by, with an increased measure of usefulness. Both at the Clapham Road Institutions, and at the Children's Village Homes in Surrey, blessing is given to the efforts of the staff which has gathered round the founder.

The annual gathering in connection with the Women's Work and the Princess Mary Village Homes was attended by many friends. After the visitors had inspected the marble laundry and other buildings in the rear, they assembled in the Conference Hall and listened with interest to some account of the year's progress. The inmates received a for their good conduct. Some of them in days gone by would do no work, but they have become industrious and well-conducted women.

The mission aims to combine the influences of wholesome toil with those of spiritual instruction. There is no compulsion to attend the religious gatherings which are regularly conducted in connection with the day's work, but the audiences are good and the results satisfactory. Among the laundry workers are to be found some who were formerly criminals, but who are now the backbone of this thriving industrial community. In addition, letters of Christian advice and sympathy are sent out to the inmates of prisons in various parts of the world, and thankful responses come to hand, in addition to appreciative letters from chaplains. As an evidence, too, of the way in which some of those who are helped attain good positions in life, a letter was read from a former inmate, now occupying a place of trust; and the communication—a sample of many—evidenced the satisfactory change which had been brought about by Divine influences in the character, and then in the circumstances, of the writer.

As to the Village Homes, a good account was forthcoming. Children born in prison, and others reclaimed from surroundings of grave moral danger, are received, and the chief aim is to afford such training as will fit the young people for domestic service. It is felt that it is home rather than school life which tells most in and every effort is made by the workers to instil Christian principles into the minds of their young charges.

Appropriate words were spoken from the chair by Sir Gainsford Bruce, who said that during the year 247 women had been provided with the means of earning an honest livelihood. He pointed out that the institution differs from an ordinary Home, inasmuch as, after working hours, the women are entirely free. They are, of course, not left alone, but are visited by the principal workers, and are, in many ways, subject to good influences; but they are largely cast upon their own responsibilities. The effect has been such as to entirely justify the method. The speaker went on to give a graphic description of the miseries of women criminals, and to declare that both from a Christian standpoint and in the general interests of society it is desirable that such institutions as Mr. Meredith's should be steadfastly supported. Rev. A. Cornford (chaplain of the Homes) read the report, and other friends also addressed the meeting. Communications for Mrs. Meredith may be addressed to 143, Clapham Road, S.W.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

AT the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. John Tennant the annual meeting of this Society was held in the garden at 19, The Boltons, South Kensington. Prebendary Webb-Peploe presided, and was supported by Messrs. T. A. Denny and J. Tennant, trustees. The Chairman expressed great sympathy with the Society, whose objects were to improve the condition of the blind resident in and near London by providing them with Scripture readers in their own homes; with guides to take them to places of worship and classes established by the Society; with instruction in reading, writing, arithmetic, knitting, &c., in day classes in various parts of London; to aid them when in dire necessity, through ill-health, or incapacitated through age or infirmity, with small monetary grants; and to enable others to learn a trade by which they could maintain themselves; or supplying them with the means of setting up in business. No blind person of bad character, or who publicly solicits alms in any way, or has intermarried with one similarly afflicted, receives assistance from the Society.

When the Chairman was ten years old he was threatened with total blindness, and was for six months confined in a dark room, with the exception of half an hour daily when he was taken to the light to have his eyes operated upon. He lived through the ordeal, although he suffered excruciating pain; one eye was saved, and with it he could tell who in his congregation did not pay proper attention to the prayers, &c. Rev. Herbert Marston had spoken in his school-room of the "Talent of Blindness." By the loss of sight, many had been brought to see their God, and to help others into a right path—in illustration of which he said that an old woodman, named Keen, on his father's estate, was stricken with blindness, he being also unable to walk and almost stone deaf. Mr. Peploe was telling Keen how sorry he was for him, when he replied, "Don't you say that, sir; God darkened the eyes of my body to open the eyes of my soul, and I thank Him for it." This man used, every morning, to stand at his porch and sing at the top of his voice hymns, and finished up by shouting a text, so that the workmen passing his cottage on their way to work should hear some messages from God's Word. The Chairman also told how many blind people had been aided and taught trades so enabling them to earn an honest livelihood. The Society did a great work, but they wanted more monetary help.

Rev. HERBERT J. R. MARSTON said he lost his eyesight when eleven years old, just as he was going to Eton. His education was seriously hampered, but he was sent to a school at Worcester, afterwards to Durham University; and, after taking his degree, returned to Worcester School as a master. Rev. J. RICE BYRNE, Mr. TENNANT, and Mr. WOOD (a blind man who had received great comfort and help from the Society and its helpers and day classes—those classes were the two bright spots in his week) also addressed the meeting.

The National Vigilance Association.

THE work of this useful organization consists not only of combating vice and crime in various flagrant forms, but of dealing with and endeavouring to remove the prime causes of the chief moral evils that afflict the land.

During the past twelve months the Society has been able to accomplish much good work. The most notable feature, perhaps, is found in the effort to abolish what has been aptly termed and to shelter and advise large numbers of young women, British and foreign, who have been in danger of being entrapped for vile purposes. The printed warnings to young girls put up by the Association on the lines of steamers and at foreign ports, have proved serviceable, and in many instances the organization has been instrumental in bringing to account those who have sought to accomplish the moral ruin of young people.

The claims of the work, and, in connection, the moral condition of England, were considered at the annual meeting of the Association, which was held recently at Grosvenor House. A large company assembled, and keen interest was manifested. Lord ABERDEEN, who presided, said that the Association brings to bear upon difficult problems a calm and even temper. The work is far-reaching, not only in its nature, but geographically, having branches in all parts of the United Kingdom. It labours chiefly in London, where the need is accentuated by the want of one of the watch committees which prove so useful in provincial centres. In dealing with questions of public morality, a step forward has resulted from the International Congress organized by the Association.

CONTINENTAL GOVERNMENTS were influenced, and the evils of the Continental traffic in vice exposed.

The next speaker, Canon SCOTT HOLLAND, said that instead of nagging away at a complacent and inattentive world, they had brought the public to see that the work is not merely a raid and a panic to satisfy a sudden outcry. They recognized that it is not enough to purify the streets, although that would satisfy many. The Association does not exist simply to put vice out of sight, but to deal with underlying causes.

Thanks were expressed by Mrs. CREIGHTON for ready aid afforded to Christian workers in various spheres of labour, and Rev. F. B. MEYER pointed out some of the contributory causes of street vice, pictured the difficulties of young women, ill-paid and ill-housed, and surrounded by temptation. He appealed for the creation of a higher standard in dealing with the employees in large houses of business.

After the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, who referred, inter alia, to the gracious influence of the Court of Queen Victoria, Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., expressed the opinion that in many respects the moral tone of the country is lower than it was twenty years since. The acclimatizing of Parisian plays has created a conscience as light as that of Paris, and nowadays London exhibits vice in a more flagrant and unblushing form than in any other place in the world. Provincial centres—Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, and many other places—have improved, while London has degenerated, the reason being found in the energy and determination of the Watch Committees in the towns referred to. Mr. Smith advocated the constitution of a special force of police, similar to that of Glasgow, to be under the direction of the London County Council, in order to deal with such terrible evils as those presented in Piccadilly at midnight. The speaker also referred to the degrading character of mutoscope exhibitions, particularly at watering places, and of the reprehensible class of illustrated papers, which of late have attained such a wide circulation.

Other speakers in support of the Association's aims were Mr. R. C. MORGAN, Mr. F. D. MOCCATTA, Mrs. SHELDON AMOS, and Mr. PERCY W. BUNTING.

Temperance Women in Conference.

Monday, June 25.

"AULD REEKIE," or "the Modern Athens," as the beautiful city of Edinburgh is variously called, is very full at present, in addition to its usual population and the ordinary travellers to and fro. There are now here a large number of temperance women attending the Fifth Biennial Convention of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, with which is affiliated the B.W.T.A., whose meetings immediately follow.

It is a privilege to meet in a city so replete with interest of every sort, religious and historical, and where nature and art combine to enhance each other's attractions. Close to the Free Assembly Hall, where the Convention is held, is St. Giles's Church, where Knox preached, and where, in later years, Jennie Geddes hurled her stool, as a forcible protest, against the head of the preacher.

Near here Dr. Guthrie laboured for so many years, and hard by is the Grassmarket, whence so many Covenanters ascended to heaven in the fierce persecutions of their time.

In the courtyard at the entrance to the Free Assembly Hall is a fine statue of John Knox, erected in 1896, and, as it were, under his outstretched hands raised as if in benediction, the workers streamed into the place of meeting. The first day, Friday, was devoted entirely to invoking his blessing on the forthcoming Conference, and his help for the Temperance cause everywhere. At the morning's meeting, Mrs. Stevens, president of the American W.W.C.T.U., took the chair, leading in a responsive reading of Scripture on "Courage," taken from God's message to Joshua after the death of Moses, and also gave a beautiful and inspiring address. Then the spirit of prayer and supplication seemed to be poured out from on high, as from all parts of the building one rose after another to offer short and earnest prayers; they came from all quarters of the globe, one good sister from Iceland taking part, who, by the way, appeared in Icelandic costume.

During the morning and afternoon sessions many addresses were given, all being marked by a high spiritual tone. Where there was so much that was excellent it is difficult to select, but mention should specially be made of the address of Rev. John Smith, D.D., the well-known Free Church minister, who spoke earnestly and powerfully from Isa. v. and vi., showing how the sins of Israel called for a special messenger, who must be consecrated with the living fire; and giving encouragement to the workers of to-day in the fact that God was using them to fight the forces of evil. He also dwelt upon the seraphim, declaring that the "whole earth is filled" with the glory of the Lord; though so polluted, his power and glory are everywhere.

In the afternoon Lady Henry Somerset presided, and gave an eloquent address towards the close. After the opening exercises, author of "In His Steps," &c., brought a fraternal greeting from his prohibition State of Kansas, and gave some interesting particulars of the beneficial effects of the operation of the law.

On Saturday the delegates met for business, and reports of various departments were given, such as Scientific Temperance Instruction, Peace and International Arbitration, Loyal Temperance Legion, &c. In the afternoon, delegates representing Unions federated with the W.W.C.T.U. were introduced and warmly welcomed. They came from France, Denmark, Africa, Hawaii, Brazil, Tasmania, Iceland, Bulgaria, &c.

Recreation has not been forgotten in the programme, for receptions were held on Friday and Saturday evenings, and excursions planned to some of the beautiful and interesting places within easy reach of the city.

On Sunday the pulpits of many of the Free Churches were occupied by delegates, and, in spite of the heavy rain, there were good attendances. In the afternoon Lady Henry Somerset presided over a mass meeting, and an earnest address was given by Mr. Sheldon.

In the "John Ker" Memorial Church in the morning, some of the delegates had the pleasure of seeing south of the Tweed at any rate. In anticipation of the Communion in the afternoon, four young people were admitted into the Church by the minister. In sight of all the congregation, as they stood before him on a dais below the pulpit, they replied to the question he addressed to them, avowing their belief that they were born again, and their love to the Saviour and obedience to the Triune God. It was a solemn scene, no slight ordeal for the young Christians. May they ever be valiant soldiers of the Cross!

Later.

On Monday morning the Delegates assembled in full force, and fresh from the rest of the previous Lord's Day. The first business was hearing reports. Mrs. Mary Lovell, of America, who is the superintendent of the "Mercy" Department in that country, gave a most interesting account of her work, and shewed how humane education not only helps animals, but is beneficial to those who practise it. A report of Miss Weston's work amongst sailors was presented, though not by herself; and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, the recy-recording honorary secretary of the B.W.T.A., spoke on schools of methods.

The devotional hour was conducted by Mrs. Barney, who gave a beautiful address from the words in Habakkuk ii. 1, showing the necessity of workers watching to see what the Lord would speak to them. Miss Johannsdottir, from Iceland, who spoke prettily broken English, met with a warm welcome, as did the "all-round-the-world missionaries," Mrs. Barney, Miss Vincent, and Miss Cummings.

In the evening a public meeting was held in the same hall, which was packed to its utmost capacity. Lady Henry Somerset presided, though looking very tired. Mrs. Stevens, of the United States, gave an address which was marked by high spirituality of tone. Short addresses were also given by presidents from Australasia, Canada, Norway, Scotland, and Iceland.

Tuesday being the last day of the Convention, there was much to be done, so the fifty "one minute" speeches, which were to have been given by as many representative women, did not take place, only a very few taking part. One very interesting and important report was that of Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of the "Purity" department, also on the "Union Signal." Then followed a discusion on "How best to advance the White Ribbon Cause in all countries," led by Miss Slack. In the evening there was a grand reception, given by the Lord Provost, at the Museum of Science and Art.

Wednesday mornin g witnessed the commencement of the B.W.T.A. meetings, with Lady Henry Somerset in the chair. A report of the state of the Association showed a satisfactory increase, the members now amounting to nearly 100,000; that nearly 3,000 pledges had been taken in the last year, and 2,972 meetings had been held. The treasurer's report was cheering, though showing that there would be need for more money in the future.

In the afternoon, resolutions were adopted, condemning opium as a moral and social evil, and denouncing the State regulation of vice. One against vivisection and all forms of cruelty was carried with one dissentient; while another asking the Government to prohibit the sale of tobacco to young children provoked some discussion. It was eventually decided not to bring the request before Government, but to urge members of the B.W.T.A. to do all they could to stop this growing evil. Grocers' and Confectioners' licences were also dealt with, members being asked as far as possible not to deal with anyone having a licence.

On Thursday the president's health having obliged her to return home, the chair was taken by Miss Slack, who performed the duties well, and kept the speakers to time. Miss Phillips, of the Peace and Arbitration Department, asked to be assured of the support of the Association before she presented her report, as she had been pained by a spirit of jingoism which occasionally cropped up. However, she was much cheered by seeing the members rise en masse to show their wish that this department should be continued, and a resolution on the subject was carried unanimously, as far as could be seen.

Another resolution which should be mentioned, and which received the hearty approval of those present, was one dealing with the necessity of providing temperance refreshments at railway stations at moderate rates. With this was also coupled a request that fountains for men and animals should be placed at stations.

A Camel's Talk.

WHENEVER you see me in the Zoological Gardens or elsewhere, you are always pleased with me. I am a strange-looking creature, perhaps, with my sharp head and one or two great humps on my back, and my awkward, rolling, shuffling walk. You look upon me as a type of patient, plodding, uncomplaining work. Sometimes I turn obstinate and spiteful, and require careful management, like you young people; but on the whole, I deserve to be called the ship of the desert. I sail along day after day through sandy and monotonous country, and, unlike your ships, I cost my masters very little. I cheerfully live upon a small quantity of date stones, or a little grass, leaves, and twigs, which I pluck as I go along; when I can get no other food, rather than die, I feed upon my hump, which of course gets smaller. I can carry a great weight, and by means of cells inside me I can take in water to last me thirty days. My milk is used for drink; I am sometimes killed and my flesh is eaten for food, while my soft hair is made up into garments, carpets, sacks, and my skin into water-bottles or leather ropes.

I have a place in the memory of the oldest nation upon the earth: a lady, whose name is now familiar the world over, left her father's home to travel on my back a long journey until she was met by her future husband. You will remember that she met Abraham's servant with his ten camels at the well outside the city of Nahor, and having given him water to drink from her pitcher, drew water for all his camels. But for me Eliezer could not have gone so far to find a wife for his master's son, nor would that wife have been able to travel so far to her husband's country. Then Jacob would not have been born, nor the twelve patriarchs, and perhaps there would have been no Jews to-day. The beautiful story of Joseph owes some of its charm to me, for was I not with the Ishmaelites when Joseph was sold to them by his cruel brethren, and did I not carry him safely down to Egypt?

We sometimes suffer for the sin of our masters, as, for instance, when Pharaoh would not let Israel go free, a grievous murrain was sent, and we poor harmless camels died along with the other animals.

We are not only used for show purposes and for commerce, but for war. We were employed by the Midianites of old. We are told that our camel ancestors came up without number against Israel; yet Gideon, with his 300 brave men, put them to flight with their pitchers, lamps, and trumpets.

David in one of his battles overcame all excepting 400 young men who rode upon our backs; and we were used by the English in their Soudan campaigns. The Queen of Sheba was glad of our help to carry her treasure when she went on a visit to King Solomon. The thousands of exiles who left Babylon for Judea could not do without us, and they used 435 of us to help them.

We have not only been carriers but postmen too. In order to defeat the conspiracy of the wicked Haman against the Jews, letters were sent out all over Ahasuerus's great empire, not only by horses and mules, but also by camels.

It is not my business to teach, but to carry burdens. May I remind you that your greatest Master and Prophet warned you not to strain out a gnat while you swallow a camel; that is, not to be so particular about external trifles as to forget such grand things as justice, mercy, love, and truth. Don't forget, moreover, that, whatever your lot in life is, you can, like me, be patient, plodding, and useful. C. H. P.

What a Little Plant Did.

HERE is a story of the good that was done by the gift of a little plant to a sick child in a dingy tenement-house.

First, they cleaned the window, that more light might come to its leaves; then, when not too cold, they would open the window, so that fresh air might help the plant to grow strong—and thus purified their own lungs as well. Next, the clean windows made the rest of the room look so untidy that they used to wash the floor and walls, and arrange the furniture more neatly. This led the father of the family to try to mend a broken chair or two, which kept him at home several evenings. After that work was done, he still stayed at home, instead of spending his leisure hours in the bar-room; and the money thus saved went to buy comforts for them.

So the home became cleaner, the children happier, and every member of the family better because of the little plant. And the reason for it all was that the family loved flowers. Of course, if there had been no love for beauty the gift of the plant would have been useless, and some other way to their hearts must have been found. But a way will be found if it is earnestly and patiently sought. H. B. H.

A Lesson from the Flowers.

How the lovely flowers agree,
Blooming side by side.
None are jealous, and not one
Shows a trace of pride.

How their lovely colours blend,
None refuse to shine,
For their hues are not their own,
All are gifts divine.

What a lesson for us all
Is the sweet parterre,
Never to be jealous, proud,
Or resentment bear.

All are needed—beauteous, plain,
And the short and tall:
Like the flowers, all are from God—
He has made us all.

Fitted each to fill a place
Others could not fill;
Bound in one large family,
All for good—not ill.

Let us then our smilings blend
And our loves unite,
Each esteeming others most—
What a lovely sight!

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the Competition appears.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age.

All communications must be addressed to the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR JULY 8. .

THE POWER OF SMALL THINGS (Mark iv. 30-32).

THE grain of mustard seed, as the smallest of seeds, is a fitting emblem of the unostentatious beginnings of the Gospel. The number and social position of the disciples was insignificant in the extreme. Yes, and the first germ of truth dropped into the heart of a child, or man, or woman, is sometimes equally insignificant. Just a sentence, a text, a tear, a passing remark. What a pity it is that we do not lay ourselves out for the distribution of these tiny seeds of influence, which cost us so little, but result in such mighty harvests! We are not required to preach sermons, or build up great structures, but just to sow these tiny grains upon the earth.

Whilst the mustard seed is in the hand or the sack, it is useless. There must be contact between it and the ground. There must be the loneliness and solitude of the grave. There must be death to all that once made up its life. And then through a minute aperture, minute as a pinprick, the first tiny stream of vitalizing power begins to trickle in, and swell within it, till it thrusts a little rootlet downwards, and a small green spire upwards, which afterwards becomes a tree of twenty to twenty-six feet in height, with spreading branches in which the birds nest, and under whose shadow the mounted traveller may shelter from the heat.

And what is it that enables this tiny seed to make such a prodigious increase? Ah, it lies in its receptive power, because it is able to receive into its heart the forces which slumber in the soil, and presently the effect of sunbeams, of moisture, and of air. It does not produce from its own heart the mighty result of which the Saviour speaks; that is, so to speak, the river which has passed through the aperture in the minute seed; and as long as that little doorway is kept open, there is simply no limit to the fertility and beauty of the plant. You may be but a child, but if you will open your heart to God He will pour in his mighty fulness, and your life will become a spreading shadowing tree.

Let us not despise the day of small things. Faith may be as a grain of mustard seed (Matt. xvii. 20; Luke xvii. 6), but as it is used, it will grow. Your effort to do good may be so insignificant that it would hardly be missed if it were discontinued, and yet out of it will emanate some mighty institution which will bring help and comfort to thousands. How many orphanages, schools, philanthropic buildings, have owed their origin to the most infinitesimal beginnings! One waif taken in, and cared for, brought another, one motherless child suggested the second, and the third, and so on. A tiny room led to a hall, a hall to a chapel, and a chapel to a Tabernacle.

What could have been more insignificant than the beginnings of the Gospel in many a heathen or Godless neighbourhood. The landing of a young man on some desert island, the drifting of a book or tract to some inhospitable coast, the insertion of a leaflet in a letter, the passing visit of some man of God. Whenever man begins a work, he calls a committee of influential personages, draws up a constitution with elaborate byelaws, obtains a list of patrons, and the matter is launched with great éclat. "It is sure to succeed," say the wiseacres. But when God starts a work which is to embrace and save the world, you will find all its adherents in a single upper room, and these of the humbler classes — "unlearned and ignorant men!" But the little cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, is the precursor of a storm of rain clouds. The little stream that trickles through the aperture in the dyke will presently sweep the whole structure away. Do not be discouraged. Like Gideon, you may be only a cake of barley bread, but you will overturn the tents of Midian. Like the lad, you may be able to put only five barley loaves and two small fishes into the hands of Jesus, but He will make them sufficient. A stone may bring Goliath to the dust; an arrow pierce through the armour-plates of the mailed warrior.

The C.E. societies connected with the President's church (Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road), will celebrate their seventh anniversary on Wednesday, July 11, at 7.45. Rev. F. B. Meyer will take the chair. The speakers will be Rev. William Patterson, D.D., of Toronto, and Professor Amos Wells, of Boston.

The National Christian Endeavour Convention for all China has recently been held. There were 1,150 delegates. The Convention was enthusiastic in spirit, deeply spiritual in its purpose, and brotherly in its fellowship. The presence of Dr. and Mrs. Clark added greatly to the interest and helpfulness of the gathering.

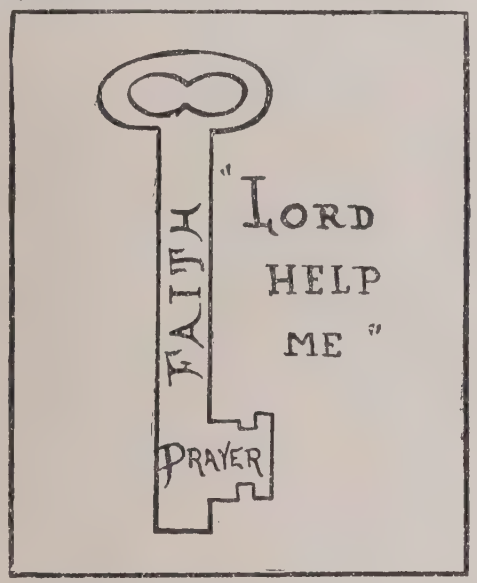
The Gentile Woman's Faith (Mark vii. 24 30).

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Lord help me" (Matt. xv. 25).

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Greek mother, like the ruler father (Jairus), came to Jesus about her little girl (25) who was ill.

In Matt. xv. 23 we read that the disciples tried to get rid of her, but Jesus, ever ready to help Gentiles as well as Jews, healed her daughter, and when she reached home she found the child "whole."



Key to Blackboard Plan.—A key is composed of two parts, the part you hold, and the part that fits the lock. Prayer and faith must ever go together. We take hold of God's goodness by faith, but we need prayer to fit the door of his great storehouses, and then He is able to do for us "exceeding, abundantly, above all that we can ask or think." Do not let your key get rusty; use it.

1.—THE WOMAN'S PRAYER.

One of these short, definite, beautiful little prayers, "Lord help me." In lesson for July 1, we had, "Lord save me," and may we not also take the leper's prayer in Mark i. 40, "Lord cleanse me." There is more in these three short sentences than many a prayer of ten minutes' length. God loves to answer definite prayer; real needs prayed in a few words will quickly bring an answer if we add to the prayer true faith. The woman also "worshipped Him," (Matt. xv. 25). That too we must remember, and come to God full of faith but with all reverence. This woman was in great trouble (vv 25,26), her little girl was not a playful, healthy child, like all the children around, and the mother longed to see her enjoying life as her little companions did, and so she came to Jesus and in her heartfelt prayer she told Him her trouble.

2.—THE WOMAN'S FAITH.

She was only a Gentile, a heathen, a "dog" from the Jew's point of view (vv. 27, 28), despised, downtrodden. The Jews considered themselves as the only children of God; but Jesus Christ came to die for the whole world, Gentiles as well as Jews, "for every creature," black as well as white, the Indian and Chinaman, as well as English.

Jesus did not answer the woman's prayer at once. He wanted to show the people what great faith she had; more than many of the fault-finding Jews (Matt. xv. 23-28).

God always honours great faith, therefore trust Him entirely. The woman did, and she found her child well and strong when she reached home. Other healings at a distance (John iv. 46; Luke vii. 6).

"Lord increase our faith."

"Lord teach us how to pray."

3.—PRAYER AND FAITH FOR US.

Notice how Christ puts the two together.

Matt. xxi. 22—"Ask in prayer . . believing."

Mark xi. 24—"Pray, believe . . ye shall have."

It would be instructive to look up all the "answered prayers" in the Old and New Testaments, and trace how, when they were answered, faith was coupled with the prayer.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE annual report of "Hazelwood," Ryde, Isle of Wight, a home of rest and recreation, shows how extensively its advantages are appreciated by young men. Last year the number of visitors reached 1,174. A fair proportion of these were orphans, who, but for the aid of subscribers, would have been unable to obtain the rest and change they so urgently needed. The spiritual interests of the young men receive careful attention, and by means of daily Bible readings and other meetings, the seed of God's truth is sown in the hearts of the visitors, in the full assurance that in the days to come fruit shall be borne to the glory of God. The secretary is Mr. T. W. Morphey, Hazelwood, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

The annual summer breakfast of the Bristol Association was held on June 27, when a large gathering was presided over by Mr. S. D. Wills. Revs. T. A. Chapman and Douglas Brown gave addresses, and a hearty welcome was extended to Mr. H. T. Wills, of Travancore. Mr. Wills spoke of the bright prospects of Association work in India. There were now, he said, no fewer than 131 branches in that country, with a membership of about 6,500, which he believed was likely to grow in the next ten years to over 60,000. The previous evening many Bristol friends had co-operated in the opening of a new Association for Fishponds and district. Mr. Storrs Fry and other friends took part.

Italians in Tunisia.

MAY we beg a corner in THE CHRISTIAN to put forth the deep need of a worker among the Italians in this town? They are as "sheep having no shepherd," or worse, for their shepherds are "wolves in sheep's clothing."

Our dwelling lies on the borders of the Italian quarter of Sousse, and the constant sight of hundreds of neglected men, women, and children, is a cause of deep sorrow to us. Had we only time and strength, apart from our busy life among the Moslems, we would gladly help them.

The Italians are an interesting and responsive people. A brotherly hand-shake, and some hearty hymn-singing, soon draws a good meeting. We have a small hall here for meetings, and a Bible shop, where every day all who like can enter free for conversation and reading. The expenses of an evangelist among these people would not be great, and I think it would not be difficult to find the man if we had the funds.

Trocadéro, Sousse, Tunisia. ALBINA L. COX.

"Unto Him that Loved Us."

TUNE—"S. Gertrude."

UNTO Him that loved us,
Sinners lost, undone,
Unto Him be glory,
Unto Him alone.
From our sins He frees us
By his precious blood,
And his grace doth make us
Kings and priests to God.
Unto Him that loved us
Be dominion, power,
Honour, laud, and blessing,
Now and evermore.

When on earth, a stranger,
Men denied his claim;
Crowned Him in derision,
Loaded Him with shame.
Now in heaven, a hero,
Angels chant his praise;
But his Church, triumphant,
Louder notes shall raise:—
Unto Him that loved us, &c.

Greater love hath no man,
That that for a friend
One should lay his life down,
Faithful to the end.
But our dear Redeemer
Bore his bitter woes,
And to death descended,
All to save his foes.
Unto Him that loved us, &c.

Progress in Japan—1.

THE statistics of Christian work in Japan for the year 1899 do not show so large an increase in church membership as in some former years. In the case of several of the religious bodies there has been but little increase, and in some instances the membership is less than that reported one year ago. In the number of Christian schools and pupils there has been a large falling off on account of the restrictions that were promulgated in August last by the Department of Education. What will be the final outcome is still uncertain, as the discussions have not ended, and it is hardly possible that matters can continue as they are.

There are various causes for the small increase in the church membership in Japan. One is that the Japanese are accustomed to frequent changes, and many Christians go to the places where there are no churches of their own faith or any other; and they are no longer carried on the rolls of the church which they have left, because those who remain dislike to be taxed on account of absent members.

Then, too, it has been much the same in Japan as in other Christian countries, where the progress of Christianity in the past year or two has been less than usual.

THE LACK OF ZEAL

on the part of Christians in the homelands is felt here. We hope, also, that an increasing interest in spiritual things elsewhere will be favourable to growth in this field.

But the chief cause of decline in the progress of Christianity in Japan, is the failure of the native ministry to meet the responsibilities that devolve upon them as the work enlarges and duties multiply. I think it is not unjust, and at the same time proper, to say that as the foreign workers have left the work in native hands, it has not gone forward to the same extent as heretofore. This applies both to the evangelistic and the educational departments.

This is due partly to a want of experience, partly to the lack of those qualities that are requisite to continuous and successful leadership, and also to the unfortunate characteristic of the Japanese that they are constantly that are jealous of and opposed to each other. It is the same in politics; and for that reason the effort to establish a Party Government has thus far proved a failure.

With many of the preachers also there is a want of tact and judgment as to the best method of presenting the Gospel truths so as to build up the believers and win souls to Christ. Not only have the leaders failed to carry on the work that has fallen to them to conduct, but a considerable number have turned aside into teaching or business; and some have given up their faith.

Christianity is nevertheless making decided progress. The number of adult baptisms reported in 1899 was 3,148. This shows growth that is indicative of a good work still going on. The fact is unquestionable that there is an increase in the power and influence of Christianity which is seen in many ways, but which cannot be tabulated. It is becoming more and more an influence in the life of the nation, although the casual observer may not be aware that such is the case. H. Loomis.

Romanism in England.—As we suggested in a recent note probably would be the case, a large portion—£70,000—of the price obtained for the site of the historic Roman Catholic Chapel of Moorfields is being devoted to the completion of the new Cathedral at Westminster, a building apparently commenced without the promoters having first set down to count the cost. Meanwhile the opening of the new building has again been postponed; but there is no cessation of the misleading statements as to the spread of Romanism in Great Britain.

Work in Brazil.

AN enthusiastic, though small meeting, was that recently held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, to hear reports from missionaries from the field on the needs and the encouragements that are met with in work for the Lord in that land.

In the absence, through illness, of Dr. Maxwell, the chair was occupied by Dr. Harry Guinness, who gave a cordial welcome to the missionaries lately returned from Brazil.

Dr. Sargood Fry, Superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, in a stirring address, traced the work to its commencement, when the late Dr. Kalley, in the year 1838, went to Madeira, and, as a medical missionary, at his own charges, preached the Gospel and healed the sick in that lovely island, many being converted.

Miss Melville, who has returned after five years' work, drew attention to the enormous size of the country, and to the degrading influence and bondage of Rome. Where Rome has had her sway for centuries you can find nothing good as the result of her work.

Mr. Orton has been at work for many years, and fully endorsed all the last speaker had said. He gave some thrilling accounts of the way in which the priests stir up the people to deeds of violence against those who preach the Gospel. But God wrought wonderful deliverance of his servants.

The testimony of Mr. McCall, the first missionary to go out in connection with this mission, was of a corroborative character. Brazil is a nation ruined by Rome—a mass of seething corruption. Here Rome is on her best behaviour. Like a chameleon she can change her colour. Brazil is a very wealthy country, rich in minerals, with magnificent vegetation, famed for its orchids, but the people are poor, ruined and blighted by the Roman Catholic Church. There have, however, been encouragements in the work. Shortly before leaving for England, a remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit was witnessed. At a baptism of two people converted some months before, the room in which the service was held was crowded and many received blessing. An old woman, a grandmother, who had never before heard the Gospel, was the fourteenth member of a family that came in, one after another, within a month. The blessing began by one young man getting a Bible and reading it through. He interested the others by reading to them, until he got them all to come and hear the Gospel, and now eleven of these assist at all the meetings and are trying to bring in others. The father was prayed for, but held out against the truth. At length he went to a Roman Catholic church where he knew the sacristan, and got him to lend him the Bible out of the church to compare with the Protestant Bible. This resulted in his own and the sacristan's conversion. Now the father is the first to come into the meetings in Pernambuco. Revival times are also being experienced in other parts of the country.

Particulars respecting the mission may be obtained from Mrs. Kalley, Campo Verdi, Tipperlim Road, Edinburgh.

A Singular Gift.

THE Faith Orphanage, at Ongole, is in receipt of an interesting freewill offering. The children of a small boarding-school—fifty boys and girls—having been told by their missionary superintendent of the Faith Orphanage at Ongole, resolved of their own accord to save a portion of their rice for the inmates of the institution. Three times every week for a month they dispensed with their evening meal, and in this way saved Rs10.2. In a letter accompanying the gift, one of the children says:—"Don't be afraid because the money we send you now will last only a few days. You should believe that the Lord, who provides for the wants of the fowls of the air, will also provide for your daily needs."

There are at present 140 orphans to care for, and there is every prospect that the number will soon reach the limit. The director is Rev. H. Huizinga, Faith Orphanage, Ongole.

Notes from Belgium.

IN this centre of Romanist faith we observe a few facts of the light that is "sown in darkness." There is in the capital, Brussels, a little nucleus of devoted Protestants. There are two Protestant Churches in Belgium—the State Church, a very Conservative and rather High Church we should say, and the Christian Missionary Church, an evangelistic body with which we came in contact more particularly.

During the thirteen days, with sixteen meetings, we were able to see, in some small degree, the difficulties of this work, and its triumphs also, both in the capital and in the mining district of Charleroi. There are two churches now open in Brussels and a mission hall. There seemed to be no difficulty in getting an audience, as each meeting grew in numbers. The mission hall, situated on the Place Pourdon, was surrounded with a "kirmess;" and this fair, though somewhat distracting in its noise, yet, with the open doors of the mission close by, attracted people to the place, and gave a large audience to the evangelists. M. Balty, an earnest worker, has charge there.

In a population of about 750,000 in Brussels, there are only about 6,000 Protestants of all nationalities, and there is quite a large English colony. The pastors most prominent are M. Meyhoffer and M. Anet; the latter is also secretary of the Christian Missionary Church. It is very difficult to reach the hearts of these people, but in some villages there have been such turnings and overturnings that the whole population has become Protestant—notably one, in the district of Charleroi, which had a priest much beloved by all the villages for many years. He exercised a great influence over them, and, therefore, there arose jealousy, and he was removed from that village and another priest sent there. This act so enraged the folk that they set upon the new priest and literally drove him from the place. They then sent a committee to Brussels to ask for a Protestant pastor, which was first refused, under the impression that they were not serious, but only desired to do some mischief to their old religion; but their demand was so persistent that M. Meyhoffer was sent, and in a large concert room, standing on a bar, he preached the Gospel of salvation. When he left that village, some years afterwards, there was a pretty chapel built, and a goodly congregation attending service each week.

This is a struggling, but worthy work, and we would ask the prayers of the readers for this part of the world, where Romanism, Liberalism, Socialism, and Atheism reign.

Missions in India.

THERE is no need at the present time to emphasize the great importance of women's work on the mission field in India.

Writing from Trichur, Miss Annie E. d'Albedijhll says:—"It is my joy and privilege to work for the Master in the native states of Travancore and Cochin, in connection with the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. My fellow-worker (Miss Chettle) and I live in the large and very important native town of Trichur, which in olden days was the capital of Cochin State.

"We very much hoped to be able to extend the work in and around Trichur, but owing to want of funds are unable to do so. We need (1) salaries for teachers of village schools from £10 to £16 each annually; (2) salaries for Bible-women, £10 a year each; (3) the money to keep a bullock to take the Bible-women to distant villages, £8 annually; (4) £5 a year for support of Hindu women and children in our industrial school while being instructed for baptism.

"I shall be glad to forward to friends particulars relating to any special branch of work they may feel interested in."

Miss A. E. Albedijhll may be addressed—C.E.Z. Mission House, Trichur, Cochin State, South India.

In North China.

THE Shansi Messenger for May furnishes a résumé of missionary progress at Sheo-yang and Tai-yüen Fu. From this it appears there are at present 150 missionaries in the Province of Shansi. As the population is estimated at 12,000,000, and the area of Shansi 56,000 square miles, each missionary, supposing they were equally distributed, would have 80,000 to evangelize. The last returns show that while there are about 1,500 communicants in connection with the different Protestant missions, there are still eighty-three walled towns without any resident missionary, and of course villages innumerable, which have never been visited even by Chinese evangelists.

The dispensary and hospital at Tai-yüen Fu, begun by the late Dr. Harold Schofield, and from '82 to '84 under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Pigott, has gradually developed until the registered out-patients number 10,000 per annum. To these the Gospel is preached, and Christian books offered for sale. The outlook is decidedly hopeful. The hospital is becoming well-known, and the difficulty now experienced is to meet the demands of the ever increasing number of patients. A large sphere of influence is open to fully-trained nurses, both among foreigners and Chinese.

The Girls' Boarding School gives evidence of growing usefulness, and through its influence it is hoped that women of China will attain to their rightful positions in the family and clan. At T'ai-yüen Fu it is intended to develop the school for the blind, as a large proportion of the patients either suffer from diseases of the eye or are hopelessly blind.

Communications for missionaries on the field should be addressed care of Inland Mission, Pao Ting Fu, North China. The treasurer is Rev. E. J. Edwards, 11, Lauriston Place, Dover.

Notes from Victoria.

TO-DAY is our special holiday for celebrating the relief of Mafeking. The rejoicing is exuberant all through the colony. Sober-minded, business men went mad with delight when the official confirmation came to hand on Saturday last. The delirium showed how deeply the people had felt for the brave, long-suffering defenders of the little city. Baden-Powell is the hero of the hour.

Sunday found the churches well filled, indicating that there were very many who desired to recognise the goodness of God in sustaining those who had suffered so long, and in effecting their deliverance at last. We were not surprised to find from Monday's papers that London was demonstrating all night.

To-day's paper contains tidings of the second reading of the Commonwealth Bill—another history-making event. This we regard as another occasion for thanksgiving. The people generally appreciate warmly the manner in which their Bill has been treated in the mother country. Before the new century dawns the effects of this Federation of the Colonies will have begun. The days of separation and isolation are numbered; a more progressive era is at hand. Let us hope that the progress will be moral as well as material.

A Royal Commission is considering the question of religion in our State schools. Secularists are opposed to it, and Roman Catholics are equally antagonistic, their aim being to secure State aid for their own denominational teaching.

Twentieth Century Funds are being energetically worked by all the denominations. At a meeting held on Monday in this little city, the sum of more than four hundred and fifty guineas was promised towards the Methodist Fund.

We have just had a visit from Rev. A. S. Wilson, of Perth, Western Australia. The work in connection with his church there is of a most remarkable character. I have asked him for a few particulars, and hope to send them in a week or two. They are of a most interesting sort, and remind one of conversions in the apostles' days. This is one bright exception to the general lack of conversions.

Mr. Wilson has also issued a little book on "Tenth Giving," which has been so favourably received here, that you ought to know about it. Many churches and Endeavour Societies have purchased numbers of copies for circulation.

For weeks we have been attempting to fight the bubonic plague, but it has at length got into Victoria. The first fatal case was in Geelong—this clean, healthy little city. Four other cases—none of them fatal—are reported from Melbourne. Our thanksgiving for victories in South Africa are mingled with prayers for deliverance from this plague at home.

May 23, 1900. GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

The Indian Famine.

INTELLIGENCE from India shows that the outlook is of an increasingly grave character, calling for continuance in prayer and an increased measure of public attention. The monsoon is still retarded. "The currents," says The Times, "are not advancing inland in any strength." The ravages of cholera, too, are continuing, especially in the Central Provinces, where more than 6,000 persons died during May.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

The many friends whose sympathies were enlisted by the letter from Mr. G. S. EDDY, which appeared in a recent issue, will be interested to hear that Mr. Eddy writes: "The insertion resulted in about £500 being forwarded through various sources. This I am already distributing, and I am making inquiries in all parts of India, to ascertain who are most needy, and where the money will do the greatest spiritual, as well as physical, good. In the name of those who will be relieved, I desire to thank your readers for their sympathy and co-operation."

We have received a brief note from PUNDITA RAMABAI, who says: "Just a few words to acknowledge the kind gift of your readers towards our famine relief work. I am glad to say the Lord has given to me 1,000 girls by this time. Please pray for me."

The lamented death of Rev. C. S. Thompson, of the C.M.S., naturally aroused anxiety as to the welfare of the 5,500 Bheels whom he was feeding daily. Rev. J. P. HAYTHORNTHWAITE, of Agra, writes, referring to the matter: "The work involves great exposure and hard fare, but, in spite of the cholera, which is raging severely—100 out of 200 orphans in the Government poor-house dying in one week—there has been no lack of reinforcements." Rev. J. C. HARRISON, of Lucknow, and other friends have devoted themselves to the work.

Writing from Poona, under date June 15, Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE says:—"The money spent on the consignment of foods has been wisely and usefully applied. I wish I could send you more assuring news of the famine. The S.W. monsoons are long overdue. The weather is insufferably hot, and the mortality through disease and want daily increasing. These have been sporadic showers, but these are rather hindrances than otherwise to the regular monsoons. . . . The weather-wise are now forecasting for a late monsoon. Meanwhile suffering and distress have reached their acutest stage, and in this great desert of suffering the oases of relief are only where Christian benevolence is pouring its unselfish treasures."

Rev. A. NORTON, of the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, Poona, writes: "After we had received over 200 boys, cholera broke out in our midst, brought by some of the famine sufferers in a village near by. Over thirty of our boys were carried off by the disease. . . . Just as the epidemic was commencing, Messrs. E. W. McGavin and Harry Clark, the Australian evangelists, visited us. Night and day they were among the dead and dying, allaying fear and ministering to the needs of the sick. Many sad things were connected with the visitation. One lad, who was accorded the place of religious leader by all the boys, was suddenly stricken down, and died in a few hours. Another lad, who had been very low with cholera, and was exhorting the boys and referred to their lost comrade, said: 'You live as Habeel lived, you love God's Word as he loved it, and the future will have no pain.'

Notes from New York.

DR. DUFFIELD, in a sermon preached on Sunday, said that when Abraham Lincoln lay dying, he told those about him that he had never intentionally put a thorn into the life of any man.

The semi-annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Northfield Seminary was held last week. Two new members were elected to the Board—Paul Dwight Moody, and George E. Keith, the latter of Brockton, Mass. In the appointment of Mr. Moody's son to this position, the great evangelist's dying request was fulfilled. The trustees resolved that the work should go on without any contraction whatever. They have 80,000 dols. towards the Endowment Fund, with several contributors yet to hear from. Provision has been made for the current expenses of this year.

A unique collection of Bibles was recently shown at Boston. They are known as "workers' Bibles." Amongst those that attracted the most attention was the illuminated Bible of Dwight L. Moody, with notes in his own handwriting. Another Bible on view was used for mere than thirty years by Henry Ward Beecher. After wearing out the binding he had it cut down and rebound. He then used it for twenty years, or till his death, for funeral purposes invariably, and also on some other occasions. Then there was the John Knox Bible, with oak covers, made of wood from his house near Edinburgh. A remarkable copy of the Scriptures is that used by Rev. Henry Clay Trumbull, D.D., on the march and in three prisons. Dr. Trumbull was a chaplain in the Army during our Civil War, and used this Bible when he preached in the far-famed Libby Prison. Another important American Bible was used by John Eliot when preaching to the Indians; and, although it is said that no living person can read it, the volume is valued at 1,000 dols. The Bible used by Phillips Brooks, and bearing his autograph, was there; as also one used by C. H. Spurgeon, in which he kept track of his sermons, when printed, by red-ink entries. A unique New Testament was "The Midget," the pages of which are only $\frac{3}{8} \times \frac{3}{4}$ in. in size; and a Bible was also shown with pages of $1\frac{1}{4} \times 1\frac{7}{8}$ in. and containing twenty-eight illustrations.

ROGER MARTIN.

Spanish Reformers Acquitted.

FOR many months a number of Spanish reformers have been in grave danger of receiving a sentence of four years' imprisonment, through a concocted charge of disrespect to a procession they could not possibly have seen. At the preliminary trial the influence of the Roman bishop caused a warrant to be issued for the arrest of their defending counsel; and this action at once converted a mere local prosecution into a cause célèbre, as the Bar of Valladolid undertook the defence of their colleague. Last month the trial by jury took place, and after the examination of the parish priest of Villaescusa and six witnesses, the prosecutor declined to call further testimony, and the prisoners' counsel considered no defence to be necessary. The Court, seeing the true position of the case, and the evident falseness of the accusation, at once directed the jury to enter a verdict of acquittal.

This instance of ultramontane persecution shows clearly the forces with which reform contends in Spain. Every possible delay was placed in the way of the reformers proving their innocence; the women arrested with the men were liberated by the "clemency" of the Bishop; and when public attention was fixed on the trial through the attack on the rights of counsel, Rome found her witnesses were not in agreement, and the reformers were acquitted by a Court strongly hostile to their teaching. The action of the Court is another symptom of the beginning of the return of the Spanish people to a more liberal frame of mind. The accused reformers are communicants of the Church over which Bishop Cabrera presides. The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society (Church House, Westminster), helps them in their work.

Irish Notes.

THE Methodist Orphan Society, which is now thirty years in existence, has decided to establish a home for orphan boys. It has at present 257 children under its care, and is doing a good work.

Mission work among the Jews is at present carried on vigorously in Dublin. Open-air services which are well attended, are held regularly in the Jewish quarter, and the outlook is encouraging.

A Sabbath School Convention, under Presbyterian auspices, was held last week in Belfast, and was attended by 2,500 delegates from various parts of the country. The object of the meeting was to give teachers the opportunity of learning the best methods of carrying on their labours, and of awakening among them a deeper interest in the salvation of the young. Instructive papers on different aspects of Sunday-school work were read by Revs. John Irwin, of Belfast; John Morison, of Tullylish; William Park, of Belfast; and Miss Carson, of Belfast. Addresses were delivered by Rev. William Watson, of Birkenhead, and several others.

The Methodist Conference, which has been in session in Belfast, was largely attended, and its spiritual tone was of a high order. Its public meetings were seasons of interest, and attracted widespread attention. Rev. F. W. Macdonald presided, and his addresses, and those of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, by whom he was accompanied, made an impression for good.

Pastor Findlay, Glasgow.

AFTER an absence of nearly three months—during which he had made a voyage to the Mediterranean and the Black Sea for reasons of health — Pastor David J. Findlay received a warm welcome home, a few days ago, from his people at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow.

The meetings were addressed by Mr. James Macfarlane during April and the first week of May, and by Mr. Hugh Paton during the remainder of the period. It was a great joy to all concerned that the interest and vitality of the work were fully maintained. The workers recognised the special need for rallying round the preachers, and week by week the hearts of all were made glad by what they saw of the Lord's working in their midst, men and women being born again into the Kingdom. The teaching received at the fellowship and other meetings was most acceptable, and proved an inspiration and a real means of upbuilding to the Christians. Special blessing was experienced in the open-air, where the gatherings were exceptionally hearty. As the interest deepened, it was found that persons came for the purpose of listening there only, were afterwards induced to come inside, and before they left were rejoicing in a newly found salvation.

Mr. Daniel Walker (who presided) voiced the great expectation with which the workers were looking forward for yet greater blessing than they had ever known before. Mr. Hugh Paton expressed his delight with his experience during his time of ministry, and testified to the way in which he had found the machinery in every part oiled by love. When speaking on behalf of the children's department, Mr. David J. Knox called attention earnestly to the fact that not a few who are well qualified to discern the signs of the times fear Scotland is entering on a term of religious moderatism. After expressing the same belief, Mr. John Climie, passed on to show that during the past half century great wars have been followed by spiritual crises, and said he was hoping and believing that behind the present shaking of the nations God would break in and grant a time of revival. Mr. John Currie (California) and Dr. D. M. Main (Hangchow) joined congratulations from afar with those nearer home on Mr. Findlay's resumption of work.

Mrs. Findlay asked all friends to join them in praising God for the wonderful way by which they had been led during their absence. They had enjoyed during these quiet weeks such a time of prayer as they had never before known. Mr. Findlay added that one of the effects of the quiet time had been to make him utterly ashamed of his past ministry; as he looked forward to any days that might be before, were it not for the manifold grace of God he could not face the future at all. "We want to put Him more than ever right in the forefront of our service. It is the bottom desire of our hearts that Jesus Christ may be all in all. The one absolute essential for the carrying out this desire is a fresh enduement of the Holy Ghost, and that is the one thing I want you to claim for your poor pastor."

On Atonement—At-one-ment.

IT is with sincere regret, especially when I see the highly-respected name of the writer, that I read the severe strictures in your issue of March 22 on the meaning of atonement. The writer strenuously objects to what he stigmatizes as a "fallacious statement," viz., that "atonement is at-one-ment," declaring it to be "perhaps the most concentrated possible form of 'another gospel, which is not another.'"

Now, if it were a question of ascertaining the exact sense of the actual word Paul wrote, it is to our Greek lexicons we should have to betake ourselves—to Liddell and Scott, to Thayer's Grimm, &c. But it is evidently not the Greek katallage, but the English noun atonement that is in dispute. Perhaps, indeed, it will be thought that The Christian is hardly the right place for a long dissertation on the derivation of an English word. Nevertheless, you will perhaps allow me space for a few lines.

The two highest present authorities on English etymologies are Dr. James Murray, Editor of the Philological Society's Dictionary (Oxford); and Dr. Skeat, of Cambridge. Dr. Skeat writes: "Atone, to set at one, to reconcile. Made up from the words at and one, and due to the frequent use of the phrase at one (i.e., reconciled) in Middle English." With this judgment Dr. Murray fully agrees. And both of these truly erudite lexicographers quote numerous derived words and phrases kindred alike in form and sense: aton (or, in the MSS., a ton, as often a non for an on), al at on = all agreed, attone, onement (in the same sense as atonement), atonemaker (i.e., reconciler, used by Tyndale), atte one assente, &c.

As to the pronunciation, which may seem to constitute a difficulty, the original sound of our first numeral rhymed, as is abundantly proved by Chaucer's poems, with stone and bone, and in two other derivatives besides atone (on-ly and al-one) it continues unchanged in Modern English. Yet, curiously enough, while fashion has corrupted this one into wun, this same change is made in the Devonshire dialect in the word oats as corrupted into wuts, on which fashion refuses to smile. (See my Early English Pronunciation, p. 33, footnote.)

I venture to think that these authorities (besides many others that might be quoted, from Dr. Johnson down to Stratmann) fully justify Dr. Cuyler in the view he takes as to the derivation of this English noun and its kinsfolk, especially as no other etymology of atonement is suggested.

In conclusion, if it were the Greek original that was under discussion, I would call attention to what seems to me an excellent note of Dr. Sanday and Professor Headlam (on Rom. v. 11, p. 130).

The natural explanation of the passages which speak of enmity and reconciliation between God and man is that they are not on one side only, but are mutual.

At the same time we must be well aware that this is only our imperfect way of speaking: "I speak as a man" must be written large over all such language. We are obliged to use anthropomorphic expressions which imply a change of attitude or relation on the part of God as well as of man; and yet, in some way which we cannot wholly fathom, we may believe that with Him there is "no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

R. F. Weymouth, D.Lit., &c.

Brentwood.

With my highly esteemed friend Dr. Weymouth as a linguist, I am not qualified to enter into discussion. I am not concerned as to the history of the word under consideration, so much as to its usage and meaning, as we find it in the Bible, in doctrinal statements, and in hymns. The Speaker's Commentary has the following note on Rom. v. 11: "The atonement. Read the reconciliation as in Rom. xi. 15, and 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. The word atonement, which in the Old Testament constantly means 'expiation,' occurs in the New Testament only here, being substituted for the proper word, reconciliation."

The "Commentary on the New Testament," edited by the late Dr. Schaff, has this:

"The word 'atonement,' found here in the English version, has led to much useless discussion. . . . The reader must bear in mind the following facts:—(1) That the word corresponds with that twice rendered 'reconciled,' in verse 10; hence 'reconciliation' is in any case preferable. (2) 'Atonement,' in its old sense (= at-one-ment), meant 'reconciliation,' but does not now mean this. (3) It is now a technical term applied to the death of Christ, as an expiation, propitiation, satisfaction (see chap. iii. 25)."

In hymns in which the word occurs it is, so far as I know, always used in the sense here specified—e.g.:

> For what you have done
> His blood must atone.
> The atonement of thy blood apply,
> Till faith to sight improve.
> Nothing could for sin atone;
> Thou must save, and Thou alone.

Other hymns will occur to the reader in which, as here, "to atone" means "to expiate," and "atonement" means "expiation."

The R.V. has, I think, done good service in altering "reconciliation" to "propitiation" in Heb. ii. 17, and "atonement" to "reconciliation" in Rom. v. 11.

Reconciliation with God, the righteous Judge, apart from expiation by the blood of Christ, is, in the nature of things, and by the declaration of God (Lev. xvii. 11; Heb. ix. 22), impossible. Therefore, with every concession as to the original meaning of the word "atonement," I am bound to repeat, that to deplete it of its expiatory meaning, and to confine it to "reconciliation," is to misrepresent its use in the Old Testament, and "is perhaps the most concentrated form of another Gospel, which is not another." A Gospel without the death and resurrection of the Son of God cannot be the power of God unto salvation. In this I doubt not that Dr. Weymouth and myself are perfectly at one. R. C. Morgan.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

AS it is seven years since the opening of this Society's new headquarters in Ratcliff Highway, a large company of seamen and others met under the presidency of Mr. R. Cope Morgan, a few days ago, to praise God for the great work accomplished in the past, and to seek still greater blessing on the labours of the future. It was stated by Rev. J. J. Hill that, since the opening, seven years ago, nearly 9,000 services in English and foreign languages, limelight lectures, Bible classes, temperance meetings and services of song, have been held, and these gatherings had been largely attended and productive of much benefit to the seafaring classes. During the past year, nearly 1,400 of these meetings had been held, whilst at the same time a coffee tavern, free reading rooms, schools, Band of Hope, Christian Endeavour, and other organizations had been in vigorous operation. Outside the building a large Open-air Mission had been carried on, the homes of the poor and the sick, the vessels in the docks, and the boarding-houses along the riverside, had been regularly visited, Scriptures, booklets, and tracts being freely distributed. During the year a considerable sum had been paid off the buildings, but £1,200 would be still needed to clear them from debt. Rev. John Spence (once a Shetland fisher-lad, and now pastor of Sloane Street Baptist Church), Mr. H. W. Maynard (Union-Castle Line), Mrs. Maynard, and Mr. John Lampard, addressed the meeting, and several officers and seamen gratefully told of their transformed lives through having been led to the Saviour in this Mission.

Home for Girls, Salisbury.

FORTY-TWO years ago a Christian lady in Salisbury was led to open a home for girls, where they might learn laundry work, and be trained as house and parlour-maids and as cooks, and, above all, be well grounded in God's Word. A very considerable number of these girls have been converted, and are to-day shining as lights in their different spheres of work.

Miss Beckingsale was called to her "sleep in Jesus" a few weeks since. A few Christians have determined to carry on this (preventive) Home. We have bought the house, and are now needing—(a) A decided Christian lady to superintend this Home; (b) furniture and linen; (c) remnants of dresses and other clothing for twenty-four girls.

If any of your readers can help us, we shall be grateful. This Home will be in the hands of evangelical trustees, and it is most important that a Christian home such as this should be maintained in Salisbury.

—Yours, &c. Edgar N. Thwaites.

Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury.

Lydd Soldiers' Home, in association with the Soldiers' Christian Association, is the head-quarters of a work capable of considerable extension. From July to August some 2,600 officers and men will be there, the greater part of them under canvas. There is urgent need for the co-operation of some voluntary lady worker; and the hon. secretary, Mr. F. E. Wootton, will be glad to hear from anyone disposed to help on unsectarian lines.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

It is difficult to describe in a short space the work which is going on in the tents. We would earnestly say to readers, "Come and see."

Thursday last was the opening day at Walthamstow. Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke to a large audience, and the work was followed up on Friday by Mr. J. T. Vine, when a crowd of inquirers and those seeking the conversion of friends knelt round the platform. Some to whom the writer spoke were broken down under conviction of sin. At Clapton there were many seekers on Sunday last. On Monday, the closing day, the meeting was held in Hackney Downs Presbyterian Church, as the landowner could not allow the tent to remain longer. There was a large gathering, and many persons testified that they had been brought to the Lord during the campaign.

Respecting Fulham, Mr. Charles Inglis says: "The people were never more ready to receive the Gospel. The names of many seekers were taken." The meeting at Wood Green on Sunday was one long to be remembered. All over the tent seekers were being dealt with. One little fellow came forward weeping bitterly. His earnestness touched all hearts. There was general rejoicing at the announcement that the meetings are to be continued for another week.

At Forest Gate, Mr. Rowland Edwards and Mr. J. R. D. McAusland conducted the meetings on Sunday last. The tent was crowded, and scores of people were seeking the Saviour, the workers being engaged with the anxious until after 10 in the evening. Mr. Logan had been the preacher during the previous week, and his ministry had evidently produced deep conviction of sin.

The meetings at Stratford have been largely attended. The audiences showed steady growth last week. On Sunday morning Mr. Henry Varley delivered his address on "The Curse of Manhood" to about two thousand men. The attention was marked, and it is hoped that the impressions made will yield fruit in many lives.

The children's meetings, conducted at various tents by Messrs. Van de Venter and Newton Jones, continue to make substantial progress. The diagrams used by the speakers have proved helpful, and the cases of blessing recorded are encouraging.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

During June the services at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, were conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford, who had lately returned from an evangelistic tour in the United States. Many are the trophies of Divine grace to be found in the East End of London who owe their present positions to blessing received through the Gospel preaching of Mr. Telford. It is no surprise, then, that his visit is always looked forward to. Sunday after Sunday large audiences listened to the addresses, and at the close of each service the appeals to decide for Christ met with ready responses. The week-night services held in the Great Tent were also well attended, and blessing resulted from the faithful proclamation of the Gospel.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey at Pittsburgh, U.S.A.

In connection with a Sunday evening service, recently held at Schenley Park, Pittsburgh, U.S.A., by Rev. S. E. Young, Mr. Ira D. Sankey took part. The Pittsburgh Commercial Gazetteer, states that 12,000 persons were present, and goes on to say: "Mr. Sankey sang three times during the first service, and once during the after meeting. He also sang in the Second Church at the morning service for children, and again at the adults' service; while at the Christian Endeavour meeting in the afternoon he gave his service of 'Song and Story.' People began arriving at the church two hours prior to the hour for commencement, and hundreds were turned away." In response to appeals on behalf of the Indian famine sufferers, a sum of 600 dollars was contributed.

A mission has been conducted at Sapiston by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelization Society. The Gospel message was earnestly delivered and attentively received, and some of the hearers were impressed.

A month's tent mission has been held at Baldwyn's Hill, Loughton, Essex, by Mr. T. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society. The gatherings were impressive, several hearers sought the Lord, others were deeply convicted, and Christians were stirred up to more active and faithful service for God. The tent is now at Buckhurst Hill. J. P. C.

In spite of a number of untoward circumstances, such as the weather, the holiday season, &c., Mrs. Baeyertz has conducted a most encouraging sixteen-days' mission at Hebburn. About 100 cases were dealt with in the inquiry-room, while a good many others manifested great spiritual concern. God's people had their spiritual life greatly quickened. At every meeting there was evidence of the Spirit's power. —Alexander Ladban, St. Andrew's (Presbyterian) Church, Hebburn.

A month's mission has been recently held in Hillbank Hall in connection with Hilltown Free Church, Dundee. The services were conducted by Mr. Logan, Bethany Hall, Glasgow, and Mr. Dunn, the well-known evangelist. There were large attendances, both in the open air and at the indoor meetings. Marked impression attended the preaching, and there was a considerable number of inquirers, a goodly proportion of whom professed faith in the Saviour. At the same time the evangelists conducted prayer meetings and Bible readings in the Y.M.C.A. The whole work has been cheering and successful.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Racecourse Mission.—In connection with gatherings to be held at Newton Abbot, August 5-10, it is desired to obtain the loan of a tent for evangelistic meetings, &c., at the race meeting. Any friend who is able to help in the matter should address Mr. O. L. Heatley, St. James's Hall, Royal Road, Kennington Park, S.E.

London Y.W.C.A.—The annual report of the London Y.W.C.A. is a record of the development of its varied and useful agencies in every direction. The year has been one of constant and untiring effort, and has been marked by active and successful organization. At each of the institutes new opportunities have been embraced for the extension of the Kingdom amongst the young women of the City, and to help and befriend those in need of sympathy and counsel. The physical and social departments are also progressing. The extent to which the Homes are appreciated by girls and young women may be gathered from the fact that 1,290 boarders made use of Kent House. The junior departments also give evidence of growth and increasing usefulness. Copies of the report may be obtained from the secretary, London Y.W.C.A. office, 25 and 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W

Obituary.

Mrs. H. F. S. Adams.

The death is announced of Mrs. H. F. S. Adams, wife of the vicar of Immanuel and St. John's, Streatham Common. In the course of some reminiscences of the deceased lady, Dr. H. C. G. Moule writes:—"Next to her children her husband's parish had always her first thought and effort, even when, in recent years, strength failed her sorely and everything seemed physically difficult. Our beloved friend had a deep constitutional awe of death, and an almost anxious sense of home duties. But when the final verdict was gently given, and she knew she was not to live, the Master's Presence and Peace took full possession. Perfect trust about her dear ones, and a restful happiness in looking upward and forward, were her blessed experience. The writer will never forget an hour spent by her couch in the vicarage gardens, less than a fortnight before the close. God be praised for the cheerful (I had almost said the cheery) faith and hope of her who was looking already into the life unseen, 'resting in Jesus, abiding in Him.'"

Colonel Dewe White.

We learn from his daughter the circumstances of the tragic death, in March last, of Colonel S. Dewé White, a veteran soldier, and widely known for his work in connection with the Open-Air Mission and Protestant League. The Colonel served his country with ability, and for many years, in India. From the time of his retirement, in 1875, till his death he was diligently engaged in literary and Christian effort. He completed a "History of the Indian Mutiny," and gave to the world deeply interesting "Indian Reminiscences." His staunch Protestantism brought him into many a conflict, and occasionally he was a welcome contributor to our columns, generally on matters associated with aggressive Gospel work. With him Christ was first and last, and all in all. During the last eighteen months of his life his health was indifferent, and his mental powers declined. It is a mystery to those who knew him that a man of such faith and hope should have met his death in the manner he actually did; for it seems that early one morning he bought a revolver at Hastings and shot himself on the beach of that town. While in India he suffered much from exposure to the heat, and only just escaped sunstroke. His last sad act is probably explained as a result of these experiences, combined with the overtaxing of his physical and mental powers. As a sincere Christian he will long be remembered.

The Soldier's New Testament.

Having been "up at the front" in South Africa, organizing the distribution of this publication of the Scripture Gift Mission, Mr. Vernon Harcourt writes:

"Officers and men alike seem deeply touched and thoroughly grateful for this effort to provide them with a special copy of God's Word. They receive it with eagerness, and it is quite pathetic to hear the married men beg for an extra copy 'to send home to the old woman, sir.'

"Major E——, of the 9th Lancers, an officer well known for his reckless daring in the field, said to me in Bloemfontein, 'I am not a very good Christian myself; but I think this Testament is just the thing, and shall be pleased to know that every soldier in my regiment possesses one. I shall greatly prize the one you have given me.'

"Lady Roberts also expressed to me her delight at the special features which distinguish 'The Soldiers' Special New Testament' from every other. If you could see how delighted these dear soldiers are at receiving their Testaments, how eagerly they crowd up to get them, and how, after examining the pictures within and the design on the covers without, they carefully deposit them in the pocket of their khaki jacket, the financial aspects of the work would dwindle to mere points."

The office of the Scripture Gift Mission is 7, Strand, S.W.; Mr. W. Walters, secretary.

Points and Outlines.

As The Lightning . . . So the Coming (Matt. xxiv. 27).

1. Long time gathering in the unseen;
2. Immediate;
3. Good done by it;
4. Harm done by it (destruction);
5. Terrifying;
6. Not to be hindered;
7. In day or night;
8. Noticed everywhere;
9. Glory too vivid to gaze at. F. I. B.

The Magnetism of Sin.

Gen. xiii. 12.

Lot's conduct shows the magnetism of sin. The fat plains of Sodom were an attraction stronger than the society of faithful Abram. The results included (1) corruption of family morals; and (2) loss of heart peace ("vexed his righteous soul," 2 Pet. ii. 8). Real estate in Sodom is on short lease only. Lot's gains were soon lost; the fire of God's anger licked them up.

The Spirit of Elijah.

2 Kings ii. 9.

Elisha prayed, not for the forms and methods, but for the spirit of Elijah. He desired to be a successor, not a follower. The spirit of Elijah was (1) one of imperturbable faith in God and in revealed truth. Note the Baal apostasy, and remember his word, "As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand." It was not only a spirit of settled convictions, but of (2) courage to avow and maintain his faith and principles. Not Ahab, with all his power, can intimidate him; church and state, with four hundred priests of Baal, do not affright him. In a word, Elijah was a consecrated man.

A Grand Memorial.

(Acts xiii. 36.)

1. By the Will of God.—The grandest lives are not those laid out on a splendid scale by the livers, but such as are guided and shaped by Him whose they are and whom they serve.

2. A Life of Service.—To help in lifting up the fallen, and rescuing others from perishing, is more noble than to make our own salvation or sanctification the sole end of being.

3. One's Own Generation.—There is a oneness about the human family at a given point of time. Believers should aim to give the Gospel to their own generation in the fullest sense of the word.

4. Note the Individuality of the Text.—Everyone must give account of himself. In God's eyes each stands out apart from the mass, and the one who, like David, serves his own generation by the will of God, cannot possibly be lost sight of in the multitude.

A Remarkable Scene.

DEMONSTRATION OF THE SOUTH LONDON CHRISTIAN UNION.

THE large gathering (which now promises to be annual) of the South London churches was held on Sunday last on Peckham Rye Common. It proved a welcome sign of an auspicious day to find so goodly a company met to an early prayer meeting at 7 a.m. It was a modern "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Representing nearly all the churches in the district, a delightful cheeriness possessed the open-air company. The sacrifice of praise, and earnest, fervent petitions, "made the welkin ring," much to the surprise of some, who wondered what this all meant. How strange that so many should practically live as though no blessed God exists as "the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

The afternoon meeting was a great cosmopolitan assembly. All the surrounding churches were well represented, and the various contingents crowded around the heavy waggons which formed improvised platforms for the ministers, speakers, and singers, led by the Salvation Army brass band, supplemented by organ, clarionet, and human voice.

Mr. Alfred Holness presided, and true enthusiasm prevailed from beginning to end of the great demonstration, which lasted nearly two hours. The speakers were well heard, and their messages suited time and place. The joy of the Lord was the strength of the united company, and Peckham Rye was one of the most recent illustration of the King's word—"Behold how good and pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The service of praise was most striking. Seldom have we heard the grand old hymn, "O God our help in ages past," sung with more marked effect. Revs. Frank Smith, Albert H. Swift, Harold Twyford, H. Knight, Brigadier Hoggard, Messrs. Geo. Goodman, Van de Venter, Tom Kingsbury, V. Humphreys, H. Cook, and Henry Varley took part.

Church of England.

In order to devote himself to his work as suffragan bishop in West London, Bishop Barry has given notice of his intention to resign at Michaelmas the living of St. James', Piccadilly, which he has held for the last five years.

The English chaplain at Marseilles, Rev. Canon Skeggs, is about to leave that port for Palermo, after a period of service extending over fifteen years. In the work of the Sailors' Home he has been particularly useful to English sailors, who have found in him a true friend.

One of the new Prebendaries of St. Paul's, Rev. W. Allen Whitworth, of All Saints', Margaret Street, W., was, until recently, a member of the Council of the E.C.U. Vestments are worn at the services in his church, confessions are heard regularly, and All Souls' Day has been observed there.

At the Eighth Annual "Open Sunday" at St. Peter's, Highgate Hill, in connection with the weekly men's service, when women as well as men are invited, the church was crowded, and it was computed that quite 1,000 persons were present. An address on "How to Live" was given by Rev. Arthur Hart, curate of the parish.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, presiding at the second day's sitting of his Diocesan Conference, urged the importance of the clergy making it a regular practice to preach sermons on foreign missions, quite independent of the occasion when collections were made for the societies which carried on missionary work. He thought that lectures should also be given on the historical side of the subject, and that information should be diffused in regard to the work now being done in the foreign field.

Rev. R. W. Colquhoun has completed twelve months' incumbency at Park Chapel, Chelsea, and is now appealing for help to build a parish church, schools and vicarage. The site has been given, and plans have been prepared. In spite of the decision to dispense with the annual sale of work, funds have been forthcoming for necessary expenditure. Mr. Colquhoun says—"It is not possible to tabulate spiritual results; but the increase in our Easter communicants, and the larger congregations attending would seem to indicate that we have the prospect before us of brighter days."

Congregational.

Rev. Alfred Rowland has attained the twenty-fifth anniversary of his settlement as pastor of Park Chapel, Crouch End.

Congregationalism appears to be making substantial progress at Whitby. The West Cliff Church has been renovated and improved. There are three Sunday schools connected with the church, and also two mission halls in different parts of the town. The Twentieth Century Fund has been adopted.

Cavendish Chapel, Manchester (Rev. Dr. Leach), has started a "Forward Movement" in South Manchester, a district in which there is great need for evangelistic work. Seven missions have been formed into a union, with Dr. Leach as president, and a band of close on forty speakers. Already one male and three female missionaries are at work. It is proposed to start other agents, including a trained nurse and deaconesses.

Resignation.—Rev. Edgar Mann, Eldad Church, Guernsey.

Baptist.

The ninety-sixth "Annual Day" was held at the Rawdon Baptist College, Leeds, on June 27, under the presidency of the Principal, Rev. Dr. Tymms. The address to the students was delivered by Principal Stewart. During the year the experiment had been tried of working the Rawdon and Nottingham Colleges in combination, the senior students being at Rawdon, and the junior students at Nottingham. The Principal reported that the combination so far had worked well.

Rev. Dr. MacLaren, of Manchester, being unable to attend the Christian Endeavour World's Convention, has addressed to the secretary a message, in the course of which he says:—"I rejoice in the great good which your societies have effected, and believe that rightly worked they may be still more useful. I trust that in your Convention emphasis may be laid on the necessity for systematic and intelligent study of Scripture, as well as for the more emotional and expressions of devotion which sometimes predominate in Christian Endeavour meetings."

At Hanbury Hill Church, Stourbridge, recognition services have been held in connection with the settlement of Rev. W. G. Potter. The preacher on the Sunday was Dr. McCaig, who delivered the charge to the pastor in the morning, and gave the charge to the church in the evening. At a public meeting, Rev. G. F. Williams (Congregational), president of the Stourbridge Free Church Council, and other ministers, welcomed Mr. Potter. The school has been renovated, the chapel partly so, and open-air, district visiting, and temperance work is being earnestly prosecuted.

Methodist.

Rev. Allen Rees has decided to visit Australia, partly for reasons of health, and partly in consequence of the illness of his brother, now in that country. He will return in September.

The spacious chapel which the Wesleyans of Amesbury have erected to replace the building destroyed by fire about twelve months ago, has been formally opened. Rev. Marshall Hartley preached, and there was a crowded attendance at the subsequent meeting. The collections and promises received during the day proved sufficient to clear the debt.

The Army and Navy Committee of the Wesleyan Church has entered with vigour into the work of providing religious accommodation for Wesleyan Methodists in the Summer Camp on Salisbury Plain. The first building has been opened by General Hutton; but services are held both at Perham Down and Bulford, and will be under the charge of the Shorncliffe chaplain, Rev. James Fletcher.

The Leeds Wesleyan District, cheered by the fruitful character of the past year's work, has resolved on a second year's special enterprise. A united meeting, similar to that of last year, is to be held in Oxford Place Chapel on September 12, to be followed by "Movement Conventions" in every circuit in the district. The league of prayer is to be continued, and prayerful effort, on even a wider scale than last year, is to be made to restore to fellowship with the Church those who have ceased to meet in class. Open-air meetings are to be vigorously worked.

Presbyterian.

Rev. James Pringle, late assistant to Rev. Hugh Rodger at Southampton, has been appointed assistant to Dr. Monro Gibson at St. John's Wood.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Wales has met at Capel Coch, Llanberis, Carnarvonshire; Rev. Evan Phillips, retiring moderator, presided, and there was a large attendance. Owing to the lamented death of Rev. Thomas Roberts, of Bethesda, the Moderator-elect, the Assembly was called upon to elect a Moderator for the ensuing year, and Rev. J. J. Roberts (Iolo, Carnarvon), was elected. Of the six corresponding members appointed by the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, the only one able to be present was Rev. Dr. Thoburn McGaw, who addressed the Assembly. It was resolved that as soon as the war in South Africa is over a number of Welsh ministers should be sent to that country.

Fallen Asleep.

Professor Tom Jones, a member of Union Chapel, Manchester, who died while out on service in South Africa as the superintendent of the Welsh Hospital.—Mrs. Hensman, of Thrapston, an active worker in connection with the Baptist body.—Aged eighty, Rev. Ebenezer Lewis, of Merthyr Tydvil, Until laid aside by the infirmities of age, Mr. Lewis was a well-known preacher among the English Baptists in the counties of Brecon, Monmouth, and Glamorgan.—Rev. J. C. Dudley Ryder, one of the C.M.S. party now in Hausaland, and one of those who had specially prepared for the work by a study of the Hausa language at Tripoli.—Aged seventy-nine, Rev. George Brown, at one time minister of Free St. Paul's, Edinburgh.—Aged seventy-nine years, Rev. John Davis, of Puddle-Trenthide. The rev. gentleman had laboured in Dorset as a Baptist evangelist and pastor for nearly forty years.—Aged eighty-two, Rev. Alexander Millar, M.A., for thirteen years superintendent of the Edinburgh City Mission.—Aged sixty-one, Mr. John E. Jack, evangelist, formerly well known in connection with Gospel preaching in theatres.

Dr. L. W. Munhall.

IT will give pleasure to many readers of The Christian to learn that our capable and energetic evangelist, Dr. L. W. Munhall, has been invited by the London Tent Committee to participate in their services during the month of August. When it became known that Dr. Munhall had received this urgent invitation, the Methodist Conference of Philadelphia, of which he is a member, volunteered a testimonial and introduction to their brethren in Britain. The Evangelical Alliance has also commended our brother with unstinted confidence to their membership abroad.

I write now specially to suggest that Dr. Munhall be secured for other work, so that every hour of his three months' visit may be utilized. He is not afraid of multiplied services where he can reach the multitude with the Word of Life. But in addition to evangelism, it would be of great value to arrange for a series of ministerial convocations, where Dr. Munhall would have opportunity to address Christian workers on "The Integrity of the Bible." Quite recently he addressed large gatherings of preachers in New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere, on the evils resulting from destructive criticism. In each place resolutions of thanks were heartily given to the speaker for his vigorous defence of the sacred Scriptures.

During the past quarter of a century I have known him as a fellow-worker in great campaigns, in Bible conventions, in battles for the Book, and in social life; and I have pleasure in now recommending him to the fellowship of God's people in lands where he is not altogether a stranger. Receive him cordially, use him kindly, work him unsparingly, and pray for him constantly. George C. Needham.

Narberth (Phila.), U.S.A.

Personalia.

Rev. John McNeill will conduct the services at the City Temple during the London week of the Simultaneous Mission, and in one of the great towns during the provincial week.

Rev. W. Cuff, president of the Baptist Union, is suffering from nervous exhaustion produced by overwork, and has been ordered to rest for at least two months.

Rev. C. M. Sheldon preached on Sunday evening last at Rev. F. B. Meyer's church. In the course of his sermon, which dealt largely with such questions as mammon worship and the drink traffic, Mr. Sheldon expressed the opinion that a deep religious awakening was beginning in the whole world, not in the channels of creed and dogma, but of conduct.

The Late Rev. George H. C. Macgregor.—Any friends who have in their possession letters from Mr. Macgregor dealing with spiritual difficulties or questions, or otherwise likely to be of use in the preparation of a brief memoir, are kindly requested to send them to Rev. D. C. Macgregor, 1, Elm Grove, Wimbledon, S.W., who will carefully return them.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

As we stated last week, arrangements have been made for an important meeting in Exeter Hall, on Friday next, July 13, when Revs. Dr. Hanson; F. B. Meyer, B.A.; W. H. Griffith Thomas, M.A.; Dr. Barnardo, Rev. I. F. Row, and others will speak on the Rightful Attitude of the Christian Church towards the Drink Traffic. Rev. Dr. Henry, of New York, will tell of the remarkable success of the Anti-Saloon Movement in the United States. Sir George Williams will take the chair at 7.30. Let all friends of temperance reform rally in strong force.

After some months of labour and fellowship amongst us, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley expect to return to Melbourne, viâ Marseilles. next week. Their presence at the Aldersgate Noon Meeting on Monday will afford an opportunity for commending to the Lord these his servants esteemed for their works' sake.

Affairs at Northfield are keenly followed by friends in many lands, who feel an affectionate interest in the various institutions associated with the name of D. L. Moody. Northfield Echoes, the official organ, affords a ready means of keeping in touch with these undertakings. The June number gives a variety of articles, pithy, and beautifully illustrated, and should add much to the general store of information regarding the evangelist and his work. The number also contains Mr. Moody's last address on "Round Top," and articles by American and English teachers, among which may be noted Rev. R. A. Torrey's "Lessons from the Life of D. L. Moody;" Dr. T. S. Hamlin's "Mr. Moody's Influence on American Christianity," and Rev. F. B. Meyer's "D. L. Moody; a Prophet of God." (Subscription, 5s. per volume of four numbers. Morgan & Scott.)

The sum of money which has passed through our hands during the six months ending June 30, on behalf of various religious and philanthropic enterprises, and acknowledged through the Donation List of The Christian, amounted to £16,958 9s. 6d. This shows that, notwithstanding the exceptional pressure of the Funds for the Indian Famine and the War, the interest of our readers in good works is not diminished, but increased, in these perplexing and painful times.

Just now, when cheap criticisms are in vogue about missionaries and their doings and influence in China, it is refreshing to turn from the ignorant patronage or indiscriminate abuse of those who carry the Gospel into the heart of that great empire, to the opinion of the Hon. Chas. Denby, formerly American Minister to China, who has seen missionary work and workers in all the various Chinese centres, and under all conditions of success and failure. His deliberate and unqualified judgment is that they should command the unstinted admiration of all lovers of their kind. They are the leaders in all charitable and philanthropic work, the pioneers of education and science, the reformers of the opium-eating habit, as well as the preachers of the Gospel. "Many of the achievements of modern China are the result of missionary work." At a time when the enemies of missions are so busy depreciating their influence, an independent and well-founded judgment like this is worthy of attention.
